

49-2

LIBRARY
OF THE Theological Seminary,
PRINCETON, N. J.

Case, 500 Division III
Shelf, #3247 Section 10
Book, v. 6 No. 1

THE MODERN PART
OF AN Universal History,

FROM THE Earliest ACCOUNT of TIME.

VOL. VI.

THE

3

MODERN PART

OF THE

Universal History

OF THE

X

OF THE

OF THE

<

Has. & Son

THE MODERN PART.
OF AN Universal History;
FROM THE Earliest ACCOUNT of TIME:

Compiled from ORIGINAL WRITERS.

By the AUTHORS of the ANTIENT PART.

VOL. VI.

LONDON:

Printed for S. RICHARDSON, T. OSBORNE, C. HITCH, A. MILLAR, JOHN RIVINGTON, S. CROWDER,
P. DAVEY and B. LAW, T. LONGMAN, and C. WARE.

M,DCC.LIX.

Modern History:

BEING A

CONTINUATION

OF THE

Universal History.

BOOK VII.

CHAP. VII.

The Reign of Shâh Safi II, or Soleymân.

AS soon as Abbâs was dead, the lords, who were ⁷ Shâh, about him, sent advice thereof to his eldest son Safi Soley- or Sefi, by the Topiji Bashî, who is general of the man, musketeers, and Mirza Bayad, chief of the astrologers. As soon as they came to the door of the Harâm, they desired to speak with the mother and her son; who, as usual, believed them arrived on some dismal design. But they were perfectly freed from their fears, when, on the prince's coming forth, they fell at his feet, and saluted him king, declaring the death of his father. On this, Sefi immediately tore his garment, according to custom: he likewise observed another usage, which is, that as soon as the new Shâh, after much entreaty, quits the Harâm, he throws himself on the ground at the door of it; then, rising, sits down on his heels, while one of the lords, sent to notify his accession, girds the sabre about his waist, saying these words: May it please your Majesty to remember your slave, who has the honour to gird you with this sword. This done, he goes and orders the trum- Form of inauguration.

VOL. VI. B pets

A. D. 1667. pets to sound, and drums to beat ; on which notice, all the people in the morning run to the palace-gate, crying out, Padiſbâh salamalek, that is, I salute thee emperor

No coronation.

THIS is all the ceremony used when any king of Persia ascends the throne ; for, says our author, I never saw any crown set upon the head either of Shâh Abbâs or Shâh Sefi. They do no more than gird on the simetar, as in Turky ; and put on the cap or bonnet of the Sofi (A), which is very richly set with jewels, but has not the least resemblance of a crown. And it is with the same ceremony of the sword and cap, that the Great Mogol, the king of Kizilbâr, and king of Golkondâ, are inaugurated.

He falls sick.

SHAH Sefi II. some time after his coming to the throne, fell dangerously sick ; nor had he before ever enjoyed a perfect state of health. It is the custom of those eastern countries, that, on such an occasion, all the court-lords, and governors of provinces, bestow a sum of money, according to their inclinations, usually in gold ; which they put into a basin very richly set with precious stones, and bear it three times over the king's head, pronouncing these words, Padiſbâh basbena olſun ; that is, this money is offered for the health of the king's head. If the Shâh recovers, all that money, to which both himself and his Haram add very liberally, is given to the poor : but if he dies, it is put into the treasury, and they get nothing. The 20th of August, 1667, was the critical day of his distemper, and every one thought that he would have died ; hereupon all the grandees went to the mesku, or mosk, called Babarun, which is without the city, to pray for his health ; and gave amongst them near 1000 tomans to the poor. Next day they commanded the Armenian Christians to pray for the king's recovery ; which they did, both clergy and laity, on the side of the river between Ispahan and Julfa. They also sent their Kalenter, with 50 tomans in gold to wave over the king's head : but, instead of the Persian formula, they only say, Beray te fadduk, destined to alms.

Superstitious customs.

THE danger being over in a few days, they endeavoured to restore the Shâh to a thorough state of health : but, as he continued in a languishing condition, he began to ascribe it to the ignorance of his physicians ; some of whom met with but indifferent entertainment on the occasion. The rest, in fear of the like treatment, thought it time to look about them ; and, reflecting that Persia was at the same time afflicted both with famine and the Shâh's sickness, concluded it must needs be the fault of the astrologers, who had mistaken the propitious hour for his ascending the throne. As they pretended no less skill than the others in the art of fortune-telling, they proposed that a lucky minute should once more be fixed, in which the ceremony of his inauguration should be renewed; and that he should change his name. The king and his council being pleased with this expedient, the physicians went to work with the astrologers to find out the first unlucky day; which, according to their rules, would certainly be followed by a fortunate one!

(A) That is the Taj described, vol. v. b. 7. c. 1. in the reign of Shâh Ismael ; which serves in place of a crown.

A. D.
1668.

WHEN the day came (B); they set a Gawr, or fire-worship-per, descended from the Rustâms, who were antient kings of Persia, upon the throne; with his back against a wooden figure, which represented him to the life. After this, all the great lords came and did him homage, according to his order, as their king; which ceremony lasted till the favourable hour arrived. This happened a little before sun-set; at which time an officer of the court came behind, and cut off the head of the wooden image, while the mock king took to his heels and fled. Immediately after, the Shâh appeared in the hall; where being reinvested with the Taj and simetar, he ascended the throne, and took the name of Solimân. By acting this farce he seemed to take a new possession of the regal dignity, by expelling a pretender who had usurped the same; claiming a right, as descended from the antient kings, who reigned before the time of Mohammed. From that time, the Shah recovering, and the famine decreasing, the physicians grew in high repute; and the astrologers were cast out of favour, excepting two or three of the most skilful^a.

A second.
inauguration.

ONE of the first actions of this prince, which we meet with, is his taking into favour Ali Kûli Khân, who had been Khân bag-general of the Persian armies. This Khân, who was of a valiant daring spirit, and could not forbear speaking with too much freedom, had been banished three or four times from court on that occasion. Hence he was called the king's lion, who was chained up when the Shâh had no business for him, and was let loose when there was any thing for him to do. The last time he was exiled, he was kept five or six years in a fortress, without ever stirring out of it. But at length, having a fair tongue, he prevailed on the governor to let him go a hunting

^a TAVERN. l. v. c. i. p. 200, & seq.

(B) This second coronation 1668. Kämpfer Amenit. exot. fell on the 20th of March, N.S. Fusie. 1. Relat. 13. p. 43.

A. D. 1668. with him. At his return, with the help of some of his servants, he seized his keeper, and gave him the bastinado so severely on the feet, that he almost killed him ; telling him withal, That it was to teach him his duty, not to let a man go, whom the king had committed to his charge. Shâh Sefi (or Soleyman), hearing of this, though very young, was desirous to see Ali Kâli Khân; and, notwithstanding the endeavours of the grandees to hinder his return, ordered him to be set at liberty, with a better allowance to live upon.

restored to Two or three days after, the king sitting in council, the favour ; whole assembly was amazed to see Ali Kâli Khân enter ; who, approaching his majesty with a profound reverence, told him, That the lion, being now let loose, was humbly come to kiss his hands. Hereupon the king fell a laughing ; and, casting a favourable glance upon him, said, he had done well. Nor was it long ere Soleyman, finding him no less pleasant in conversation than able in the field, made him generalissimo of his armies, as he had been in the reign of his father Shâh Abbâs. When the courtiers saw Ali Kâli Khân so well received, every one was forward to testify joy for his return. They sent him horses, mules, camels, rich carpets, and every thing else fit to furnish the house of a nobleman. But all this while he wanted money ; and, because he could not meet with it among the Persians, he was forced to have recourse to the Armenians, of whom he desired to borrow five or six hundred tomans : but they refused to lend him any such sum.

land'ed Soon after, the king taking a walk to Julfa, Ali Kâli the Arme- Khân put it in his head to go see the great cathedral belonging nians. to the Armenians, where several bishops and monks resided. The Shâh, entering into the church, where the bishop stood ready at the head of the clergy to receive him ; and seeing all things new and strange, as being but lately come out of the Haram, asked his favourite what sort of people those were, clad in such an extraordinary manner ? Ali Kâli Khân told him they were devils. Devils ! says the king, What, added he, dost thou bring me into a house of devils ? Soleyman, by this means incensed against the Armenians, resolved to force them to turn Mohammadians. But the Khân, who was a Georgian, repenting that he had raised the king's indignation to so high a pitch ; and believing their conversion would be no advantage to him, contented himself with frightening them : which was enough to bring the Armenians on their knees, to intreat his intercession in their behalf ; a favour which, as he ordered it, cost them 10,000 tomans to the king, and 4 or 6,000 to himself.

ONE day Ali Kuli Khân presented two handsome youths, with very delicate voices, to the king; who, being pleased with their singing, expressed a concern, that he could not have that satisfaction in his Harâm. The Khân, upon this, sent for a French surgeon, promising him a great reward, if he could cut the youths, and save their lives. The surgeon for lucre undertook the jobb, and performed a perfect cure: but although the Shâh was by this means highly gratified, yet the surgeon got nothing for his wicked action: for Ali Kâli Khân died soon after, without paying him; and being advised to present a petition to the king by the Meter, this lord asked him, if he would turn Mohammedan? and, being answered in the negative, bid him be gone, like a rascal; telling him withal, that he did not think the religion of the Christians had permitted such acts of villainy. The case of the two youths was the more deplorable, as they had been promised in marriage by their parents; who, on hearing of their children's misfortune, came from Kâshân to Ispâhân to weep over them: which being observed by Soleyman, to appease their affliction, he gave them pensions during life ^b.

A. D.
1668.Villainy discouraged.

WE find very little in the authors before us relating to the Uzbek military transactions of this Shâh's reign: who indeed was very averse to war; insofmuch that he suffered many insults from the Uzbek Tatars with impunity. This, which may justly be ascribed to his effeminacy, Kempfer imputes as a virtue in him; alleging in his favour, that he chose rather to let one province be harrassed by those robbers, than, by revenging the injuries, or provoking them, expose many provinces to the like depredations. On the same principle he excuses Soleyman's pusillanimity, with regard to the Dutch; who having with their fleet taken from him the island of Kishnis, near Ormûz, in the Persian gulf, he not only pardoned the offence, but even granted their demands; being unwilling, says the same author, to punish a whole nation for the fault of a few men, committed out of their own country.

HOWEVER that be, he was not so complaisant to the Kosaks, as he was to the Uzbeks and Dutch: for, in the year 1667, Stenko Radzin, general of those people, having ravaged the shores of Kilân and Mazânderân on the Caspian sea; a considerable army was sent against them, under the direction of certain astrologers, who were to point out the lucky day and hour for fighting: in fixing which, much time was lost. The Kosaks, who were then in an island on the coast of Lenkorân, being acquainted with their superstition practised on such occasions, counterfeited a flight in two of their largest ships, which they made to float about in the sea, as if they had not pilots on board to conduct them. By this stratagem they drew their pursuers, who thought themselves sure of the victory, into an ambuscade laid in the island, and cut them off all to a man. The Persians put to sea in ships chained one to the other, to the end that the waves should not separate them; and that they might hinder the enemy's escape, by surrounding them with their vessels. But this contrivance proved their ruin: for the first ship, heavy laden with arms, being sunk, drew down the second with its weight; that the third, and so on; while those on board were hindered by the darts of the enemy from unfastening their respective vessels. About 10,000 Persians fell a sacrifice, on this occasion, to the imposture of the astrologers. As to the Kosiks, their whole number was not above one thousand, as our author was told by persons who were present at the action ^c.

^b TAVERN. l. v. c. 8. p. 218, & seq.

A. D.

1677.

Grand procession.

BESIDES this war against the Kosiks, we meet with no remarkable publick transactions of any kind during this reign; excepting a procession, and a great hunting; which latter will be mentioned hereafter on another occasion. The procession was made at Ispahan on the 23d of September, N. S. 1677. Nothing, says Tavernier, could be imagined more magnificent: all the richest furniture was brought out of the exchequer into the Meydan; the gold buckets to water the horses; the golden vat, out of which they take the water; with the buckles, harness, and nails of gold to which the horses are tied. After the king had played at mall, and shot at a goblet on the top of the mast in the middle of the square, he went and sat in the Divân, which is over the gate called Ali Kâpi, where he had the pastime to see the wild beasts fight; such as lions, tigers, bears, bulls, and rams. But that which seemed most admirable to our author, was, to see a man stand upright on the saddle, while the horse ran full speed: this he did thrice the whole length of the Meydan, although he happened to fall the first time ^d.

Soleynân's sickness;

SOLEYMAN, towards the close of his reign, became greatly afflicted with the gout; which confined him to his bed two whole years. During this time, being attended solely by eunuchs, these people had an opportunity of insinuating themselves into his favour to such a degree, that, when he recovered, he raised them from that contemptible state, in which they were before, to honours and powers; which at last proved fatal to his posterity^e, and occasioned that great revolution under his son and successors, which put an end to the race of Shah Saffi, as will be related in the next chapter.

^c KEMP. Amen. Exot. Fascic. 1. relat. 3. p. 56, 58. ^d TAVERN. ubi. supr.

SOLEYMAN died on the 29th of July, N. S. 1694, in and death, the 48th year of his age, and 29th of his reign; when, by the indiscretion of his first physician, his death became public, contrary to custom, before his successor was seated on the throne. His corps was conveyed in a herse to a chapel a league from Isfáhan; from whence it was carried to Kom, there to be interred with his ancestors ^f.

THIS prince, as to his person, was very tall and slender (C); person and very handsome and majestic: his visage long, lean, and dress;
pale; his forehead high and open; eyes large and blue;
his looks cheerful and modest; his complexion exceeding fair, and nose a little hooked. He had a handsome mouth, and full lip; his whiskers strait, and of a moderate length;
his beard cut short, made black by art, and ending at his ears: his carriage graceful and easy; his voice low, but masculine enough. His walk was grave and very upright;
he rode slowly, and continually cast his eyes about him, looking very stedfastly at strangers; but with a mild countenance. His dress was always plain, of yellow or red silk, and much inferior to that of his ministers; from whom he was distinguished only by the Taj, fastened behind him on his right side: on the same side he wore a dagger, and from his neck hung the privy-seal down upon his breast. Ac- very cording to Chardin, no man could well have a more robust strong; constitution. At the Nazar's feast before-mentioned, to shew his strength, after shooting with the bow, he took cups of enamelled gold, about the thickness of a crown-piece, and with one hand squeezed them flat, one after the other. This thing, which seems almost incredible, our author has been

* See KRUSINSKI's hist. of the late revolution in Persia, vol. 1. p 81. † LE BRUYN. Trav. Pref. vol. 1. c. 42. p. 210.
‡ KEMPF. ubi supr. p. 43, & seq.

p 81. ^f LE BRUYN. Trav. Pref. vol. 1. c. 42. p. 210.

‡ KEMPF. ubi supr. p. 43, & seq.

(C) Fryer says, p. 353 of his travels, that Shaw Schelymon (as he writes the name) had a good presence, and no mean capacity; unless that, by indulging his body, he had made it gross, and thickened his understanding; that he was tall and fleshy; so that when he moved, or laughed, all the muscles of his shoulders, as well as ribs, moved together. Perhaps he was fallen away when Kempfer saw him.

A. D.
1694.

neglects affairs;

often a witness of. At another feast he took a quince, and squeezed it with his fingers till the juice was all out^h.

SOLEYMAN never applied himself to the affairs of government, but left it wholly to the care of his prime minister: who might be said to have possessed the royal power; while the Shah, quite negligent and ignorant of every thing which passed, enjoyed only the title and honourⁱ. This remark of Kempfer is confirmed by other travellers (D), particularly our Doctor Fryer; who farther observes, that, in 1678, being wholly taken up with his debaucheries, he had not stirred out of his palace for eleven months, nor on any occasion shewed himself in public^k.

gross de-
bauched;

IN the beginning of his reign he discovered worthy inclinations: but when Chardin arrived at Isfâhân, in 1673, he found the court very much changed from what it was in his first voyage, and in great confusion. Almost all the grandees, who filled it in the time of Abbâs II. were either dead, or disgraced; and the royal favour ingrossed by certain young lords, who had neither generosity nor merit^m.

ordidly
covetous;

BESIDES his neglect of government, he is by most authors charged with several vices; particularly, covetousness, drunkenness, and cruelty. According to Kempfer, he was, at the beginning of his reign, very munificent, and even extravagant, in his gifts to favourites and flatterers: but, finding the revenue did not answer his expences, he fell into a contrary extreme, to a degree of sordidness unbecoming a prince (E). He reduced the salaries of some widows of the blood to about sixteen pence a day, or took them wholly away; and kept the highest places a long time vacant, for sake of possessing the profits himselfⁿ. When this disease of covetousness took possession of Soleyman, is not marked by our authors; but it seems to have been later than the year 1674,

^h CHARD. tom. 1. p. 255. tom. 3. p. 149.

ubi supr. p. 60.

^k FRYER. Trav. p. 349.

ⁱ KEMPF.

^l Ibid. p. 354.

^m CHARD. tom. 1. p. 219.

ⁿ KEMPF. p. 47, & seq.

(D) Tavernier says, when he was at court (about 1674), he only diverted himself with his wives in going a hunting, leaving the affairs of state to his ministers: and that he would not be seen sometimes for ten or twelve days together; during which time there were no petitions to be preferred, nor complaints made. Tav. Trav. l. v. c. 1. p. 201.

(E) Fryer makes the very same remark, p. 349; adding, that he begrudged the common expences of his palace. P. 354. he charges this Shâh with abominable extortion.

in which we meet with an instance of great bounty, if not profuseness. A. D. 1694.

THE sash windows of the queen-mother's apartment being out of order, a glazier was sent for to mend them; and, though exposed to the snow and piercing cold weather, wrought himself, as well as made his men work, with great diligence. The Shâh, who saw him trembling with cold, notwithstanding his exercise, was so well pleased; that, when the work was finished, he took off his own upper coat, made of sable skins, worth 500 pounds, and put it on the glazier's back. In consequence of this honour, he was much caressed at court; and it was said, the king bestowed on him above 200,000 crowns, in lands, houses, and pensions.^o instance of profuseness;

SHAH Soleyman was greatly addicted to liquor; and, for several years past (reckoning from 1673) was drunk almost every day. Nor was he ashamed to expose his debauchery to the eyes of his subjects. given to wine;

AT a feast given by the Nâzer, in September 1673, he spent the whole night in drinking, shooting with the bow, and other exercises: with which, and the good cheer, he was so tired, that at day-break he was forced to be carried to his palace, being able neither to ride, nor stand on his legs. The grandees, who had been at the same banquet, were so weary and drunk, that the greater part of them, not being able to sit on their horses, ordered themselves to be laid down on the bulks in their way home; which the Nâzer being informed of, he sent soldiers to stand round them, that none might come near, or see them, in a condition so dirty and unworthy of their quality.

IT was reported that, after he had drank so much that he could scarce stand, he was able to drink a large flask, holding more than a gallon, of Shirâz wine, before he was quite drunk; and as soon as he arose out of bed, he returned to his debauch before he came to himself. If he happened to be sober when he got up, he paid a visit to his women.^r

SOLEYMAN committed great excesses in his drink; and often gave very cruel orders. He took a sort of aversion to Sheykh Ali Khân, his prime minister, and one of the greatest men of his time, for refusing to drink wine. That minister always excused himself, not only on account of his age, and dignity of prime minister, but as he was more strictly obliged to the observance of religion, by the titles which he bore of Sheykh and Haji. These were sufficient reasons for

^o CHARD. tom. iii. p. 147.

^r Ibid. tom. i. p. 220.

¹ Ibid. p. 225.

^r FRYER, p. 349.

A. D. 1694. his declining liquor : however the Shâh, vexed to see that he was the only lord who would not drink wine, often gave him abusive language, and one time struck him several blows. He ordered cups of wine to be thrown in his face, at his head, and on his clothes ; loading him with a thousand indignities of the same nature, when he was in liquor. For all this, Soleymân held him in the greatest esteem, on account of his perfect attachment to the good of the state, his virtue, and great qualities ^s.

abuses the Wazîr

SOME time after this, the king, being as much in liquor as he well could be, ordered wine to be given to Sheykh Ali Khân ; on his refusal, as usual, he commanded the cup-bearer to throw it in his face ; which was done accordingly. At the same time, rising up, he went towards that minister, and looking him in the face with an air of ridicule, Grand Wazîr, said he, I can no longer suffer you to keep your senses here, while we are all drunk : a drunken man, and one who does not drink at all, pass their time but ill together. If you will divert yourself with us, and give us pleasure in your company, you must drink as much as we have done. The minister, on hearing this order, fell at the feet of the Shâh ; who, finding that he excused himself on the score of religion, said, It is not with wine that I intend you shall be drunk ; drink of kokenar : which is an infusion of the juice of poppy, much more intoxicating than wine itself. Sheykh Ali Khân, not being able to stand out any longer, drank several cups of that liquor, and soon fell drunk upon the cushions. The king shouted for joy, on seeing him in that condition ; and for two hours together did nothing but laugh and jest at him, with his favourites ; who were as drunk as himself. After this, he commanded one of them to carry a cup of wine to his prime minister, imagining that he would drink it, without knowing what it was ; but he was so fuddled, that they could not get him to move. The king, laughing all the while, cried to him, Grand Wazîr, this is what will bring you to yourself.

for not drinking ;

his cruelty ;

NOR many days after, Soleymân, in his liquor, put a much greater indignity on Sheykh Ali Khân, ordering one of his gentlemen, who shaved him, to take off that minister's beard ; which, on account of religion, he wore long. The Wazîr whispered the chamberlain not to cut it so close as to let the skin be seen ; which he unfortunately complying with, the Shâh ordered his hand to be cut off upon the spot, for not punctually obeying his command. Mean time the prime minister, pierced to the soul with this enormous affront, and almost beside himself, went out from the king's presence without taking leave. Next morning, the Wazîr not appearing at the usual hour, Soleymân, who easily guessed the cause, sent for him. The minister set forth the grievousness of the injuries he had received, and how much dishonour they reflected on the Shâh himself, in such pathetic terms, to the lord who brought the message; that the king sent for him a second time, gave him his hand, and not only promised to make him amends for the many insults offered to his person, but also swore never for the future to drink to such excess as he used to do ^t.

WHETHER the Shâh kept his promise, does not appear; it is likely he did not: for although the prime Wazîr came to court, yet he did not care to act in that capacity; as is obvious from the following account, which affords an instance of his cruel orders. In 1673, while Chardin was at Isfâhân, Soleymân, being in liquor, fell in a passion with one who played on the lute; and, because he did not like his music, ordered his favourite Nâsir Ali Beg, the governor of Erivân's son, to cut his hands off: in pronouncing this sentence, he threw himself on a heap of cushions to go sleep. The favourite, considering this cruel order as the mere effect of liquor, contented himself with reprimanding the musician for not studying to please his master better. But the Shâh, awakening an hour after, and seeing the lute-player touching his instrument as before, enraged with the young lord no less than the musician, orders the grand master of his palace to cut off the hands and feet of both of them. The grand master falling at his feet to intreat grace for the favourite, Soleymân, in a fury, calls to his eunuchs and guards to execute his sentence on all three. Lucky for those unhappy mortals, Sheykh Ali Khân, the late first minister, happening to be present, fell at the Shâh's feet, kissed them, and implored their pardon. The king upon this, pausing a little, said, You are very rash, to hope that I will grant your request; I, who cannot prevail on you to resume the post of prime minister. The prostrate Sheykh immediately replied, Sire, I am your slave, and will always do what your majesty shall command me. This speech appeased the king, who pardoned the condemned persons, and next morning sent a Kalaat to Sheykh Ali Khân; who thereupon resumed his place of Etemâd addawlet, which had been vacant four months ^u.

*barbarous
order*

luckily prevented;

^t Id. tom. iii. p. 245.

^u Id. tom. i. p. 220.

A. D. 1694. His women and domestics often felt his cruelty, by unheard-of tortures. As a proof of this, when his tents were removed in any of his journies, the mangled bodies of people were found on the spot where they were set up ; and when our author was at Isfahân, about 1678, scarce a day passed but some of his attendants in the palace lost either their lives, or else some limb : which punishments he inflicted for the slightest mistakes w ; whereof we shall produce a few instances.

ONE night, in 1675, being in an ill humour, he ordered a colonel to be bastonaded so severely, that he died in two days. The same night, in his way back from a feast to which he had been invited, the chief of his link-carriers going at some distance before, for fear lest the sparks should fly in the Shah's face, as the wind was high ; that prince, who was drunk, not considering the reason of it, said to that officer, Is it out of shame or ill-will to serve me, that you march so far before ? and at the same time ordered the hand of that dog, as he called him, to be cut off : in giving this barbarous command, he stopped to see it executed, and then went forward. All the lords were struck with fear on this occasion ; yet were obliged to put a good face upon it, while Soleyman, looking at them one after another, to increase their fright, breaks out in these terrible words : I will this day let the blood out of the bodies of two dogs, whom I have borne with too long. The prime Wazir before-mentioned was supposed to be one of the two ; and in effect had lost his head that day, if the Korchi Bashî, or general of the army, although that minister's enemy, had not interceded for his life at the risque of his own *.

punishes a favourite ; In the same year some persons, who had been greatly oppressed by Sîfî Ali Khân, governor of Erivân and Armenia, having petitioned Shah Soleyman against him ; Nâsr Ali Beg, the Khan's son, who was the king's chief favourite, being highly incensed for this attempt against his father, and seeing them at the palace-gate as he was going out one day, gave them very injurious language ; which they returning, he had the rashness to strike them with his cane, and draw his sword. At this they set up so loud a cry, that the king heard it ; who, being informed of the cause, fell in a great passion :
Has this dog, says he, the insolence to draw his sword in my palace against these miserable people, whom his father's tyranny has forced to come and demand justice of me ? go cut off the hand which has been guilty of such an audacious action. This w FRYER, p. 349.

* Id. tom. iii. p. 242.

command was immediately executed. Presently after, the king retired to his Harâm ; where coming to himself in a little time, he appeared sorry that he had given the order.

A. D.

1694.

THIS prince's severity so far may be considered as no other than an act of justice ; and his relenting, as a mark of compassion : but sure what follows can admit of no excuse. The news of Nâsr Ali Beg's misfortune being quickly spread through the palace, his relations and friends, many of whom were there, seemed quite distracted at it. Among the rest, one of his sisters, a young and beautiful lady, became mad as it were with rage. Not content to tear herself violently, she ran to the king ; and, loading him with bitter invectives, attempted two or three times to fly at him with her hands. The king at first pardoned the sallies of the fair creature's passion ; but finding his threats could not oblige her to desist, he, with a brutal rage, ordered her to be burnt alive : which horrible sentence was executed on the spot, by binding the tender victim in a chimney, and placing faggots about her, to which they set fire.

SOME time after, Soleymân missing one of his best dancers, and being informed, that Nâsr Ali Beg had entertained her in his house ; he was no less surprised to find that his disgraced favourite could be so merry, when his life was in danger, than at a loss to think where he should get money to live so voluptuously, since all his effects had been confiscated. For although these dancers are common to any who hire them, yet the expence of only one amounts to near ten pounds a night. On questioning the dancer, she told him, that the Beg was supplied by his mother : at which Soleymân, being much incensed, but more by her running into praise of that lord, commanded all Nâsr Ali Beg's women to be prostituted in the public stews. They were already set on asses, with their faces bare, and towards the tail, in order to be carried thither ; when, being informed, that his wives were women of quality, and his slaves very beautiful, he commanded them to be brought to his palace.

THE relations of Nâsr Ali Beg, willing to make use of the favourable disposition, which the Shâh seemed to be in, begged of the grand squire, who is one of the principal eunuchs, to intercede along with them for their kinsman. The good-natured eunuch, upon this application, brought them into Soleymân's presence ; where they fell at his feet : but that prince, to their great confusion, flew into a passion at what ought to have moved his pity ; and said to the eunuch,

A. D.
1694.puts to death

Thou dog, wilt thou not give me time to settle my anger; let him be slay'd alive this instant. Which dreadful sentence was immediately executed on the poor unhappy intercessor: but the eunuch, being advanced in years, soon expired under that horrible punishment ².

In this instance we find the mediation of his officers cruelly punished; in the next we shall see the neglect of it highly condemned by this prince. The same evening that Shah Soleymân had so profusely rewarded the glazier, as before related, he fell to drink with the principal lords of his court: among whom there happened to be Khosrû Khân, viceroy of Mâzanderân, and general of the musketeers, a brave man, and one of the best officers in the army. The Khan, who had drank hard, becoming at length as drunk as the Shah himself, drew near to him; and, after asking leave for his slave to speak, said, the troops encamped in the neighbourhood, exposed to the snow and the bitter wind, were in a very poor condition; and therefore he was of opinion, that it would be better to distribute 200,000 crowns among them, than on a mechanic, whose fortune would be sufficiently made with one hundred pounds. Soleymân, though in liquor, was offended with the liberty which the Khan took to direct him; and, threatening him for his presumption, fell asleep on the cushion which he leaned on. An hour after, the king, awaking, began to drink again, and ordered wine to be filled out for Khosrû Khân. On being told that the Khan had retired, he was provoked at that further liberty; and commanded Manfûr Khân, another of his generals, to go and cut off his head.

Khosrû
Khân;

IT is customary, when the king of Persia gives such orders in his drink, for the court lords to fall at his feet and implore pardon for the offending party: but this happened not to be the case of the unfortunate Khosrû Khân, who had a great many enemies; and, what was still worse, Manfûr Khân was one of the principal. This lord immediately went and took a black slave with him to do the execution. Khosrû Khân was gone to sleep in the apartment of his women, when a servant came to tell him Manfûr Khân wanted to speak with him from the king. Ah! it is my head, said he, which the Shah wants, since it is my enemy whom he hath sent on the message. Accordingly, as soon as he came forth, Manfûr Khân said to him, The king has sent me to fetch your head; fall upon the ground. And while Khosrû Khân expostulated the matter, the other bid his black take off the Khan's girdle, and tie his arms. Khostrû, finding himself seized, intreated Manfâr to forbear a few moments; the slave begged the same favour for him also: but Manfâr Khân, who mortally hated that great man, told the black if he delayed one instant, he would have him slay'd alive. Hereupon the general was thrown down, and had his head cut off: but the execution was scarce over, when an officer of the king arrived with a counter-order.

² FRYER, p. 211, & seq.

SOLEYMAN, who was very much grieved for this and re- Khân's death, testified his concern a few days after: for at pents; another debauch, having commanded the hand of one who played upon the lute to be cut off, because, being intoxicated with liquor, he could not hit the tunes right, all the lords of the court fell at his feet to beg pardon for him. At which the king, as in a fury, cried: Ah! traitors, it was for the brave Khostrû Khân that you ought to have interceded, and not for such a wretched dog as this, a player on the lute: 'tis you who have been the causes of his death^a.

THIS prince, who on some occasions punished severely the suffers slightest faults, at other times suffered great offences to pass quarrels with impunity. Soon after, at a debauch, where most of the great men were drunk, the lord high-chamberlain, and Man- fâr Khân before mentioned, happened to give one another abusive language. Hereupon the king said to the prime minister: Khân, why do you suffer them to quarrel thus in my presence? The minister answered, Please your majesty, where my king is, it is not my business to speak. Soleymân replied, Why don't you drive them out? Upon this, the Wazir going to push them out by the shoulders, the grand chamberlain stood his ground, crying out: It is my post to be near the king: you may kill me at his feet if you please; but I will not go out before my master. The Shâh, who could drink no more, upon this arose and went into the Harâm.
 It is there where every thing which has passed is repeated, and resolutions are accordingly taken. In this place it was in his pre- represented to him, that, in case he suffered such insolences, seuce; the great lords would not fail in a short time to pluck the crown from his head. And indeed it may as well be wondered, how they durst venture to take so great liberty with so rigorous a prince, as that he should let such a liberty go unpunished. Although drink might have emboldened the lords, it can hardly be imagined that fear with-held the king.

^a FRYER, p. 147, & seq.^b Ibid. p. 148.

A. D.

1694.

Soleymân
Khân's
escape;

ABOUT the same time, Shâh Soleymân committed another piece of cruelty, more savage than the former, although inflicted on a meaner subject. The year before, he had sent one of his domestic officers to take off the head of Soleymân Khân, viceroy of Kûrdestân; who, he was informed, held a secret correspondence with the Pashâ of Bâghdâd. This execution was to be performed at the house where the Kalaat, or vest, is received; about two miles from the Khân's residence: but he, being informed of the design, when the officer arrived, sent him word: that the astrologers judged the hour to be unlucky; and that he desired him to come to the palace till a more benign aspect took place. The messenger, to avoid giving the viceroy any suspicion, immediately repaired thither; and was entertained very nobly with music, dancing, and a splendid banquet. But having been plied with wine till he became drunk, and was put to bed; two hours after the viceroy made his escape in the night. The officer, at his return, was directed by the grand Wazîr, whose son-in-law the viceroy was, to tell Soleymân, that the Khân was fled, before his arrival in Kûrdestân.

Kills an officer;

THUS the affair stood for more than a year; although at length, one night having drank hard, he called for that officer, and questioned him again upon the subject: but could get nothing from him more than he had told him at first. The king, vexed at this, ordered wine to be served him with the rest of the company; imagining that the likeliest way to get the truth out of him. However the officer still stuck to his text; affirming that the viceroy was fled before his arrival at the place of his residence. Hereupon the Shâh, with a frown, asked him, on whom he depended? He answered, on the prime minister. And whose slave are you? replied the king. Your majesty's, said the officer. How comes it then, returned the Shâh, that, being my slave, you have neglected to execute the order which I gave you, to take off the head of Soleymân Khân: you must either bring it me, or leave your own here. And having spoken these words, he rose up, drew his sabre, and hacked the poor officer to pieces at the feet of the prime Wazîr, who stood up. At the same time, looking stedfastly at that minister, and the other grandees on each side of him, said, with an angry tone; I have then ungrateful traitors about me, who eat of my salt: but this sword shall cut all their perfidious heads off.

wounds
Manfur
Khân;

SOLEYMAN continued drinking to such excess, that people wondered he did not burst; and his cruelty increased so with his debauches, that almost every time he drank proved fatal to some of the great lords of his court. At last it came to Manfûr Khân's turn to feel his severity. The Shâh being a hunting three leagues from Kazbîn, fell to drinking on the fourth day; and, when he could drink no more, bid the general of the musketeers get that instant on horseback; for that he had a mind to return to the city. The Khan told him, it was then eleven at night; that as he was not expected in Kazbîn, nothing was prepared for his reception; adding, that it would not consist with his dignity to enter the city so abruptly at such an hour. Soleymân, incensed at that opposition to his will, drew his sword, and saying, Dog, as thou art, hast thou the impudence to gainsay thy master? made a stroke at him, which would have cleft his head in two, if he had not warded it off with his hand; which yet received a great cut as well as his turban; half of which fell to the ground.

THE general upon this treatment only told the Shâh, That he was so-drunk he knew not what he said; but if he had been so unfortunate as to incur his majesty's displeasure, he might order him to be killed without staining his sacred hands with the blood of such a dog as he was: he added, that he would stab himself to the heart. The king, instead of making any reply, ordered him to be taken away, and his wound to be dressed. Three days after he sent him a royal habit and two hundred tomans, to let him see that he was as much in his favour as before^d. These instances shew how difficult it is to behave towards an arbitrary prince, who has no settled rule of action, but is governed by caprice and an unsteady humour. Soleymân, who at one time suffered Manfûr Khân to give another lord abusive language in his presence with impunity, at another time attempts to kill him for offering to administer proper advice.

*makes him
amends;*

KE MP FER represents Soleymân in a different light from other authors; but from his own shewing, favours him too much. He says that, excepting his avarice and venery (F), he was one of the best of princes; and particularly extols him for his piety, justice, and mercy. With regard to this last article, he cites two or three instances; one is of the

his mercy compared

^d FRYER's Travels, p. 185.

(F) He suggests elsewhere, p. 46, that Soleymân left off women and wine early; saying, that, although at the beginning of his reign he gave himself up immoderately to those vices, which impaired his health, yet, that on his recovery, he lived more temperately.

lady (Nâsr Ali Beg's sister) whom he did not punish, notwithstanding she refused to accept of the husband he ordered for her, and spoke very ill of him (G): but that author does not mention his cruelty to her sister, whom he burnt, as before related, for much the same offence. Another is of his sending to recall the officer sent to take off the head of the governor of Lâr, in 1687, for not giving him timely notice of the arrival of Soltân Akbar, son of the Great Mogul; who, being in rebellion, and defeated by his father's troops, fled to Soleymân for protection^c.

with his
cruelty;

BUT these instances of mercy are trifling, if compared with those which he produces of his cruelty. The first is, that the Divân Beg (H), a great officer of state, having left a feast abruptly, the Shah sent an officer after him, to pluck his eyes out; and conferred his post on that officer for his pains. Our author's next instance is still more barbarous and unreasonable: he relates, that Soleymân, standing one day on the battlements of his palace of Takhta Sofa, built on a hill near Julfa, and commending the place for its fine situation, one of his ladies, who was present, happened to say, it was rather too much exposed to the cold air. For which censure only, he ordered her to be cast down headlong, as unworthy to abide in the place.

mean revenge;

THIS savage sentence was not only passed on a very trifling occasion; but seems to have been pronounced in cool blood. His cruelty must not always be ascribed to liquor; but rather to his barbarous and revengeful disposition; of which the following instance, given even at the beginning of his reign, is a signal proof. One of his favourite ladies, of a noble Chirkassian family, having somehow offended him, he ordered her to be married forthwith to one of the most abject fellows who could be found. The first they happened to meet with was the son of a linen-bleacher, belonging to the court; but well enough as to his person. The marriage was performed without seeing each other, according to custom; especially when the parties are so unequal, as to rank. Nevertheless, as the king's order was to have it not only performed, but also consummated, the lady complied with it, and took to her husband. The king, who intended, perhaps, only to vex her, and did not imagine, that she would suffer such a mean fellow to come near her, when he heard of what had happened,

^c KEMPFER, p. 52, & seq.

(G) Chardin gives the story at large, Voy. en Pers. tom. iii. p. 241.

(H) Rather Divân Beghi, who is the lord chief justice in criminal affairs.

pened, conceived a secret resentment against the innocent husband; whose father, the whitster, coming to die some years after, he applied to succeed him in his place. The king, who had smothered his malice all that while, taking ^{horrid} ~~this opportunity to discharge it, sent for the poor man, and said to him, When, by my order, you married that lady of such incomparable beauty, and great birth, what sort of feast did you make on the joyful occasion? Sir, answered he, I am a poor man, and had not wherewithal to defray the charge of an illumination (H). Since this dog, said the Shâh, made no illumination on so eminent an occasion, let an illumination be made of his body. This fiery sentence was executed in the following execrable manner. They laid the unhappy mortal backward on a plank, to which they bound him fast: then, with a dagger, making a great number of holes in his flesh, large enough to put in one's little finger, they filled them with oil, and setting in each a bit of cotton wick, lighted them all at once^f. It must shock human nature to think in what exquisite torments the poor miserable creature must have expired.~~

THE foregoing instances relate only to single cruelties: ^{great in-} but we shall, in the last place, produce one, of his sacrificing ^{humanity}; some hundreds at a time to his humour; and that from his advocate Kempfer. This author tells us, that, in 1683, Soleymân made a solemn hunting; at which all his court assisted, with 80,000 men, armed with clubs and staves. It being then the heat of summer, and water falling short, 40,000 of them saved their lives by desertion: but, rather than dismiss the rest, he suffered 500 of them to die with thirst; although the game he took did not exceed twenty-five stags, and seven antelopes^g.

As a proof of this Shâh's justice and piety, the same author ^{observes} alledges his punctual observance of his foreign engagements. ^{his trea-} He tells us, that Soleymân might easily have recovered Bâgh- ^{ties} ~~dad~~ from the Turks, when they were engaged in war with the Christian princes; and possessed himself of Bâjrah, by a surrender from its prince, if he could have been prevailed on to violate the faith of treaties. On the same principle, he refused to accept of the vassalage offered him, in the year 1684, by the Arabs, who dwelt about the river Tigris^h. But these

^f CHARD. tom. iii. p. 241.
p. 56.

^g KEMPF. p. 54.

^h Ibid.

(H) The Persians adorn their houses and gardens with lights, on such occasions.

A. D.
1694.

things might have been owing to his indolence, and aversion to war, more than to his regard to justice.

His chil-
dr.n,

SHAH Seleymân left many sons behind him. Chardin heard an eunuch of the Harâm say, and was assured, on strict enquiry, by others, that in the year 1672, this prince had three-score children living; which number, tho' surprizingly great, falls very short of that ascribed to Morâd III. Sultan of the Turks, who is reported to have had two hundred.

and successor.

HE was succeeded by his son Shah Huseyn. This was a very handsome and good-natured prince; but exceeding weak, and wholly devoted to pleasure, which made his subjects despise him. He neglected affairs of state to such a degree, and suffered himself to be so much governed by his eunuchs, that some of his chief officers, after reproaching him with his failings, in very indecent terms, have laid down their posts, and refused to serve him any longer*. This bad management at last brought on the troubles raised by the famous Mir Azîs, and which ended in the ruin of himself, and most of his family, by the rebellion of Nâdir Kâli, otherwise Takmâsh Kâli Khân, who, usurping the throne, reigned by the name of Shâh Nadir.

C H A P. VIII.

The Reign of Shâh Huseyn.

S E C T. I.

Affairs of Persia, till the revolt of the Afghâns.

8 Shâh,
Huseyn.

SHAH Seleymân left only two sons, who were in a capacity to succeed him, and both by different venters. The elder named Mirza Abbâs, the younger Huseyn. This last prince had two brothers; one of whom the Shah having put to death, Huseyn often taxed him with cruelty. His mother, fearing that he might undergo the same fate for his freedom, had him conveyed out of the Harâm, and soon after fell a sacrifice to her affection. Others say, in a fit of madness she threw herself headlong from the top of the palace.

Person and
capacity.

HOWEVER that was, from this time Seleyman took a peculiar love for Huseyn, so that he would appoint no successor; but left it to the eunuchs, and other grandees, to chuse which of his two sons they pleased. Mirza Abbâs was well-shaped

¹ CHARDIN. tom. ii. p. 280.
vol. i. ch. 42. p. 211, & seq.

^{*} LE BRUYN. Trav. in Persia, and robust, had a noble air and inclinations, delighting only in military exercises; in short, he had all the necessary qualifications for a great prince. On the contrary, Hufseyñ, tho' handsome enough in other respects (1), had monstrously crooked legs, and withal was splay-footed. He was, moreover, born without ambition, and loved retirement to such a degree, that they commonly gave him the name of Dervish. He was wholly intent on reading the Korân, which got him the nickname of Mullah Hufseyñ, or Parson Hufseyñ; and discovered as much modesty in his behaviour, as probity in his sentiments¹.

A. D.
1694.

THESE qualifications determined those who had the disposal of the succession to prefer him to Abbâs, who had too much understanding to be governed by them; and had, indeed, dropped some words against the exorbitant power of the eunuchs which made them dread him. On the other hand, Hufseyñ's maternal grandmother assured them, upon oath, to make him their friend; while the ministers, and principal officers, being accustomed, during the latter years of Soleymân, to cringe to the eunuchs, and comply with pacific measures, gave their votes for Hufseyñ. Advanced to the throne.

ALTHO' Abbâs was, on his brother's advancement to the throne, more closely confined than before, yet the eunuchs could never prevail on the new king to deprive him of sight. 'Tis said, this was in pursuance of an agreement made between them, on oath, when first put to read the Korân. However, he extended the same indulgence to his younger brothers^m.

WHILE the eunuchs, to make sure of him, were for inspiring him with a bent to debauchery, he published an edict for prohibiting the use of wine, as forbidden by the Korân. He, to enforce the law by his own example, caused all the wine-vessels in his cellars to be publicly staved to pieces; and forbade the Armenians of Zulfa to bring any Wine forbidden and restored.

¹ KRUSINSKI Revolut. of Persia, vol. i. p. 60, & seqq.

^m Ibid. p. 63, & seqq.

(1) Le Brun, in his Travels, has given his portrait; which has a very handsome face. Gemelli, who saw him the 6th of August 1694, but five days after his inauguration, says he was about twenty-five, rather short than tall, with a fair complexion; his eyebrows thick, and very beautiful; his eyes black; his beard of the same colour, but short; his face little; and constitution puny. Gemelli Voy. round the world, in Churchill's Collection, vol. iv. p. 141, & seq.

A. D.
1694.

more, under the penalty of forfeiting their estates. As wine had been tolerated in Persia, ever since the reign of Shâh Abbas the first, the grandees were all alarmed, as well as the eunuchs; who were sensible, that a temperate king would not always be kept in leading-strings. To ward off this blow, they applied themselves to the king's grandmother, who loved wine herself, and was obliged to them for placing her favourite on the throne. By their advice, she falls sick, and the physicians prescribed her wine. The king himself presents it to her: but she refuses to take it, unless he first tasted it; and, to remove his religious scruples, quotes the Persian maxims, That Kings are subject to no law; and that whatever they do, they commit no sin! By this artifice was the weak good-natured prince ensnared. He drank a large cup of it; and liked it so well afterwards, that he was scarce ever soberⁿ.

Eunuchs
gain power.

THE eunuchs were admitted to scarce any office in the government of affairs, excepting that of keeping and managing the king's treasure, before the reign of Shâh Soleymân. This prince, towards the end of his reign, was confined to his bed with the gout, for two years; in which time, being attended wholly by his eunuchs, he found many among them of learning, knowledge, and abilities; one of whom, named Khojâh Drak, he set at the head of affairs. This able minister discharged his trust so much to the general satisfaction and advantage of the kingdom, that, on his recovery, he formed a council of eunuchs, which he made superior to the rest. This changed the face of things in their favour, and gained them respect from the people, who treated them before with contempt. Under Hussèyn their power increased to such a degree, that the officers of state did not dare to decide anything of importance, without taking orders from the eunuchs, who composed a sovereign senate; from which slavish submission the Etimâdaddowlet himself was not exempt^o.

They sell employments.

WHILE the king was buried in the delights of his Harâm, this sovereign senate sold the chief posts in the kingdom, and disposed of the fortunes of the grandees at pleasure. These wretches, tho' without heirs, were yet so avaricious, that they invented all sorts of methods to extort money out of both the grandees, and the people. To procure presents, they often sent the Kaluat or vest of favour, to the governors of cities and provinces; who did not complain, as it furnished them with a pretence to raise ten times as much on the people. After this, they made the governments to be held during pleasure, which before were for life; and thus sold the same post often in the compass of a few years. These frequent changes drained the people in the provinces, by the sums raised to defray the expences of the governor's reception, and the presents made to him on his entrance into office; not to mention the losses they suffered by the copper-money coined by the old governor, sinking one-half in value.

* KRUSINSKI ibid. p. 71, & seq.

° Ibid. p. 74, & seq.

A. D.
1694.

As the council consisted partly of black and partly of white eunuchs (K), naturally in opposition, from their colour, and jealous of their authority, they could never agree. This antipathy was greatly augmented by that spirit of faction which divides the Persians in general. This pernicious practice of ruling by parties was introduced by Abbâs I. to prevent his subjects from plotting against him, and to secure the throne in his family. The method which he took to compass this design was, to settle, in all the cities of Persia, foreigners of such nations as were most opposite in their customs, manners, and language; and to form, in the towns and villages, two factions, which were distinguished not only by the names of Pelevk and Felevk, but also by the colour which each chose for the neckbands of their shirts. They carried their antipathy so far, that they would neither marry nor eat together; and as, at the feast of Hassan and Huseyn, sons of Ali, they were permitted to fight, altho' they could make use only of stones or sticks, yet they fought with such fury and bloodshed, that to part them, the king was often obliged to send his guards; nor sometimes could these do it, without killing many of them; as happened in 1714, when above 300 were slain.

Factions
among them,

THIS spirit of division had more force to keep peace everywhere than the most numerous garrisons; and had it been as well kept up at Kandahâr, as it was in other parts of the kingdom, without doubt the rebellion which produced the late revolution, would have been prevented: but on this fortress being retaken from Shâh Sefi by Shâh Jehan, the Great Mogul, that policy ceased; nor was it revived by the Persian governors, after its recovery under Abbâs II. The factions, for want of being well managed in other places, broke-out into war; and the governors often set them together by the ears, that they might have a pretence afterwards of fining both politically introduced.

* KRUSINSKI ibid. p. 84, & seq.

† Ibid. p. 89, & seq.

(K) The first are for guards King, or guard the Harâm of the Harâm of the women. the princes of the blood.
The white either attend the

A. D.
1694.

parties, for their disobedience. These parties which, while under proper restraints, were serviceable to the Shâh, proved very detrimental to his affairs, when that restraint was taken off. Husseyn experienced this on several occasions, particularly during the siege of Isfâhân; which was lost by the animosity between the Lerians and Baktiliarians: for altho' each nation, able to raise 20,000 men, could have driven off the Afghâns, yet they would neither unite their forces, to deliver the city, nor one permit the other to acquire that honour¹.

Influence of the eu-nuchs.

THE factions at court grew as unruly as those in the provinces; and the eunuchs, having thrown off all restraint, made slight of the Shâh's authority. This prince was obliged to comply with the requests of each, in their turn; who were continually supplanting one the other: as soon as one party had procured a government for their creature, the other set all engines to work, to turn him out again. If a general was appointed by the interest of one faction, to command on any expedition, the other did all they could to render it abortive; either by not furnishing a sufficient number of troops, by not sending them into the field in time, by stinting them of ammunition and provisions, and often by betraying their designs to the enemy. By these pernicious practices, several fine armies were destroyed, and the Afghâns encouraged to advance to Isfâhân. These lawless eunuchs, to encrease the disorders, and weaken the state, set the grandees at variance, and turning out the able officers, put those of less merit in their places. To embroil families, they inverted the order of succession: they turned Ali Merdam Khân, the greatest captain at that time in Persia (and the only one perhaps capable of hindering the revolution), out of his hereditary government, and gave it to his brother. They did the same by the princes of Ganja and Georgia, who became vassals to Abbâs I. conditionally, that their principalities should always remain in their families. Thus relations, made irreconcilable foes, frequently had recourse to arms; and, to revenge themselves on one another, gave intelligence to the enemy of their designs, to the ruin of the national affairs².

Instances
of oppression.

IT was a fundamental maxim, established by the last-mentioned Shah, to inflict corporal punishments on the great, and fine the commonalty: but the eunuchs subverted this rule, by commuting the pains of death and the bastinado, which kept the great in awe, into forfeitures and mulcts, which they converted to their own use. So that these checks being taken off, all who were in authority every-where did nothing but contrive how to rob and plunder the people, because they might do it with impunity. In towns which paid 50 tomans (L), by way of annual tax, the governors have, in one week, raised 300 tomans (M), by way of fines. They carried their extortions to a shameful degree. The governor of a certain town, perceiving a man's ass grazing in his neighbour's vineyard, fined the owner of the ass fifty crowns: and when the Armenian who owned the vineyard informed him, that, among them, such trespasses of cattle was not taken amiss, the honest magistrate condemned him in the same fine; and then told them both, That it was to teach them to keep what they had. These instances our author himself was witness of. Every-body knew that the Deroga (or Mayor) of Ispâhân itself, instead of prosecuting thieves and robbers, when taken, obliged them to pay a ransom, like prisoners of war; and when they were not able to redeem their liberty, he let them out at night, that by a second robbery they might be secured from the punishment incurred by the first.

¹ KRAUSINSKI ibid. p. 93, & seq.² Ibid. p. 93, & seq.

THIS magistrate having committed a thief to prison, for breaking open an Armenian's house, and stealing several in the magistrates goods, let the owner know, that to come by his goods again, he must prove the property, as well as the theft. The Armenian, fearing some foul play, thought it would be best to compound with the robber, and give him up part of the effects, on condition he confessed the theft. The Armenian now thought all was safe; but soon found himself mistaken: for the Deroga, turning towards him, said, in a very cold manner, "What, have you no better witness to produce than this, a rogue, a thief? You would have me take such evidence, would you? Go, friend, and bring me witnesses of credit; witnesses too who are Muslemans, not Armenians; and then I'll hear you." In this manner was justice dispensed openly at Ispâhân, in the reign of Hufseyñ: and it is not to be thought that the public roads were more secure than the streets of the capital. The guards called Radars (N), established by Abbas I. became no longer of use. Highway robberies were not only tolerated, but in a manner authorised. The peasants made robbery a trade; and the mothers encouraged their children to it, by promise of rewards. So that the karawâns, not daring to trust themselves in the villages, chose to encamp under tents¹.

¹ KRUSINSKI ibid. p. 105, & seq.
p. 110, & seq.

¹ Idem. ubi supr.

(L) Or 125 pounds.

(M) Or 750 pounds.

(N) From Radria; the duty laid on every camel or horse-load, for the maintenance of these guards.

A.D.
1694.

Roads insecure.

IN the time of Sháh Soleymán the roads were so secure, that merchants had no need to travel in companies : and Tavernier having been robbed of goods to the value of 200 pounds, the governor of the town not only paid him the full, according to his bill of entries, but also made him a present of provisions ^u. But it was to no purpose now to complain, or expect redress from the governors. All the answer which a merchant, who had been robbed of considerable effects, received from one of them, was this: Shew me the robber, and I will oblige him to make you restitution. Put me in your place, said the merchant, and yourself in mine, and I will soon find you out the robber. But how sharp soever the answer was, the governor was not offended; for no people in the world bear injuries and reproaches more patiently than those of quality in Persia. If a creditor, who wants his money, says the most provoking things to their face, they take no exceptions at it, but hear him with an air of insensibility not to be paralleled. In short, the karawáns, not being able either to guard against the robbers, or obtain justice of the governors, were obliged to compound with the highwaymen, as those who were robbed did in the towns ^w.

Husseyn's expensive Harám.

WHILE they ran thus to ruin every-where, Husseyn lay buried in his Harám, which surpassed that of all his predecessors, for the number and expence of the women. In the beginning of his reign, he caused all the handsome women in Persia to be brought thither: and the orders were so well executed, that the year 1701 took the name of Kisverán, or The Year of Women, from the plentiful crop which was gathered of them. Each had her eunuch and chamber-maid: their maintenance was profuse; and he gave them a considerable portion, when they married: for he bestowed them not only on his courtiers, but his inferior officers, and even his cooks. The daughters of great men he gave to other great lords, even when with child by him; and what was worse, this child superseded all their former children, and carried away the bulk of their estates; as happened to the governor of Eriwán, in 1719. These issue called themselves Sháh Zádch, or King's Sons; but being very numerous, many were poor, and made a mean figure ^x.

The Kowrowk.

HUSSEYN had three times more eunuchs than any of his predecessors: they almost equalled the number of his guards; and indeed he had no other guard at the time of the Kárák, or Kowrowk; which is a proclamation to give notice of the hour when the Shâh goes abroad with his Harâm, made three days before he sets out. The ladies rode on horses or mules, with each an eunuch to hold the bridle, and the female attendants on asses; while Huseyn made it one of his great diversions to whip them till they threw their riders, in order to make sport for the rest. Besides the body of eunuchs armed with guns and swords, which surrounded the whole female cavalcade, there were two others. One of them advanced far before, and the other closed the march. Besides these, others were employed either to search the houses by which they passed, or scour the country, in order to put to the sword all who were found within the forbidden limits^r.

^u TAVERN. Trav. book i. chap. 4. and book v. chap. 14.

^w KRUSINSKI ubi sup. p. 115, & seq. ^x Ibid. p. 120, & seq.

THE maintenance of such a number of eunuchs must have been very burdensome to the state. Yet this Shâh was more lavish still in other articles, particularly that of building, in which he exhausted all the treasures left by his predecessors. He pulled down the old palace, a magnificent structure, and built a new one, at a prodigious expence. He erected another, still more sumptuous, at Farabâd, a league from Ispâhân; likewise a monastery for Dervîshes, whose magnificence may be conceived from the chief gate only, which is of massy silver. Huseyn, completely to exhaust his treasures, and ruin all the provinces through which he passed, undertook a pilgrimage to Mashhâd (O), above 200 leagues from Ispâhân. He was accompanied by his women, escorted by a train of 60,000 men. This journey proved so expensive, that half the sum would have defrayed the charge of all the expeditions against the rebels of Kandahâr^z.

FROM what hath been said, it is easy to infer that Shâh Huseyn's Huseyn had none of those virtues necessary for a monarch. character. He was good-natured (P) and merciful; but in those qualities the wicked found their account more than honest men. The only instance in which he discovered marks of greatness, was his passion for magnificence: but to that passion every thing else was sacrificed; and like some people, who are more forward to give alms than pay their debts, he built monasteries and hospitals, while his troops perished with hunger, or

^r KRUSINSKI ibid. p. 123, & seq.

^z Ibid. p. 125, & seq.

(O) That is, The Place of the Martyred; a name given to the city of Tûs, the capital of Khorassân, as being the burying-place of Imâm Rîzâ, or Ridha, one of the 12 Imâms, who was murdered there. This saint is interred in a famous monastery dedicated to him.

(P) He was no persecutor, nor offended with any person on account of his religion.

A. D. 1603.  dispersed for want of pay. He seemed to think he was obliged to take care of nothing but of his palaces; and to what a degree he forgot that he was a king, may appear from one remarkable instance: for when, on the approach of the rebel army, his ministers endeavoured to rouse him out of his lethargy, by representing the danger, “Tis your business,” said he, to look to that; you have armies provided: for my part, if they but leave me my house at Farabâl, I am “content.”

*His clemency
hurtful.*

His notions of clemency may be judged from a well-known instance. He took a pleasure, sometimes, in firing his pistol over a pond in his garden where ducks were swimming, not to hurt, but frighten them. However, happening one day to wound some with the shot, he was terrified as much as if he had committed murder: crying out, as is usual in Persia on the shedding of human blood, I am polluted with blood: and, as an atonement for the supposed sin, ordered 200 tomans to be given to the poor^a.

A PRINCE so tender conſcienced, in the case of wounding a few ducks, was very loth, it may be presumed, to consent to the shedding of human blood, tho’ as the punishment of the greatest crimes. For more than 20 years, which his reign lasted, he never passed one sentence of death; and, consequently, never put on the red habit; which was the colour worn by the kings of Persia, when they were to pronounce judgment for capital offences.

S E C T. II.

Affairs of Persia, from the revolt of the Afghâns, to the death of Mir Weïs.

Revolution in Persia.

SUCH were the unhappy circumstances of Persia, under the government of a very weak prince, and a very corrupt administration. But notwithstanding the incapacity of Huseyn, and tyranny of the eunuchs, who governed him; notwithstanding the bad state of all the provinces, and the general discontent of the whole kingdom, tis yet very probable that Shâh Huseyn would have died in peace upon his throne, as many other kings of his character have done, if, unhappily for him, Mir Weïs (Q), the chief of an Afghân tribe, a man of a bold and enterprising spirit, had not been forced against his will to come up to court, from the remotest corner of his frontiers, to observe the weak condition to which the monarchy was reduced; and how easy it was for one of resolution, like himself, with barely the forces of his own nation, not only to throw off the Persian yoke, but even to subdue the kingdom under his obedience. The occasion of his journey to Isfâhân was this :

^a See KRUSINSKI, ubi supr. p. 105, & seq.

(Q) By some called Mir which is Arabic, signifies Lion-Avis, or Feis, of which Miri wehsh. Mir is an abbreviation of Weïs is a compound: the name, Anir; that is, Commander.

THE Afghâns, a people who inhabit the province of Kandahâr, finding themselves much oppressed, by the exactions of the governors; whom the ministry had sent to command in that province; at length, unable to be treated any longer as slaves, began loudly to complain, and discover evident signs of a disposition to revolt. The Persian ministry, alarmed at this advice, judged that the only way to prevent a rebellion, was to send a person of resolution and conduct to govern the province of Kandahâr. There was then at Isfâhân a prince of the family of Bagrathîni, which has often given sovereigns to Georgia. This person, named Gurghin (R) Khân, having been made Wali (S) of his province, tried to assert the independency of his ancestors, and made a stand in Tiflis, the capital city : but being abandoned by most of the grandees of the country, who suffered themselves to be bribed by the ministry, he went and made his submission to the King. Shâh Huseyn, who stood engaged for him at his circumcision, when he turned Mohammedan, was so pleased with his behaviour, that he not only forgave what was past, but also loaded him with favours ^b.

THIS prince, being judged a proper person to quell the rebellion of Kandahâr, had the government of that province joined to those of Kermân and Georgia, which he possessed before. He soon got together an army of 20,000 Persians; with whom, reinforced by a body of Georgians, he began his march; the very news of which dispersed the rebels. The Khân, naturally severe, left the people to the discretion of his army, who committed all sorts of violence. They took from them their tents and horses, forced women from their husbands, and virgins from their parents. The chiefs of tribes were no more secure in their lives and fortunes than the

^b HANWAY Hist. Acct. of the British trade, &c. vol. iii. p. 27.

(R) Or Curji Khân; as some write.

(S) Wali, or Veli, as some write, is a viceroy, who is more immediately descended from the sovereigns of the country over which he presides.

A. D.
1604.

meanest peasants. The Afghâns had private meetings on this occasion, and sent deputies to complain of the tyranny which they groaned under. But altho' they got safe to Isspâhân, unknown to Gurghin Khân, yet his friends there prevented all access to the Shâh for a considerable time. However, at the vernal equinox, when the kings of Persia always appear in public, and their meanest subjects have free access to them, they presented their petitions, signed by the chiefs of all the Afghân tribes. But before we proceed farther, it will be proper to give some account of the origin and manners of these people ^c.

Their origin,

THE Afghâns are divided into three principal tribes, who, like the Mohammedan nations, derive their genealogy from Noah. According to their history, Japhet had three sons, Armen, Afghân, and Karduel: the first two remained in Armenia, which takes its name from the eldest; as Karduel gave his name to the province of Georgia, so called, when he settled. The families of Armen and Afghân, having greatly multiplied in process of time, the descendants of the latter quitted their country, and went to dwell at the foot of Soley-mân Kûh; a chain of mountains which separates the province of Kandahâr from Hindûstân, or the Mogol's empire.

and different tribes.

THIS nation was formerly divided into two principal tribes; one of whom lived in the mountains, under the general appellation of Afghâns; the other, distinguished by the name of Ballûchi, extended itself in the plains beneath: but in the reign of Ismaël al Sammâni (T), towards the end of the 9th century, a numerous colony of Afghâns, quitting the country of Kandahâr, to settle in Hasaray, the eastern part of the province of Herât, formed a third tribe, called Abdallîs; who soon after turned Mohammedans, and converted the rest of their nation, who till then had been of the old Persian religion, or Fire-worshippers.

The Kliji.

IN the beginning of the 11th century, the tribe of Kliji (U), the most numerous and powerful of the three Afghân tribes, which inhabited Soley-mân Kûh, was almost wholly

^c HANWAY ibid. p. 28, & seq.

(T) Founder of the Dynasty of Princes, named from him Sammânians; who reigned over Khorassân and Mazendân, or Great Bukhâria, in the 10th century.

(U) There is some defect here; for the other two tribes are not distinctly mentioned, unless we suppose them to be the Afghâns proper, and the Abdallîs.

destroyed

destroyed by the famous Mahmûd (W), founder of the Gâznah Dynasty; so called from a city of that name (X) in Khorassan, where he established his empire, in order to be nearer the Indies, which he intended to conquer. In his return from one of his expeditions beyond the Indus, which were always successful, he divided his army into separate bodies; of which the Kliji having intelligence, they defeated most of them in their way through the mountains, which the Gazni's were obliged to pass, and stripped them of the inestimable spoils of India, which they were loaded with. These Afghâns expected to be called to an account by Mahmûd; but imagined that the winter would secure them from his visit till spring. When spring came they proposed to retire to that part of the mountain which was least accessible: but in this they were mistaken; for the Soltân no sooner heard of this insult, than he assembled his best troops, and, notwithstanding the rigor of the season, entered the country of Kandahâr with such expedition, that he found the Kliji still in the plains, where they had divided their booty, and almost exterminated the whole race, except a few who escaped to the mountains. By these the province was again re-peopled; but so slowly, that till the reign of Timûr Beg, or Tamerlan, they had not recovered their former strength^d.

THE Abdollis, who had quitted that country 200 years before, were not involved in the same calamity. They continued free and independent till the beginning of the 17th century; when the Uzbek Tatars having invaded the province of Herât, this tribe, tho' amounting to 30,000 families, was yet obliged to have recourse to Shâh Abbâs I. King of Persia: that prince, surnamed The Great, took them under his protection; and marching against the enemy, soon obliged them to retire. Thereupon, the Abdollis, either thro' gratitude or necessity, became tributary to their deliverer; on condition only, that they should be governed by none but a chief of their own nation.

KANDAHAR was, at this time, subject to Akber the Great Mogol, who reigned in Hindûstân, to whom it had re^d HANWAY ibid. p. 23, & seq.

(W) In our author Hanway named, by mistake, Mohammed.

(X) Viz. Gâznah, not Gaznavi, as in our author. This last word implies of or belonging to Gâznah, and consequently is the Gentile name of this prince (who first assumed the name of Soltân), or of his successors. He is, in fact, named Mahmûd Gâzni, or Gâznevi, by the oriental historians.

volted,

A. D. 1603.  volted, on some umbrage given by Abbâs to the sons of Mirza Boyrâm^c, the Persian governor: but, on Akbar's death, Shâh Abbâs recovered the province from Jehân Ghâr: and thus the whole Afghân nation, consisting of the Klijî's and Abdelli's (Y), were again united under the dominion of Persia. They continued in this state till the second revolt to the Great Mogol Shâh Jehân, under Ali Merlân Khân (Z), to secure himself, and treasure, from the griping claws of the bloody Shâh Sefi I. ^f This Shâh, it is presumed, recovered, and again lost, this fortress (A). However, it fell once more into the hands of the Great Mogol; at which time the Klijî's were no fewer than 50,000 families, divided into tribes of 10 or 12,000 each, and formed the principal part of the inhabitants. These people, according to their antient custom, lived for the most part in tents, and fed cattle. Such as went to dwell in towns, were employed in the most servile offices. This, with the tribute which they paid for the right of pasturage, rendered them so contemptible, that the name of Klijî became a term of reproach among the Kandahâr Indians. The Afghâns, disgusted with this usage, sent deputies secretly to the court of Persia, to invite Shah Abbâs II. to take possession of the province. On this invitation Shâh Abbâs raised a considerable army, and took that important fortress, in 1650. The Shâh, to reward their services, distributed gifts among their chiefs, and reduced the annual tribute. They continued faithful to Abbâs, and his two successors, till the cruelty and avarice of the Persian governors obliged them to petition Shah Husséyn, as hath been before related g.

Mir Weiss THE Shâh was inclined to have given orders in their character. favour; but the friends of Gourghin Khân, by false suggestions,

^c See Univ. Hist. vol. vi. p. 329.

^f See vol. v. p. 465.

g HANWAY ubi supr. p. 24, & seqq.

(Y) The B. Lûchî's having, by their long separation, lost the name of Afghân, it is presumed were not included. Hanway.

(Z) This was in the year 1632.

(A) It was not recovered by Shâh Saff or Sefi, but by Shâh Abbâs II. in the year 1650. See vol. v. p. 480. Shâh Jehân endeavoured twice to recover it; and Aureng Zib three or four times, without effect. See vol. vi. p. 443. Aureng Zib must have taken it after the death of Shâh Jehân, altho' the fact is not mentioned by authors; and it continued in the hands of the Mogol, till recovered during the distractions at court, about the year 1736. Vol. vi. p. 464.

so prejudiced that prince against them, that the deputies were dismissed as the agents of turbulent and seditious people. Gourghin Khân, not content with having thus baffled their design, resolved also to let them feel his resentment: to effect which, he ordered Mir Weis to be seized, and sent to Ispahan. This was one of the most powerful persons of his nation; and besides, being head of a tribe, was Kalentar (B), an office which added weight to his credit. But his birth, his generosity, as well as a certain graceful and popular air, joined to some indications of an ambitious spirit, were the cause of his being suspected as the author of the late disturbances; and as such he was represented to the court by the Khân, who added, that he was a turbulent man, and likely to foment new troubles, if not secured. Having thus gotten rid of the person from whom he apprehended any uneasiness, he disbanded his army; only keeping his Georgians about his person.

MIR WEIS, quickly perceiving the disorders and factions Accused, at court, judged that he might draw some advantage from but ac- the posture of affairs. He first made it his business to get quitted, acquainted with the party which opposed Gourghin Khân; at the head whereof were the steward of the King's household, and Fatey Ali Khân, master of the hunt (C), afterwards prime minister. These he soon made his friends, by his presents, which amounted to 30,000 tomans (D). As Mir Weis was neither Feleuk nor Peleuk ^h (the revolutions which Kandahar had undergone having extinguished the animosities of the inhabitants), he easily made each of them believe that he was of his party, and gained his favour. Having taken such prudent measures, he was not afraid to demand an audience: in which he justified his conduct with so much address and eloquence, that the King, already prejudiced by some of his ministers, both acquitted and granted him his protection.

MIR WEIS did not stop here: but as he had now free ac- Meditates cess to the Shâh, he resolved, if possible, to destroy his accuser. a revolt. The better to conceal and compass his design, he always spoke

^h Two factions, see before p. 23.

(B) Kalentar, or Kalântar, signifies the greatest, or Mayor, as Kempfer says; that is, of a city. Amœnit. exotic. p. 141. This officer is however charged with collecting taxes, and sometimes acts as a sub-governor. Hanway.

(C) Miri Shchar Baghi, or Great huntsman.

(D) Or 75,000 pounds; which sum was remitted to him by the Afghans for the purpose, in 30,000 woollen sashes of Termav, a city in the territories of the Great Mogol. Hanway.

A. D.

1707.

of his enemy with respect; but spoke in such terms of his power, and how much was to be feared from it, that Husséyn began to imagine, that Gourghin Khân had sent him to court only to get rid of a person, who too curiously inspected his conduct. His view in getting the Khân removed, was not only to be revenged on him as his enemy, but also to clear the way for rescuing his country from the Persian yoke; perceiving that there was scarce any-body else capable of obstructing his design, Farther to give a legal sanction to his enterprize, and unite more effectually the Afghâns in his favour, he resolved to make the pilgrimage to Mekka, under pretence of religion, but in reality to obtain a licence for revolting¹.

Goes to Mekka.

As this journey removed him still farther from Kandahâr, his petition was granted, without any difficulty. Soon after his arrival at Mekka, he sent to Medinah, to desire the opinion of the chief doctors of the law, upon the two following points: “ 1. Whether it was lawful for Mussulmâns, restrained in the exercise of their religion by heretics, to take up arms, and free themselves from the yoke. 2. Whether their oath taken to a heretic sovereign was binding, when he did not observe the conventions which he had sworn to; but had made them slaves to infidels?” After this, he enlarged on the avarice and violence of the Georgians; observing that many Afghâns had already changed their religion, merely to free themselves from this oppression. The reader is to understand, that of the two chief sects, named Sunni and Shiay, into which the Mohammedans are divided, the Afghâns are of the former; which is followed by the Arabs, Turks, and most other nations of that faith, excepting the Persians, and some Uzbek tribes. These two sects brand each other with the title of heretics; and this difference between them was the ground of Mir Weis’s application, aggravated by the charge of being obstructed in the public exercise of their worship; which however was not true.

Obtains a dispensation.

THE Mollahs did not hesitate to give their sentence in the affirmative; and the pretended Haji or pilgrim, having obtained the Fetfa or Fetva, that is, the decision, returned to Isfâhân. Altho’ this authority for rebellion could be of no service to him, till he should return to Kandahâr, yet he discovered no inclinations that way, waiting to see what time might produce; which soon declared in his favour: for not long after, there arrived on the frontiers of Persia an ambasador from Russia, with a numerous retinue. He was an Armenian, named Israel Orii; and pretending to be descended from the ancient kings of that country, tho' originally a common soldier, dropped some hints that he did not renounce his right to the sovereignty. This report, thro' frivolous, was enough to alarm the Shâh and his ministers: and another, that he had threatened to get all the Romish missionaries expelled the kingdom, stirred up the Europeans against him, so far as to suggest, that the letters which he brought from the Christian princes were spurious. On this occasion, certain predictions, said to be preserved by the Armenians, were alleged, importing, that the kingdom of Armenia should be established one day, under the protection of Russia ^k.

A. D.
1708.

¹ KRUSINSKI’S Hist. of the late Revolut. of Pers. vol. i. p. 150, & seqq. HANWAY ubi supr. p. 29, & seqq.

Gains credit at

court.

As idle as these reports were, yet Mir Weis, finding they obtained credit, resolved to make some use of them. He insinuated, that as Georgia bordered on Armenia, and that the inhabitants of both countries were allied by religion, those of the first would favour the pretensions of the ambassador, and Gourghîn Khân be encouraged to renew the attempt which he had lately made to recover the sovereignty of Georgia, which he laid claim to. The court was so terrified with apprehensions, on this occasion, that, but for fear of disobliging the Czar Peter I. Hufseyñ would not have suffered the ambassador to proceed to Isphâhân. Mean time the artful speeches of Mir Weis made such an impression on the timorous ministers, that they began to grow jealous of Gourghîn Khân's power; which being easily infused into the head of their weak prince, it was resolved to place near him some trusty person, who might watch over his conduct, and be able to make head against him, in case he offered to create any disturbance. By means of the prime minister, who was Mir Weis's friend, and the Khân's enemy, the former was chosen for the purpose; and, to increase his credit with the people, he was honoured with the Kalaet (E), as well as restored to his former employment.

Sent bac

to Kan-

dahâ.

MIR WEIS being returned to Kandahâr, about the end of 1709, was at a loss in what manner to acquaint his countrymen with his project, and engage them to assist him in the execution,

^k KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 160, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 36, & seqq.

(E) Khalaet signifies perfect or accomplished; a robe of honour given by the king's orders. It is used also for any present of horses, arms, or the like, from a superior. The Turks call this Ka'tân; which word the Russians use for a coat in general.

A. D.
1708.

when a favourable opportunity offered for the purpose. Georghân Khan, who had continued to treat the Afghans with severity, was so provoked at the return of Mir Weis, that, as it were in opposition to the court, he resolved to do something to dishonour him. The method which he took, was to demand his daughter, esteemed the most beautiful lady in the province, for his Harâm. The Afghans are averse to marry their females to persons of a different nation and religion, much more to their being treated as slaves. Mir Weis judged this a proper occasion to impart his long-concerted design to the principal men among them, whom he assembled in his tent. They all applauded his project, and promised to support him; “swearing to suffer their wives to be torn from them, and “their slaves to be set at liberty, if they did not perform “their engagements. This oath they also confirmed upon “bread, salt, their sabres, and the Korân ¹.”

Dissembled injuries.

As soon as the assembly broke up, Mir Weis sent a young handsome girl, magnificently dressed, to the Khân, as his daughter. The deception passed the more easily, as women of rank are never seen by men till they are disposed of: and the Afghân chief, by bribing the governor's domestics, so far prevailed, as to obtain leave to appear in his presence. At this interview, he behaved with so much submission, that the Khân believed he had effectually humbled his most powerful enemy: and Mir Weis improved this opportunity so well by his assiduities, that he was reckoned among the number of his most intimate friends. Things being brought to the point he aimed at, the Afghân chief resolved to put his plot in execution. Altho' the Georgians whom the Khân had retained about him, as before-mentioned, did not amount to 1000 men, yet being the bravest troops in the East, they were an invincible obstacle to his design: but he removed it, by his address. He secretly engaged the chiefs of the tribe named Tirin to refuse to pay the usual taxes; on notice of which rebellion, the greater part of the Georgians were sent to suppress it. Mean time Mir Weis, who had directed his own tribe to approach within two or three leagues of Kandahâr, invited the Khân to an entertainment in the camp; which the governor accepted the more readily, as that artful chief expressed more resentment than any body against the mutineers. On the day appointed for the feast, he caused many armed men to mix with the Afghâns, who were daily admitted into the town to do laborious offices; and gave them orders to stay after sun-set, when, the gates being shut, strangers were obliged to depart.

A. D.
1709.

¹ HANWAY ibid. p. 38, & seqq.

A. D.

1709.

THE camp was designedly pitched near one of the governor's country-houses, the better to prevent suspicion. After the banquet, Gourgîn Khân, oppressed with heat and wine, fell asleep in the same tent; as did his retinue in those whither the Afghâns had invited them to partake of the entertainment. When all was quiet, Mir Wâis, at the head of 50 men, armed with spears, rushed into the tent, and slew him, after a brave resistance, in which he killed several of the assassins. The Persians and Georgians were all massacred at the same time, by their hosts. Their arms, cloaths, and horses, were distributed among the bravest of his tribe; and having himself taken those of Gourghîn Khân, he marched to Kandahâr. They arrived at the city an hour after sun-set; and the guards, deceived by those false appearances, opened the gates, and were cut to pieces. The flower of the Afghâns soon coming up, were joined by those concealed in the city: and proclamation being made for the townsmen to keep within doors, where they should be safe, every soldier of the garrison, and person attached to the Khân, were, in a few hours, destroyed ^m.

Kills the governor.

NEXT morning the principal inhabitants being summoned, Mir Wâis, in soothing terms, told them, "It was not ambition, but a desire to free them from the slavery of their masters, which had moved him to take so bold a step: that Gourghîn Khân was the only soldier among the Persians, who now dared not to besiege a fortress, which the Mogol emperors, with more troops than there were stones in its walls, had attempted in vain: that however, if there were any among them who had not courage to enjoy the precious liberty dropped down to them from heaven, they should have free licence to go in quest of some new tyrant, beyond the borders of that now happy state." The inhabitants, not expecting such mild proposals, answered with loud applauses, and swore to stand by him with their lives and fortunes. Mir Wâis exhorted his people to do nothing to offend the townsmen; and immediately gave orders for putting the place in the best posture of defence.

The inhabitants revolt.

THREE days after, the Georgian detachment, ignorant of what had happened, coming back, loaden with the spoils of the rebels, they were suffered to approach within musket-shot, and then had the cannon of the town discharged upon them. At the same time Mir Wâis marched out, at the head

Defeats the Georgians.

^m HANWAY ibid. p. 44, & seqq. KRUSINSKI ibid. p. 181.

A. D. 1709. of 5 or 6000 horse, intending to cut off their retreat; but found them better trained to war than his Afghâns. Notwithstanding the great superiority of these latter in numbers, who attacked them five times in one day, yet they were always defeated: so that the Georgians, after quitting their booty, fought their way thro' the country, for eight days; and at last, forcing a passage sword in hand, passed the defile of Zebil. This narrow strait is on the side of Persia, as that of Kaoul is towards India, they are the only passes thro' the mountains which surround the province of kandahâr; and the acquisition of this defile (with the expulsion of the Georgians), was the only advantage which Mîr Weis reaped from this expedition. That chief having learned now by experience, that valour alone is not sufficient in carrying on war, left troops to guard the defile of Zebil, and applied himself to discipline his menⁿ.

Refuses to negotiate

THE Persian court, reflecting on the difficulty of penetrating thro' the mountains with an army, and the danger there was, that the Afghâns, if hard pressed, might surrender the country a second time to the Mogol, resolved, before they had recourse to force, to try what could be done by negotiation. Mohammed Jani Khân, who was sent on this deputation, used all his rhetoric and art to prevail on Mîr Weis, with whom he had been intimately acquainted, to return to his duty. As he added menaces to the fair promises offered by the court, the chief, afraid lest his discourse should affect the hearers, silenced him abruptly, "calling him a deceitful man, and upbraiding him with laying snares to entangle them," sent him to prison. By the confinement of Jani Khân, the court was ignorant of what had passed; and being uneasy, sent a second deputation. For this purpose, they chose the lieutenant of Mohammed Khân, governor of Herât; who, having performed the pilgrimage to Mekka in company with Mîr Weis, the ministers judged he would be less suspected, and more acceptable to him, than the other. But when he had explained his commission, the Afghân chief told him, in an angry tone, "That was it not for having been his fellow-traveller, and that he was unwilling to violate the laws of hospitality, he would punish him for offering to make such base proposals to men who were free." He added, "Slave to a king who is going to lose his sovereignty, listen to what I say: The victory comes from God; and this victory is near (F). The impure worship of the followers with the ministers.

* HANWAY ibid. p. 48, & seqq. KRUSINSKI. ibid. p. 184, & seqq.

(F) A passage out of the Korân.

" of

“ of Ali, hath too long infected the most fertile province of Asia: heaven has at length declared against the Persians.
 “ The Afghâns, who are charged with the Divine vengeance, “ will not sheath their swords, till they have destroyed this “ prince, and extirpated his nation.” After this menacing speech, which seemed in some degree prophetic, Mir Weis contented himself with detaining the Haji.

THE court at length perceiving that there were no hopes of recovering Kandahâr by negotiation, ordered the Khân of Herât to march against the rebels with 15,000 horse. Mir
Weis, acquainted with the difference there was between the Persians and Georgians, with only 5000 horse, raised in a hurry, went to meet the enemy; who fled on firing some field-pieces, and gave themselves up to slaughter. Two or three such actions, in the space of 18 months, emboldened the rebels, and so intimidated the Persians, that in September 1710, 5000 horse, under Mohammed Khân, governor of Tauris, were defeated by only 500 Afghâns, who killed and wounded above 1000 of his men, and took him prisoner, with three of his sons. The court on this sent 30,000 Persians, and 1,200 Georgians, under the command of Khozrof Khân, nephew to Gurghîn Khân, and Wali of Georgia, a proper person to revenge the cause of his countrymen. In November 1711, he encamped near Farra (G), a city not far from the rebels. Here he staid to inform himself of the strength of the enemy, and nature of the country. He likewise agreed to a negotiation; which proving of no effect, he advanced towards the straits of Zebil°.

MIR WEIS, whose army was inferior in number to the Khân's, perceiving how difficult it would be for cavalry to act in those defiles, and being unwilling to make his men dismount, retired to the river Belese, three leagues distant. The Persians passed the straits, surprised to find them unguarded, and came to the river, which they crossed on horseback, led by their general. The Afghâns astonished at their resolution, and being attacked with equal intrepidity, gave way, and ° HANWAY ibid. p. 51, & seqq. KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 188, & seqq.

(G) A square town about half a league in compass, surrounded with a mud wall, in a fertile well watered country. Hanway. 'Tis called also Parra, and is mentioned by Tavernier, and other travellers, particularly our Sulbanck and Cowert, Steel and Crozwether, to be found in Purchas's Pilgrims. It lies in the road from Spâban to Kandahâr, and has a great trade for silk.

A. D.
1710.

retired in disorder. Mir Weis kept the field with his shattered troops, while the Khan marched on to besiege Kandahâr. The inhabitants affrighted, offered to deliver up the place, on condition to have their lives, liberty, and fortunes, preserved. But the general, elated with success, and urged by a thirst of revenge, imprudently sent them word, that they must submit at discretion.

Are again
defeated.

THE Afghâns rejected such abject terms: and while the Khan besieged the town, the number of troops under Mir Weis augmented every day. The Balochî's, inhabiting the province of Mukrán, to the south of Kandahâr, a fierce and warlike people, joined him, on his invitation; and the Tirîns (H) resorted to him in great numbers. However, he chose to cut off their forage and provisions, rather than hazard any more battles, without necessity. The besiegers falling quickly in want of necessaries, the Khan's troops deserted in large bodies. The general then began to repent that he did not sign the capitulation; and seeing his army reduced to 10,000, resolved to retire. But it was now too late; for he had scarce begun to raise the siege, when Mir Weis, arriving with 16,000 men, to relieve the place, fell upon his troops; who, disheartened, fled at the first attack. The Khan finding his efforts to rally them in vain, and resolving not to survive the disgrace, rushed, with the few remaining Georgians, into the thickest of the enemy's squadrons, and bravely fighting, was slain. This was the most considerable shock which the Persians had yet received from the Afghâns: for seven days they were pursued, and so harrailed, that only 700 escaped either death or slavery ^P.

Mir Weis
made king.

A. D.
1713.

THE astonished court sent another army in 1713, under Mohammed Rustan Khân, who had no better fortune than his predecessor; and from this defeat, all the towns and strong holds, which had yet held out against the new government, submitted to them: so that the whole kingdom of Kandahâr fell under the dominion of the Afghâns. It is said, indeed, that the Georgians, alcribing the loss of so many expeditions to the cowardice of the Persians, in 1714, offered to subdue the rebels, provided their army should be composed only of troops of their own nation: but that Hussayn, afraid they might make a bad use of their success, rejected the proposal. However that was, the court having lost all hopes of reducing him by force, as well as negotiation, ceased to arm against him: so that this prince died peaceably in his new kingdom in the year 1715. A. D. 1715.

^P HANWAY ibid p. 54, & seqq. KRUSINSK. ibid p. 190, & seqq.

(H) The Balochî's and Tirîns are a branch of the Afghâns; are mentioned before. The first the latter a tribe of the Khijî.

It may be said of Mir Weis, that he was no less circumspect in undertaking any enterprize, than resolute in the execution; and that his success was as much owing to his prudence as his valour. He had, for some time, assumed the title of king, with other ensigns of sovereignty, and ordered the Kotbah (I) to be made in his name. The inscription round his coin, in Persian, was, “The celebrated Mir Weis, emperor of the world, a most just prince, has caused this coin to be struck at Kandahâr, the place of his residence.” His death.

S E C T. III.

Affairs of Persia continued, to the Detronement of Shâh Hufseyñ, by Mîr Mahmûd, Son of Mîr Weis.

MIR WEIS was succeeded in the throne by his brother Mîr Abdallah, whom he had appointed his successor, his sons being too young to hold the reins of government. But he never discovered so much want of judgment in any-thing, as he did in that choice: for Abdallah had neither his genius, his ambition, nor his resolution. Of this he soon convinced the Afghâns; for he was scarcely invested with the supreme authority, when he formed the design of restoring Kandahâr to the crown of Persia (K). The tribes were divided in their opinions about it: the aged and infirm, the peaceable and timorous, were for it, as fearing they were too weak long to withstand so formidable a power; and that a reconciliation was the only means to screen them from the resentment of their antient masters. On the other hand, the military men, with those of youth and spirit, exclaimed against the project, as absolutely destructive. They alleged, “That after the provocations given, they could not depend on treaty-secu- Succeeded by his brother. Resolves to submit.

⁹ HANWAY ibid. p. 57. KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 158, & seqq.

(I) The Kotbah is a prayer, read by the Imâm or priest of every Mosku, every Friday (which is their day of worship) in the afternoon, for the health of the king. This is an essential mark of the acknowledgement of his sovereignty.

(K) Mir Weis may be, in some respect, compared to Oli-ver Cromwell; and Mir Abdallah to his brother Richard. Krusinski puts his death in 1717.

rity :

A. D.
1715.

“ rity : That as soon as the Persians had again gotten possession of the strong-holds, they would take signal vengeance for the losses and disgrace which they had suffered : That it was strange they should be disheartened by their victories, and fight for liberty only to become more slaves than before : That since their enemies dared no longer to invade them, they ought in their turn to take advantage of their weakness, and attack them ; at least ought to enjoy the tranquillity they had obtained, so long as they saw no danger of losing it.”

Slain by his nephew.

HOWEVER, Mir Abdollah, finding his scheme approved of, tho’ but by a few of the chief men, resolved to proceed in his design. His intention was to restore the city and province to Husséyn, on three conditions : 1. That the annual tax which the Afghâns paid before their revolt, should be taken off. 2. That no foreign troops should be sent into the province. 3. That the Shâh should grant the government of the kingdom to him, and his family, successively. Accordingly, instructions were secretly drawn up for deputies, to be sent to Ispâhân ; and they had some reason to believe that their proposals would be agreeable to the court. But for all the care which they took to conceal this negotiation, which they knew was disagreeable to the majority of the tribes, it came to the knowledge of Mir Mahmûd (L), the elder of Mir Weis’s two sons. This prince, then aged about 18, sensibly piqued to see himself deprived of what he looked upon to be his right, by inheritance, thought this a proper occasion to shew his resentment. With this view, accompanied by about 40 of his father’s friends, he went to the palace, which he made himself master of ; and then entering the apartment where his uncle was asleep, killed him. The conspirators immediately proclaimed the new Soltân, with loud acclamations ; and the people, alarmed with the sound of military instruments, flocked thither to learn the cause.

Who is
made king.

MIR MAHMUD made no difficulty to declare what he had done ; but alleged, that his motive was the public good. As a proof of this, he read aloud the instrument, and other papers relating to the treaty, which his uncle was going to conclude. This evidence, joined to the signal proofs which this young prince had given of his courage, having almost

* KRUSINSK. p. 202, & seqq. HANWAY’S Acct. of the British trade, &c. vol. iii. p. 58, & seqq.

(L) Miscalled Magnud by our author, and those whom he followed from his infancy followed his father in all his expeditions, determined the people in his favour, especially the military men; whose suffrages being confirmed by the rest of the tribes, he was, with the general consent, proclaimed king of Kandahâr, six months after the death of his father^s.

A. D.
1716.

THE young prince had scarcely ascended the throne, when several events happened, which seemed to preface the troubles his reign was to produce; at the same time they removed part of those obstacles, which stood in the way of his ambition. The family to whom Abbâs the Great had given the government of Hafaray, being extinct, his successors had subjected this province to the authority of a Khân or governor, who commanded in the province of Herât. The Abdollâ's, who had submitted to Persia, as hath been said, on condition of not being subject to foreign governors, impatient any longer to lie under their yoke, resolved to follow the example of the Afghâns, and make themselves free. Mohammed Zammân Khân, the then governor of the province, pleased with the agreeable aspect of Ezâd-allah, son to the chief of an Abdollâ tribe, demanded him of the father; who, allured by lucrative views, used all his persuasion to engage his son to live with the Khân. Ezâd-allah heard the proposal with indignation; and finding his father determined to use his authority to constrain him, to avoid the force, in conjunction with some young men, like himself, was induced to kill him.

The Ab.
dollâ's rebel:A. D.
1717.

THE Khân, to punish the parricide, and prevent an insurrection, to be apprehended from so bold a step, ordered 500 horse to march against Ezadallah's party; who met and routed them. The governor, shocked at this disgrace, assembled his troops at Herât, and marched towards the rebels camp. Ezadallah, now at the head of 2000 men, left one half in ambush, and with the other 1000 encamped on the river Morgâb. The Khân perceiving the enemy to be so few, charged them, without any precaution: when those in ambushcade so terrified the Persians with the shouts they made in falling forth, that they fled precipitately to Herât. Ezadallah, transported by his youth and courage, followed them so closely, that he entered with them pell-mell into the town. As the inhabitants had all formerly been of the Sunni sect, and hated the extortions of the Persian governors, they joined with Ezadallah against the garrison, who were put to the sword. In less than three months he got possession of the

and Herât
revolts.

A. D. 1717. other strong places of the province. And thus Herát became an independent republic, in which its deliverer held the most considerable rank ^t.

Other provinces full of. THE revolt of Herát was followed by several other alarming incidents. In 1719, the Kurds, a restless roving people, after wasting the country round the city of Hamadán (M),

A. D. 1719. had the insolence to commit robberies under the walls of Isfáhán, and even to carry off many of the Sháh's horses. The Uzbek Tatars also, on the east side of the Caspian lake, taking advantage of this distracted state of Persia, ravaged the north part of the vast province of Khorassán. At the same time the Lesji Tatars, inhabiting Dághesián, on the west side of the same inland sea, to revenge the stoppage of 1700 (N) tománs subsidy, renewed their incursions into the province of Shírwán, where they committed all sorts of outrages.

Sháh
Husseyn
alarmed.

SHAH HUSSEYN, astonished to see so many provinces declare against him, at length roused out of his lethargy. As the Abdóllís and Uzbeks, who had entered into a confederacy, appeared to be the most formidable enemies, he resolved to make an extraordinary effort against them. The court having lost all their best generals, they made choice of Sefsi Kúli Khán, who had, for several years, been Diván Beghi, or Lord Chief Justice of Isfáhán (O); but finding the king prejudiced by his enemies, resigned that employment, and retired. The Khán, sensible of the difficulties to be encountered with in so ticklish a commission, and the opposition he should find in the execution of it, from the prevailing faction, declined the offered honour: but the court hit on an artful expedient to engage him to accept of it. They invested, in a very pompous manner, his only son, then but 17 years of age, with the title of Generalissimo; rightly judging, that his father would accompany him in the expedition.

The Persians overthrown.

THEY set out with an army of 30,000 chosen troops, besides a numerous train of artillery; and had scarce entered the province of Herát, when they met with a body of 12,000 Uzbeks, whom they cut to pieces. This first enterprize raised

^t KRUSINSK. ibid p. 208, & seqq. HANWAY ibid p. 61, & seqq.

(M) This, and not Tauris, as generally supposed, is the ancient Ekkatana of the Greeks, and Ametha of the Old Testament.

(N) They make 4200 pounds.

(O) It should seem no more odd that Asia should have fighting Lord Chief Justices, than that Europe should have her fighting bishops.

the courage of the victors : yet Ezâd-allah, at the head of only 15,000 horse, and without any cannon, did not fear to offer them battle. During the war there was not a more obstinate engagement : it began at sun-rise, and continued, without intermission, till one in the afternoon. The victory was still doubtful, when the Persians lost it, by the inattention of those who commanded the artillery. These officers, not having observed that their own troops occupied a post which the Abdoli's had just quitted, fired upon them, which put the whole army into such confusion, suspecting some treachery, that Ezâd-allah, taking advantage of a circumstance, the cause of which was perhaps unknown to him, made a vigorous charge on the Persian troops, who, after a faint resistance, fled. The victor, to make his blow complete, pursued them a whole day. They lost 8000 men, with their general, and his father, who were killed in the retreat, their baggage; the military chest, and 20 pieces of cannon. Of the Abdoli's 3000 were slain ^u.

HUSSEYN's armies being thus unfortunate, new enemies Bâhrayn declared against him. These were the Arabs of Mashât, taken whose country lies along the Arabian coast, opposite to Ormûz. They are of a particular Mohammedan sect; yet nearer to that of the Sunni than the Shiay, and subject to an Imâm (P), or ecclesiastical sovereign, who has an absolute power over them. They had already taken Bâhrayn (Q), and threatened to attack Bander Abbâsi (R). Fatey Ali Khân, then Etemâd-addawlet (the prime minister), offered to march against them : but the king, fearing that the addition of the authority of generalissimo might make him too powerful, re-

^u KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 213, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 63, & seqq.

(P) Captain Hamilton says these Arabs are of the sect of Ali, that is, Shiay: that they are very humane to their slaves, courteous to strangers (he speaks by experience), and governed by a king. See his New Acct. of the E. Ind. vol. i. p. 60, & seqq.

(Q) Bâhrayn, the dual of Bâbr, in Arabic, signifies, The two seas; so named from its situation in the Persian gulf. Captain Hamilton says they took it in the beginning of this century; but quitted it again, because the pearl-fishers, who are mostly Arabs, deserted it. But they returned afterwards, when the Mashât Arabs had withdrawn. Ibid. p. 74.

(R) This signifies the port of Abbâs. It was called Gomrân, before the first Shâh of that name put it in its present condition, with the materials of the city Ormûz, which he had demolished. It still bears the name of Gomrân, Gombroan, or Komrân, among Europeans.

A. D.
1720.

By the Maskât
Arabs.

turned him thanks, and appointed Luft Ali Khân, that minister's brother-in-law, to command the expedition. In the beginning of the year 1720, that general marched his troops to Bander Abbâsi; from whence, by contract with the viceroy of Goa, the Portuguese fleet was to transport his army to Bâhrayn. It consisted of 4 large vessels, 15 pinks, and some other transports. But whether the Khân did not think this fleet strong enough to engage that of Maskât (S), or his enemies at court with-held the money, he did not pay the sum which had been stipulated. The commander of the fleet proposed to send for a reinforcement; but finding the payment still refused, he prepared to sail back to Goa. Mean time the Arabs resolved to attack his fleet before any reinforcement came. The Portugueses went to meet them at the mouth of the straits of Ormuz: but having lost a small vessel in the engagement, and not caring to run more hazard, they set sail in the night for Goa.

Mahmûd
seizes Ker-mân.

LUFT ALI KHAN thus deserted, instead of invading the Arabs, was obliged to defend the coast of Persia against their insults. Mean while Mir Mahmûd, finding that the distractions which then reigned in the Mogol's empire, secured him from any danger on that side, judged this a proper juncture to put in execution the design which his father had conceived of subduing all Persia. But to establish his reputation, by some signal exploit, before he would venture to disclose his intention to the Afghâns, he resolved to make an expedition to Kermân. This project was approved of; and having raised about 10,000 choice men, he set forward on his march towards that province. In that part of Sajestân (or Sistân) which separates Kermân from Kandahâr, there is a sandy desert to be passed, of 15 days journey over; and altho' Mir Mahmûd took all the precautions necessary for supplying his troops with water, provisions, and forage, yet he lost 2000 men in the march, besides many beasts of carriage *.

* KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 217, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 67, & seqq.

(S) 'Tis likely that both reasons concurred to hinder the payment, as the event shews. As to the strength of the Maskât fleet, we learn from Captain Hamilton, that in 1715 it consisted of one 74 gun ship, two of 60 guns, one of 50, and 18 small ships, from 32 to 12 guns each; besides some trankis, or rowing-vessels, from 4 to 8 guns; with which they kept all the sea-coasts in awe, from Cape Komorin to the Red Sea. New Acc't. of E. Ind. vol. i. p. 76.

Driven out again,

As soon as the Afghâns appeared on the frontiers of Kermân, the Khan, who had no troops to oppose them, fled; and left Mahmûd a free passage to the capital (T), which bears the same name. Altho' the city opened her gates to him, yet he laid heavy contributions on all the inhabitants, and put numbers of them to cruel tortures. They had been four months under this tyranny, when Lust Ali Khân came, and rescued them. He marched to their relief, as soon as he heard of the invasion, with some select troops, and put to flight the little army of the Afghâns; which news revived somewhat the spirits of the court, then newly arrived at Tahiran. The Khân fortified the citadel, and left a strong garrison in it: but whether to be revenged on his enemies at court, who had considerable estates there, or in order to maintain his army, he laid heavy contributions on the country, and quartered his soldiers on the inhabitants at discretion, taking from them also their arms, horses, and camels.

In autumn the army marched to Shirâz, the capital of Pârs (or proper Persia), the place of rendezvous. All the troops assembled there in November, and formed the best-appointed army which had been seen in Persia for many years. Every-thing seemed to presage the ruin of the Afghâns, against whom these preparations were making; when of a sudden the general was arrested, by an order from court, whither he was sent up prisoner, and the whole army at once dispersed. This sudden change was owing to the resentment of the lords whose lands he had lately ravaged. They judged by the credit which he had already gained with the Shâh, on account of his late victory, that their interest at court would be reduced very low, in case he should succeed in reducing Kandahâr; which, therefore, they were resolved to prevent: but as this could not be done, so long as Fatey Ali Khân continued in his office, they first resolved to make a sacrifice of him *.

ACCORDINGLY, the king's great almoner and chief physician, who were in the plot, entering their sovereign's chamber, at midnight, informed him, that they had discovered a conspiracy contrived against his majesty, between the Etimâdaddowlet and Lust Ali Khân; who, supported by the

He is imprisoned.

* KRUSINSK. p. 220, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 71, & seqq.

(T) It is famous for the beauty of the fashes and stuffs made there. The wool of which they are made, is allowed to be the best and finest known; and draws thither many Indian merchants. How-away.

army,

A. D.
1720.

Prime minister
blinded,

army, and a body of 3,000 Kúrds, were that night to seize his person, with all the royal family. In proof of this, they produced a letter written, as they said, by the prime minister, with a counterfeited of the royal seal upon it: at the sight of which the deluded Sháh Huseyn swooned away. As soon as he came to himself, in a council of some principal eunuchs, who were in the plot, the Kurchi Báshi, or general of the household troops, was commanded to break open the prime minister's house, and bring the king his head, in case he made any resistance. He was roused out of his sleep, and obeyed the order: but as soon as he was brought to the Kurchi Báshi, he had his eyes plucked out (U), and was put to the torture; under pretence of obliging him to discover the plot, but in reality to force him to discover his effects (W), which the eunuchs expected would be confiscated in their favour. At the same time messengers were on every side dispatched to secure that unfortunate minister's relations and friends, especially his son-in-law Lust Ali Khán; who being decoyed by the governor of Shiráz into that city, was there closely confined; on which his fine army disbanded as before related.

by a court plot.

MEAN while preparations were making to defend the city against the Kúrds, and other forces, who were hourly expected: but as soon as day light came, and Sháh Huseyn saw that no enemy appeared, this deluded prince began to suspect that his ministers had imposed on him. He severely reproached the informers; and, as soon as the Etimád-addoleet was recovered of his wounds, he held a diván, in which he presided himself, to examine into that minister's conduct. That unhappy lord made his defence with great force and resolution. But altho' he pleaded his cause so movingly, that the king was convinced of his innocence, and wept for his own hasty judgment, yet it was thought fit, out of policy, to confine him in the castle of Shiráz, with the allowance of a considerable pension; in which state he died two years after. All who had been confined on his account, were restored to their estates; and Lust Ali Khán discharged out of prison, only refunding the plunder taken by him on the frontiers &c.

Y KRAUSINK. p. 223, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 72, & seqq.

(U) Or rather put out, by drawing some red hot piece of metal before his eyes.

(W) His estate, by his own acknowledgement, amounted to 900,000 tomans, or 2,250,000 pounds sterling.

THE Lesji had, in 1719, with a body of more than 30,000 men, in the night, surprised the Khan of Shamakhia, in Shirwân, with an army of 40,000. On this occasion, the Khan was slain, with a considerable part of his troops: but understanding that Vashtanga Wali of Georgia had gotten together 60,000 men, and concluding it was to punish them for the ravages made in his territories, in his absence, they sent to implore the clemency of Shâh Huseyn, and intreat him to interpose his authority in their favour. The chief Mullah and physician reflecting, that a son-in-law of the late prime minister was brother to Vashtanga, were afraid lest this prince, after defeating the Lesji, might attempt to oblige the court to punish them for their iniquitous conduct. They therefore alarmed the Shah with dangers from the Georgian prince; and then counselled him, that the only way to prevent them, was to grant a peace to the Lesji, and order the Wali to forbear hostilities. This was done in such an imperious tone, that Vashtanga, already on his march, ordering the courier into his presence, drew his sabre, and swore he would never fight again in the service of his king, or in defence of Persia.

A. D.
1720.
The Georgians disgusted.

THIS treaty, with the restitution of the island Bâhrayn, for 8000 tomans (or 20,000 pounds), seemed to promise tranquility to Persia, especially as the Afghâns, intimidated by their late defeat, were ready to come to an accommodation; and Douri Effendi, the Turkish ambassador, whose arrival alarmed the timorous Huseyn, had assured him, that his master was determined to observe the peace. In April the court was informed, that the Abdallis had made such bold incursions, that Herât, and its dependencies, if not secured, would soon be obliged to submit; and that the 26th of the same month, Tauris, the second city in Persia, and capital of Azerbijân, was destroyed by an earthquake, with near 100,000 of the inhabitants. Shâh Huseyn returned to Isfâhân the first of June: towards the end of which, the sun disappeared for 10 days, and gave little more light than when totally eclipsed; the horizon being covered with a red cloud. The astrologers being consulted, some predicted an earthquake like that at Tauris; others a general conflagration, by fire from heaven. The frightened Shâh was weak enough to quit his palace, and lodge in tents; while the inhabitants, following the example of the king, and his court, all the gardens and public squares were filled with people.²

Bâhrayn restored.

A. D.
1721.

² KRUSINCKI'S Revol. Pers. vol. i. p. 266, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 84, & seqq.

A. D.

1721.

The Lesji conquer Shîrwân.

THE Lesji, freed from their fears of Vashtanga, and confiding in his oath, unmindful of their obligations to *Hussey*n, in spring 1721, made an irruption into Shîrwân with 15,000 men under Soltân Ibrâhîm and Dawd Beg, their chiefs. Their pretence for this revolt was the disgrace of Fatey Ali Khân, who had been condemned, they said, only because he was descended from their antient sovereigns. After overrunning the flat country, they sat down before Shamakhîya the 15th of August, in hopes to take it by favour of the inhabitants, who were mostly Sunni. The governor *Hussey*n Khân, apprehensive of the danger from them, made the best defence he could without fallying; but, after 25 days siege, those of that party found means to open one of the gates to the enemy. The governor, who too late endeavoured to escape, being pursued, was taken, and put to the acutest tortures, as they imagined he had buried his treasures. Whether he had or not, he confessed none; for which reason the barbarians cut him in pieces, with his nephew and another of his relations, whose bodies they threw to the dogs. They put to the sword 4000 Shiay, and plundered the foreign merchants. They soon became masters of the rest of Shîrwân; and then passing the Kûr, defeated 40,000 Persians under the Khân of Iriwân, who shut himself up in Ganja, where they besieged him.

So many misfortunes on the back of each other completed the consternation of the court; and *Shah Hussey*n, like all weak princes who impute the fatal effects, naturally resulting from their own misconduct, to the wrath of heaven, bent his whole attention to appease it, by acts of humiliation and prayer; while his wicked ministers, who had brought down all those evils, instead of being put to death for their crimes, were still continued in the management of public affairs.

The Af-ghâns take heart.

THE defeat of the Afghâns before Khermân, and the preparations which Lust Ali Khân was making for the siege of Kandahâr, had so disheartened them, that they waited only for his approach to sue for peace: but, when they heard that he was imprisoned, and his army disbanded, their courage returned; and Mîr Mahmûd recovered his credit, which had been sunk, with the people. The first thing he did was to raise troops, and put the province in a good condition of defence. When this was done, the thoughts of invading Persia revived in him afresh; and the feeble state, which that country was in at that juncture, flattered his hopes. The province of Kandahâr, Herât, Sablestân, Makrân, and Dâghestân, had thrown off the yoke; Sâjestân, Kermân, and the greater part of Kherassân, had been laid waste, while the dispersion of Lust Ali

Ali Khân's army, and the oath of the Wali of Georgia, rendered Persia intirely defenceless^a.

A. D.

1721.

THESE arguments, accompanied with proper acts of liberality, soon brought the Afghâns to enter into his views. 15,000 presently enlisted themselves under his banners; and no sooner did the news of the intended expedition reach the neighbouring states, than the Abdalli's, Balochi's, with the inhabitants of Kabul, and the adjacent parts, flocked to him. These made an army of 25,000 men (W); with which crossing the desert of Sajestân, with the same fatigue as he had done the year before, towards the beginning of January, 1722, he reached Kermân. The city being peopled mostly by Parsi's (X), and Indians, who considered them as friends, soon submitted: but all his attempts against the citadel were baffled by the strength of the place and bravery of the garrison. This distracted him. He saw, that if he persisted in the siege, he should destroy all his army; and that to break it up, would prove his utter disgrace. He was thus reduced to the brink of despair, when the governor, either disheartened by such vigorous attacks, or for want of provisions, offered him 2,500 tomans (or 6,250 pounds) to withdraw his forces. The proposal was accepted with joy; and Mahmûd, having recruited his loss of 4,000 men, in the march and in the siege, with Parsi's, who are numerous in Kermân, took the road to Yazd, about 70 leagues distant, through a sandy country. As soon as he arrived, he assaulted the city on every side; but, being repulsed with loss, would hazard no more. He therefore proceeded forward, resolving nothing should stop him till he arrived at Isfâhan, which was his reason for taking the roads least inhabited.

Mahmûd
sets out.

A. D.

1722.

AT length, having passed through the plains, which lie between the cities of Pahnavens and Biben, he entered the cultivated country, which the people deserted for fear. Here he defeated some troops of observation, and went on: but, when within four days march of the capital, he was met by two officers deputed by Mohammed Kûli Khân, then prime minister. By these he was offered 15,000 tomans (or 37,500 which the old Persians, who worship the fire as an emblem of the deity, are distinguished at present. Many of them are settled in India about Surât.

^a KRUSINS. ibid. vol. ii. p. 1, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 93; & seqq.

(W) According to Krusinski's account, vol. ii. p. 12, he left Kandahâr with about 54,000 men, and lost 14,000 before Kermân.

(X) Pârsî is the name by

E 2

pounds),

A. D.
1722.

pounds), on condition, that he should neither proceed any further, nor ravage the territory of Ispâhân. Mahmûd, judging from hence of the weakness of the court, dismissed the deputies without giving them an answer, and advanced hastily to Gulnâbâd (Y): a village within three leagues of that city, where he pitched his camp^b.

The court
astonished.

THIS unexpected visit of the Afghans, at a time when the court was wholly unprepared to receive them, threw the ministers into the greatest consternation. However as something must be done, they collected the few troops which were at hand; and to these they joined the militia, raised in a hurry in the city and the neighbourhood. A divan was called to deliberate on measures; but, as in times of distress, when unanimity in sentiments is most necessary, the pusillanimity of some, and wickedness of others, generally create perplexity, so the council was divided in opinion. The prime minister was for intrenching the army, to cover the town, and not hazarding a battle. He urged, "that, by this means, the militia would be emboldened, and the provincial troops have time to join them; that, if the rebels attempted to force their lines, they would be fought to advantage; and, if they continued unactive in their camp, it would be easy to cut off their provisions." On the contrary, Abdallâh Khân, Wâlî of Arabia, treating the Afghans as slaves, and with the greatest contempt, was for attacking them without delay; "insisting, that the honour of the king and of the nation was concerned to chastise their insolence."

Persian army defeated,

THIS last advice was approved of, and the 7th of March the Persian army appeared within sight of the enemies entrenchments, but did not engage them; the 8th being fixed for the attack by the court astrologers. The centre consisted of 8000 of the king's troops, one half foot covered by 24 pieces of cannon, under Sheykh Ali Khân; the right wing formed of 2000 Kûlams, or the king's slaves, was commanded by Rostam Khân, brother of Vashtanga, Wâlî of Georgia. It was strengthened with 3000 Arab horse by the Wâlî (Z) of Arabia, who shared the general command with the prime minister. This minister headed the left wing, composed of the the king's household, and was joined by Ali Merdan Khân,

^b KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 7, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 98, & seqq.

(Y) This name signifies conserve of roses.

(Z) He is called in Kasfirski, Machmet (or Makmet) Wâlî.

Wâlî of Loristân (A), with 500 horse. They had besides 18,000 infantry of militia armed with muskets; in all near 50,000 fighting men.

A. D.
1722.

MAHMUD's army, consisting chiefly of horse, were not above half that number, armed with a sabre and lance: many of them carry pistols also. Their defensive weapons are a buckler and cuirass, made of hard leather doubled. They were divided into four bodies: the right wing, which was most numerous, under the command of Aman Ola, a native of Kâbul; who, from a Darwish, choosing a military life, joined Mahmûd as an ally with a large body of troops, on condition of sharing equally the fruits of their conquests. Mahmûd was in the second division or centre; he gave the third to Nazr Ollah, a Parsî, one of his lieutenant generals; the fourth and least numerous of these bodies were select Pehlavâns, or Nassakchi (B). He, in some measure, supplied the defect of cannon, which his quick march would not permit him to bring, with a kind of harquebusses which carry a handful of musket balls. Each with its stock was carried on the back of a camel trained for the purpose ^c.

by the treachery

THE Persian troops made a very brilliant show; while the Afghâns appeared all in tatters, and disfigured with fatigue, in consequence of so long a march. The two armies looked at each other most part of the day; and the prime minister would fain have acted on the defensive: but the opinion of the two other generals prevailing, they began the battle, by attacking with their forces the left wing of the Afghâns, with such impetuosity, as flung them into disorder. At the same time, the Wâlî of Arabia, taking a great sweep to the right, overthrew all he met, and seized the enemy's camp. Mahmûd, who observed whatever passed from a throne raised on the back of an elephant, began to think all was lost; and it is likely that had been the case, if the Wâlî had returned directly, and charged the enemy in the rear. Mahmûd, terrified at the danger, was preparing for flight, and had ordered the lightest of his dromedaries to be made ready for him, when a new turn of fortune in his favour gave him new cou-

^c KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 17, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 101, 104, & 98.

(A) A mountainous province, belonging now to Kurdestân, by name to their forlorn hope. colonies from whence it was Hanway. Pehlavân, or Pabala-vân, signifies in Persian, a peopled. Berorjerât near Hamadin is its principal fortress. a brave and valiant man, or, as we say, a hero.

(B) The Afghâns give this

A. D. 1722. rage. The prime minister, seeing both armies engaged, charged the enemy's right wing with great bravery. Amán Ola, who commanded it, on this made a feint of giving way, and retired orderly about 50 paces; then, commanding his men to open their ranks of a sudden, 100 camels appeared kneeling with harquebusses on their backs: from whence a general discharge being made, most of the foremost rank were killed; and the rest, being vigorously attacked by the Afgháns, turned their backs.

and Persia
distressed.

AMÁN OLA, without giving the Persians time to recover themselves, pursued them to their battery, which he came behind; and having cut 2000 cannoneers, who guarded it, to pieces, caused the artillery to be pointed against the centre of the Persian army, who were thus put to flight before they had fought a stroke. The Wáli of Lorestán, and some Kháns, finding things grown desperate, withdrew with their troops to their respective provinces, leaving none to oppose the Afgháns but the Kúlar Agáfi. This general had already cut part of the opposite wing in pieces, and pushed the remainder as far as their intrenchments, when Mahmúd, advancing to take him in the rear, the Persians dispersed; so that the brave officer, after a desperate defence, was slain with 400 Georgians who stood firm to him. The Wáli of Arabia, who all the while remained in the Afghán camp, and would neither attack the enemy's rear, nor send succours to the generals in distress, who demanded them, had, by this time, taken the road to the town, loaded with Mahmúd's treasure, and the plunder of his camp. But the treasure, artillery, and baggage of the Persian army made ample amends. Thus were the Persian generals and their best troops sacrificed by the treachery of a villain (C), whom yet the misguided king

(C) Krusinski says, he was not the traitor then, but the Persian general.—This Arab prince, by religion a Sunni, whose father, 30 years before, had attempted to throw off the Persian yoke, either held a correspondence with Mahmúd, or was governed by the pernicious maxims of those generals, who, to prolong their own authority, do not choose to terminate a war, when it is in their power to bring things to a fortunate issue, for their sovereigns and their country. As generalissimo, he had 50 tomans, or 125 pounds, a day. Hanway. p. 123.

His villainy was punished afterwards by Mahmúd; not by death, but by imprisonment for life, and confiscation of his estate. He was the only minister, or officer, who escaped with life, of those who betrayed their king and country. He was hereditary prince of Kbusestán, the antient Susiana, called, by the Arabs, Abwáz, after its capital city. Ibid. p. 151.

still confided in. His army lost 15,000 men (D) : that of the Afghâns but an inconsiderable number ^d.

A. D.

1722.

ON this occasion, the king called a council, in which, for once, he spoke with proper dignity and strength : for, after representing the danger his person would be exposed to, if he suffered himself to be besieged in a city destitute either of fortifications or provisions. He added, " It is not for my own security that I propose to remove : a prince, who is afraid to die with his subjects, is unworthy to rule over them. " But the greater part of the provinces obey me. Their fate is connected with mine : for the rebel will be master of the empire, as soon as he has my person in his power." The prime minister confirmed the king's remarks, and advised his majesty's retiring that night to Kashân ; where, being at full liberty to act, he might easily assemble an army to raise the siege. He added, that the loss of Ispâhân would be only the loss of one city : whereas, if the king should continue there, the loss of it would draw on the loss of the monarchy. This speech seemed to convince the greater part of the assembly : when the Wâli of Arabia, who had so basely betrayed his trust that very day, and yet, by a strange fatality, was continued in his office, stood up ; and, speaking of the Afghâns as a contemptible gang of robbers, said, That to quit his capital would not only stain the honour of the Shâh, but dishearten his subjects ; and open the gates to the conqueror, sooner than the force of arms.

Hufseyñ
proposes to retreat.

THE boldest opinion prevailed over the most prudent. Is dissuad-
Shâh Hufseyñ, now ashamed to abandon Ispâhân, resolved to stay and defend it. New levies were made, the walls repaired, and intrenchments thrown up in places most exposed. The Wâli of Arabia was made governor of the city ; and he of Lorestân, generalissimo of the armies. The provincial troops were sent for up ; and Hufseyñ, now sensible of his imprudence in affronting the Wâli of Georgia, sent pressing letters, accompanied with magnificent presents, to persuade him to march to his assistance. ed from it.

THE king's affair might still have been retrievable, had the same care been taken to order things within, as had been taken to order them without the city. But there they failed egregiously : for the people from the country were permitted to come into the city, and every person forbidden under pain

^d KRUSINSKI ibid. p. 30, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 105, & seqq.

(D) Krusinski says but 2000, and the Afghâns as many.

A. D.
1722.Farabād palace deserted.

of death to stir from thence; although there were no magazines of provisions in the place*.

MEAN time Mahmūd, rather astonished at, than encouraged by, his victory, was so irresolute what course to pursue that he neglected to carry off the cannon which had been taken in the battle. The vast extent of Ispāhān, and number of troops within it, made him judge the siege would hold out till the governors should arrive with their forces to crush him. On the other hand, he thought, that he could neither with honour nor safety abandon the enterprize. His mind was thus wavering, when his spies brought him an account how matters stood in the city, and the consternation it was in. This made him resolve to push on his fortune before the enemy had time to recover themselves. With this view he began his march. The Persians, who imagined, from the artillery being abandoned by the Afghāns, that they had no intention to besiege Ispāhān, were surprized to find their whole army encamped on the 12th of the same month near Shirāzān, a town not far to the eastward. This motion so terrified them, that they abandoned the strong but magnificent palace of Farabād built at immense expence by Hussēyn, three miles from the city; a place which might have served as a fortress to incommode the enemy. It was deserted (on the 17th) in such a hurry, that they left all the cannon behind, which the Afghāns took possession of on the 19th.

Suburb of Julfa.

MAHMUD, being now advantageously posted, resolved to retrieve the time which he had lost by his late irresolution; and, accordingly, the same day appeared before Julfa. This is a colony of the Armenians, only a mile and half south of Ispāhān, on the south bank of the Zenderesh, or Fresh River, along which it extends almost three miles. The great privileges granted them by Shāh Abbās I. who founded the town, began by degrees to be diminished by the court; and, in the reign of Hussēyn, fell into contempt. Under this oppression industry declined, and the spirit of commerce, for which they had been so long distinguished, lost them. These people, though merchants, yet brave and warlike, were willing to assist their oppressors against the rebels: but the ministers, who had injured them so much, that they were afraid to trust them, instead of employing, at this very time disarmed, them. For all this new provocation, and tho' almost stripped of their arms, yet they bravely withstood Mahmūd's first assault, in expectation of succours from the Wālī of Arakia, who yet broke his word with them; and even hindered Sefi Mirza,

* HANWAY ibid. p. 111, & seqq.

the Shâh's eldest son from proceeding to their relief. So that it was thought to have been Hufseyn's intention, by advice of this general, to sacrifice Julfa to the safety of Ispâhân; imagining that the Afghâns would be content with the wealth which they should find in that place, whose inhabitants were suspected of corresponding with the enemy^f.

WHILE the Armenians were preparing against a second assault, a breach was made in the earthen wall by means of an elephant, after it had been pierced by a Parsi, by favour of the night; and the Afghâns took possession, waiting only for daylight to enter. As soon as the besieged had discovered what had been done, they ransomed their lives and effects by a contribution of 70,000 tomans, or 175,000 pounds. Mahmûd afterwards demanded a certain number of young virgins to be picked out of the most considerable Armenian families. All the young women above nineteen years of age, who were remarkable for their beauty being produced, 50 were selected, and conducted to Farabâd, adorned with their richest cloaths and jewels. There they were presented to the conqueror, who kept part for his own Harâm, and distributed the rest among his principal officers. The disconsolate mothers made Julfa resound with their lamentations; and some of those young maids were so shocked at their misfortune, that they died with excessive grief. But who will say, that any Barbarians are incapable of compassion, or the sense of feeling for others, when he is informed, that the Afghâns sent home those who discovered most affliction, and suffered others to be ransomed by their parents? so that very few remained (E) in that kind of slavery.

HOWEVER they were inexorable in regard to the contribution. The Armenians pretended they had not the money ready, but offered their bond. In this they overshot the mark. As soon as Mahmûd got it in his possession, he insisted upon their paying what money they held in their hands as part; and thereupon ordered their houses to be searched. It was then they saw their error; but it was too late to retrieve it. Their silver, jewels, and furniture were carried off and sold. The plunder amounted to more than the sum demanded, although valued at only 20,000 tomans (F). They had recourse to tortures to make the prin-

^f KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 24, 37, & 54. HANWAY ibid. p. 113, & seqq.

(E) This remainder was afterwards, when they got other part of 175,000.
Part of them were sent home. See Hanway's

A. D.
1722.

cipal persons discover their effects; but none could withstand it, excepting Dominic Jaques Kardelans, a man of weight and figure, who would confess nothing. To avoid this tyranny, many retired to Ispâhân; among whom were the Armenian bishop, and the Romish missionaries. But Mahmûd put a stop to this desertion, and prepared to besiege that city³.

State of Ispâhân.

ISPAHAN, including its gardens and suburbs, is computed to be 24 miles in circuit. It was then in its highest pitch of splendor, and esteemed the most large as well as magnificent in all Asia. It contained 600,000 inhabitants, besides about 100,000 more, who resorted thither on occasion of this invasion. It stands in a plain to the north of Zenderûdh, which separates it from Julfâ, and is covered with four bridges. the largest and most beautiful is that of Julfâ (G); 360 geometrical paces long and 13 in breadth. The two extremities are flanked by four round towers, with a covered gallery which ranges the bridge on both sides, and is finely ornamented. It is joined by two causeways made with a gentle descent to a double row of trees 3000 paces long. This delightful alley, lined with terrasses and plane trees, is called Char Bâgh, or the Four Gardens. It is terminated by a large pavilion, erected in the royal garden, named Hazar-gerib, or Thousand Acres. The bridge of Abbâs-abâd is about one mile and a half to the west of the former, and belongs to the suburbs (H) of that name. The bridge of Barbarowi, not quite so far from that of Julfâ to the east, nor much inferior in architecture. About one mile further eastward is the bridge of Shirâz, near which is the village of Shehrestan before mentioned.

The city
attacked.

SUCH was the disposition of Ispâhân; before the ramparts of which Mahmûd ordered some troops to present themselves, the same day he entered Julfâ. The 21st of March, he proposed to make a general assault: but the Zenderûdh being swelled, nothing passed but some shots on both sides, at the bridges. The besieged, who observed the faint motions of the Afghâns from the tops of their terrasses, began to take heart; which Mahmûd being informed of by his spies, on

³ KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 37, 47, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 118, & seqq

(G) It is called also the bridge of Allah Werdi Khân, from the Khân who built it.

(H) It is the largest as well as most beautiful of all the suburbs of Ispâhân, of which Julfâ is reckoned to be one. It is described by Chardin with the rest in his voyages. 4^o. tom. iii. p. 68, & seqq.

the 23d caused the bridge of Shirâz to be attacked. This was done with such resolution, that the Persians gave way at once; and the Afghâns would have entered the city with them, if they had not been stopped by Ahmed Aga, a brave white eunuch, now governor of Ispâhân, who came up with some veteran troops, and drove them back to the middle of the bridge, which was cleared of them by some cannon from a neighbouring battery (I). Mahmûd might have been undone, if the Walî of Arabia had fallen upon him at the same time with his troops: but this treacherous general sacrificed every thing to his sinister views^h.

MAHMUD, despairing of success from the vigorous defence of the Persians, and fearing another repulse would dishearten his soldiers, resolves to make proposals of peace. He had the better colour for this, as the king, some time before, had offered him a large sum of money, with the sovereignty of Kandahâr; and also to cede to him the province of Haffaray, but refused to grant him one of his daughters in marriage (K). It was this refusal which determined him to lay siege to Ispâhân, at a time when he was thinking how to secure an honourable retreat. He now resolved to make proposals of peace on his own part, which were for the Shâh to grant him one of the princesses with a portion of 50,000 tomans, or 125,000 pounds; and, besides acknowledging him sovereign of Kandahâr and Kermân, which he already possessed, to yield him likewise the province of Khorassân.

THESE terms being rejected as dishonourable by Hufseyñ, who besides flattered himself, from the slow progress of the Afghâns hitherto, that the provincial troops would have time to come to his assistance, Mahmûd proposed to obtain by famine what he no longer hoped for by force: and having secretly renewed his alliance with the Walî of Arabia, sent out several parties to ravage the district of Ispâhân. This fruitful plain contained about 1000 villages built by Abbâs the Great, and peopled from several provinces; most of which they subdued, killing most of the men, and carrying away most of the women and children, so that five or six fell to every soldier's share. Thus he cut off provisions from the city, and filled his own magazines.

^h KRUSINSKI ibid. p. 48, 56, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 121, & seqq.

(I) Played off by one Jacob, a Courlander, who from a cartwright was made an officer of the artillery. Hanw.

(K) To this vain refusal the loss of all was owing.

A. D 1722.
Beyges
Ispâhân.

MEAN time he amused the Persians with negotiations, and recruited his army out of those who followed his camp, making the prisoners supply their places. His next view was to open a passage over the river; which he did by favour of an accident: for the last day of April, hearing that the Georgians, who guarded the bridge of Abbâs Abâd, had received a quantity of spirituous liquors, he sent 1500 men to attack them. As the Afghâns found them so drunk that they could not stand, they were cut to pieces, hardly making any resistance. Thus masters of this important post, part of the army filed over the bridge, and spread themselves all round the city. Guards were placed at the principal passages; and scouts ordered to march continually from one post to another: so that Ispâhân was the same day intirely invested. The besieged, alarmed at this success, insisted on liberty to march out to attack the enemy which they had long solicited. This indeed was the only expedient left; the Etimâd Adlowlet, or prime minister, and most of the grandees were of this opinion; so was the king himself. But the Arabian Wâli, who had still an ascendant over his weak mind, persuaded him to wait for the succours which he expected without ever receivingⁱ.

Persians
defeated.

FOR the governors of the provinces, believing themselves able, each separately, to beat the rebels, had refused to serve under Ali Merdân Khân, Wâli of Lorestân, who at the head of 10,000 men, waited for them to join him at Honfâr. Kassum, Khân of the Bakhtiarians (L), was the first who appeared with 12,000 horse; and, without joining the Wâli, advanced towards Ispâhân: but Aman Olla, who kept the field with a flying camp, falling on him unexpectedly, put his forces to flight, after killing 2000 on the spot. A greater misfortune still than this followed presently after. The Wâli of Lorestân had amassed a great quantity of provisions, and designed to convoy it into Ispâhân by forcing one of the posts of the rebels: but while he was abroad making new levies, one of his brothers, who had before supplanted him in his command of Wâli, corrupting part of the troops, joined the Khân of Hamadân, and marched with his convoy towards the city. These two chiefs had 6000 men, and hoped to ⁱ KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 27, 61, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 124, & seqq.

(L) Bakhtiar, in Persia, signifies happy. These people inhabit the east part of the desert west of Ispâhân: they live mostly in tents, and are divided into two tribes, called Chabar Ling and Ejâ Ling. They pretend to have embraced Christianity under Constantine the Great. Their Khan resides at Honfâr. HANWAY

join the troops of Kohkîlan on their march. Instead of this they fell in with the Afghâns under Amân Olla, who defeated them; but he stained his victory by his cruelty and breach of faith: for, though part of the Persians laid down their arms, on promise of quarter, yet he saved only those from whom he expected ransoms, suffering the rest to be massacred in cold blood. Above 3000 fled, among whom was the brother of the Wâli. But he did not long escape punishment; for Ali Merdân Khân, provoked at an action which defeated the chief hopes of the empire, sacrificed this unnatural brother to his own resentment, and to the public vengeance.

A. D.
1722.

AMAN OLLA however did not enjoy the fruits of his success; for the inhabitants of Ebn Isfâhân (M), a town situated on the side of a hill, three miles from the city, assisted by others, fled thither for shelter from the neighbouring places. These having received intelligence, that the Afghâns were on their return much fatigued, and, without observing any order, attacked them with such fury, that they put them to flight, and seized on their baggage, as well as recovered the convoy. Mahmûd was so provoked at this disgrace, that he immediately set out with a body of horse, and overtook them before they got home. But these peasants gave him such a resolute reception, that, after cutting part of his troops in pieces, they obliged him to turn his back, and leave them a considerable number of prisoners, among whom were his uncle, his younger brother, and two of his cousins. Who will say, that a regular militia are not fit to defend their country and possessions, when undisciplined peasants can perform such exploits^k?

MAHMUD at his wit's end for this fresh disgrace, but more on account of his captive relations, sent to intreat Shâh Hufseyñ to interpose in their behalf. This prince, who expected an accommodation, sent an officer of his court to Ebn Isfâhân: but he arrived too late; for he saw their bodies fixed on stakes. This they told the officer was to revenge the late perfidious slaughter committed by the Afghâns in cold blood. Mahmûd, however, who would not allow of the law of reprisals in a case which so sensibly touched him, in his fury ordered all the Persians in his power to be massacred; and forbade his soldiers from thenceforth to grant any quarter

^k KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 67, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 127, & seqq.

(M) That is, the Son of Isfâhân; as much as to say, Little Isfâhân.

A. D. 1722. to the enemy. After this he fell into a kind of despondency ; and, having reinforced the guards of the bridge Abbás-Abád, with the other posts, and leaving only a small garrison in Julfá, he ordered the remainder to return to Farabád, as if he intended to secure his retreat.

All advantages lost.

THE fate of the empire was then in the king's hands. He might easily have recovered the bridge of Abbás Abád, and forced those posts which were too far asunder to support each other ; or, if he had but made a motion that way, it is likely the enemy would have abandoned their several stations, and, instead of besieging, been besieged themselves. The Armenians of Julfá, though accused of favouring the rebels, gave notice of their consternation ; and offered to put the garrison to the sword as soon as they should see the king's troops in action. The troops indeed had his orders to act ; but the Wáli of Arabia, by his affected delays and neglects, gave the Afgháns leisure to provide for their security. In short, after waiting time without doing any thing, he led the troops back into the city ; pretending the forces he expected to join him did not come up, and that he could not depend on the promise of so suspected a people as the Armenians. This step saved Mahmúd ; and the defeat of the Khán of Kokkilán soon after, who out of 10,000 men lost 2000, revived his hopes, while the refusal of Vashtanga, Wáli of Georgia, to assist the Sháh, which at this time arrived, completed the despair of the court : for, being deprived of this hope, they had no other left, since they found that the provincial governors would not submit to the authority of the Wáli of Lorestán.

Tahmâsp Mirza

SHAH HUSSEYN now thought it high time to enter into measures to prevent the whole royal family from being involved in one common ruin. This monarch had 14 sons and four daughters. Three days after the battle of Ghuln-abád he had declared Abbás Mirza, the eldest, his successor to the throne, and resigned the government into his hands. This young prince, being of a warm temper, and disdaining to dissemble, began his administration with ordering the Wáli of Arabia, the first physician, and some other persons of figure, to be put to death ; and happy would it have been, if his orders had been executed. Instead of that, they prevailed on his infatuated father to shut him up again in the Saray, where the princes are always confined. Sefi Mirza, the next, was substituted in his place, but returned to the same prison about a month after, as being judged too weak to govern. The third brother, who was thought to have had too much devotion for a king, being overlooked, Tahmâsp Mirza, the fourth, fourth, was, towards the end of May, acknowledged presumptive heir of the crown (N) ¹.

A. D.

1722.

THE king resolved to send this young prince out of Isfâhân, as well to take from his generals all pretence for not assembling under his command, as to secure the succession. He set out the 21st of June in the night, escorted by 300 chosen horse from the gate Tokchi. The Afghâns posted to block up this avenue, were commanded by Mohammed Amîr, surnamed Asbrâf Soltân, son of Mîr Abdallah, whom Mahmûd had deprived of his throne and life in Kandahâr. This young prince, dissembling the aversion which he had conceived against his father's murderer, behaved with so much valour and prudence, that at length he gained his confidence, as well as the esteem of the whole army. This post was the best guarded, as by this passage the city could most conveniently receive succours; but weakened by the detachment made from the army under Aman Olla, at this time consisted of no more than 100 men. This small body, being vigorously attacked by the prince's convoy, was defeated, and lost 30 men.

Kashîn.
escapes to

THIS escape of the heir to the crown threw the Afghâns into a consternation, expecting his return quickly at the head of an army; and Mahmûd, in his fury, said, it would be to little purpose to reduce the capital, since there would be still a prince able to dispute the throne with him. As for Asbrâf, he accused him of corresponding with the enemy, and condemned him to death: but this young prince justified his conduct so effectually before an assembly of the principal officers, that they acquitted him; and Mahmûd, disguising his jealousy (O), restored Asbrâf to his employments.

MEAN time Tahmâsî Mîrza, having reached Kashîn, spared no pains to compass his father's delivery: but, as authority is an empty name where there is no force to support it, so little assistance.

Receives

¹ KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 71, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 130, & seqq.

(N) This prince's right name is Tæmasheb, which, in the ancient Persic, signifies most pure. Harav. The true spelling is Tahmâsî or Tahrâsî, as hath been remarked elsewhere. See vol. v. p. 429.

(O) It is likely he wanted a pretence to cut him off; for, we are told, p. 134, that Mahmûd's mother, who was extremely fond of this young lord, had by her intreaties saved him more than once from the cruelty of her son. As this last had neither children nor brother, of a proper age to succeed him, Asbrâf might be considered as his heir: and this is urged as a reason why it is not likely that he was false to his trust.

A. D.

1722.

neither his orders nor entreaties could prevail. Thus the king scarcely received any assistance from near 50,000 regular troops, which were quartered on those frontiers (P). The feudatory princes, being less interested than the natural subjects in preserving the monarchy, shewed but little zeal on the occasion; and many considered the distress of the sovereign as a proper opportunity to recover their independency. In short, the Wâli of Lorestân, seeing the impossibility of assembling an army, marched back from Honsâr to his own country. Tahmasp still hoped to find more submission in the Shâh Se-ven (Q); but, having summoned this militia, most of the lords pretended they were not obliged to march, unless the king commanded in person; and the small number furnished by the rest, consisted only of peasants ill kept and ill paid, who took the first opportunity to disband^m.

The Af-
ghâns attacked.

As Ispâhân provisions daily grew scarcer; and, as every body saw that there was no way to procure any but by opening a passage for the purpose, the people insisted on having the posts of the enemy attacked. But when any persons applied to the king, he referred them to the Wâli of Arabia; and this general flattered them with hopes of the prince's return. It is true, he sometimes marched out to avoid their importunities: but he immediately came back without attempting any thing, under the idle pretext that his astrologers declared, that the hour was not favourable. Growing tired with these evasions, in the beginning of July they assembled in a tumultuous manner, demanding, that Shâh Huseyn should come forth, and lead them against the enemy. He let them know by some officers, that he would give his answer next day: but, the populace insisting that he should appear himself,

^m KRUSIN K p. 79, & seqq. HANWAY ibid p. 134, & seqq.

(P) Shâh Soleymân, the predecessor of Huseyn, maintained 130,000 men on the frontiers, without reckoning his household troops, which were 14,000 men. Krusinsk. Hansw.

(Q) That is, the well-affected to the King. This militia is very little different from that of the Zaims and Timariots in Turky. It was established by Abbas the Great, and consisted of persons chosen among the nobility, to whom he gave lands, on condition that they should lead a certain number of their vassals into the field when the Shah should require them. This body, which at that time amounted to 200,000 men, was the last resort in any extremity, or sudden danger. But, as under the late reigns, very little care had been taken to oblige the holders of those hereditary possessions to discharge their duty, they no longer looked on them in any other light than as legal estates. Krusinsk. Hansw.

the

the eunuchs dispersed them by firing some muskets from the palace. Such provocation at this time might have occasioned a general insurrection, if Ahmed Aga, governor of Ispâhân, had not put himself at the head of a body of veteran troops, which, with the people who joined him, made near 30,000 men. With these he marched out of the city, followed by the Wâli of Arabia and his Arabs.

THIS gallant eunuch immediately fell with great impetuosity on one of the enemy's principal posts, which he forced, and would have maintained his ground, altho' part of the rebel army came to its assistance, if he had not been deserted by the Wâli of Arabia. Ahmed, provoked at such infamous behaviour, ordered his men to fire on the Arabs; and Tahmâssp Khân to attack them. The Afghâns, taking advantage of this dissention, vigorously charged the Persians, who, being almost hemmed in, were obliged to abandon the post and retire. Thus the opportunity was lost of bringing in the convey of provisions from Ebn Ispâhân by the treachery of the Wâli: yet Husséyn was so deluded by his artful discourse, as to impute the misfortune intirely to Ahmed Aga; and not only refused to hear his defence, but took the government of the city from him. The faithful eunuch, unable to survive this disgrace, a few days after died, whether by grief or a dose of poison, is uncertainⁿ.

ALL hopes of succours were now vanished; and the besieged, already pressed by famine, deserted in crowds, altho' the Afghâns slew all the Persians who fell into their hands (O). Whether the Shâh at length began to suspect the fidelity of the Wâli of Arabia; or hoped to change his fortune by changing his general, he offered the command of his troops to Lust Ali Khân: but this lord finding the forces so weak, that he could not rely on them, and warned by what he had already suffered from the intrigues of the ministers, he constantly refused to accept of it. Husséyn, therefore, in despair either of receiving any succours from abroad, or any relief from his people within the walls, resolved to renew the negotiations which the enemy had set on foot at the beginning

Terms of peace proposed.

*Rejected by
Mahmûd.*

ⁿ HANWAY ibid. p. 137, & seqq.

(O) About this time, Krusinski, the Jesuit, author of the memoirs from whence part of this history is compiled, obtained leave to remove to Faisâ. Two other missionaries of the same order attempted to escape with the French consul to Shiraz. One of them was killed with some other Europeans; but the consul, tho' wounded, escaped with several others of his little troop.

A. D. 1715. of the siege. He sent the Kurchi Bâshi to Fahrabâd to offer Mahmûd the terms which he had demanded, namely one of his daughters in marriage, with 50,000 tomans (or 125,000 pounds), and the sovereignty of the provinces of Khorassân, Kermân, and Kandahâr : but that prince, too well acquainted with the state of affairs, now rejected them with disdain, answered almost in the same terms he once did on a like occasion, " The king of Persia, said he, offers me nothing which is in his disposal ; this prince and the princesses are already in my power : he is no longer master of those three provinces which he offers me. The fate of the whole empire is now to be decided between us."

A governor's dis-loyalty.

THUS things stood, when news came that Meluk Mahmûd, governor of Sajestân, was arrived at Gulnabâd with 10,000 regular troops. This event raised the hopes of Shâh Huseyn, and threw the Afghân prince into despair. The siege had already cost him 2000 men ; and he concluded, that the forces within the city, when joined by the Sajestân troops, would be an overmatch for him. He therefore thought it the best expedient to tempt the fidelity of his new enemy. Nazr-Ullah was dispatched to Gulnabâd with such magnificent presents, as rather betrayed the fear than expressed the liberality of the donor : but they dazzled the eyes of Meluk too much for him to perceive it ; and the offer of assistance to invest him in the sovereignty of any province he should choose, determined him at once to agree to the proposal of Nazr-Ullâh, who, at the same time, gave him to understand, that the empire being attacked on every side, and the capital at the last extremity, could not avoid its approaching ruin. Meluk Mahmûd made Korassân his choice, as lying near Kandahâr and Herât, from whence, in case of need, he might be readily assisted ; and, having concluded the treaty, set out to take possession of his new dominions°.

Completes Huseyn's ruin. MASHHAD (P), the capital of that country, was then in the hands of the Abdolli's and Uzbek's ; who had taken it by storm after a few days siege. But whether they had no further view than to pillage, and had abandoned it, or the thing was concerted with the Afghân prince, Meluk was received on the ° HANWAY ibid. p. 139, & seqq.

(P) That is, the place of martyrdom, so called from Imâm Ridha, or Riza, one of the twelve Imâms who was slain and buried there. Its proper name is Tûs or Towes. The great Abbâs made it a place of pilgrimage, to divert the Persians of the Shiay sect from repairing to Masjed Ali, near Hellab in Irâkamti, which carried much wealth out of the kingdom.

20th of November; and, as Ismael Khân, governor of the province, unable to oppose him, had retired to Kaştîn, the other cities of Khorassân, knowing he was a Shiay, made no difficulty to acknowledge him for their sovereign. The desertion of this general put an end to all Hufseyñ's hopes of relief; and, his treasure being now exhausted, all the gold and silver plate in the palace was carried to the mint. When this was gone, his last shift was to borrow considerable sums on his jewels of different merchants (Q). At length, the latter end of September, when there was neither money nor provisions left, this unfortunate prince ordered his ministers to go and treat for a capitulation.

As Mahmûd had it in his power to command what terms he pleased, he might have finished the negotiation at once: but this would not answer his views. He saw that he could not be safe in Ispâhân, so long as the inhabitants were greatly superior in number to his troops. He might indeed have destroyed them at once by a general assault, as his chief officers advised him, but he was either afraid of losing part of his best troops, or the great riches of the place by the plunder of the foldiers. He resolved therefore to destroy them by famine before he signed the treaty; and, for this end, lay still within his lines during the last two months of the siege. What heart can, without the utmost horror, reflect on the dreadful effects of this artful conduct! In August, horses, mules, and other beasts were so excessive dear, that none but the king and principal lords, or wealthiest inhabitants, could afford to eat of their flesh. Dogs and other unclean animals were consumed in a few days. And when the bark of trees, leaves, and leather, the food which succeeded, failed, they were obliged to have recourse to human flesh. Never was so much of it eaten in any siege; and, when dead bodies were not to be found, they sometimes murdered their fellow-citizens, or children, to appease their raging hunger. Many, rather than prolong life a little by such shocking means, chose to poison themselves and their families. The streets, the squares, and very gardens of the palace, were strewed with dead, which the living had not strength to bury. The water of the river was so corrupted with carcases thrown into it, that it could not be drank; and, in a less wholesome climate (R), the few remaining people must have been destroyed

He submits to Mahmûd.

(Q) Especially the English and Dutch, which last lent him 340,000 crowns.

(R) Mr. Hanway says, that the air of Ispâhân is remarkably rarefied; and that it resembles much that of Madrid, as he had been assured by a Jesuit who lived many years in both cities.

A. D. 1716. by the infected air. It was in vain to fly to Julfa; all who attempted, men, women, and children, excepting the Armenians, were sure to meet with death^P.

Sets out of Ispâhan

MIR MAHMUD, having at length agreed to terms, on the 21st of October, Shâh Huseyn, clad in mourning, went out of his palace on foot, and walked through the principal streets of Ispâhan, bewailing aloud the misfortunes of his reign, which he imputed to the bad counsels of his ministers. He endeavoured to comfort the multitude, who surrounded him, with the hopes of their meeting a better fate under a new government; while the people, pierced with grief, lamented the disgrace to which they beheld their good-natured prince reduced, after a reign of 28 years. Huseyn, having thus taken his leave of his subjects, the next day sent plenipotentiaries to sign the capitulation, by which he obliged himself to resign the empire, together with his person, and principal officers of the court, into the conqueror's hands. On the other side, Mahmûd engaged that no ill treatment should be offered, either to the king, the nobility, or any of the inhabitants. The 23d Mahmûd sent horses for the king and his court; who, having sacrificed five camels (S), mounted on horseback accompanied with about 300 persons, among whom were the Wâli of Arabia, the Etimâd Addowlet, a brother of the Wâli of Lorestân, and the principal lords of the court. They moved on slowly with their eyes fixed on the ground; and the few inhabitants, who had strength to attend this mournful cavalcade, expressed their grief by a gloomy silence.

for the Afghân
camp.

It was now past noon, when two couriers arrived to give notice to the grand master of the ceremonies (T) of Mahmûd's court, that the king was drawing near. To humble the Persians still more, the same couriers were sent back with orders to the Shâh, to halt at the foot of a hill near the camp, under pretence that Mahmûd was asleep: thus the unhappy Huseyn was treated with marks of servitude, even before he had quitted the ensigns of royalty. He tarried about half an hour at the place prescribed, and then, obtaining leave to continue his march, he arrived at Farabâd, where the Afghân

^P HANWAY ibid. p. 141, & seqq.

(S) Perhaps the only camels he had left. Mr. Hanway, or his author, says, they were killed without any ceremony, nor does he know for what purpose this sacrifice was ordered. That of one camel, prescribed by the laws, should have been made at Mekka the 10th of the preceding moon.

(T) Esik Agâfi.

chief

chief had his head quarters. The grand master of the ceremonies introduced him into a hall, at the corner (U) of which Mahmûd was seated, leaning on a cushion of cloth of gold. The king, advancing towards the middle of the chamber, saluted him, saying, Salâm aleyokom, that is, All hail (W). The Afghân then rose up and returned the salute with the same compliment. After which, the Etimâd addawlet conducted the Shâh to another corner on the left of Mahmûd, where a like place was prepared for him.

A. D.
1716.

THE king, being seated, opened the conversation by saying, "Son, since the great sovereign of the world is no longer pleased that I should reign, and the morning is come which he hath pointed out (X) for thee to ascend the throne of Persia, I resign the empire to thee with all my heart: I wish that thou mayest rule it in all prosperity." At the same time he took the royal plume of feathers (Y) from his turbân, and gave it to Mahmûd's grand Wazîr. But that prince refusing to receive it from his minister, the king stood up, and, taking it again, fastened it himself to the usurper's turbân, who still continued sitting, saying, Reign in peace: after which he retired, and sat down in his place. Coffee and tea were afterwards served up, when the Afghân prince, taking these liquors, addressed himself to the Shah after this manner; "Such is the instability of human grandeur: God disposes of empires as he pleases, and takes them from one nation to give them to another: but I promise to consider you always as my own father; and I will undertake nothing for the future without your advice." After these words, Hufseyñ was invited into another apartment which had been appointed for him; and 4000 Afghâns were ordered to take possession of the royal palace, and the gates of the city. Thus the dynasty of the Seffî's, or Safî's, ended in the person of this prince, the 10th successor of Ismael, its founder, after having lasted 223 years⁹.

Resigns the empire.

and is confined.

⁹ HANWAY ibid. p. 143—149.

(U) The corner is the most honourable place in oriental countries. It is also the most commodious, as it is the only one in which a person can lean on both sides on the cushions which are placed round the walls.

the same persuasion in religion. It is the highest expression of respect.

(X) These words are conformable to the Mohammedan doctrine of predestination.

(Y) This plume of feathers is called Yiga, and is the mark of sovereignty.

(W) This compliment is seldom made, but to persons of

A. D.
1723.

THIS prince was ruined by the incapacity and negligence of his ministers, corrupt through avarice; and divided into factions from ambitious views: which is always the case when, through the weakness or indolence of the sovereign, the administration of affairs is left wholly to the management of his favourites, who seldom have either virtue, knowledge, or capacity, for government.

Conclusion.

IT was some consolation however to the Persians, in their afflictions, to see those traitors punished who had corresponded with the enemy, or otherwise contributed to the ruin of the state, through neglect, ignorance, or party quarrels. They were all put to death, excepting some few whose estates were confiscated, and themselves sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. The thing most to be regretted is, that, among those few were the Wâli of Arabia (Z), the chief physician, and the chief eunuch, who deserved to die by the most exquisite tortures. At the same time that the traitors were punished, the Etimâd-addowlat, Lust Ali Khân (A), and other faithful ministers, were not only spared, but raised to posts of honour and trust by the conqueror.

WHAT person who reads the history of this strange revolution, will any more wonder at the conquest of Mexiko by Cortes; who, besides his Spaniards skilled in the art of war, and armed with cannon as well as muskets, was assisted by 100,000 Tlaskallans, a nation of Indians, equally as brave as the Mexikans themselves?

(Z) It is thought, Mahmûd had taken an oath not to put him to death. Krusinsk. vol. ii. p. 101.

(A) Although he had always avoided entering into any engagements prejudicial to the interest of his late sovereign, yet

Mahmûd hoping to win him, loaded him with favours. In Dec. 1723 he fled with design to serve Tahmâsp; but being taken at Ebn Ispâhân, and brought back, Mahmûd in his rage hewed him in pieces. Krusinsk. p. 172.

S E C T. IV.

An Account of the Afghân Princes, and Descendants of Shâh Huseyn who usurped the Persian Crown during his Imprisonment, till the Death of Kûli Khân.

THE 27th of October, being the day appointed for the Mahmûd Afghân prince to ascend the throne, Mahmûd marched out of the camp towards the city, preceded by a numerous train both of horse and foot. The deposed king rode on his left side; they were followed by the principal officers of his conqueror's court; and after them came those of Huseyn's, mixed with the croud of Afghân officers. The whole closed with 100 camels, each carrying an arquebus, 600 musicians, and 6000 horse. As soon as they had passed over the bridge of Shirâz, the Shâh was conducted across the gardens of the palace to the place of his confinement; Mahmûd thinking it impolitic to lead him in triumph through the city. The inhabitants received him with the honours of a king, spreading the street with carpets, and filling the air with perfumes. The guns on the camels were often fired; and in the intervals, ten Afghâns, at the head of the procession, pronounced loud imprecations against the followers of Ali.

THE new monarch, being arrived at the palace, mounted the throne, and was a second time saluted king of Persia by the captive Huseyn, brought for that purpose. After which he received the oath of allegiance from the princes, ministers, and grandees, as well as chief officers and citizens. The artillery of the town and citadel proclaimed this news to the people; and the ceremony concluded with an entertainment given by the Soltân (which title Mahmûd assumed) to the deputies, who, in the name of the whole city, came to acknowledge his authority.

SOLTÂN Mahmûd began his reign with great lustre, and displayed the abilities of a consummate statesman. He confirmed the Persian officers in their employments, only associating with each a colleague of his own nation. He left no other post, except that of a Divân Beghi, intirely to an Afghân; and administered justice with so much rectitude, as soon reconciled the Persians to his government, which they found far preferable to that of their own ministers under Shâh Huseyn. He likewise gave content to the consuls of European nations,

* KRUSINSKI'S Revol. Pers. vol. ii. p. 98, & seqq. HANWAY'S Trav. vol. iii. p. 148, & seqq.

A. D. 1723. who were confirmed in their privileges. He indeed reduced the late Shâh's train of women and eunuchs to five of each: yet shewed a great regard for this prince, whom he consulted on every occasion; and omitted nothing to make him easy under his misfortunes. He gave one of his daughters in marriage to his own Mianghi (B), in imitation of *Hussey*n, who had bestowed another on the Sedr Al Sherîbah, or chief justice, and married the youngest himself. This induced the dethroned monarch to ratify his abdication by a circular letter, and enjoined all his late subjects to acknowledge the victor's authority.

Kazbîn MEANTIME Thamâsp Mirza having assumed the title of Shâh at Kazbîn, the new king took that pretext to levy money for carrying on the war. He demanded of the citizens 120,000 tomans (C), and taxed the chief physician, who had been one of the prime instruments of *Hussey*n's ruin, at 20,000 (D). With these sums he sent to raise new forces at Kandahâr; but the officer employed for that purpose, was defeated, and the money seized by the governor of Banda, a fortress in Sejestân. Aman Olla, who was dispatched with 10,000 troops against Kazbîn, took that city, from whence Thamâsp fled to Taceris, in December. But the avarice of the general, and the licentiousness of his soldiers, caused the inhabitants to rise, in January 1723, and drive them out again^s.

Mah-mûd's cruelty. 1723. THE Afghâns lost 1600 men in the action at Kazbîn; and Aman Olla was wounded with a musket ball in the shoulder. Mahmûd, much alarmed at this disaster, caused public rejoicings to be made at Ispahân, as if his troops had gained a victory. However, to prevent the like danger in that metropolis, he caused the ministers, lords, and other Persian chiefs, to be massacred at an entertainment which he made for that purpose. Two hundred youths of the first nobility of Persia and Georgia were brought from the academy, and cruelly butchered. Three thousand men of *Hussey*n's troops, whom he had taken into pay, underwent the same fate. This was not all; for he ordered his soldiers to put every man to the sword who had at any time received either salary or pension from the Shâh's exchequer; which execution lasted fifteen days. After this, he secretly put to death a great number of the inha-

* KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 10, & seqq. HANWAY ibid. p. 150, & seqq.

(B) The Mianghi is the same whom the Turks call Musti.

(C) Or 300,000 pounds sterling.

(D) Or 50,000 pounds.

bitants

bitants of Ispâhân able to bear arms, and extorted large sums of money, not only from the Persians and Arminians, but from the English, Dutch, Indians, and other foreign merchants.

A. D.
1723.

WHILE Mahmûd was employed in slaying the people, and taking the towns in the neighbourhood of Ispâhân, Shâh Tahmâsp remained at Tauris, giving himself up to pleasures, and neglecting his affairs, for which, coming raw from the Harâm, he had no capacity. He removed Vashtangâ, Wâlî of Georgia; and hearing that Mahmûd was marching against him with 10,000 men, sent Feridûn, Khân of the Kûrds, against him with 8000 choice troops; but they were defeated, and 2000 slain. The loss of this battle was attended with the loss of Makon, and also of Gulpaygan (E), a town situated to the west of Kashân. The Soltân after this returning to Ispâhân, left the command of his army to Zeberdest Khân.

Tâh-mâsp's indolence.

MEAN time his dominions were attacked by two other powers much more formidable than the Afghâns; the Russians on the north, and the Turks on the west. Soltân Ahmed III. envying the progress made by the Czar, who had subdued Daghestân and Dârbend, would fain persuade him to abandon his conquests in Persia, in which he wanted to have the sole footing. But the Czar proceeding in his design, enters Khilân, or Ghilân, which submits to him; as did Georgia soon after to the Turks. Shâh Tahmâsp being thus oppressed on all sides, sends one ambassador to the Porte, and another to Petersburg. The Turks pretending to be offended with his applying to a Christian power for assistance against the Afghân rebels, rejected his proposal. The true reason was, that it was deemed a sin to assist heretics against true believers: the Persians being Shi'ay, and the Afghâns, Sunni, of which sect the Othmâns are. The Shâh's ambassador succeeded better in Russia, where a treaty was signed the 23d of September; by which it was agreed, that the Czar should drive the Afghâns out of Persia, and re-establish the government. On the other hand, Tahmâsp was to yield to the Czar the towns of Dârbend and Bâkû, with the provinces of Ghilân, Mazanderân, and Astrâbâd.

Distressed by Russia;

and the Turks.

ABOUT the same time Luft Ali Khân, on whom favours had been heaped by the new king, fled from Ispâhân, with Luft Ali Khân slain.

^t KRUSINSK. ibid. p. 106, & seqq. HANWAY p. 160, & seqq.
^u KRUSINSK. p. 132, & seqq. HANWAY p. 172, & seqq.

A. D.
1687.

Aman Olla
discontented.

design to join the Shâh in Tauris; but being discovered by the people of Ebn Isfâhân, who had lately submitted to the Afghâns, they delivered him up to Mahmûd, who, in a rage, hewed him in pieces. What gave this prince much more uneasiness, Aman Olla, being recovered of his wound, demanded the performance of his contract at setting out from Kandahâr, which was to divide with him the conquests made in Persia, on account of the assistance given in the expedition. As that general was exasperated at Mahmûd's delays, he harkened to the instigation of his lady, a daughter of the late Shâh's, who advised him to join his forces with those of Shâh Tahmâsp, and expel the usurper. Aman Olla set out in December, pretending to march for Kandahâr: but when Mahmûd understood, that he had changed his rout, he followed him with all the forces which he could collect; and overtaking him, won him over once more with promises.

A Georgian an Amaz-zon.

1724.

AFTER this, he joined Zeberdest Khân, to whom Kashân had just then submitted: but the joy of this success was allayed by the death of Nasr Ollâh, his ablest general, slain at the siege of Shirâz. Mahmûd, having sent Zeberdest Khân to succeed him, returned with his army to Isfâhân, in March 1724. As he entered a city, a woman, disguised in man's apparel, rode up to his troops in a full gallop, and attacking them sword in hand, slew 20 of them, before she was taken covered with wounds. She was brought before the Soltân, who being informed of her history, admired her resolution, and ordered her to be treated with extraordinary care. This woman, hearing of the death of her husband, killed at the battle of Abbâs Abâd, set out from Georgia, her native country, where she left two children in her brother's care, with a resolution to revenge his death on the first Afghân she could meet^w.

Afghâns
take Shirâz.

IN April the Khân of Shirâz, after an eight months siege, pressed by famine, sent to treat with Zeberdest Khân; but the Afghâns observing, that the besieged had deserted their posts, detained the deputy, took the city by assault, and put all, whom they found in arms, to the sword. Some of the soldiers having found a considerable quantity of corn, concealed in the house of a private man, they tied him to a stake in his granary, where he died with hunger. From hence the general sent a detachment of 400 men into the south part of Pars. They penetrated without opposition as far as the city of Lâr, which they plundered; but the castle refused to submit. The commander then pushed on to Bânder Abbâsi, or Gomrûn (F). This place had been pillaged by 4000 Balûchi's, in January 1722; but on their attempting to break into the fortresses where the English and Dutch East India companies had their comping houses, they were repulsed with considerable loss. The Afghâns did not succeed so well; for on their approach, the people retired with their effects to the mountains; and the Europeans being prepared to give them a warm reception, they accepted of a supply of provisions, and returned to Shirâz, reduced to a handful by the malignity of the air and badness of the water.

^w KRUSINSK. p. 126, & seqq. HANWAY p. 173, 182, & seqq.

Checked at Gomrûn.
1724.

THE acquisition of this last city giving the Afghâns new spirits, Mahmûd led them out to new conquests. He departed from Isfâhân in June, at the head of near 30,000 men, with intent to subdue the country of Kokhilân (G). But his troops were so harrassed in the way by the Arabs, that they agreed to return, on condition only of being left unmolested, and supplied with provisions. The Arabs however continued to attack them, which, with the bad air they met with, destroyed one half of his army. Mahmûd was so shocked at this disgrace, that he entered Isfâhân without the usual marks of honour; and to cheer up his soldiers, distributed among them 50,000 tomans (or 125,000 pounds) to indemnify them for the loss of his baggage^{*}.

Miscarry against Kokhi-
lân.

THE weakness of the Afghâns at this time gave Shâh Tahmâsp a fair chance of recovering his crown. But while he should have employed his forces against his enemies, he turned them against the Armenians, his subjects, in order to compel them to pay the excessive taxes with which he had loaded them. Having by force entered and plundered some of their principal towns, those of Kâpan and Chiava took up arms, and so warmly received him, that he was obliged to come to a treaty; whereby he gained what he could not procure by foul means.

Tâhmasp's in-discretion.

MEAN time the Turks having secured Georgia, by the defeat of Mohammed Kâli Khân, who had surrendered Teflis to them the year before, in February entered Azerbeyjân; and in two months took Khoy by storm. In June with 30,000 men, they besieged Erivan, the capital of Armenia, about six leagues from mount Ararat. It stands on the river Zenghî, which three leagues lower falls into the Arâs, and is defended with two walls, and a castle built on a steep rock.

Turkish progress.

* KRUSINSK. p. 128, & seqq. HANW. p. 188, & seqq.

(F) Commonly Gombroon, its former name. *fin*ski. It is 10 days journey from Isfâhân on the way to Bâs-

(G) Or Kajok Kilan, as Kru- rah, or Bassora.

A. D.
1724.

A breach was soon made; but they were defeated in three general assaults. In September more forces arriving, a fourth assault was given with worse success than before. The Turks had now lost 20,000 men, and were resolved to retire, when considerable forces arrived in their camp. This gave them new courage, and intimidated the garrison of the town, which being much reduced by losses, and in want of ammunition, as well as provisions, without hopes also of relief from Tahmâsh, the Khân surrendered it, on condition of saving the lives and effects of the inhabitants; and retired to Abr, where the Shâh then resided.

Repulsed at Tauris.

THE Armenians of Nak Sivân, despairing of success from the Persians, and fearing the cruelty of the Turks, invited them to conquer the country; and on their appearance rose up in arms. They joined the enemy, who, driving the Persians out of that city, and Ordubâd, became masters of most part of Greater Armenia. Mean while the Bâsbâ of Vân, with 25,000 men, marched towards Tauris. This city, though lately destroyed by an earthquake, was still one of the finest in all the east. But like Sparta, its only bulwark consisted in the number and valour of its inhabitants; for it had neither walls nor artillery. The Turks crowding in were already masters of one quarter of the town, when the people blocking up the streets to hinder their retreat, cut off 4000. The Bâsbâ after this being repulsed in several attacks, drew off in the night to avoid being attacked in his intrenchments, of which he was informed by his spies; and retired to Tassû, a town 20 leagues from Tauris, on the north side of the lake Shâhi. Here, to be revenged of the Persians for their gallant defence, he put to the sword the men of the neighbouring villages; and made slaves of the women and children. The inhabitants of Tauris provoked at this cruelty, resolved to pursue the Bâsbâ, who marched out to meet them with 8000 men. But most of them being slain, he fled with the rest to Khoi.

Take Hamadân.

IN the interim the Bâsbâs of Bâghdâd and Bâsrah, entering Persia with their forces, laid siege to Hamadân, to whose relief Tahmâsh sent Flagella Khân; but he was defeated. The city had held out bravely for two months, when a mine, sprung by a German renegado, made a large breach, at which the enemy entering, carried all before them, and made a great slaughter, till one of the generals opened a gate for the inhabitants to escape.

ALTHOUGH the Turks had made such considerable conquests in Persia, yet Soltân Ahmid was greatly dissatisfied with the cession made by Shâh Tahmâsp, to Peter the Great. His commissaries at the court of Russia declared, "That Tahmâsp, in his then precarious circumstances, could not alienate any of his dominions; that therefore such engagements were void: and that, as the Soltân would not suffer any foreign power to extend his dominion in Persia, the only way to preserve peace was for the Czar to relinquish all pretensions derived from that treaty, and likewise abandon his conquests along the coasts of the Caspian sea."

A. D.

1724.

As these commissaries broke off the conferences abruptly, it was thought the Porte would declare war against the Czar. The French ambassador advised the Russian resident to enter into a negotiation; but this minister declining it for want of instructions, the ambassador undertook to do it himself. The Grand Wazîr, who secretly pressed this affair, found it difficult to bring the Diwân into it, especially as the point was to join with a Christian power, in sharing the dominions of a Mohammedan prince. However, at length, preliminaries were signed: the first article of which was, "that Shâh Tahmâsp should be obliged to send an embassy to beg that the Soltân would set limits to his conquests, and consent to the execution of the St. Petersburg treaty." The other articles concerned the limits of conquest made or to be made in Persia, by either of the contracting powers. After much contest articles of the treaty were agreed to. The first regulated the barrier between Russia and Turky, by a line, to begin 22 leagues from the Caspian sea, on the confines of Dâghestân; and to pass at the like distance from Dârbeud, from thence within seven leagues of the coast, including Shamakhîya; which, as stipulated by the second article, was not to be fortified by the Turks; and to terminate at the confluence of the Kûra and Arrâs.

Treaty with Russia.

THE line separating Turky from Persia, by the third article, begun where the former ended; from whence it passed three miles to the east of Ardevîl, and forward to Hamadân, whose territory it comprised; terminating at Kermân Shâh, the new conquest of the Turks. In case Tahmâsp should not agree to the said limits, they were jointly to conquer the places within them, and give up the rest of the kingdom to him, independent of any foreign dependence. But in case he should agree to them, the Soltân, by the fifth article, was to acknowledge him for king of Persia; and to join his forces 1725.

To divide
Russia.

A. D. 1725. with those of Russia to place him on the throne, in case the usurpers should oblige him to declare war against them.

Lastly, if Tahmâsp should refuse to conform to the treaty, the contracting powers, after becoming masters of the provinces assigned them, should establish tranquility in the kingdom; and, without listening to any proposals of Mahmûd, deliver it into the hands of the person most deserving of it^b.

Tahmâsp
distressed.

THIS treaty, which was signed the 8th of July 1725, soon came, to the knowledge of Shâh Tahmâsp, who, unable to help himself, saw his country torn from him. He ordered the Russian resident to withdraw from his court. The Czar however ordered an ambassador extraordinary, whom he had sent to that prince, to continue his journey. It is presumed, that Peter the Great would have been contented with Ghilân only, could he have thus prevented the progress of the Turks, and restored Tahmâsp to his dominions.

Mahmûd
defeated at Yezd.

WHILE these affairs were transacting, Mahmûd recruited his army with Dârghezins (H), some Turks, and a body of Afghâns from Kandahâr. In order to retrieve his late disgrace, towards the end of December, 1724, he marched to besiege Yezd, or Yezd, with 18,000 men. As he had gained the Parsî's, who dwelt there, to betray the city, he depended on success. But the plot being discovered, and the traitors put the sword, he missed of his aim, after several fruitless assaults. At length the Afghâns being weakened by large detachments sent out to forage, the garrison sallied, and cut off 3000: so that Mahmûd was obliged to save himself by flight, leaving his baggage and artillery a prey to the Persians^c.

The Af-
ghâns mutiny,

ON this new disgrace the soldiers grew mutinous, ascribing their late defeats to the introduction of that very effeminacy and luxury which had destroyed their enemies. They railed at Mahmûd, and loudly declared, that they could never hope for success so long as they were governed by a chief, who had adopted both the dress and religion of the conquered. This had reference to some words dropped by Mahmûd, either to vex the Turks, or flatter the Persians. Their murmurs grew the louder from the presence of Asbrâf who had

^b HANW. p. 198, & seqq.
p. 202, & seqq.

^c KRUSIN. p. 144. HANW.

(H) Sometimes called Darghezi's. They are Mesopotamian Kûrds removed by Shâh Abbâs I. to Derghezim, a town three days journey from Hamadân towards returned from Kandahâr in the last karawân. This prince, who was the son of Abdalla, had fled twice to avoid the jealousy of Mahmûd. The first time was in 1722, when, upon Huseyn's resignation, he deserted his post; and, with an escorte of 100 horse, set out for Kandahâr: but being pursued was brought back to Mahmûd, who should have put him to death, but for fear his soldiers would desert him, as they threatened, in case he offered to take away the life of Asbrâf. The second time was after the revolt at Kazbîn, from whence he departed for Kandahâr with 300 horse, either through apprehension of a general revolt; or, more likely, for fear of Mahmûd, whom he had reason always to distrust. The army had always been extremely fond of him; and the great desire which they expressed for his return, was the chief motive of his coming back. In effect, the principal officers considering Mahmûd had no issue fit to govern, and that his health daily declined, in some measure obliged him to recal Asbrâf, in order to declare him his successor. He at first treated him with all the appearances of the most tender friendship; but was no sooner informed of the murmurings of the troops, than he ordered him to be lodged in the palace, where he was strictly guarded^d.

Kasbîn. They are of the same sect with the Afghâns. Krusin. vol. ii. p. 115. Hanw. vol. iii. p. 163—168.

THIS prudent step checked the mutinous designs of the soldiers; but did not make the Soltân easy in his mind; on account of his two late disgraces, which had weakened his power and authority. He therefore resolved to regain the favour of heaven by performing the Riadhiat; a kind of spiritual exercise introduced by the Indian Mohammedans into Kandahâr. This superstition consists in shutting themselves up for 14 or 15 days in a place without light; during which time they are employed in repeating incessantly with a strong guttural voice the word Hû (I), by which they denote one of the attributes of God; and live upon nothing but a little bread and water which they take at sun-set. These continual cries, and the agitations of body, with which they are accompanied, naturally unhinge the whole frame, when, by fasting and darkness, the brain is distempered, they fancy they see spectres, and hear voices: for they believe, that, during this penance, the devil is compelled, by a superior power, to let them into the knowledge of futurity.

WHEN he came forth of his subterraneous vault, he was so pale and emaciated, that they scarcely knew him. What was worse, this extravagant devotion had impaired his reason.

*Destroys
the royal family.*

^d HANW. p. 204, & seqq. also p. 147—159.

(I) Or Haw.

A. D. 1725. He became restless and suspicious; often starting, as if he feared his best friends intended to destroy him. He was in one of these fits when a report spread, that Seffi Mirza, eldest son of Shâh Huseyn, had made his escape, and fled into Turky. This, whether true or false, he made a pretext for cutting off all the princes of that family, excepting Huseyn himself; among whom were several of his brothers, three uncles, and seven nephews. On the 7th of February those victims being assembled in the palace yard, with their hands tied behind their backs, the tyrant, with a few of his intimates, killed them all with their swords: excepting two sons of Huseyn, the eldest but five years old. The unhappy father hearing their cries, flew to the place of slaughter, and received on his arm the stroke with which Mahmûd intended to dispatch them. However the sight of blood issuing from a king, whom he used to reverence, stopped his murdering hand. The number of princes butchered in this manner (K) were about 100; nor is it surprizing that kings who have so many women, should be fathers of a numerous offspring. Besides, Huseyn exceeded all his predecessors in filling his Harâm, into which 30 cradles have been carried in the space of one month*.

1725.
Mahmûd
grows delirious.

THIS cruel execution, instead of allaying Mahmûd's terrors, much increased them, as well as impaired his understanding. The torments of his mind were augmented by an insupportable pain in his bowels. After the physicians had in vain tried to restore him to his senses, they had recourse to a superstitious remedy practised by the Armenian priests. It consists in reading, over the head of the patient, what they call the Red Gospel (L); and is a ceremony used also by the Mohammedans of the country, who hold it to have wrought many cures. In the beginning of April, the clergy of Julfa, dressed in their sacerdotal, passed in procession (M) to the apartment of Mahmûd: who, in one of his lucid intervals, being told what they had done for his relief, sent them 5000 pounds in money, and as much in goods; promising to re-

* KRUSINSKI p. 147. HANW. p. 206, & seqq.

(K) It is said, none escaped but Tahmâsp, and the two infants above-mentioned; so that Seffi Mirza must have been among them. HANW.

(L) Probably some passages relating to the miracles of Christ. HANWAY.

(M) Exorcisms and processions are common in all popish countries. The late king of Portugal at several times caused the several orders of ecclesiastics to walk in procession thro' his chamber. HANW.

store all which he had taken from them, in case he recovered his health. The same he did to the Indians and Dutch. But, after some hours ease, he relapsed into a more terrible condition: his body was covered with leprosy, and his flesh rotting, seemed to fall from his bones.

At the same time, news arrived that Shâh Tahmâsp had defeated a party of Afghâns commanded by Seydal, in their way to Kazbîn, near Kûm, or Kom. From the time Mahmûd fell ill, Asbrâf, who was no longer strictly watched, found means to correspond with Tahmâsp; and, when he found things ripe for his purpose, sent word, that now was his time to recover the throne: that things were in such confusion at Isfâhân, that, on the first news of his approach, his friends would join him in a body. Asbrâf had imparted this design to the Persian lords who had been spared at the massacre, with a view to ensnare them; and by them it was that he corresponded with the Shâh. They wrote him word, that the Afghân prince insisted on nothing for himself and his party, but their lives, liberty, and effects. Tahmâsp sent him a deed, engaging, under the most solemn oaths, to perform the conditions; and it was this which drew him so near Isfâhân[†].

THIS new disgrace greatly alarming the Afghâns, determined them to chuse a new master in place of Mahmûd, who was no longer able to manage their affairs. The right of succession belonged to Husséyn Khân, the Soltân's brother, who governed for him at Kandahâr: but as they could not wait his arrival, and Asbrâf was most beloved by the army, he was chosen with their unanimous consent. In this revolution, no person was so active as Aman Ollâh, the chief minister and generalissimo. Observing himself to be watched, he resolved to be revenged; and took the affront so heinously, that, when Mahmûd returned from his last expedition, he refused to go out to meet him. As soon as his election was proclaimed, the Afghâns ran to take the new king out of confinement. The Abdellis, who guarded him, for a while disputed the entrance; but, at length yielding, Asbrâf was proclaimed king of Persia the 22d of April. But this prince, under pretence of revenging his father's death, would not accept the ensigns of royalty till they brought him the head of Mahmûd; who, being in a high frenzy (N), had not many hours to live &c.

[†] KRUSIN. p. 150, & seqq. HANW. p. 209, & seqq.

* KRUSIN. p. 153, & seqq. HANW. p. 211, & seqq.

(N) The Jesuits say, that, in this frenzy, which continued seven days, he tore his flesh with his teeth, and made such wounds that he was ready to expire.

A.D. 1725. THIS destroyer of the dynasty of the Shâhs was but 27 years old when he died. He was middle sized, squat, and clumsy; his neck so short, that his head seemed to grow to his shoulders; his face was broad, his nose flat, and his beard thin and reddish. His looks were wild, his countenance austere and disagreeable. His eyes blue, and a little squinting, were generally downcast, like a man absorbed in deep thought. Yet, inured by habit, few excelled him either in horsemanship, or the use of the lance. He was master likewise of several talents worthy of a sovereign. Although his soldiers accused him with excess in venery, yet he never had but one wife, and was ever constant to her. He slept little, and endured great hardships; was extremely vigilant both in the camp and city, often visiting the centinels in the night. In labour indefatigable; in danger intrepid; and, with all his faults, was a very strict observer of his word, as appears from his regard to Aman Ollâh, even when he knew that general was contriving his ruin. His soldiers charged him with avarice, and depriving them of the booty obtained by their valour in war. Above all, they could not forgive his saying in a passion, after the defeat at Yezd, That he wished they were as great beggars as when they first came into Persia, that they might fight as bravely as they did then: although the loss seems to have been owing to his want of conduct. To this might be added, his cruelty to his enemies, and want of fortitude under his disgraces. In a word, his expedition against Ispâhân seems extremely rash and extravagant; nor can it be justified, but by the success. That inconsiderate temerity, which constituted the chief part of his character, fitted him indeed for making conquests; but he wanted the qualifications necessary to secure them ^h.

Person and character.

1725.

Virtues and vices.

^h KRUSIN. vol. ii. p. 159, & seqq. HANW. vol. iii. p. 212, & seqq.

S E C T. V.

The Reign of Ashráf.

THE resistance which the partisans of Ashráf met with II. Soltân at the palace, furnished a pretext for removing some Ashráf.
 of his enemies. The same day, he caused the late Soltân's guards to be put to the sword. His ministers and confi-dants underwent the same fate. Among whom that of Al- mas, the Kûlar Agâsi, or commander of the slaves, was bewailed by both Afghâns and Persians. He was a great good man, generous, and humane in a high degree; refused presents, and used the ascendancy which he had over his master, to divert him from barbarous resolutions. Yet he was tortured to discover treasures which he had not; and, to avoid a repetition of the rack, slew himself, after he had slain his wife. He next caused all those to be arrested, who had been concerned in the conspiracy, which placed him on the throne, confiscated their estates, not excepting the Mianji, His cru- whose riches were his crime; put some of them to death, ty, among whom was the proud Aman Ollah, whose intrepidity and riches hastened his ruin; and the rest were imprisoned.
 None but Seydal, routed by Tahmâsh, and the grand master of the ceremonies, remained untouched. His aunt, the widow of Mirweis, and mother of Mahmûd, who had been prevailed on by her to spare his life, he confined a whole night in the palace yard among the dead bodies massacred by her son: however he afterwards treated her with becoming regard^a.

THE severity shewed to his younger brother was abominable. This young prince, flying to avoid being confined in the Saray, was, when taken, deprived of his sight, and then shut up there. A son of Mahmûd's, yet in the cradle, was treated in the same manner; and the mother, by report, poisoned. To efface these first impressions in his disfavour, and dissi- he waited on Shâh Husséyn, and pressed him to re-ascend the mulation.
 throne; but the deposed monarch had sense enough not to accept of the offer. In return, Ashráf, who took the title of Soltân, ordered his monthly pension of 125 pounds to be paid him weekly; gave him the direction of the buildings then erecting in the inclosure of the palace, which greatly pleased him; and, after repudiating his wife, married one of the king's daughters. He likewise, to ingratiate himself

^a HANWAY, Revolut. Pers. vol. iii. p. 216, & seqq.

A. D.
1725.

with the people, distributed money among his soldiers, established an exact order in the city; and imposed no new tax, contenting himself to recal the sums which Mahmûd had restored during his illness.

Tries to ensnare
Tahmâsp.

His first attempt was to establish his authority in Kandahâr, by destroying Husséyn Khân, brother of Mahmûd; but he failed in his design, as he did in another to seize the person of Shâh Tahmâsp at an interview, wherein he intended to offer him the diadem, as he had done to his father Husséyn, and settle their respective interests. This prince had just defeated Scydal a second time at Kashan, when he received a splendid embassy proposing an interview. At the same time a letter was sent, advising him to be on his guard. But the letter being intercepted, Tahmâsp marched with only 3000 men to Varami (A), where his enemy was advanced with 12,000. On this he fled to Mazanderân: and Ashraf attempted Tahirân, but in vain, as he did Sava; but Kûm capitulated for want of provisions. Here he found the wife of Tahmâsp, with part of his court and treasure, twenty pieces of cannon, and three elephants.

State of Persia.

ASHRAF, on his return to Isfahân, put to death all the lords, concerned in writing the above-mentioned letter, at a hunting match. At this time the authority of Tahmâsp was acknowledged only in the provinces of Mazanderân, Astrâbâd, and a few places of Persian Irâk. The Afghâns were masters of Khorassân, Kermân, and Pârs (or proper Persia); the rest were in the hands of the Russians and Turks. These last went on making conquests, and reduced Tauris with the loss of 20,000 men; but the Persians lost 30,000. Another army of them advanced within twenty leagues of Isfahân, and then retired on meeting the Afghân guards, with whom they were not at war. Ashraf dreading their power, sent an embassy to court their alliance; but, refusing to admit the Othmân Soltân to be the sole Imâm, or head of religion, the Turks made it a pretence for declaring war against him in March 1726^b,

Ashraf's
successes

MEAN time Kashân and Marâgha having submitted to them, their army marched towards Ghilân, at the solicitation, as was supposed, of the English and French ambassadors, displeased to find the Armenian karawân, which brought silk from thence, discontinued. Shâh Tahmâsp, seeing his affairs were desperate, offered to cede to the Porte

^b HANWAY, p. 220—239.

(A) Between Kûm and Tâbirân.

the conquered countries, in lieu of a truce for three years; which however was not granted. Afhrâf, no less alarmed on his side, perceiving Isfahân was too large for his forces to defend, ordered a second city to be built and fortified within the first, four miles in compass, including the old citadel, the great square, and king's palace; yet this was finished in three months. Also, to render the access more difficult, he sent troops to ravage the country as far as Kazbîn, which, with other cities, were, by his emissaries, induced to declare for him. To prevent a visit in November, he marched to Hamadân, and cut off 6000 Turks: on which the Seraskier intrenched himself. Afhrâf, to supply want of force by art, sent spies into the enemy's camp, with four Sheykhs, to protest against Musulmâns slaughtering one another, and to exhort them to peace. By joining with the Turks at noon prayer, they gained over 5000 Kyurds, and many others. To prevent a more general desertion, the Bâshâ with 70 or 80,000 men attacked the Afghâns, who had but 17,000 foot and 16,000 horse, with 40 harquebusses mounted on camels. Afhrâf appeared on his elephant, surrounded by his ministers, and repulsed the Turks in three fierce attacks, who lost 12,000 men. At night, being joined by 20,000 Kyurds more, the Bâshâ retired in the dark, leaving all his baggage and artillery behind him.

against the Turks.

To retrieve this disgrace, new forces were sent in spring 1727; but, refusing to engage in a war which they looked on as unjust and impious, orders were sent to the Bâshâ to conclude a peace on the best terms he could. They arrived just as he was going to attack the Afghâns; and soon produced the act which both parties desired. By the treaty signed in October, the cities of Zengân, Soltania, Abher, and Tâhirân, were to be added to the Turkish conquests, and Khuzestân, newly taken, restored. The Othmân emperor was to be acknowledged the true successor of the Khalifas; and the Khotbâh, or public prayers, said in his name throughout Persia. On the part of Afhrâf, he was to be acknowledged lawful sovereign of Persia, and named after Soltân Ahmed in the Khotbâh; was to coin money in his own name; and at liberty to send the Persian karawân to Mekka, by way of Bâghdâd c.

Peace concluded.

1727.

MEAN time Shâh Tahmâsp remained at Farabâd in Mazanderân, pent up as a dependant on Fatey Ali Khân, who, during the troubles, had seized that province. He was in these distressed circumstances, when Nadir Kuli, a soldier of

Affairs of Tahmâsp.

A. D.
1727.

fortune, sent from the borders of Mazanderán to offer him his service with 5000 horse. This is that extraordinary person who afterwards recovered Persia out of the hands of the Afgháns and Turks, and then usurped the throne. He was born near Kállát, a strong fortress ten days journey to the south-east of Masfkhád, the capital of Khorásshán. Being a Tatar, or Turkman, of the tribe of Afshar, who supply the Persians with cattle, he was bred a shepherd. His father, who lived by making caps and sheepskin coats, died when Nadir was but thirteen. An ass and camel were his whole estate, on which he carried to market sticks gathered in the woods, and sold them to support himself and his mother. In 1704, he was carried-off by the Uzbeks, but escaped in 1708. The first action we hear of him was that of robbing a flock of sheep. In 1712, he became a courier to a Begh. Being sent with dispatches to court, he killed his companion; and, at his return, slew his master, who appeared displeased; and fled with his daughter to the mountains: there he had by this lady, Imám Kúli Riza, of the same disposition with himself. After this, he turned robber again for a time; and in 1714, offering his service to Babulu Khán, governor of Khorásshán, was made his gentleman usher.

Emili
Khán's origin.
1719.

In 1717, for his behaviour against the Tatars of Khyeva (B), and Bekhará, he was made a colonel; and two years after, with 6000 soldiers, defeated 10,000 Uzbek invaders, killing 3000, the Khan promised to get his command as general confirmed; but, finding a younger man preferred, he reproached his patron with breach of honour; which liberty was rewarded with the bastinado. On this, he retired to the fortress of Kállát commanded by his uncle, the chief of an Afshar tribe: but his assuming temper giving disgust, he took a third time to robbing. With 7 or 800 soldiers, which, in 1722, he collected, he pillaged several karawáns, and laid Khorásshán, with the adjacent provinces, under contribution at pleasure. He continued this course till 1727, when Seyf'ádín Begh, one of the Sháh's chief generals, flying for some offence, joined him with 1500 men, which increased his troops to about 3000. His uncle then wrote him a kind letter, and promised to obtain his pardon, provided he would engage in the service of Tahmásp. Nadir accepts the proposal; and, having obtained a pardon, repairs to Kállát: but the return which he made his uncle was to seize his castle, and murder him^d.

^d HANW. vol. iv. p. 14, 173, & seqq.

(B) Or Karázem.

Joins the
Shâh ;

HE staid there five months, raising contributions and more troops : then marched to drive the Afghâns and Baluchis out of Nisabâûr. The governor with his whole garrison, consisting of 3000 men, issued out against the enemy, who were but 600 men, and pursued them ten leagues to a pass in the mountains, where Nadir lay concealed with 1500 men. There Kuli Khân, facing about, fell on them in the rear, and cut them all to pieces, excepting a few. On this, he took possession of Nisabâûr in the name of Shâh Tahmâsp ; and, having been recruited with 1000 men, went to offer that prince his service, as hath been mentioned. Fatey Ali Khân received him with open arms, and introduced him to the king, who signed his pardon. He soon, by his address, insinuated himself into the Shâh's favour ; and, to gain the whole sway, resolved to remove the Khân, by pretending to discover a plot of his to deliver Tahmâsp into the hands of Malek Mahmûd, the rebel governor of Masûhad. The fiction was improbable ; but it was not Tahmâsp's fortune to be much wiser than his father Husséyn. He was willing to get rid of Fatey Ali, who had usurped too much authority, but had taken an oath never to hurt him. Nadir replied, “ If your majesty has taken an oath, I have not ; ” and that same day had him murdered as he came to court.

NADIR, who succeeded him in the title of Khân, and post of general, now began to display the talents of an able minister as well as officer. At his instance the Shâh marched with his little army of 8000 into Khorassân. He was received with joy into Nisabâûr ; and, his forces soon augmenting to 18,000, he advanced to Masûhad, which being a place of no strength, the Baluchis abandoned it. To reward his new general, he ordered him to be called Tahmâsp Kûli Khân, the addition of his own name being the highest mark of dignity. Nadir, to deserve that honour, marched to reduce the other revolted cities of Khorassân, which he did within the year : and then, with 12,000 men, proceeded to Herât, which the inhabitants delivered-up with the garrison, and the governor, whose head he cut-off^e.

and reduces Khoras-sân.

1728.

ASHRAF, alarmed at these successes, called all his forces together, which did not exceed 30,000, including Afghâns, Ashráf, Darguzzi, and Haffarags ; and then, leaving only 200 as sufficient to guard that once vast city, marched towards Khorassân to attack the Shâh before he could gather more strength. But Tahmâsp, by the advice of his general, met him near Damaghân in Kumes with 25,000 Persians. Ashráf,

Defeats

1729.

A. D.
1729

whose fate depended on the issue of a battle, saw by their disposition, that he ought to proceed with great caution; but, urged by his officers, on the 2d of October he vigorously attacked the enemy, who, to his great surprize, stood the shock; and, attacking them in their turn, obtained an easy victory. The Afghâns lost about 10,000 men, with all their harquebusses, camels, and baggage. They plundered Tâhîran in their flight to Isfâhân, which they plundered also, and then retired to Murchakor, 25 miles east of that capital. Kûli Khân followed them; and coming-up on the 13th of November, received the enemy's first fire: then, advancing close to them, gave a general discharge, which caused such numbers to fall, that the astonished Afghâns fled back to Isfâhân, leaving 4000 dead. They pretended a victory, which made the inhabitants dread a massacre, as had been often threatened; but were diverted by their panic from doing mischief.

Restores

Tahmâsp.

HOWEVER, Asbrâf found time to imbrue his hands in the blood of Shâh Huseyn, and other males of the royal family. Then, having loaded several camels, and 300 mules, mostly with the treasures and rich effects of the palace, they left the city at night, to the number of 12,000, after having reigned as conquerors of Persia seven years and twenty-one days.

THE Persian troops arrived soon after, and put an end to the plundering which the populace had begun. Mean time Shâh Tahmâsp advanced from Tâhîran, and was met by his general six miles from Isfâhân. As soon as he saw him, he alighted from his horse, as did Kûli Khân, who ran to him in a respectful manner: but the Shâh would walk a few steps with him, declaring, that "he could not shew too great distinction to the person who had delivered his country from "a foreign yoke." His joy on entering the capital was allayed by the news of his father's death, and sight of the ruined palace. As he entered the Harâm, an old woman threw her arms about his neck in transports. This was the lady his mother, who, disguised in a slave's habit, had, ever since the Afghân invasion, submitted to all the offices of drudgery^f.

Routs the Afghâns.

TAHMASP by his conduct so won the hearts of his subjects, that, notwithstanding their poverty, they contributed liberally to support the army which was increased to 40,000 men. Expressing his concern, that the Afghâns should be still at Shirâz, where they exercised great cruelties, and his female relations held in slavery; Kûli Khân said, "He was "ready to march against them, provided a power was given “ him to levy money for paying the army ; adding, that military operations were often defeated by the intrigues of a court, as in the case of Luft Ali Khân.” The king (C) was startled at this demand, which was in some measure to demand the sovereignty : but being advised to temporize till a proper time should arrive to punish his insolence, Tahmâsp complied. Kûli Khân begun his march in the end of December, and in twenty days reached Astakhar (D). Although his army was much diminished by the severe season, and want of provisions in a ravaged country, yet, on the 15th of January 1730, he attacked them with such vigour, that he put them instantly to flight. A. D. 1729.

ASHRAF's affairs now grown desperate, he offered to deliver-up the princesses, and all his plunder, for liberty to depart with his troops. This proposal Kûli Khân rejected, and threatened to put all the Afghâns to the sword, unless they delivered-up their chief. Mean time Ashrâf, who expected nothing but a cruel death, if he fell into the hands of the Persians, marched off in the night. His troops, to facilitate their retreat, separated into parties ; after whom the Khân sent several detachments. Ashrâf, distressed for want of provisions in the depth of winter, and attacked on all sides by the peasants, was obliged at length to abandon all his baggage and the captives. Some of his followers killed their women, to prevent their falling into the enemy's hands. The Afghâns being now quite dispersed, their chief had with him no more than 200 men, when he was attacked by a body of Ballowchis. He made a gallant defence ; but in the end was with his people cut to pieces (E). This ended the usurpation of the Afghâns &c. Ashrâf slain.

§ HANWAY, p. 35—40.

(C) He had made him governor of Khorassân, and intended to give him his aunt for a wife.

(D) Supposed to be the ancient Persepolis.

(E) There are different accounts of his death. The Guzestes, among others, reported, that he was carried to death on a scaffold at Ispâhân.

S E C T. VI.

The Reign of Shâh Tahmâsp.

The Turks
defeated.

AMONG the captive ladies thus recovered, were the aunt and sister of the Shâh, who gave the former in marriage to Kûli Khân. This general, after two months stay at Shirâz, marched towards Hamadân, with intent to wrest from the Turks what they had conquered during the late troubles. After a complete victory over them near that city, he took it; and then, by a quick march, got before Kyoprili Bâsbâ to Tauris, which he also subdued with Ardebil. The enemy terrified, demand a peace; which he granted, that he might punish the Abdollis of Herât. After defeating them, he took that city, and put the governor with the principal rebels to death. Tâhmâsp distrusting the Turks, marched from Kazbîn with 50,000 men, by the way of Tauris to Erivân, to which he laid siege, after escaping an ambuscade, and defeating Ali Bâsbâ: but, for want of provisions, was obliged to raise it. In his retreat to Tauris the Bâsbâ followed; and, being joined by Kyoprili, defeated him at Astabad on the Zenghi. His army now reduced to 30,000, he abandoned Tauris to secure Hamadân. Joined there by the garrison, a bloody battle was fought with Ahmed Bâsbâ of Bâgdâd, and lost together with that city^b.

Tahmâsp
makes a peace.

THE Bâsbâ, induced by the troubled state of affairs at Constantinople, where Ahmed III. was deposed; proposed a peace. His late defeat, and the exposed condition of Ispâhân without an army to defend it, moved the Shâh to accept of the proposal. By this peace, concluded in January 1732, the Arrâs was to be the Persian boundary: so that he gave up his right to all Armenia and Georgia, comprising a country near 200 miles in extent. The Othmâns on their side were to assist him, to compel the Russians to quit their acquisitions along the Caspian sea, where, since the death of Peter I. they had made no conquest but that of Lahijân. This peace was against the earnest solicitations of Kûli Khân, who entreated him to persist in the demand of all the conquered provinces, promising to join him soon with a powerful army.

Kûli
Khân re-
sents it.

THE Shâh having disbanded his army, wrote to his general to do the same, and return to Ispâhân. This conduct increased Kûli Khân's jealousy of the court. He told his officers, That "this peace was inglorious, and tended to in-

^b HANW. Revolut. Pers. vol. iv. p. 40, & seqq.

"volve

“ involve Persia in new troubles ; that there was the less reason for sacrificing so many provinces to the Turks, when there was an army on foot sufficient to humble them : that therefore those measures seemed to be levelled at them by the ministers, who were always jealous of their success.”

Having by these speeches, which had the air of patriotism, attached to him the army, now augmented to 70,000, most of them Tatars in whom he might confide, he marched for Isfâhân ; near which he encamped in August. He then waited on the king ; and having told him, that those who advised the peace were his enemies, he produced letters to shew how much he was abused by evil counsellors ; and that they were playing off the same diabolical engines used by those in the time of Husséyn, to cut-off Lust Ali Khân, when the army under his command might have saved Persia ¹.

THE Shâh was astonished at the perfidy of several he most confided in, and believed his general to be as faithful, at least, as his other ministers. But Kûli Khân finding that the letters had no effect with regard to the persons whom he wanted to destroy, he judged himself to be marked out for destruction. His officers were of the same opinion ; and, considering his interest to be their own, readily agreed to prevent their common danger, by deposing Tahmâsp, and setting his son, prince Abbâs Mirzâ, but six months old, in his place. With this intent, he invites Tahmâsp to a review. As he rode through the ranks, many of the soldiers let him know, “ that if he had any particular command for them, they were ready to execute it.” Kûli Khân surprized, desired the Shâh to tell them, “ that the proof of their obedience to him was to obey their general.” After the review, he invited Tahmâsp to a repast ; where being intoxicated with a little wine, he was conveyed under a strong guard to an apartment in the royal gardens. His attendants were confined, and next day, an assembly being called, he set forth the king’s incapacity to reign, and the bad consequences which would attend the peace, unless he was deposed. The general having bribed the great officers of state, as well as of the army, they approved of his advice ; and swore allegiance to the young prince, then lying in his cradle, by the name of Abbas III ².

Seizes the
Shâh.

¹ HANW. p. 63, &c.

² Ibid. p. 70, & seqq.

S E C T. VII.

Reign of Abbâs III.

Gives the Turks

1733.

two great
defeats.

KULI KHAN, now in effect sovereign of Persia, conferred the principal governments on his own relations; and disposed of every thing at pleasure. He sent to acquaint the Bâshâ of Bagdâd, that he intended soon to pay him a visit: on which advice war was proclaimed at Constantinople the 6th of October, and Topal Osmân Bâshâ dispatched with an army of 80,000 men. Bagdâd had been besieged for three months with an equal force, but without cannon; and, though defended with a garrison of 20,000, could not hold out above four days when the Serafskier approached. Kûli Khân met him with 70,000; and had gotten the better, when the Bâshâ of Mosul came up, and turned the scale. About 30,000 were killed on each side, and Kûli Khân had two horses slain under him, and lost all his baggage. Mean time the Bâshâ of Bagdâd, fallying forth, raised the siege: and the Persian general retired, sending him word, that he would be with him early next year, that it might not be thought he intended to fall on him the same winter. But, having with speed repaired his losses, he, in October, forced his way into Turky. Topal Osmân, who had often in vain wrote for troops, at length got together 100,000 men; and met the Persians at Leylam, five leagues from Kerkowd. Kûli Khân attacked the Turks on the 25th, and was repulsed; but next day, the battle becoming general, he obtained a complete victory. The Turks lost 40,000 men, among whom was the brave and honest Serafskier pierced with two wounds, all their baggage and military chest. He was diverted from visiting Baghdâd, to march against his general Mohammed Khân Balluchi, who at Shirâz had proclaimed Shâh Tahmâsp at the head of 30,000 men. Kûli Khân, with the like number, attacked and routed him; who, being taken, hanged himself to avoid a worse fate¹.

1734.
The conquered countries recovered.

1735.

In spring 1734, with 100,000 men, he entered Georgia, which submitted, as did Armenia; the Turks retiring unable to oppose him. Then entering Shirwân, he destroyed Shamakîya for favouring the Lesghi Tatars. Next year he sent an embassy to Russia in the name of Abbâs, to desire an alliance with the empress, and demand restitution of the conquered provinces; which, being too expensive to be kept, were surrendered, and a treaty concluded. His forces now amounting to 120,000 men, he marched from Teflis to Eri-vân, where the Turks had 80,000 commanded by the Seraskier Kyoprili. Kûli Khân, who had then but 50,000, feigned a hasty flight, till he came to a certain defile, where, posting some troops in ambush, he made a stand. The van coming-up were attacked in both flank and rear: the action was bloody, and lasted five hours. Kyoprili, after having two horses killed under him, was slain himself with several other general officers, besides 20,000. The baggage and military chest were taken, with 32 pieces of cannon. The rear, which could not come up to assist the van, fled, and suffered much in the pursuit. Hereupon Eri-vân surrendered, and, by the end of the year, all the conquered provinces were recovered. The Turks wanted to make peace: but Kûli Khân would not hearken to it, unless Bâghdâd was restored, and the expences of the war paid ^m.

¹ HANWAY, ubi supr. p. 74—112.

S E C T. VIII.

The Reign of Nadir Shâh.

IN the beginning of the year 1736, the young king Abbâs died, whether naturally or by art is uncertain. On the 10th of March, the Persian new year, all the governors, great officers, and generals, were convoked in the plains of Mogân, near the river Arrâs, to chuse a new king; Kûli Khân recommending Shâh Tahmâsp, if they thought him fit to govern: but, at the end of three days, he was desired, by the deputies, to accept of the diadem himself, as none, they said, was so worthy of it as he who had restored the glory of the Persian monarchy. The general accepted of it on three conditions; 1. That they made the crown hereditary: 2. That they should not entertain in their houses any of the family of their old kings: 3. That they should not curse Omar, Osmân, and Abu-Bekr, nor meet to commemorate Husséyn's (F) death.

1736.
Kûli Khân'elected king.

^m HANWAY, p. 112—121.

(F) Eldest son of Ali, who was horribly butchered by them, with his whole family (†). In memory of which, the Persian priests were obliged to bid the people to curse them as often as they called them to their prayers. They moreover ordered an annual cavalcade thro' the city of Isfâhân, attended with magnificent pageants, representing that horrid scene to the life, with the most affecting gestures, songs, music, &c.; both which customs Kûli Khân now abolished, in compliment to the Turks.

(†) See before, vol. ii p. 100, & seq.

A. D.
1736.

The high-priest, offering to dissuade him from changing the established religion, was rewarded with a bowstring; and next day, he was proclaimed king by the name of Sháh Nadir. On his arrival at Kazbín, he assembled the ecclesiastics of the neighbouring provinces, and confiscated the revenues of the church, telling them, "That their prayers, not having prevented the present calamities, shewed that God was not pleased with them; but that the deity having made his soldiers the instruments of redressing them, they were the priests most worthy to be supported by the revenues of the church." Presently after he published a decree to unite the Shi'ay and the Sunni sectsⁿ.

Subdues
the Uzbeks.

1737.

TOWARDS the end of the year, a peace was concluded with the Turks; whereby all the conquered provinces were yielded back, and liberty given the Persians to perform the pilgrimage to Mekka duty-free. After this he marched to *Isfáhá*n, which he repaired; and, having done several acts to encourage husbandry and commerce, set out in December to reduce Kandahár, possessed by Husséyn Khán, brother of Soltán Máhmúd. He defeated Husséyn's troops; but, for want of heavy cannon, could not take the place: so that after a long siege, he was obliged to confirm him in his government, on condition to surrender the town and recruit his army. Mean time his son Rizi Káli Mirza, governor of *Masbhá*d, subdued the Uzbeks of Bálkh and *Bokhá*rá. He likewise renewed an invitation from several lords of the Mogol's court to march his forces into India; which he did about the middle of the year 1738: of which famous expedition we shall give a more full account in its proper place^o. On his return to Kandahár with 120 millions sterling, he set out with 50,000 men to chastise the Uzbeks, who, during his absence, had invaded Persia. The Khán of *Bokhá*rá submitted, and was restored. But he of Khyeva, after a brave resistance with 20,000 troops, was obliged to surrender; and had his throat cut, with thirty of his attendants, for murdering Nadir's ambassadors^p.

Escapes
being shot.

IN his return to *Masbhá*d, he was shot at, and wounded in the left hand, by an Afghán, employed by his son Rizi Káli to kill him. This prince, on a report that the Persian army was defeated in Hindustán, revolted, and murdered Sháh Tahmásp in the fortress of Sebzwar. The fear of his father's anger made him contrive his death. Nadir Sháh, who loved him, would have pardoned his crime; but provoked with his offensive language, and justifying what he had done, he ordered his eyes to be put out. After two expeditions against the Arabs and Uzbeks, who had revolted, he entered Daghestân to chastise the Lesghi; but, advancing too far, was greatly harrassed, and narrowly escaped an overthrow. The Turks alarmed, declare war; and, while the Shâh besieges Bâghdâd and Bâsrah, a pretender is sent into Persia, but defeated. At the same time Astarabad and Shirâz revolted. The Turks having assembled an army of 130000 men near Erivân, Nadir met them in August 1745 with 80,000 troops, and overthrew them, killing 28000, with several Bâsbâs, and among them Abdâllah Kyoprili. The Persians lost 8000, and Nadir had two horses killed under him. Revolts in Georgia and Khorassân prompted him to propose a peace; by which the Persians were allowed free access to Mekka, and a priest at Masbhad Ali, another place of pilgrimage (G) ⁹.

ⁿ De his vid. sup. p. 34. HANWAY, p. 123—131. ^o See hereafter, ch. x. p. 464, & seq. ^p HANWAY, ubi sup. p. 134—150.

A. D.

1741.

1742.

1743.

1744.

1745.

Overthrows the Turks.

1746.

ALL this while Persia was reduced to the deepest distresses, by the avarice and cruelty of the Shâh, who, on his return to Isfâhân, committed great barbarities, as well as made cruel exactions. He afterwards did the same at Khermân; and then at Masbhad, where he arrived next with his army. From thence he marched to the plains of Soltân Meydân, a day's journey to the north-west: but there his fate met him; for some time after he had gone to rest, Saleh Beg (H), colonel of the Afghân body-guard, with four chosen men, under pretence of business, rushed by the guards into the outer partition of the Harâm, where they killed an eunuch. Then entering the inner Harâm, slew an old woman also whom they met. They were still at a loss to know Nadir's tent, till, by the light of a lamp, they espied some jewels. There they found him arisen from his bed (I), roused perhaps by the woman's cries. The Shâh drawing his sabre, demanded what they wanted? Saleh Beg answered him by a cut on the left side of his collar-bone. For all this, he killed two of the soldiers who advanced to strike him; and then went to retire out of the tent; but stumbling over the cords, Saleh

Miseries of Persia.

1747.

Nadir
Shâh
slain

⁹ HANWAY, p. 205—224—234—258.

(G) Near Hellâh on the Euphrates in Arabian Irâk.

(H) Mohammed Kûli Khân is praised as the person who destroyed this tyrant, by the procurement of his nephew and successor Alil Shâh, p. 287, and Present Troubles of Persia and Georgia, p. 27.

(I) It is said his wife, the daughter of the Great Mogol, was in bed at the same time. Present Troubles of Persia and Georgia, p. 29.

A. D. 1747. gave him a mortal wound. Nadir cried, "Mercy, and I will forgive you all." The Beg replied, "You have not shewn any mercy, and therefore deserve none." And then cut-off his head^r.

to prevent a massacre.

IT is said, that Nadir Sháh had formed a design of putting to the sword, that night, all the Persians in his camp; and that, while he communicated it to the chiefs of the Uzbeks, Turkmâns, and other Tatars, who composed a great part of his army, a Georgian slave overheard the plot: that this slave discovered it to the principal Persian officers, who agreed to dispatch the tyrant; and that Saleh Beg, an officer of great intrepidity, offered to be his executioner. The Tatars enraged, took to their arms, and attacked the Persians, so that 5000 fell on both sides; mean time a general pillage was carried on. After which, both the body and head being produced to the Tatars, the whole army disbanded.

His person
and character.

THUS fell the scourge of Persia and India at the age of sixty-one, after a reign of eleven years and three months. He had a comely aspect; his forehead was high; his eyes large and expressive; his complexion swarthy, and hair black. He was of a robust make, and six feet high. His whole person and aspect were awful, especially when he spoke. His voice was exceeding strong, and memory great. His presence of mind remarkable, and his resolutions as quick as his thoughts. He was far in years before he learned to read; and owed no part of his knowledge to books. He studied the finances thoroughly, and knew the exact revenue of each province. His diet was simple; his dress thin, and not shewy, for his soldiers to imitate. His pride lay in precious stones, with which his diadem as well as turban was adorned. He often amused himself, when alone in his tent, with a large sapphire. And, when he gave audiences, played with a battle-ax; the use of which he revived. It is said he always wore a chain-work coat of mail under his cloaths. He loved women, and severely punished sodomy. Though his avarice and jealousy made him latterly very cruel, yet our author never heard that he put any man to death in cold blood with his own hands, as his predecessors used to do^s.

Diet and
dress.

^r HANWAY, p. 259, & seqq. ^s Ibid. p. 262—268.

C H A P. IX.

The History of the Arab Kings of Hormûz; or Ôrmûz, in Persia.

THE kingdom of Hormûz, or Harmûz, which the Portuguese write Ormûz, or Ormus, contained part of the ^{Kingdom of Har-}coasts on both sides of the Persian gulph, with the islands ^{mûz.} lying between them : but it is not easy, by the history, to determine the exact bounds of it, when in its greatest extent. We can only say, that, on the side of Arabia, it seems to have comprised the maritime parts, from Râs al Gât, the most eastern point of that country, to Al Katîf ; with the islands of Bahrayn, lying off of that port : and that, on the Persian side, it reached from Cape Jâsk, or Jâskes, as the Portuguese call it, to Bander Kongo ; and perhaps a good deal farther, so as to include the country of Mogostân, in the province of Kermân, and part of the coast of Pârs, or Proper Persia, with the adjacent islands. The chief of these, beginning our reckoning westward, are Lar, or Lara, Andarvia, Keyson, or Keysh, Nabjan, or Peytembo ; to the south of which are two others, Brokht, or Kismis, called also Kishom, and Jerûn, or Hormûz ; and, to the south of it, Larek. All these islands are small, excepting Brokht, or Kismis ; which is about 50 miles long, and 13 broad ; Jerûn and Larek lie off the eastern end of it ; those three islands being about two or three leagues distant from each other. But we shall not enter into the description of places here ; because there will be occasion to speak of them more properly in the course of our history.

OUR materials, so far as relate to the kings of Harmûz, to ^{Its origin,} the time of Turân Shâh, who was of the number, are taken from the history written by that prince (A) ; who gives two somewhat different accounts of the original of the Harmûzian monarchy. The first is this. An Arabian prince, named Mo-

(A) He died in the year of the Hijrah 779, or of Christ 1377. The history, written in the Persian tongue, both in prose and verse, is intituled, Shâh Noma ; that is, a relation of the king or kings ; and begins from Adam. It makes a considerable volume, of which an abstract was published in Portuguese, by Pedro

Texeira ; who has added the succeeding kings to his time ; and interspersed several remarks, relating to places mentioned in the history ; which is to be found at the end of his history of the kings of Persia, extracted from Mirkbond, a famous historian of that country.

hammed Dirhem Kûb (B), descended from the antient kings of Sabah (C), a province in Arabia, being ambitious to extend his dominions, subdued the neighbouring countries, as far as the shores of the Persian gulph (called by the Portuguese the Gulf of Ormuz). Not content with these conquests, he persuaded his troops to cross over to Persia, intending there to build a bander, or port-town ; which should, in splendor and trade, exceed that of Schâr, in Arabia (D), then much frequented by foreign merchants.

according to some.

HAVING fixed this resolution, he marched to Kalayât, a port near Cape Ras al Gât : where leaving his son, under care of a Wazîr, with orders to secure that port for a retreat, in case of the worst, he embarked with his followers, and arrived at Jask, or Jaskes, a well-known place on the coast of Persia ; from whence, sailing northward, he put into Kustek, or Koslek, another port on that side of the gulph. There landing his men, and seeking for a proper place to settle in, he was informed, that there was a very commodious one a little farther up. Thither he marched ; and, finding the situation agreeable to his mind, founded the city of Harmûz ; where he resided in peace and justice. The lands, which were in the neighbourhood, he divided among his people, and coined money in his own name ; from whence he had the appellative of Dirhem Kûb. As Shâh Mohammed was of a good temper, wise, and brave ; the governors of Shirâz and Kermân maintained a strict amity with him. At his death, he left Hormûz in a prosperous condition to his son Soleymân ; who had accompanied him in his expedition, and by whose industry the new city greatly increased ^a.

Another
tradition.

THE other account, which Turân Shâh gives of the origin of the kingdom of Hormûz, is thus. When the father of Shâh Mohammed was king in Arabia, being at war with another prince, he lost a battle ; and, not thinking himself se-

^a TURAN SHAH, apud Texeira Hist. Pers. p. 377, & seq.

(B) Not Dramkû, as Texeira writes ; so we are told by D'Herbelot, who seems to have read the original history of Turân Shâh ; not Torunxa, as the other spells it. See D'Herb. Bibl. Orient. p. 457. art. Hermouz.

(C) In the kingdom of Yaman (by Europeans called Arabia Felix) ; and where the queen of Shebah, who visited Solomon, is supposed to have reigned.

(D) Soar, or Zoar. It is now an inconsiderable place ; but its ruins, with the conveniency of its situation, convinced Texeira, that it was formerly a place of note. It lies to the east of Mashât, near Kalayât, and Cape Ras al Gât.

cure in that country, crossed over the gulph to Mogostân, in Persia, and settled there, with his son Mohammed, who bore him company. About that time, a tyrannical king reigned in those parts; who, besides the other wrongs which he did his subjects, obliged them to give him the first night's lodging with every maid, who was to be married. Mohammed, who, though young, had a great soul, taking compassion on those oppressed people, offered to deliver them, at the hazard of his life. The method which he took to accomplish his design, was this. He pretended to marry a maiden of quality, belonging to the town where the tyrant resided. And, being as yet beardless, as well as handsome, he cloathed himself in a woman's habit. Thus disguised, but armed underneath, and well attended, he was brought in the evening to the king; who immediately retired into his bed-chamber with the supposed maid. Mohammed, by pretending bashfulness, gained time, till he had a fair opportunity to dispatch him with his dagger: after which he quitted the apartment, and having informed those, who waited the event, that he had slain the tyrant, they immediately proclaimed liberty through the city.

THIS piece of service was so acceptable to the people, that ^{1st. King,} they made their deliverer king; who took on him the title of Moham-Shah ^{Mohammed}; adding the surname of Dirkem Kûb, for med. the reason before-mentioned. After this, the better to improve his dominions, he founded the city of Hormûz, in a plain of the same name (E); from whence all the kingdom was denominated. And this Texeira judges to be the most likely account of its origin: but the time (F) when these transactions happened is not mentioned ^b

THE second king of Hormûz was Soleymân, son of Shâh ^{2. Soleymân.} Mohammed; who succeeded him, as hath been said before.

^b TEXEIR. ubi supr. p. 378, & seq.

(E) According to this account, Hormûz took its name from the plain wherein it was built, by one of the antient kings of Persia of that name. See D'Herb. p. 457, art. Hormouz. Hormouz fils de Schabour, & Hormouz fils de Narfi. This city belonged to the province of Kermân, the Persian Karamania of the Greeks.

(F) The first date we meet with, is the year of the Hejrah 676; that is, of Christ, 1277; when Roku'ddîn Mohammed, the 12th king of Hormûz, died. If then you subtract from that year 216 years, for the reigns of the first 12 kings (allowing 18 years to each), there will remain 1061; about which time the kingdom might have been founded.

He was affable, and beloved for his virtue and justice; which gained him great renown. He reigned many years in peace, and left the throne to his son,

3. Iza.

IZA, the third king; who proved a good prince also; so that his reign was blessed with peace and prosperity. He made his people apply themselves to tillage, and planting of palm-trees; in which he was very assisting to them. On the other hand, they were ready, on all occasions, to serve him in his wars; so that he considerably extended his dominions. He was succeeded by his son;

4. Lashkari.

LASHKARI: who was as good as his father; a lover of justice, and protector of the poor. Among his sons, one was named Kay Kobâd; to whom, for his excellent qualities, he resigned the crown, and retired himself from court, to lead a solitary life; in which state he died some years after.

5. Kay Kobâd.

KAY KOBAD no way degenerated from his predecessors; but was a lover of justice, supported the needy, curbed the great ones; and, dying, left the throne to his son,

6. Iza II.

IZA II. who was a martial prince, and successful in the wars, which he undertook. The kingdom of Hormûz prospered under him; and, at his death, devolved to his son,

7. Mahmûd.

MAHMUD. He was a good prince, and had many children. It was a custom of the kings of Hormûz, for their own greater security, and to prevent commotions, to send all their kindred, who might aspire to the crown, to forts, and other places remote from their residence. Among the rest, Mir Shahâbo'ddin Molsingh, one of Mahmûd's nephew's, was appointed to reside in the fortress of Gât, which is in Persia; and in the lands of Brabem and Myslagam (G). But Mahmûd, being informed, that his nephew had contrived to kill him, ordered him to be secured; intending to put him to death, in case the treason was proved. Mir Shahâbo'ddin had intelligence of this, and fled to the fortress of Skugon; where he was well received by the governor, who also gave him his daughter in marriage; by whom he had a son, called Nysérât Raghbar (H); and a daughter, named Setalkânûm Shahâbo'ddin. In the mean time, Mahmûd died at Harmûz; and was succeeded by his son,

8. Shahân Shâh.

SHAHÂN SHAH. This prince used all his endeavours to get Molsingh into his power; but could not. After

(G) There were several other fortresses, and lands, in Persia, possessed by the kings of Hormûz, and subject to the Portuguese, in the time of Texeira. (H) This name is much corrupted; as are many others, so as not to be intelligible.

Some years, great numbers of men, from the land of Hîr, invading his territories, he marched to oppose them; though with a force much inferior to theirs. Mîr Shahâbo'ddin Molongh, thinking this a proper opportunity to be reconciled to his uncle, with his father-in-law's leave, raised all the troops he could, and went to his assistance. After kissing his foot, he fell back, and followed him, attended by his forces: but the uncle made him ride by his side, and expressed other marks of much affection. As soon as they met the enemy, they engaged; and Shahân Shâh, being slain in the battle, MIR SHAHABO'DDIN was proclaimed king. He prosecuted the war against the people of Hîr; whom he entirely routed; and then returned to Hormûz, where he reigned to general satisfaction. He married his daughter, Set al Kâtûn Shahâbo'ddin, to Amîr Seyfo'ddin ebn Azar, son to his brother Ali, king of the island of Keys. Soon after this match, Ali died; and the people of Keys, at the instance of the king of Hormûz, received Amîr Seyfo'ddin for their king; who immediately repaired thither, with his wife. Not long after, died Molongh, king of Hormûz; and one Resh Shâhreâr usurped the throne. As soon as this news reached Keys, the people deposed Amîr Seyfo'ddin: who, fearing farther mischief from them, went to Hormûz; where he was well received by the inhabitants. Shâhreâr, the usurper, was then at the fortrefs of Karcâm, with ten of his kindred: but Seyfo'ddin halting thither, after an obstinate resistance, slew them all.

SEYFO'DDIN becoming thus possessed of the crown; the first thing he did, was to marry the three daughters of Resh Shâhreâr to three of the chief men of his court. Then, calling to mind how he had been treated by the inhabitants of Keys, he invaded their island with his troops; and overthrew them in a battle, with great slaughter. He likewise took several of the principal men prisoners; and, carrying them away with him, at the island Jerûn (now called Hormûz, and then not inhabited), into which he put with his ships, slew them there on a hill; from thence called Keri Kestoron; that is, The hill of the slain; which name it still retains. After this, he returned to the city of Hormûz, on the opposite coast: where he spent the rest of his days in peace; and was succeeded by his nephew, SHAHABO'DDIN Mahmûd II, son of Iza; who enjoyed peace all his reign, and did nothing remarkable. At his death, he left the crown to his nephew,

- A. D. 1277. AMIR Rokno'ddin Mahmûd; under whom Hormûz prospered exceedingly. He kept on foot a considerable number of good forces, who gained him considerable victories, and enlarged his dominions; extending them as far as Zafar. He reigned 35 years; and died in that of the Hejrah 676; of Christ 1277 (I).
12. Mah-
mûd. AMIR Seyfo'ddin Noferât, his son, who succeeded him, was opposed by two of his brothers, Amir Kothbo'ddin Tabatân, and Amir Moëzo'ddin Fulâd, or Pulâd; and, although most of the army favoured Noferât, yet he could not prevail against his competitors; who, at length, obliged both him and his mother, Babi Banck, to fly the kingdom. Babi Banek retired to Kermân; which province was then governed by Soltân Jalîlo'ddin Suragetmesb; who gave her an honourable reception, and such a supply of forces, as restored her son Noferât to his dominions. However, his brothers did not give over molesting him; but, at length, he took one of them; viz. Amir Moëzo'ddin Fulâd, and put him to death. Mir Kothbo'ddin, the other brother, being supported by one Mâlek Seyfo'ddin Abubekr Haoni, invaded Hormûz; and, coming to a battle with Noferât, at Denu, defeated him; who, thereupon, fled to Komzâra; and thence, in a Tarranki (a kind of light boat), passed over to Last, a port-town in the island of Brokht, generally called Queysbom, by the Portugueses.
- Civil wars. AFTER Noferât's flight, the two confederates fell so much at variance, that Malek Seyfo'ddin killed Kothbo'ddin: but the army, as well as the people, disapproving of his proceedings, they called home Noferât, and expelled the usurper. However, the restored prince did not long enjoy the throne; for two other of his brothers, Amir Masand, and Amir Turkân Shâh, aspiring to the crown, basely murdered him, with his sisters, Bibi Banck, and Bibi Neyti (K), in the year 689, after he had reigned 12 years d.
- Hej. 689.
A. D. 1290.
14. Ma-sând. MASAND, having killed his brother, possessed himself of the kingdom. He was of a martial temper, and very brave: but so cruel and stern, that he soon incurred the hatred of every body. Being sensible that he had lost the affections of the people, he, through fear, put to death many of the nobles and commoners. Upon this, most of the prin-d TEX. p. 381, & seqq.

(I) Texcira puts 1278; which have rectified them as we go along.
(K) Bibi signifies, in Persian, lady.
by one or two years. But we principal men repaired to Amîr Bahâo'ddin Ayâz Seyfin; whom Noferât, the late king, had advanced to be Wazîr of Kalagât (or Kalayât), a port in Arabia, before-mentioned. He, pitying the calamities of the kingdom of Hormûz, raised forces; and, transporting them over the Persian gulph, fought, and defeated Amîr Masand; who fled to Kermân, and thence removed to Sirjân (L): where he died several years after, having reigned no more than three years.

A. D.
1290.

UPON this victory, Mîr Bahâo'ddin Ayâz Seyfin, who had been a slave to Noferât, taking upon him the regal power, began to restore things to their former order; but was hindered by the troubles which ensued: for Mîr Turkân Shâh, and Mîr Saljak, two brothers of Masand, holding a correspondence with him, attempted to restore him. However, Ayâz, being informed of it, had them seized, and cut off their heads. This execution procured him some quiet for a while: but in the year 700, the Turks (M), who had already possessed themselves of several provinces of Persia, breaking into the kingdom of Kermân, came down from thence into that of Hormûz; destroying all the country, as they passed. Yet might this have been tolerable; had not the wealth, which they found in those parts, invited them to come so often, that the Hormûzians, no longer able to bear their oppressions, resolved to abandon their lands in Persia, and retire into the island of Brokht.

15. Ayâz
Seyfin;

Hej. 700.
A. D.
1300.

THIS island, called Quishom (N) by the Portuguese, is the largest, as hath been said, of all the islands belonging to the kingdom of Hormûz, on the side of Persia; and is separated from the continent only by a very narrow chanel. Thither the Hormûzians, by order of Ayâz, passed over; taking with them all which they had saved from the rapacious hands of the Turks. After a few days rest, Ayâz set out again in quest of some other island, more convenient, to settle in with his people (O); and, at length, come to one, which was distant, two leagues distant from that of Brokht. On the north point of this island; where afterwards the Portuguese built a removes to Brokht;

(L) There seems to be some mistake here; for Sirjân, otherwise called Kermân, is the capital of the province of Kermân in Persia.

(M) These must be the Tatars, who then reigned in Persia; for the Seljukian Dynasties both of Irân and Kermân, were extinct before the year 590 of the Hejrah.

(N) Queyshom, or Keyshom; and, by others, Kishnis, or Kishmish.

(O) It was possibly too large, and near the continent, to be defended easily; as is remarked in Purchas. Pilgrim. vol. ii. p. 1786.

A. D.
1300.

fortress, they found an old man, named Jerûn, with his wife, who lived there upon fishing; furnishing the ships, which passed to and fro between India and Keys, with what fish he caught: in return for which, they gave him rice, cloth, and other necessaries of life.

sends to
Keys;

THIS Jerûn, understanding that Ayâz was looking out for an island to settle in, advised him to come over thither, as being the only one to be found fit for his purpose; and the king, having viewed it, resolved to beg it of Neîn (P), the king of Keys, to whom it belonged; as did all the other islands in the gulph of Persia.

KEYS (or Kays), so called by the Arabs, as well as Persians; and, by the Portuguese, Quays; is a small island in the gulph, well wooded and watered. It was once the head of a kingdom (Q); though, in Texeira's time, not inhabited (R): because the trade was fallen off, for fear of the Nawtaki and Nichelus, two sorts of pirates, continually infesting that sea. It was formerly possessed of all the trade, which afterwards was removed to Ormûz (S); but lost all by the wars, and scarce retained its name.

and buys
Jerûn.

WHILE Ayâz was at Jerûn (T), so called from the old man, there came over one Sheykh Ismael, a Mollâh, born in • TEIX. p. 384, & seqq.

(P) In Texeira, Neyn, and Neyn.

(Q) There was formerly in this island a very rich and splendid city; of which the ruins are still to be seen, as well as the memory preserved. But this once populous, trading, island, is now desert. Purchas. Pilgr. vol. ii. p. 1786.

(R) The descriptions of places, with which this history is intermixed, seem to have been inserted by Texeira, without distinguishing his additions from the rest.

(S) Keys is about two leagues and a half from the coast, and five from the island of Andarvia; although they reckon fifteen from Lara to Keys. It reaches, in length, from W. S. W. to E. N. E. and is about five leagues in compass. It is very low and flat, like the other two; which are very near the shore: and when Thevenot saw it, in 1665, was inhabited by several people; who had houses dispersed here and there upon it. Thev. Trav. part 2. p. 173.

(T) Or Jarûn and Jarûm; the Portuguese often using the m, instead of n, when the preceding vowel is long. In Purchas, Jarun is said to signify a wood; from some thin woods and trees, which grew about the isle, like apple-trees of Anafega, and bearing the same sort of ill-tasted apples, called, by the Portuguese, Small Apples (perhaps the Mangenilla). Pur. Pilgr. vol. 2. p. 1786—these seem to be the Konar mentioned afterwards.

a village

a village near Lâr, in Persia; who used to go every year all about those islands, begging for himself, and the poor of his hamlet. Ayâz, finding this Mollâh fit for his purpose, sent him to treat with the king of Keys about that island; and he managed the affair so well, that Neîn offered to bestow it on Ayâz: but this prince would not take it, without paying for it. For this service, done by the Mollâh, the kings of Hormûz gave every year to his descendants a certain acknowledge-ment; which our author has seen them come to demand.

A. D.
1300.

AYAZ, having thus obtained the island, gave it the Its situa- name of Hormûz, in remembrance of their antient country; tion; although the Persians and Arabs generally call it Jerân. Nor has the antient Hormûz on the continent lost its name, but still retains it. Jerân, or Hormûz, stands just within the mouth of the Persian gulph, which is divided by it into two parts; one called the gulph of Hormûz; commencing at Port Guâdel, in Persia, and Cape Râs al Gât, in Arabia, and extending to that island about one hundred leagues: the other is named the Gulph of Basrah; reaching from Jerân to the mouth of the river Tigris; near which that city is seated, the space of almost 200 leagues. This island is betwixt six and seven miles in compass (five from Dozâr, the nearest part of Persia; and nine leagues from the coast of Arabia). Formerly it was on fire; which left it so uncouth, that it is amazing to behold. A high mountain crosses it from east to west: from the foot whereof, to the north point, where the city and fort stand, being about a mile, there is a plain, somewhat more level than the rest, where the city is built; but beyond the mountain (southward), there is nothing to be seen, but dismal hills, clefts, and rocks ^f.

*extent,
and soil;*

It yields abundance of fine sulphur, and very transparent mineral salt. During the summer also, the water which descends from the mountain in winter, and overspreads the plain about the city, is converted into salt by the heat. Besides these stores of salt, there are three springs, which gushing from the foot of the mountain, form three rivulets of very clear water; but as salt as that in the sea. The surface of these streams is turned into salt, by the sun, as they glide along; which makes so hard a crust, that our author, Texeira, has often crossed on horse-back, without breaking it; the water running underneath. Both the mineral salt, which is found to grow, and the other sort, are very medicinal; so that the fort only, which is made by the sun's heat, is used for seasoning of meat: for the mineral is so sharp, that, instead of all sulphur and salt;

A. D.
1300.

preserving flesh, it corrodes and spoils it; or any other thing which it is used with (U). At Torunpuka, which is a piece of white salt clay-ground, at the south-west end of the island, among certain rocks not far from the sea, there gushes out some brackish water; which the natives call Ab Dorman, or medicinal water; which, having a purging quality, is much resorted to at one time of the year.

no fresh water;

THE island has no fresh water, but what is gathered from the rain in cisterns; which are numerous. Only at Torunpuka, above-mentioned, there is a little fresh water, made use of to water the orchards of the king and his Wazir. Terragut Sháh, who reigned in 1596, found out another stream of fresh water; in hopes thereby to marry a rich widow, who enjoined him that task (W). These gardens produce every thing, which is planted, in perfection, contrary to all the rest of the island; where there is neither tree, nor plant; unless in the plain some prickly shrubs, bearing a fruit like haws, called Konar, green all the year; some few mallows, and purging fenna, called Senna Moki, or fenna of Moka.

Heat excessive.

THE summer heats are here prodigiously great, almost intolerable, and scarce credible to such as have not experienced them; which is surprising, considering it lies in 27 degrees and a half north latitude. For all this, the air and climate is healthy, and there is seldom any distemper in summer: for the terrible heat expels all peccant humours, by excessive sweat: but, in autumn, they pay for all disorders committed in summer.

THE island has two banders, that is, ports, or bays; one to the east, the other to the west, of the sandy point, where old Jerán lived, and the Portuguese built a fort.

City of

Hormúz; THE city of Hormúz, founded in the year 1300, was formerly large: but not so in our author's time; the best and noblest part of it having been blown up, to make a spacious parade, or place of arms, before the fort. The houses were well built, of a softish stone, found in the island, and another fort taken out of the sea: for these are light, and best to with-

(U) Some ships, particularly those from Kechán, in Malabór, take in this mineral salt, as ballast, and carry it to Bengál; where, for want of other salt, it goes off.

(W) Her name was Bisati-ma, an old woman, widow of his Wazir, who governed in Mogofán, in Persia. She, who was said to be vastly rich, to put off the old king, who was in love with her; said, she would marry him, when he had planted a new garden, and found another fresh spring, at Turunpuka; thinking it impracticable. However he performed the task, yet got not the money.

stand the earthquakes, which the island is subject to. They have three sorts of mortar : one made of fine lime, called Ghecha, brought from the continent : another red fort, found in the island, but not so good ; and a strange fort, called Charu, made of rotten dung : which is dried, and burned ; then beaten, and used warm from the battoon : for it won't do if it stands till it be cool. No water can penetrate foundations laid with this cement. This city throve so fast, that, in 200 years, it extended its dominion over the greater part of Arabia, much of Persia, and all the gulph as far as Basrah. It continued in this flourishing state, till subdued by the Portugueses : since which time it began to decline, by reason, says Texeira, of the insolence and oppression of the governors and officers of that nation ; they being at too great a distance from those, who were able to curb them.

A. D.
1300.

THE Hormûzians are fair, and well shaped ; the men polite, and genteel ; the women beautiful. They all speak the Persian tongue, but not pure. They are all Mohammedans ; part Shiays, and part Sunni ; which last sect the king professed, in Texeira's time. Besides the original inhabitants, and the Portugueses, who conquered them, people of several nations were settled there : as Armenians, Georgians, Syrians, Banyans from India, and about 150 families of Jews.

THE island affords plenty of game : as Gazellas ; a kind of creatures like wild goats ; Adibes, which are a sort of foxes ; partridges, turtle-doves, and other sorts of fowl. The wonder is, where these animals drink ; since there is no fresh water, but what has been mentioned ; which makes some people think they sip salt water. Although the soil produces no vegetables ; yet the city is so well supplied with necessaries from abroad, that all things were sold at moderate rates : in short, Hormûz was, when the Portuguese had it, a mart and fair for all the world ; whither all sorts of commodities were to be found, and the merchants of all nations resorted (X). There is a manufactory here for drinking-cups, and pots to hold water : which are made of the salt clay ; and, when become fresh, keep the water cool, and give it an agreeable taste.

* TEX. p. 388, & seqq.

(X) The inhabitants used to say, that the world was a ring, and Ormûz the gem, or stone in it. The officers of the customs assured Texeira, that they yield the king of Portugal 150,000 pounds ; besides what it was supposed that the Moorish officers purloined. Texeira was here in 1604.

A. D.
1311.

Ayâz dies.
Hej. 711.

A. D.
1311.

16. Gorden
Shâh ;

To return to the history. Ayâz Seifin, having reigned ten years, died in the year 711. Others say, that, after settling the affairs of his new state, he resigned the crown in the year just mentioned, to Amir Ayâz'uddin Gordin Shâh, the son of Soldar and Bibi Zeyneb, grandson to the former king ; and that, after his resignation, he returned to his Wazirship of Kâlagât, in Arabia : where he some time after died.

A M I R Ayâz'uddin Gordin Shâh, 16th king of the old, and 2d of the new, Hormûz ; as soon as he ascended the throne, thought of ratifying the peace with Nein, king of Keys, of whom Ayâz bought the island : but his ambassadors insisted on such unreasonable terms, that Nein, perceiving he intended a rupture, resolved to prevent him. To this end, he raised forces ; and, with the assistance of Mâlek Ayâz'uddin, governor of Shîràz, sailed for Hormûz, with 120 Terrada's, which are small vessels, full of men. The chief reason which he alledged for this invasion, was, that Gordin Shâh had detained the Indian ships at Hormûz, which were bound for Keys ; and, by that means, wronged him of his customs. Mean time, Gordin Shâh passed over, with his army, to Sirmion ; a village (Y) in the island of Brokht, or Ques/boma, with a design to cut off the enemy's water. While he was there, news came to him, that ten sail of India ships, bound for Keys, richly laden, were passing between Hormûz and Lârek ; an island four leagues to the north. On this advice, he set out, with his fleet, to meet them : and, after an engagement, took, and carried them to Hormûz.

invaded from Keys ;

ABOUT this time, the forces of Keys and Shîràz, being arrived near Sirmion, were surprised by a violent storm, and the whole fleet shattered. Ten ships, however, escaped, and put into the little ile of Ajsem : which, lying very close to that of Brokht, helps to form a safe and spacious harbour between the two. Here the king of Keys, incensed afresh with the news of the late capture of the India ships, landed his men ; designing, the next night, to pass over to Hormûz. Gordin Shâh, having intelligence of this, disposed his forces in a proper manner to receive the enemy : posting about one third of them on the shore, about 1000 paces distant from the city : at a place called Karu, very proper for making a descent. Accordingly, the confederates attempted it ; but were repulsed, with the loss of many men and ships. After this, putting off to sea, they sent to make propositions of peace. But Gordin Shâh rejected them ; and, following the advice of

(Y) Near a cape of the same name, on the western end of the ile.

Sangor Rokno'ddin, his general, resolved to fall on his enemies by surprise; who, hearing of it, fled; yet not so timely, but that the Harmúzians made a great slaughter of them. A. D. 1314.

THUS roughly handled, they returned to Keys; where having recruited their forces; they, in the year 714, returned to invade Hormúz, with a greater number of men and ships than the time before. With these they beset the island so closely, for four months, that, had not Gordún Sháh supplied it in time with plenty of provisions, he must have been obliged to surrender. The king of Keys, perceiving how little he prevailed, proposed a peace, with a view to ensnare him. As it was agreed, that the two kings should have a conference on the shore, he of Keys came in a small boat; and leaping on land, when the king of Hormúz advanced to embrace him, laid hold of him, being strong, and forced him into the boat; which hasting to the fleet, they immediately set sail for Keys. Nor was it any way in the power of the Harmúzians to hinder them ^h. taken prisoner; Hej. 714. A. D. 1314.

WHEN Bibi Soltána, Gordún Sháh's consort, was informed of what had happened to her husband, she ordered Málek Ghayázo'ddin Dinár, son to her brother Shahín Shah, to take upon him the government. - Four months after, the king of Keys set out again for Hormúz, carrying with him Gordún Sháh. But, when he was about half-way, there arose so violent a tempest, that most of the ships were wrecked, and the rest dispersed into different ports. That wherein Gordún Sháh was prisoner, happened to be saved on the shore of Hormúz; whither a multitude of people resorting, they conducted him, with great joy, to the city: but Ghayázo'ddin Dinár, having assumed the state of a king, refused to resign the government to him. Hereupon, Gordún Sháh retired to the house of Konia Mehemed Káleb: but, not thinking himself safe there, went over the same night to the fort of Minab; which signifies Enamel; on the coast of Persia. Dinár, finding that all the people forsook him, and resorted to Gordún Sháh, left the island, and went to Makrán, a kingdom lying between Persia and India (Z). As soon as he was gone, Gordún Sháh returned to Hormúz, where he was peaceably received; and, two years after, died in the year 717, leaving the throne to his son, he escapes; Hej. 717. A. D. 1317.

^h TEX. p. 393, & seqq.

(Z) It is properly a maritime province of Persia.

A. D.

1317.

17. Bah-
râm Shâh;

AMIR Mobârezo'ddin Bahrâm Shâh. At the same time, the garrisons in the forts on the continent proclaimed his brother, Shâh Kothbo'ddin; and conducted him, as king, from the fort of Barkamîn, where he was, to that of Minâb. Bahrâm Shâh, hearing of these commotions, set out with his forces; and, meeting him, joined by another brother, named Mâlek Nazâmo'ddin Ajen Shâh, defeated them both, and returned victorious to Hormûz. Soon after, Mir Shahâbo'ddin Issuf, or Yusef, and Mir Tayo'ddin Zenghi Amir, his two commanders in chief, one at sea, the other by land, fell at variance about their prince's favour; and, as they disturbed the public peace by their factions, he seized them both. Mean while, the king of Keys invaded Hormûz a third time: but met with so warm a reception, that he returned with no better success than he had before. Upon this occasion, Gordûn Shâh had released those two commanders out of prison; of whom Mir Shahâbo'ddin Issuf, thinking himself wronged, meditated revenge.

treacher-
ously slain.

As the king was desirous to put an end to the troubles raised by his brothers, who still molested him, he embarked with some troops to pass over to the continent: but, being hindered by contrary winds, went back to lie in his palace that night. When all were gone to rest, Issuf repairs, with some horse and foot, to the gate; calling out for the king to come forth: pretending, that Bibi Soltân Sangor was landed on the island, with an armed force. Bahrâm Shâh, upon this alarm, hastened forward, followed by his mother, and brother Nazâmo'ddin, who had been reconciled to him. But, as soon as they came out of the palace, they were all secured by Mir Shahâbo'ddin Issuf; who took upon him the title of king, in the year 718.

A. D.

1318.

18. Shahabo'ddin Issuf.

THIS revolution divided the Hormûzians. One part following the usurper Issuf: the other, Mir Kothbo'ddin, brother to the prisoner king; who had defeated him, as before related, on the continent. Mâlek Dinâr, who had fled to Makran, hearing of these troubles, returned towards Hormûz, with a good body of forces: giving out, that he came to assist Mir Shâh Kothbo'ddin: but finding, on his arrival, that Issuf's party prevailed, he made friends with this latter. Bibi Soltân, sister to Dinâr, and Bibi Nazmâlek, wife to Issuf, undertook to reconcile the contending parties: but Issuf, as the best way to secure himself, cut off the heads of the prisoner king, Gordûn Shâh, his mother, and brother: upon which, Shâh Kothbo'ddin went over to Kalagât, in Arabia; with Bibi Marim, wife to Ayâz Serfin. After this, Shahâbo'ddin Issuf, being informed that the forces of Keys were sailing

ing towards him; set forward to meet them : but, when he came in sight of them, returned home in a fright. For all this, the invaders reaped no advantage by their expedition; returning the fourth time from Hormûz without success. It fared quite otherwise with Shâh Kothbo'ddin; who, the next year, accompanied with Mâlek Jalâlo'ddin Queyzi, and Khoaja Jamâlo'ddin Nein, departed from Kalagât; and, falling unexpectedly upon the island, got possession of it¹.

M I R Shâh Kothbo'ddin, the son of Gordûn Shâh, having thus recovered the kingdom of Hormûz, immediately put to death Mir Shabâbo'ddin Issuf; his wife, Bibi Nazmâlek; and his two sons, Mr Omâdo'ddin Hosseyn, and Amir Hassan; who had been prisoners in the fortress of Gât. Not long after, Queyzi and Nein, who had restored Shâh Kothbo'ddin to the throne, conspired to kill him, and secure the kingdom to themselves. Kothbo'ddin, being informed of their villainy, intended to have seized them; but they, discovering his design, fled out of the island. Nein was drowned in crossing the sea; but the other, with a few followers, got safe to Keys. After this, Kothbo'ddin, and his kingdom, enjoyed peace for ten years: at the end of which, a new attempt was made against it from Keys.

M A L E K Ghayâzo'ddin, who had succeeded in that island, on the death of a former king, taking the opportunity, while Shâh Kothbo'ddin was in Moggtân, in Persia, during the summer heats, invaded Hormûz with a considerable fleet; and had made himself master of that island, had it not been for the gallant defence made by Mohammed Serkâb, and Ibrâhîm Salgor, two of the king's porters; to whom he had committed the guard of it. Shâh Kothbo'ddin, on this advice, returned to Hormûz; and, fitting out a fleet with great expedition, sailed for the island of Keys; which he attacked, and made himself master of, with great slaughter of the inhabitants. He likewise took king Mâlek Ghayâzo'ddin, and some of his relations; whom he afterwards put to death. He left a good garrison at Keys, and then departed; resolving, before he returned to Hormûz, to attack the island of Bahr-ayn (A): which accordingly he subdued.

B A H R A Y N, or Bahreyn, lies in the Persian gulph, and Bahr- midway between the island of Hormûz, and the city of Basrah; ayn described.

¹ Tex. p. 397, & seq.

(A) Which signifies, the two most of his proper and local seas. Texeira writes Barben and names. Bâbrayn is the dual of Baharem; but faultily, as he does the Arabic Bâhr, the sea.

A. D. 100 leagues distant from each, and near the coast of Arabia, 1319. opposite to the port of Katif, which is in the government of ~~~~~ Lakok; one of those possessed by the Turks in these parts.
 It is inhabited by Arabs; only, ever since the year 1602, when it became subject to Persia, the garrison and governor are Persians. The country is pleasant, and abounds with fruit, especially dates; but produces little of wheat, or barley: and rice, which, next to dates, is the common food, was carried thither from Hormúz, in the time of the Portu- *guese*s.

Strange
springs.

THIS island is famous through the world, for its excellent pearls, and fresh water springs; both found in the sea, which surrounds it. Before Manâma, which is the chief town in the isle, at about three fathom, or three and a half, deep, there gush out certain springs of pure fresh water; which is brought up in skins by divers, and sold very cheap. Texei- ra was told by some of the oldest inhabitants, that those springs were formerly upon the land, remote from the sea; which, at length, gained ground on that side: and hence he imagines, that the island took the name of Bâhreyn, or the two seas; meaning a fresh and a salt one; rather than from two considerable streams, which cross the island. Both these are brackish, like the other waters on land; the best whereof is that of Naniyah, in the middle of the isle, found in exceeding deep wells.

Pearl
fishery.

THERE are two considerable pearl fisheries in the east:
 one at Manar, in the chanel between Seylan and Tutan Kori; which is Cape Kori; corruptly, Komori, or Komorin; the extreme point of Malabar (B): but the pearls of Bahrayn surpass all others in goodness, and weight. About 200 Ter- rada's, or vessels, joining there, go to Katar, a port of Ara- bia, 10 leagues to the southward; where the fishing continues all July and August. There are other fisheries of less note, in September, at Nikbelu, Bahrayn, and Julfar: also at Masfat, Teva, and Rasal Gat; but the pearls of these last places are of very little value. They are found in oysters, which are brought up by divers; and lie from 12 to 15 fathom deep<sup>k</sup>.

Other con-
quests.

BUT to return. Shâh Kothbô'ddin, having possessed himself of Bahrayn, went and took Katif, Karga, and Darab.

<sup>k</sup> TEXEIR. p. 398, & seqq.

(B) Or, as Texeira makes it, of Korobandel, rather Kora Ban- der; that is, as he says, the Port of Rice; so called from its plenty on that coast. Tutan

Kori (which Europeans corruptly call Tutokori, and Tutokorin) is properly a town on the coast to the east of Cape Kori, or Kom- ori.

Encouraged

A. D.

1319.

Encouraged by this great success, he pursued his good fortune, and conquered all the coast of Persia, and Arabia, within the gulf; from whence he received a considerable yearly income. Some time after his return to Hormûz, he crossed over to Persia, in order to take the diversion of hunting, accompanied by his brother, Nâzom'oddin; who, in return for the affection he bore him, contrived to murder him. To this end, being then at Rûdjâhr, he pretended to follow a hare towards Meridan; by which means, getting at a distance from the king, he came, with his confederates, to the mouth of the Dozâr; a rivulet opposite to Jerun, or Hormûz, five miles distant: and, embarking there in Tarranka's, passed over to that island; which, being destitute of the principal men, was easily subdued by him; who thereupon assumed the title of king, in the year 745.

Hej. 745.

A. D.

1344.

Nâzo-

mo'ddin

rebels;

As soon as Shâh Kothbo'ddin understood which way his brother was gone, he pursued him full-speed: but, by the time he reached the banks of the Dozâr, the usurper was landed at Hormûz. So that, not being able to proceed any farther for the present, he withdrew to Kolongo, on the continent; from whence he sent expresses into all parts of his dominions, demanding men, and other assistance, to reduce his rebel brother. At the same time, Mâlek Nâzom'oddin sent advice of his usurpation to all the Wazirs, or governors, throughout the kingdom of Hormûz, requiring them to acknowledge, and submit to, him; with promises of great rewards, to such as complied. However, the success did not answer his expectation; for no towns obeyed his summons, excepting some few belonging to Kiriakestân; and these, so soon as summer arrived, sent to tell him, that, unless he sent them forces to defend their date-trees, which are the main support of the inhabitants, against the troops of Kothbo'ddin, who infested them, they should be obliged to submit to him!

NAZOMO'DDIN, taking into consideration the distress of those people, resolved to go over to the continent: but first thought proper to sound the inclinations of the Wazirs, and chief men about his brother; on whom, however, his practices had no effect; excepting one Omar Soyo'ddin, who was Kothbo'ddin's porter, and a colonel in his army. Having gained this man, he passed over into Persia; and marched towards Kolongen. Kothbo'ddin, on this advice, advanced to meet him; and engaged his troops: but, in the heat of action, the traitor, Soyo'ddin, going over to the usurper, with the greater part of his army, he immediately retired towards the crown;

20. usurps

<sup>1</sup> TEXEIR. p. 405. & seqq.

A. D. 1344. Jasles, a maritime town, 40 leagues distant ; and crossed the gulf to Kalagât, in Arabia. He continued a twelve-month at this port, which, by his presence, throve exceedingly ; the ships, bound from India to Hormûz, stopping there. At the year's end, he received advice, that Nâzom'eddin was dead ; and had ordained in his will, that the eldest of his two sons, Shâmba and Shâdi, should immediately repair to Kalagât ; and, kissing Shâh Kothbo'ddin's foot, resign the kingdom to him, as being his due. However, the young prince did not think fit to obey the dying commands of his father.

21 His sons
succeed ;

ON the other hand, Kothbo'ddin seemed to be much concerned at his brother's death ; and performed his obsequies with extraordinary pomp : putting himself, and all his attendants, in mourning. At the same time, he wrote consolatory letters to his nephews ; offering to look upon them as his own sons. But they, little regarding their uncle, or his kind professions, behaved after such a manner, in the government of affairs, that the whole kingdom was offended at their follies and cruelties. Kothbo'ddin, hearing of the disorderly proceedings of his nephews, prepared to invade them : but, in his passage over to Jakin, one of the Arab towns in Persia, there met him a great number of armed Tarrada's, sent by the young princes ; which he engaged, and defeated, destroying abundance of the forces on board. After this victory, he held on his voyage to Kostak ; from which place Amir Ayeb Shamso'ddin came to meet him, with a good number of men from Old Hormûz, to join his forces. From thence sailing to Jerân, or New Hormûz, he landed at Karu, and possessed himself of that post.

submit to Koth-
bo'ddin ;

His nephews, perceiving they were undone, and could neither defend themselves, nor fly, delivered themselves up to their uncle ; who, at the intercession of some persons of note, condescending to allow them wherewithal for their support, gave them the island of Bahrayn to dwell in, with their followers. Shâh Kothbo'ddin's return considerably advanced the affairs of Jerân, or Hormûz ; which had suffered exceedingly under the government of the two brothers. Peace ensued ; justice was administered ; the price of provisions fell, which, till then, had been very high : and they, who had fled, or been banished by the usurpers, were restored to their houses, and estates <sup>m</sup>.

raise new commo-
tions ;

MEAN time, Shâmba and Shâdi, who were of a restless nature, had not been long at Bahrayn before they began to raise men, and gather vessels, in order to invade Hormûz. King Kothbo'ddin, being informed of their design, embarked to oppose them, with the greatest force he could levy. As soon as he arrived at Keys, where Shâdi then was, he landed his men : but, meeting with much opposition, proceeded but slowly. As those in the island were greatly strengthened, and the king's men were incensed, that they held out so long ; some of them, willing to put a speedy end to the enterprize, without orders, provoked Shâdi to an engagement. As that prince had the advantage on his side, he accepted the challenge ; and obtained the victory, with a great slaughter of the Hormuzians. Shâh Kothbo'ddin, on this defeat, retired, with such as had escaped the battle, to his vessels, and hastened back to Hormûz ; where having recruited his forces, he returned to Keys. Shâdi, not thinking himself safe there, went away to Bahrayn, where his brother was ; while the king, who found no resistance after that prince's departure, gave the plunder of the island to his soldiers : and, leaving a good garrison there, returned to Hormûz, with an intent to prepare for an expedition against Bahrayn.

<sup>m</sup> TEXEIR. p. 406, & seqq.

A. D.

1344.

As soon as he was departed, the two brothers gathered all their officers the force they could in that island ; and went over to Keys, cers quit them ; in hopes to recover it : but, when they were half-way, most of their commanders deserted them, in order to join the king. Among the rest, were Shamso'ddin Mahmûd, Kamâlo'ddin Ismael, and Nâfro'ddin Moselek, men of the first rank and quality. These, as they passed by Keys, gave notice to Mir Tagah, the governor, that he might be prepared to receive the two brothers, who were on the way to attack him. When they came up with the island of Brokht, or Queysboma, they called in at Lâst and took on board Sabeko'ddin, who was there in garrison ; lest, having but a small force with him, he should not be able to withstand a sudden attack. Shâmba and Shâdi were not moved, by the desertion of their troops, to desist from their enterprize ; but, being refused admittance at Keys, held on their way to Brokht. Kothbo'ddin had already sent a force of men and ships to Dargân, a town near Lâst, in order to secure that island ; who, on the enemies arrival, engaged them at break of day, and bravely repulsed them both by sea and land, with considerable loss.

are defeated ;

THE two brothers, being returned to Bahrayn, fell at variance ; each charging the other with the late disappointment. fall at variance ; The difference ran so high, that, at length, Shâdi imprisoned Shâmba, and would have put him to death, had it not been for his mother, who reconciled them, and obtained his liberty. But Shâmba, after this, not caring to remain in Bahrayn, went

A. D. 1346. over to Persia, and settled near Shirâz, in a village called Fâl; whence several great men of the kingdom of Hormûz draw their origin. The governor of Shiraz, being informed of the prince's arrival, sent for him, and did him much honour; on account of the friendship which had subsisted between their fathers and predecessors<sup>n</sup>.

MEAN time, summer coming on, Shâh Kothbô'ddîn, king of Hormûz, resolved to pass that season at Nâleştân, a pleasant place in the country of Mogesiân, in Persia, abounding with water and fruits. But, soon after his arrival there, he fell sick and died, in the year 447.

Hej. 447. A. D. 1346. 22 Turân Shâh. TURÂN Shân succeeded his father Kothbô'ddîn; and, proving a good prince, was loved and honoured by his subjects. As soon as he ascended the throne, he sent one Mahmûd Omar, a man of valour and experience, to govern the isle of Keys; for all this Shâdi, who knew his abilities, did not desist from his design of invading that island from Bahrayn. He accordingly landed there, and had several engagements with the governor: but, finding he made no great progress in his enterprise, he tampered with a kinsman of his, who promised to deliver him up on the first opportunity. To bring this plot to bear, Shâdi pretended to come to an accommodation; and, to that end, demanded a conference with Mahmûd Omar; who too readily consenting, they had an interview. Shâdi, while they walked together, amused him with discourse, that he might not suspect his designs; and, when he had insensibly drawn him at a distance from his men, seized him before he was aware, and deprived him of sight (C). After which, he took possession of the island.

Shâdi dus. ON this news, Turân Shâh set out for Keys, and arrived so suddenly, that Shâdi had not time to escape: however, it being winter, he made a shift, in a very dark night, to get off in a Tarrankin, although closely watched at land as well as

<sup>n</sup> TEXEIR. p. 408, & seqq.

(C) This was practised long before and since by the kings of Hormûz, as well as Persia. There were at Hormûz, in Texeira's time, on a hill about a mile from the city, the ruins of certain houses where the kings kept their blinded kindred. The operation was performed with a copper basin, made violent hot; which, passing three or four times before the eyes, took away the sight, without altering them to appearance. Maffey informs us, in his Hist. Ind. l. v. that, when Albuquerque took possession of the island, in 1514, or 15, there were no fewer than thirty lords of the blood royal, who had been blinded by the tyrants, jealous of their authority.

t sea ; and fled to Lâst, in the island of Brokht, or Qucy-shom. The king, informed of it, immediately pursued him ; and, casting anchor at Dargân, near Lâst, those who were with Shâdi abandoned him, and repaired to Turân Shâh. Shâdi, finding himself forsaken, hastened to his Tarrankin, and set sail, with such expedition, that he got clear away before the persons sent to seize him could come up. However, he did not long survive this disgrace : for, soon after his arrival at Bahrayn, he died for mere vexation, leaving a son very young ; on whom king Turân Shâh bestowed his father's possessions.

A. D.
1346.

MEAN time, Shâmba, who had fled to Shirâz, hearing of his brother's death, hastened to Bahrayn ; where, finding the opportunity favourable, he seized on the island, and took a bloody revenge on all those, who, in the late troubles, had sided with Shâdi against him. He put many of them to death, without sparing his infant nephew ; whilst others fled the island for fear of the like treatment. However, Mîr Ajeb, a prime man of Bahrayn, resenting so much tyranny and insolence, with the assistance of his relations, and others who joined him, assaulted Shâmba's house, and killed him. After this, he set at liberty one Ali Mohammed Palavân, whom Shâmba had imprisoned ; thinking, by his assistance, to usurp the sovereignty of the island. Ali not only consented, but, taking with him Sheykh Hâmed Râsbid, another Arab commander, went over to Kâtif, in Arabia, and demanded some forces of the governor Sheykh Majed, under pretence of opposing Mîr Ajeb. The governor, supposing that these two intended to usurp the island of Bahrayn, not only refused to grant what they asked, but secured, and sent them in custody of an officer to Hormûz °.

As soon as Turân Shâh was informed of what had happened at Bahrayn, he set sail for that island, and carried his prisoners along with him. On his arrival there, Mîr Ajeb required of him the sovereignty of the island, in return for the service, which he pretended he had done him, in killing Shâmba. But the king refused his request, and resolved to punish him. Whereof Ajeb being informed, he left Manânia, the principal port-town of Bahrayn, and retired to Thiâr, another on the back of it ; where being found by the king's party, he was brought before him, and had his head struck off. As to the two prisoners, Turân Shâh, finding that they had not served against him, not only gave them their lives, but preferred them. Having settled the affairs of this island, he had a mind to see Kâtif, on the opposite coast, and only separated by a narrow

Troubles
at Bahrayn.

A. D.
1376.

Hej. 779.

A. D.
1377.

23. Mas-fud.

arm of the sea. He went over with his forces, and was well entertained by Sheykh Majed; where having diverted himself for some days, he returned to Bahrayn, and from thence to Jerán, or Hormúz (D). Turán Sháh spent the rest of his life in peace, and died in 779, after a reign of thirty years.

His sons succeeded him in the following manner. Massáid, the eldest, mounted the throne on his father's decease, and enjoyed it peaceably during his life.

24. Sha-habo'ddín.

SHAHABO'DDIN, the second son, succeeded his brother Massud; and although in his time there were some commotions, yet they were neither considerable, nor difficult to suppress.

25. Salgor
Sháh;

SALGOR Sháh, the third son of Turán Sháh, ascended the throne next. In his reign, there started up in Persia Sufi Khálíl (E); who possessed himself of that whole kingdom, to the very shore opposite to Jerán; to which he would fain have passed over, but could not for want of shipping. And it is said, that, for mere vexation, he designed to have levelled mountains to fill up the sea; while Sálgor went about the island and city, singing Persian verses to this purport: my enemy's heart burns, because I am encompassed by the sea. At length Khálíl went away, without taking any thing from him, but what he had on the continent; where the king of Hormúz possessed, even in the time of our author (though not so absolutely as before), seventy leagues along the coast, and twenty-eight within land; wherein are comprehended the Amadizes and Gaules (F), fierce and warlike nations. They enjoyed these lands, paying to the kings of Persia a certain acknowledgement, called Mokararias, that they might not ravage them; as they did sometimes when the tribute was held back. Sálgor had no other remarkable war besides this, but spent his days in peace.

invaded
by Khalíl.

26. Sháb
Weys.

SHAH Weis ascended the throne on the death of Sálgor; and, as no disturbance happened during his reign, Hormúz

(D) Thus fair Texeira has taken from the history written by this prince, which ends here. What he adds cannot be very exact; for he omits Mohammed Sháh, under whom, in 1397, Tímúr conquered Hormúz. See vol. v. p. 297.

(E) This must be Sufi, or Sofi Khálíl Mutulun, general to Bay Sanker Mirza, son of Yakob Beg, a prince of the Ak Koyunlu-dynasty, who succeeded his father, in the year 896 of the Hejrah, and of Christ 1490; so that it could not be long before the time of Sufi Ismael, as Texeira represents it. And the great distance of 118 years, from Turán Sháh's death, shews there is an omission of one or more reigns.

(F) Texeira knows not whether the fiction (or romance) of Amadis de Gaul may not be derived from hence.

throve considerably by the advantage of peace. Shâh Weis A. D. 1508.
dying (G),

SEYFO'DDIN inherited the crown of Hormûz, or Ormûz P. In his time, the Portuguese subdued this island, under the conduct of the renowned Alfonso de Albuquerque. This general sailed from Lisbon in March 1508, in company with Nunno da Cunna; from whom he parted in August, with seven ships and 460 soldiers: directing his course for the coast of Arabia and Persia, pursuant to orders received from the king of Portugal before he set out. He first touched at Kâlayât, or Kâlagât, often mentioned before; and, settling a peace with the governor, proceeded ten leagues farther to Kûriât: where being ill received, he stormed and took the town, after great opposition, though with the loss of only three men. His soldiers plundered the place, and then burned it, with fourteen vessels in the harbour: after which he sailed eight leagues farther to Maskât, a place stronger than the former, and well provided with men; who flocked thither to defend it. But the governor, unwilling to hazard an assault, made peace with him, and sent provisions to his fleet; when on a sudden the cannon of the town began to play on his ships, and obliged him to draw off: for, having in the interim received a supply of 2000 men from Hormûz, the officers refused to stand to the treaty. But Albuquerque, landing his men next morning by day-break, attacked the town so boldly, that as the Portuguese entered at one gate, the Arabs fled out of another.

AFTER having plundered Maskât, he passed on to Sohâr (H); whose governor submitted to pay king Manuel the same tribute which he paid to the king of Hormûz. Orfukam, a town fifteen leagues farther, being deserted by its inhabitants, was plundered; which done, he hoisted sail for Hormûz; whose reduction was the principal object of his voyage.

HE arrived there about the end of September; at what time, the king being but twelve years old, Hormûz was under the government of Khojâ Attâr, a man of parts and courage, who, hearing of Albuquerque's exploits, had laid an embargo on the ships in harbour, and hired troops from the Persians

P TEXEIR. p. 413, & seqq.

(G) In the first place it is written Sharves, which probably stands for Shâh Weis, Veis, or Avis; and in this place Shames; but the English translation of Texeira (which we make use of) is faultily printed, as well as the original.

(H) Written also Soar, and Zoar; but faultily.

A. D.
1508.

and Arabs. So that, when the Portuguese fleet entered the port, there were in the city 30,000 fighting men; and in the harbour 400 vessels, sixty of considerable bulk, with 2500 men on board. Albuquerque, to shew those people the greatness of his resolution, came to an anchor among five of the largest ships; firing his cannon, to strike a terror along the shore, which was soon covered with 8000 men. Finding that no message came from Sayfo'ddin, he sent for the captain of the biggest ship, and told him he had orders to take the king of Hormûz into his protection, and grant him leave to trade in those seas, provided he paid a reasonable tribute: but in case of refusal, he was to make war. It was doubtless no small presumption to offer a king the liberty of his own seas; and impose conditions on him, with that handful of men, and few ships, against such a numerous force.

and attacks

Hormûz.

THE message however, bold as it was, was delivered to the king, and Khojâ Attâr: who, after some delay, to gain time, on being pressed for an answer, sent word, that Hormûz used not to pay, but receive, tribute. Next morning discovered the walls, shore, and vessels, crowded with armed men; while the windows and tops of houses were filled with both sexes, as spectators of what should ensue. Presently, the cannon beginning to play furiously on both sides, the enemy, by favour of the smoke, twice attacked the Portuguese ships, with 130 boats well manned: but many were sunk, and the rest forced by the artillery to retire. By this time, several ships were sunk as well as taken, and thirty set on fire; which cutting their cables, were driven flaming on the Persian coast, where they burned others which lay aground. This struck so great a terror into all the gazing multitude, that they fled the city; and sending to offer Albuquerque whatever had been demanded, he stopped farther proceedings. Thus, with the loss of only ten men, most of the enemy's vessels, full of riches, were destroyed, and 1700 of themselves killed.

The king
submits.

KHOJÂ Attâr would have eluded the agreement; but, on the general's threats, the articles were drawn, and sworn to by both parties. Their substance was, that the king of Hormûz did submit himself to king Manuel, with a tribute of 15,000 Sharbins (1) yearly; and should assign the Portuguese ground to build a fort. The fort was immediately begun (at the point of Jerûn before mentioned), and much advanced in a few days : but the Wazîr, who could not bear it, designed to kill Albuquerque ; and, for that purpose, urged him to give audience to ambassadors, which he pretended came from Persia. Finding his artifice did not succeed, he endeavoured to corrupt the Portuguese with money ; and met with such success, that some of his captains opposed all his designs, gave intelligence of his small force to the enemy (K), and persuaded five sailors to desert : which animated Khojâ Attâr to break the peace.

<sup>1</sup> DE FARIA Port. Asia, vol. i. p. 126, & seqq. MAFFEY, Hist. Ind. l. 2, & 3.

(1) Sharafin, or Xerefin, is about half a crown.

A. D.
1508.

ALBUQUERQUE, burning with revenge, attempted Albuquerque to fire some ships in the arsenal : but, failing, resolved next to besiege the city, battering it for eight days with his cannon. There was a hot dispute at some wells, which supplied the besieged (L), where he was in great danger, his retreat being cut off by the king, and Khojâ Attâr, who came to support their men : but a fortunate ball opened a way for him, by putting the enemy's horse in confusion. retires.

In these actions he found his soldiers but ill disposed to obey him. His captains jealous about the command of the fort, when built, three of them drew up a paper of reasons against the enterprise, and left him at a time when the city must have surrendered for want of water : two others would have done the same, if he had not, by severity, forced them to obey him. However, after failing to the island of Queysbom, and burning the town there, he thought fit to return to the island of Sokâtra, finding he had but a few men left, and winter drawing on. But as soon as that season was passed, he set out again for Hormûz ; though too weak to effect what he intended, yet at least to sound the designs of the king, and his Wazîr Khojâ Attâr. Having in the way taken and plundered Kalayât, in revenge for some injuries lately done the Portuguese, he cast anchor before Hormûz, on the 13th of September, and sent notice to the king and his minister of his arrival. They answered, that they were ready to pay the tribute agreed on, but would not consent to the building a fort. The treaty eluded ;

A. D.
1509.

† DE FARIA, p. 130, & seqq. MAFF. l. 3, 4.

(K) Maffee says it was the building of the fort, which discovered the small number of Portuguese ; whom Attâr imagined to have been at least 2000 ; and that it was the being obliged to serve as labourers in that work, which made the men of quality, and others, to murmur.

(L) These wells were at Turumpûka, or Turumbâka. Maffey writes Turumbata, in the S. W. part of the isle, as hath been already said.

As

A. D. 1509. As to that which Albuquerque had begun, Khoja Attâr had finished it, the better to oppose him. Upon this, he resolved again to besiege the island, and stationed his ships accordingly; but the success was much the same as before. One of his captains, with eight private men, were killed, and he in great danger himself: whereupon he returned to India, and next year succeeded Don Francisco de Almeyda in the dignity of viceroy.

ratified at last;

A. D.
1514.

and a fort built;

ALBUQUERQUE was diverted from the thorough reduction of Hormúz, by other famous conquests, for the three first years of his government: but in 1514, resolving to complete his design, he set out from Goa, on the 20th of February, with a fleet of 27 sail, and 1500 Portuguese, besides 600 Malabars and Kanârans. On the 26th of March, he anchored at Hormúz, and sent to demand of the new king (M), and his Wazîr, Reis Nûro'ddîn, the delivery of the fort he had begun there, with the instrument of submission, made of that kingdom by his predecessor Sayfo'ddîn; who was since dead. Every thing was consented to, because there was no power to resist, and the treaty ratified by the Wazîr. After this, Albuquerque went on with building the fort to his own mind; and, on a scaffold near it, received an ambassador, who came from Shâh Ismaël, king of Persia, to conclude a treaty of peace (N). Before the arrival of the viceroy, Reis Ahmed (O) was sent to Hormúz, with a design to seize it for Ismaël; and, having gotten the intire ascendant over the king, had brought people secretly into the city to kill him, when a favourable opportunity should present. To deliver him from this danger, Albu-

(M) His name was Tor, according to Maffey. Soon after Albuquerque's departure the first time from Hormúz. Atiâr died of age; and Nuro'ddîn, governor of the city, slew Seyfo'ddîn, setting up his brother Tor, and placing his own friends in the chief offices of state; among whom were the three brothers, Modhafer, Ali, and Ahmed. Maf. Hist. Ind. l. 5.

(N) According to Maffey, it was not till after the death of Ahmed, that the ambassador came from Ismael; who, finding Hormúz to be reduced with so small a force, thought it better to lose his tribute from thence, and make a peace, than begin a war with the conqueror.

(O) According to Maffey, he was the Ahmed mentioned in the last note but one, who, by degrees, got the power into his own hands, and, after Tor had yielded up the fort, would hear speak of no other conditions; chusing rather to yield the kingdom to the king of Persia, than him of Portugal, in case it was to be yielded. For this reason, and others which were discovered, Albuquerque had him killed; and then all things were easy.

querque

querque procured an interview with him, though not without much reluctance on the part of the Wazir; who entering foremost in a rude manner, and being known to be armed, as well as some of his followers, was presently slain by the viceroy's command. When the fort was finished, Albuquerque persuaded the king, against his will, that it was for the safety of the city to remove all its cannon thither. And thus was this rich kingdom brought in subjection to the Portuguese <sup>s</sup>.

THE native kings were still allowed to reign from father to son, as they did before, with this difference: that what formerly they held independently of any other power, they afterwards enjoyed by grant of the king of Portugal; and had only the government of their Mohammedan subjects; nor even that without some restriction. They maintained the state of kings, and had considerable customs: but the Portuguese governors converted the greater part of it to their own use; and whereas his Hormúzian majesty could not go out of the island without leave of the governors, they for some time used to grant it, but afterwards wholly debarred him of that liberty <sup>t</sup>. In this condition Hormúz, or Ormúz, continued; the natural kings succeeding one another, under the dominion of the Portuguese, the space of 114 years; till 1622, when it was taken from them by the Persians, assisted by the English, as hath been already related <sup>u</sup>.

<sup>s</sup> DE FARIA, p. 140, & seqq. MAFF. l. 4 & 5. <sup>t</sup> TEX. Hist. Perf. p. 415. <sup>u</sup> See before, the reign of Shâh Ismael Sufi, vol. 5.

B O O K VIII.

The History of the Turkmâns and Uzbeks.

C H A P. I.

History of the Turkmâns.

S E C T. I.

The Origin, Name, Branches, and Settlements, of the Turkmâns.

Oriental Turk-
mâns.

Their origin;

MIRKOND, a famous Persian historian, often cited in our history of the first dynasties of the Turks, in his account of Ogûz Khân, the great ancestor of those people, informs us; that the children of this prince, and part of the tribes descended from them, spread themselves not only over Mâwara'nahr, or the countries beyond the Jihûn, or Amû, which bounds Persia on the north; but also to the south of that river, and along the borders of Khorassân, a province of Irân, or Persia at large: that those people, taking wives out of the women of the country, their children retained in their speech something of the harshness found in that of their parents; and this gave occasion to the inhabitants of Khorassân to call them Turkmâns, or Turk-mâns; that is to say, Like the Turks: for, in the Persian language, Turkmân, and Turk-mannen, have this signification <sup>a</sup> and name; JEMALODDIN, in his history dedicated to Mirza Iskânder, a prince descended from Timûr, or Tamerlan, says, that the Turkmâns formerly dwelt in the country beyond Türkestân: from whence removing in great numbers into Persia, the inhabitants of those parts, who observed that they had a great resemblance of the Turks, their neighbours, and came from the same quarter, called them Turkmâns, in the sense above recited <sup>b</sup>. According to Abu'lghâzi Khân, the Turkmâns are sprung from the antient inhabitants of Türkestân; and dwelt in the sandy grounds with the tribe of Kânkli, till, separating themselves, at length they went to inhabit towns and villages <sup>c</sup>.

<sup>a</sup> MIRKOND in Ogûz Khân, ap. D'Herbel. Bibl. Orient. p. 900, art. Turkmân. <sup>b</sup> D'HERBEL. ubi supr. <sup>c</sup> ABU'L-GHAZI KHAN. Catalog. Hist. of the Turks, &c. p. 32.

WHETHER the Turkmâns quitted their native country by Oriental constraint, or choice, does not distinctly appear : but this is certain, that in the reign of Soltân Sanjar, sixth Soltân of the Seljuk Turks of Irân, a colony of Turkmâns, under the name of Gâz, and Cheſhm Gâz, settled themselves in the countries of Baklân, Kandar, Khotlân, or Katlân, and Khafanian, in the province of Badakhshân, spreading themselves within a little way of the city Bâlkh, to the number of 40,000 families. In return for this liberty, they agreed to pay the Soltân, yearly, 24,000 sheep, by way of tribute : but the officer, who levied this tribute, happening into a dispute with their chiefs about the quality of the sheep which they delivered them, they fell from words to blows ; and in the fray the officer was killed. After this, the Turkmâns ceased paying the tribute for some years ; during which time, the Soltân's kitchen was supplied with the usual number of sheep at the expence of his steward ; who at length complained to the governor of Bâlkh, letting him know, that he could furnish no more provision of that kind till the Turkmâns payed the tribute as formerly.

THIS affair being reported to the king's Divân, or council, the Turkmâns were adjudged to pay 30,000 sheep, instead of 24,000, which they paid before ; and to receive an officer from the court, that there might be no failure of the kind for the future. But the Turkmâns, refusing to admit of any officers over them, excepting those of their own nation, made away with him whom the Soltân had sent them. Hereupon the governor of Bâlkh marched out to chastise their insolence : but the Turkmâns, routing his forces, killed both him and his son. On the news of this defeat, Soltân Sanjar marched in person against these strangers : who, terrified at his approach, sent deputies to implore his clemency ; and offer, besides the usual tribute, to pay two rubles of silver, which make about two marks, for every family. The Soltân was inclined to pardon them, and accept of the satisfaction : but he was dissuaded by the chief officers of his army ; who engaged him in a very unfortunate war : for his troops were entirely defeated, and himself, with all his women, taken prisoners<sup>d</sup> by the Turkmâns ; among whom he remained a prisoner for some years, as hath been already related in the reign of that prince<sup>e</sup>.

THE Turkmâns, after this, passed into Persia, and settled in several provinces of it, by favour of the princes both of the Seljuk and Karazmian dynasties ; who employed them in their service. By this means, at length, they migrated westward into the countries of Azerbejân, and Armenia ; where

<sup>d</sup> D'HERBEL. ubi ſupr.

<sup>e</sup> See before, vol. 4. p. 152.

Oriental Turk-
mâns.

their power increasing, by the accession of numbers, who retired into those parts, either through choice, or to avoid the arms, first, of the Karazmians, and then of the Mogols, under Jenghiz Khân, they at length founded two monarchies; of which we shall treat hereafter. It has been already observed, that both the Sejûk and Othmân Soltâns have been considered as of the race of Turkmâns, by the Soltâns of other Turkish dynasties: but whether this be fact or not, it seems a very difficult matter to determine.

and Ka-
razm.

AT the same time that several tribes, or bodies, of Turkmâns migrated in the manner now mentioned, another part of them staid behind, and settled about the banks of the river Amû, and the shore of the Caspian sea; where they still possess a great number of towns and villages in the country of Astarakâd and Karazm, which they inhabited long before the irruption of the Tatars. From these two different establishments of the Turkmâns, they may be divided into eastern and western. The former of these have been hitherto little known to the European historians and geographers; although they are much more numerous at present than the western Turkmâns: for those authors, who, before D'Herbelot, had given extracts from the oriental writers, take little notice of them; and others relate no more than what occurs in the Byzantine, and such western historians, who lived at too great a distance to be acquainted with their affairs.

Oriental Turk-
mâns;

ABULGHAZI, Khân of Karazm, who was a great enemy to the Turkmâns, settled in that country of which he was sovereign, mentions them in his history on several occasions; sometimes, according to the parts which they inhabited, as when he speaks of the Turkmâns of Mankisblâk, Abu'lkhân, and Dehistan<sup>f</sup>; which last territory belongs to Persia: but oftener on account of their different tribes, or branches: of which the chief are, 1. Adâkli Khisser-ili; these dwell on both sides of the Amû, from the province of Pishga to that of Karakizet<sup>g</sup>. 2. Ali-ili; inhabiting from the province of Karakizet to the mountain of Abu'lkhân. 3. Ti-u-âzi; who possess the rest of the banks of the Amû, from Abu'lkhân to the sea: these three tribes are surnamed Utzil<sup>h</sup>. Besides them, we meet with the following; viz. Taka, Sarik, Tamut, Irsari, Khorassân-saluri<sup>i</sup> (these five formerly made but one tribe); Itzki-saluri, Hassan, Ikdur, Dsauduz, Arabaz, Koklân, Adâkli<sup>k</sup>, Karâmit<sup>l</sup>, and some others less considerable<sup>m</sup>. A p. 236. 239.

<sup>f</sup> Genealog. Hist. p. 235.

<sup>g</sup> Ibid. p. 256.

<sup>h</sup> Ibid.

<sup>i</sup> Ibid. p. 238.

<sup>k</sup> Ibid.

<sup>l</sup> P. 256.

<sup>m</sup> P. 238.

curious English traveller in this country, in the 16th century, remarks, that all the country from the Caspian sea to Urghenj, the capital of Karazm, is called the land of Turkmân <sup>n</sup>.

*Oriental
Turk-
mâns.*

THE oriental Turkmâns are tall and robust, with square flat faces, like the occidental; only they are swarthier, and have a greater resemblance of the Tatars. In summer, they wear long gowns of callico, or thick cloth; and in winter, the like gowns of sheep-skin. Cattle and husbandry afford them subsistence, according to the different parts they possess. In winter, they dwell in towns and villages about the river Amû, and towards the shores of the Caspian sea: in summer, they encamp where they can find the best pasturage, and good water (A). They are, as to belief, all Mohammedans. Such as are settled in the country of Astarabâd generally follow the Persian sect: but the tribes, who dwell in Karazm, conform with the UzbekTatars, in sentiments of religion; although neither one nor the other give themselves much trouble about it.

way of living;

THESE Turkmâns are extremely turbulent; and submit with great reluctance to the Tatar yoke in Karazm. They are very brave; and, at least, as good horsemen as their lords the Uzbeks: by whom being treated as conquered subjects, they are obliged to pay them tribute; and suffer several other impositions from those rigid masters. It is on this account chiefly, that they bear them so great animosity: but the Turkmâns, who dwell under the dominion of the Persians, are much better treated. Both together may amount to about one hundred thousand families <sup>o</sup>.

their character;

WHEN the Uzbeks entered Karazm, under Ilbars Khân; subject to that prince, after driving out the Persians, was joyfully received by the Sârts, or old inhabitants, and proclaimed Khân in 1505 <sup>p</sup>: but they met with great opposition from the Turkmâns. However; under Sofian Soltân, third Uzbek Khân, they submitted to a considerable tribute; part in sheep, and part in merchandize <sup>q</sup>. Yet, not brooking this subjection, they often refused to discharge that obligation, till they were compelled by force. They likewise took part in the disputes,

the

<sup>n</sup> JENKINSON. Voy. to Boghar, in Purch. vol. iii. p. 237.
<sup>o</sup> BENTINK, in Genealog. Hist. p. 397. 426, & seq. <sup>p</sup> Ibid. p. 220. <sup>q</sup> Ibid. p. 229, & seq.

(A) Jenkinson says, that those of the land of Turkmân, above-mentioned, dwell in tents, roving in great companies, with their camels, horses, and sheep; which last are large, and have tails weighing sixty or eighty pounds.

which,

Oriental Turk-
mâns.

Uzbeks of Karazm.

which, from time to time, arose among the Uzbek princes ; who sometimes carried their point by means of their assistance. This naturally increased the stubborn humour of the Turkmâns, and made the Uzbeks jealous : inasmuch that, although they had been very instrumental in setting Abu'lghâzi Soltân on the throne of Karazm, and were the first who proclaimed him Khân, in the year 1644 ; yet, in remembrance of the troubles they had occasioned in the reigns of his predecessors, he cut off 2000 of them at one time by treachery. And, being resolved to reduce them so low, that they should not be able to raise disturbances for the future, he made several expeditions against them ; in which they suffered severely <sup>r</sup>. We find, by the latest accounts of travellers, that the Turkmâns still maintain a footing in the above-mentioned countries, and produce men eminent for their valour, and experience in war ; of which the late Nadîr Shâh, or Tamash Kâli Khân, the conqueror of Persia and India, may be alleged as an instance. This is all that we think necessary to say of the oriental Turkmâns ; who, having always been subject to the dominion of other princes, never erected any sovereignty of their own.

Occidental
Turk-
mâns ;

thir various fortune ;

THE occidental Turkmâns, who for a long time possessed the western provinces of Persia, with the provinces westward as far as the Euphrates, are supposed, by some authors, to have separated from their brethren of the east, when they first departed out of Turkestan ; and, marching westward through the countries situated to the north of the Caspian sea, thence passed southward into Armenia, and the other provinces, which they afterwards subdued : but it seems more probable, that they migrated thither in the manner as hath been before suggested (B). These Turkmâns became very potent, under two dynasties, or successions, of their princes ; and were, for some time, masters of a great part of Irân, or Persia at large (at least, of those provinces which the Selâk Soltans of Irâk had under their dominion) ; after they had driven out the descendants of Timûr, with all the Tatars, by the valour and conduct of Usûn Hassan, founder of the second dynasty. But since the race of Haydr, or the Shâhs, have possessed themselves of the Persian empire, and the Othmân Turks become

<sup>r</sup> Ibid. p. 349, & seqq.

(B) Al Jannâbi says, that these western Turkmâns left Turkestan, their native country, in the time of Argûn Khân. Pocock. Suppl. ad Hist. Compend. Dynast.

p. 58. Argûn was 4th Khân of the Moguls, successors of Hûiakû, in Persia ; he began his reign in 682 or 3 of the Hejrah, and died in 690, or A. D. 1291.

masters

masters of all the provinces west of the Tigris, the occidental Turkmâns have been reduced to a very low state. Nevertheless they still enjoy the finest plains along the banks of the Euphrates: but, from being lords, as they were before, they are now fallen to be subjects of the Turks; who, for all their endeavours, have not been able absolutely to subdue their restless disposition, and reduce them every-where to a thorough dependence.

THEIR manner of living is much the same now that it was when they first came to settle in these parts; dwelling under tents made of thick felt (C), without any fixed habitations. In make and features they resemble the oriental Turkmâns; but their women are very fair, and of a becoming size. They wear in winter long gowns of sheep-skins, with peaked bonnets of the same; and, in summer, vests of callico, shaped like the Kaftâns of the Turks. They are good horsemen, and very brave. They profess Mohammedism: but perform the duties of it no better than their brethren in the east. They have their own chiefs, or heads of tribes; who govern them according to their laws (D). However, they are obliged to pay tribute to the Othmân Soltân, and to furnish a certain number of horsemen, whenever the Porte requires it. In winter, they come in quest of pasture along the banks of the Euphrates; and, in summer, encamp in the valleys, inclosed within the mountains of Armenia, towards the springs of that river and the Tigris.

THESE Turkmâns are naturally great robbers; but the Turkish Pashâs, who command in those parts, take all the care possible to bridle them: because they are interested in securing the roads, as the frequent passage of the Karawâns makes a considerable article in their revenue.

THE occidental Turkmâns are able to arm about 40,000 and men. They are continually fighting with the Kurds, or Kyurds, who are their neighbours to the east; and with the Arabs, who border on them to the south: because these two nations often come and break the horns of their cattle, and carry away their wives and daughters<sup>t</sup>. They sometimes march two or three hundred families together, to secure them-

<sup>t</sup> BENTINK ubi supr. p. 424.

(C) These tents are made in a round form, like towers. Le Febvre, Theatre de la Turquie, p. 362.

(D) They are governed by an Aga, or lord, of their own nation, independent of the Pashâ; who has nothing to do with the government of the Turkmâns. Le Febvre, ubi supr.

Occidental selves against the Arabs; attended with such numerous droves of camels, goats, and sheep, that the land appears covered with them for the space of two leagues: so that they pass for the richest shepherds in the Othmân empire. They have some fire-arms among them; although they, for the general, make use only of the bow.

very industrious; BOTH men and women are never idle; but always doing something. Even on the road, they employ themselves either in spinning, or grinding their grain, with little hand-mills, placed on the back of their camels: which carry a bag also on each side; one full of what is to be ground, and the other to receive it when ground. Their language is the Turkish, a little corrupted, and different from the vulgar tongue. They likewise approach nearer the Turks in dress and religion, than any other nation inhabiting the Othmân empire <sup>u</sup>.

first settlements; HAVING premised thus much concerning the manners and living of the Turkmâns, we shall proceed to give an account of the two dynasties founded by them in the west of Asia, which went under the denomination of Kara Koyunlû, or the Black Sheep, and Ak Koyunlû, or the White Sheep (E); so named from the figures of those animals being painted, or woven, in their ensigns or colours.

in the west. KONDAMIR observes, that, as these Turkmâns spread much in Anatolia, and dwelt there, their name is still given to the country about Trebizond; which is called by the Turks Kara Koyunlu-ili; that is, the Country of the Black Sheep. In like manner, the Lesser Armenia retains the name of Ak Koyunlu-ili, or the Country of the White Sheep <sup>w</sup>. But this seems to be a mistake, for the Greater Armenia, or some neighbouring country to the east of the Euphrates; and, according to Al Jannâbi, the Ak Koyunli kings began their dynasty in Diyârbekr; which is part of Mesopotamia, adjoining to the Greater Armenia. The same author says, that the Kara Koyunli princes erected their dominion about Arzenjân, and Siwâs, in Anatolia <sup>x</sup>.

<sup>u</sup> LE FEBURE Theatre de Turquie, p. 362. <sup>w</sup> D'HERB. Bibl. Orient. p. 253. art. Cara Coin, & p. 900. art. Turkman.
<sup>x</sup> Pocock. Suppl. ad Hist. Dynast. p. 58.

(E) The modern Greeks call those two races Mauroprobatadæ and Asproprobatadæ, which signify the same things as Kara Koyunlu and Ak Koyunlu; or as others terminate them in li, instead of lu. Some write Koinlu for Koyunlu: but the latter seems the truer pronunciation.

S E C T. II.

The Turkmân Dynasty of the Kara Koyunlû, or Black Sheep.

THIS first dynasty of the Turkmâns does not properly take its rise from the dominion, which their princes exercised over their own nation; although they seem to have had a sort of independent authority in Armenia, and the other parts where they were settled; in the life-time of Kara Mohammed, father of Kara Yusef; but from the time that this latter, having made himself master of Azerbejân, about the year 809 of the Hejrah, and of Christ 1406, began a new succession of princes in that country; whose title, however, was not completely established till 813, by the death of Soltân Ahmed Jalayr; which put an end to the dynasty of the Ilkhâniâns, and brought all their dominions under the power of the Turkmâns. This happened on the following occasion.

A. D.
1410.Dynasty of
Kara Koyunlu;

AHMED Jalayr Ebn Avis, or Weis, Ilkhâni (F), 4th Soltân of the Ilkhâniâns, who reigned in Irâk-Arabi, and Azerbejân; having, in the year 783, or the following, defeated and put to death his elder brother Husséyn, who was in possession of those countries, Adel Aga, general of Husséyn's army, set up Bâyezid, the youngest brother, who, for fear, had fled to him, and defeated Ahmed. Not content with this victory, he pursued that prince; who had retired to Marualrûdh, in Khorassân: but when he was advanced near that city, the principal officers of the army mutinied against him, in favour of Ahmed; so that he was obliged to retire, with his new Soltân, to Soltâniya, in Persian Irâk. On this advice, Ahmed made haste to seize on Tabriz, or Tauris; which was abandoned: but he was scarce arrived, when, being informed that Shaykh Ali and Pir Ali were advancing to besiege him, he went out to meet them; and had certainly gained the victory, if, as the their rise;

Hej. 783.

A. D.
1381.

(F) Soltân Avis, or Weis, called also Shaykh Weis, was son of the Amir Shaykh Hassan Ilkhâni, surnamed, in Turkish, Buzruk, or the Great; who descended from Abu Saïd, last emperor of the Moguls in Persia. For, after his death, several Tatar princes divided his dominions among them. Of these Shaykh Hassan Ilkhâni, the father of Shaykh Weis, was one. Abuseid gave him the government of Anatolia; and after his death, which was in Hejrah 736, A. D. 1335, he conquered several provinces. The title of Ilkhâni denotes his being descended from Hulâkû, founder of the Mogul dynasty in Persia; who was surnamed Ilkhân.

A. D. 1381. two armies came in sight, Omar Kipchaki, who was in the Soltân's army, had not gone over with his men to Sheykh Ali.

AHMED, being weakened by this piece of treachery, made what haste he could to Nakshivân, there to join Kara Mohammed, or Mehemed, the Turkmân; who, putting himself at the head of 5000 horse, marched along with the Soltân against the two princes, whom they intirely defeated, and slew. Ahmed's affairs being by this means re-established, he returned in triumph to Tauris; and, to reward Kara Mehemed for so signal a piece of service, not only made him general of all his forces; but also gave him his daughter in marriage<sup>y</sup>.

FOUR years after, Timûr, or Tamerlan, having, after the conquest of the rest of Persia, taken Soltaniya, Tauris, Nakshivân, and the rest of Azerbeijân, from Soltân Ahmed, with little or no opposition, he, in 789, marched from Nakshivân

A. D. 1385. against the Turkmâns; who, he was informed, were continually molesting the Mohammedans, and attacking the Karawâns. In his way he plundered the castle of Bâyezîd, called

A. D. 1387. before Aydîn, with the country about Avenik, or Vân, where Mefer, son of Kara Mehemed, resided; and, having taken Arzerûm, he sent in pursuit of Kara Mehemed himself; who having retired to the top of an inaccessible mountain, the troops were forced to return without success<sup>z</sup>.

How long Kara Mehemed lived after this, does not appear from the authors in view. We find indeed that, in 795, Timûr, being on his way to besiege Bâghdâd, met Mehemed, prince of the Turkmâns, near Sherezûr, in Kurdestân,

A. D. 1393. whom he attacked, at the head of 100 men, and routed. Whether this was Kara Mehemed, or another chief of the

Turkmâns in those parts, we are not positive; but this is certain, that, after his death, his son Kara Yusef, or Iffuf, succeeded to the command, not only of the Turkmân militia, who were in the Soltân's service, but also to that of all his troops, in the same extent that his father had enjoyed it<sup>a</sup>. Mean time, Soltân Ahmed, finding himself too weak to resist such a power as was coming against him, as soon as Timûr arrived before Bâghdâd, fled to Hilleh, a city on the Euphrates, with Kara Yusef; and, after some skirmishes, wherein he behaved with great bravery, escaped from a party of Tatars, sent in pursuit of him. Timûr, having thus become master of Bâghdâd, without opposition, staid there two months, and then departed, to reduce Takrît, a strong fort-refs, and the rest of Irâk Arabi : which having done, he left a governor in Bâghdâd, and marched towards Diyârbekr <sup>b</sup>. A. D. 1393.

<sup>y</sup> D'HERB. p. 129, art. Avis Ahmed; and p. 253, art. Cara Coin, and Cara Coin u.

<sup>z</sup> SHARIFO'DDIN. Hist. Timur Beg, l. ii. c. 49, p. 256, and 278.

<sup>a</sup> D'HERB. p. 254. art. Cara Josef.

KARA YUSEF had retired on this side, to defend his possessions in those quarters ; but, on Timûr's approach, in 796, to besiege the castle of Alenjîk, he fled with his Turk-mîns ; whom the Tatars were ordered to pursue to the utmost. The same year, that conqueror took Avenîk, or Vân, after a most obstinate defence, made by Messer, brother of Kara Yusef ; who was sent prisoner to Samarkand, and Atîlmîsh made governor. But some time after, while Timûr was in Tatary, Kara Yusef attacked Atîlmîsh ; and, having defeated and taken him, by way of requital, sent him in chains to Bârhok, Soltân of Egypt <sup>c</sup>. routs Atîlmîsh. A. D. 1394.

It is not certain whither Soltân Ahmed was retired after his flight from Bâghdâd. Ebn Arabshâh says, he went to Ahmed Egypt, and put himself under the protection of Soltân Bârhok : but that does not appear from Sharîf Addîn's history of Timûr ; who, it is to be presumed, would in such case have made it an article of complaint against that Soltân. However it be, we find, that Ahmed at length recovered Bâghdâd : for, in 801, Mîrân Shâh, Timûr's third son, who was governor of Azerbejân, marched to besiege him in that capital : though he was obliged to return, by an insurrection at Tauris in his absence. But, next year, the Mîrza Rîstem, son of Omar Sheykh, Timûr's second son, set out from Shîrâz, by his grandfather's order, toward Irâk Arabi, with a design to reduce the country once more to his obedience. On advice of Rûstem's being arrived at Mendeli, in Kurestân (*), Soltân Ahmed shut the gates of Bâghdâd, intending to sustain a siege. Just at this juncture a conspiracy was formed against him by Sherwân, Timûr's governor of Kurestân ; who, having revolted, fled to Bâghdâd ; and, by his money, bribed Ahmed's officers to his interest : but the Soltân, coming to discover this plot, by the account of money paid, which Sherwân's secretary had accidentally dropped, put that traitor to death, with 2000 of his own corrupted officers <sup>d</sup>. recovery Bâghdâd ; Hej. 801. A. D. 1399.

THIS done, not thinking himself safe, he fled by night into the country of Kara Yusef, and with him returned to Bâghdâd. Yet, soon after, hearing that Timûr was on his march to Sîwâs, and fearing, if that conqueror should once more enter Anatolia and Syria, the passages would be blocked up, retires to Turkey ;

<sup>b</sup> Hist. Timur, l. iii. c. 30, 31, 33, 35. p. 431, 439, 447, 450.

<sup>c</sup> Ibid. c. 43. p. 468, and l. v. c. 17. p. 158.

<sup>d</sup> Ibid. l. v. c. 1. p. 108, & c. 7. p. 131.

(*) Kurestân seems to be put instead of Kuzestan, or Khuzestân.

A. D. 1399. whilst he should be obliged to fly, they departed for Anatolia; and, at Halep, defeated Temürtâsh, the governor, who advanced to oppose the Soltân's passage: but, on the way to Siwâs, being informed that a party of Timûr's army was advancing against them, they turned out of the road. However, the Tatars overtook their baggage, and brought off the Soltâna Dilshâde, eldest sister of Kara Yusef, with his wife and daughter: but Kara Yusef himself and the Soltân, pursuing their route, escaped to the court of Ilderîm Bâyezîd, the Othmân Soltân.

Hej. 803. A. D. 1400. returns again; TIMUR, after the taking of Siwâs, instead of proceeding farther against Bâyezîd, turned towards Syria; which having subdued, he marched through Mesopotamia, subduing all the places as he went; and, in 804, encamped before Bâghdâd. A. D. 1401. This city was then governed by Farraj (or Farruj), who commanded in the absence of Ahmed, with orders not to shut the gates against Timûr: but Farraj making opposition, the city was taken by assault, after a very strenuous resistance, and almost all the inhabitants (G) put to the sword. Timûr, not content with this slaughter, ordered all the buildings, except mosks, colleges, and hospitals, to be destroyed.

fies to Hellah. HAVING taken this severe revenge on the once capital of the world, he marches back to Anatolia, in order to attack Bâyezîd; who, by the instigation of Soltân Ahmed and Kara Yusef, had brought an army into the field; and, in revenge for the ruin of Siwâs, resolved to besiege Arzenjân, governed by prince Tubârtan; to whom Timûr had given it. As soon as Ahmed was informed, that Timûr was advancing towards Anatolia, he left the Othmân camp at Kaysariya, and returned to Bâghdâd, with a design to rebuild it. But, before he could make any great progress, Mirza Abubekr, son of Omar Shейkh, arrived there one evening, when least expected. The Soltân was so surprised and pressed on this occasion, that he fled in his shirt; and, crossing the Tigris by boat, with his son Taber, got to Hilleh, and thence lower down the Euphrates; where he staid all winter, while the Tatars remained in the country, and then returned.

Kara Yusef MEAN time, Kara Yusef continued in Anatolia, invading the provinces, and robbing the Karawâns under the protection of Bâyezîd; which made Timûr resolve to invade the Othmân dominions. Bâyezîd, on this advice, sent ambassa-

<sup>e</sup> Hist. Timur, c. 15. p. 154.

and ARABSHAH Hist. Timur, l. vi. par. 3.

c. 34. p. 219. and c. 38. p. 226.

<sup>f</sup> Ibid. c. 32. p. 211.

<sup>g</sup> Ibid. l. 5.

(G) Arabshah says, to the number of 90,000.

dors with a letter, in very submissive terms, to Timûr; who, in answer, required, that Kara Yusef, the greatest robber and villain upon earth, as he called him, should either be put to death by the Soltân, sent in chains to Timûr, or expelled out of the Othmân dominions. Instead of complying, either on this or a second embassy, Bâyezîd sent a haughty answer; which determined Timûr to attack him, as we have before related in the reign of that Soltân: who, being defeated and taken, was reproached by Timûr for hazarding a war, rather than deliver up the Turkmân<sup>h</sup>.

A. D.

1401.

WHEN Timûr was about Cæsaria, in his way to fight Bâyezîd, Kara Yusef, who was then at Prusa, or Bûrsa, fled to Hilleh, in Arabian Irâk, and thence to the deserts; where he assembled all the Turkmân hords at Payan Hît. At the same time, Soltân Ahmed retired from Bâghdâd, to his son Soltân Tâher; who, excited by some of his father's Amîrs, crossed the Tigris, and revolted. Upon this, Ahmed sending for Kara Yusef to join him, they both passed the river, and defeated the troops of Tâher; who was drowned in his flight. But afterwards, Soltân Ahmed growing jealous of Kara Yusef, this last went to Hilleh; where gathering his troops, he marched back to Bâghdâd, and took it. Soltân Ahmed in this distress hid himself in the city till night came, and then escaped to Takrît; from whence he retired to Syria, leaving Kara Yusef in possession of the country.

takes

Baghdâd;

NEXT year, Timûr, being at Kârs in Armenia, sent his grandson, the Mirza Abubekr, to rebuild Bâghdâd, with orders to pursue and ruin Kara Yusef, who had made himself master of Irâk Arabi (H). Abubekr, having reached Bâghdâd, marched to Hilleh; where, being joined by Mirza Rustem, he passed the Euphrates, and met Kara Yusef over-against the town of Sîb, on the Nahr al Ganam, below that city. And although they had then with them but 3000 men, yet they attacked the Turkmân prince, who was intrenched with a flies to

Egypt;

Hej. 805.

A. D.

1402.

<sup>h</sup> Hist. Timur, c. 39. p. 230. and c. 43. p. 242. ARAB-SHAH, l. vi. p. 4.

(H) Mirkond, father of Kondamir, according to Texeira, relates, that Timûr had bestowed Bâghdâd on Soltân Ahmed; but that, while Timûr was gone into Rûmestân, or Anatolia, against Bâyezîd, Kara Yusef took it from Ahmed: that Timûr, at his return, sent Abubekr, his grandson, who recovered it from the Turkmân, and restored it to the Soltân. Texeir. Hist. Pers. ch. 45. But this is contrary both to Sbarîfo'ddin's History of Timûr, and that of Kbondamir; of which D'Herbelot has given an extract.

A. D. 1402. numerous army, and defeated him, killing his brother Yar Ali. Kara Yusef himself, with some of his domestics, fled into Syria: but his subjects, consisting of between 10 and 15,000 families, were pillaged, and his oxen, sheep, and camels, carried away. The soldiers of Mirza Rûstem brought in chains to their lord the wife of Kara Yusef, mother of Eskânder and Espendeh, attended by the ladies of her court, and her relations. After this, Mirza Abûbekr ordered Bâgh-dâd to be rebuilt<sup>i</sup>.

is detained there, Hej. 807. A. D. 1404. IT may be presumed, that on this defeat Kara Yusef fled to Egypt, as Soltân Ahmed had done the year before. For we meet with no farther mention of their affairs in the history of Timûr till the year 807, when an ambassador arrived at Samarkand from Mâlek al nâsr Farruj, Soltân of Egypt, to that conqueror, who was preparing for his expedition to China, with a letter concerning those two fugitive princes. Timûr sent back the ambassador with an answer<sup>k</sup>, for the purport of which, not mentioned in Sharîfo'ddîn's history of that monarch, we must have recourse to other authors.

with Soltân Ahmed. ACCORDING to Kondamîr, Timûr being informed that Soltân Ahmed and Kara Yusef were fled into Egypt, he wrote to Farruj to send him the first under a strong guard, and keep the latter prisoner. Farruj, who was willing to preserve the laws of hospitality, and, at the same time, in some measure satisfy Timûr, set guards over them: but, as they were not deprived of the liberty of conversing together, they made an agreement to attach themselves firmly to the Egyptian Soltân; and never make war on, but mutually assist, each other, as soon as they should recover their liberty. This however did not happen till the death of Timûr, in the year 807, before-mentioned (I), soon after the ambassador of Farruj had left his court.

Both released. ON the news of this death Farruj caressed his prisoners exceedingly, and gave them their release. But Kara Yusef was no sooner out of Egypt, than, putting himself at the head of his Turkmâns, he subdued great part of Arabian Irâk, and Jazîreh, or Mesopotamia, for Soltân Ahmed; who paying no regard to the complaints of the king of Egypt, this latter intirely withdrew his protection from him. The Ilkhâniân

<sup>i</sup> Hist. Timur, l. v. c. 51. p. 262. l. vi. c. 3. p. 302, 304, & c. 11. p. 325.

<sup>k</sup> Ibid. p. 25, 26.

(I) He died at Otrâr, or Fârâb, on the river Sikân, in his way to China, the 10th of Shâ- prince, seeing himself abandoned by so powerful an ally, had recourse to stratagem; and, getting into Bâghdâd, with some of his followers disguised like beggars, raised such a sedition against the governor deputed by Abûbekr Mîrza, to whom Timûr had given it, that the inhabitants drove him out, and proclaimed Ahmed Soltân.

A. D.

1404.

TOWARDS the end of the year 808, while Abûbekr Mîrza Kara was employed in the siege of Isfahân, the Amîr Ibrâhîm (K), Yusef's marching out of Shîrwân, seized Tauris: but on Soltân Ahmed's approach he returned home. However, he did not let Ahmed long enjoy his diversions there: for, next year, after he had taken Isfahân, he obliged the Soltân to yield him Tauris, and make a precipitate retreat to Bâghdâd. Mean time Kara Yusef, taking advantage of these divisions, fell with his fresh and warlike troops on the province of Azerbejân; and, in two or three years, made himself intire master of it<sup>1</sup>.

Hej. 808.

A. D.

1405.

IT is from this expedition (which he undertook about the year 809), that the beginning of his reign seems to be dated; at least from his conquest of Tauris, the capital of Azerbejân, which he took, after having defeated and slain in battle the Mîrza Abûbekr, son of Mirzân Shâh, near the city of Nakhshivân, and afterwards Mirân Shâh himself, in the year 810.

begins to reign;

A. D.

1406.

SOLTÂN Ahmed, unable to see this conquest made of his patrimony without reluctance, resolved to come to a rupture with the Turkmân; and, taking the opportunity, while he was at war against Kara Othmân in Armenia Major (L), came and surprised Tauris; which he entered, without any opposition, in 813. As soon as Kara Yusef heard of this loss, he marched with a potent army against the Soltân; who went to meet him with all his forces, two leagues from that city:

defeats

Soltân

Ahmed;

Hej. 812.

A. D.

1409.

<sup>1</sup> D'HERB. p. 149. art. Avis Ahmed, and p. 254. art. Cara Josef.

(K) Doubtless the same whom Texeira, from Mirkond, calls Sheykh Ebrahim, king of Shirwân.

(L) It is so in the article of Cara Josef; but in that of Avis Ahmed ben Avis he is said to have been in Gurjestân, or Georgia. This may be reconciled from Texeira, who says, he marched against Kara Ozmân

Bayânduri, then possessed of Diyârbekr; who, on his approach, fled; and that afterwards, in 815, he entered Gurjestân, slew Constantine its king; then, returning by Shirwân, brought away its king Sheykh Ebrâhîm. This is said to be done after the death of Soltân Ahmed.

where

A. D. 1419. where a bloody battle was fought; in which Ahmed was defeated, and so hotly pressed, that he had scarce time to save himself in a garden, where he lay concealed for some time: but, being at length discovered, he was carried to his conqueror; who reproached him with his treachery, yet took not away his life. However, he disposed of his dominions, and laid him under an injunction not to attempt any thing against his authority. But, soon after, the principal lords of Irâk, who were exasperated against the Soltân, advised Kara Yusef to dispatch him; under pretence, that, being naturally of a restless temper, he would not continue long without drawing on them a new war, which would complete their ruin (M). The Turkmân, following their counsel, ordered both him and his children to be put to death the same year. Thus fell the family of the Ilkhânians, and that of the Black Sheep took its place<sup>m</sup>.

puts him
to death;

dies himself.

Hej. 822. AFTER the death of Soltân Ahmed, Kara Yusef rose to a great pitch of power: for he possessed the provinces of Irâk Arabi, Aljazîreh or Mesopotamia, and Azerbejân, a great part of Gurjestân (or Georgia), and Armenia. As he went on extending his dominions, he had begun to threaten Syria (N) and Anatolia with an invasion, when Mirza Shâh Rukh, fourth son and successor of Timûr, after he had pacified the most eastern provinces of his empire, resolved, in the year 822, to revenge on him the death of his brother Mirân Shâh, which he had designed ever since that disaster. With this intent he entered Azerbejân with a formidable army; where Kara Yusef, with a like force of veteran troops, marched to meet him. In short, they were at the eve of one of the most bloody battles that ever was fought in Asia, when, luckily to Shâh Rukh, Kara Yusef died in his camp at Aw-jân (O), near Tauris.

His reign; THE Turkmâns being thus left without a commander (for none of either the children or relations of Kara Yusef were in the camp) they soon dispersed. Part of the troops rifled the tents of their prince. Some soldiers were so insolent as to cut off his ears, for sake of the pendants; and all in general

<sup>m</sup> D'HERB. p. 149. art. Avis Ahmed; and p. 254. art. Cara Josef.

(M) Arabshah says, he was accused of governing in a very tyrannical and cruel manner.

(N) According to Mirkond, in Texeira, he was marched as far as Antâb, in Syria, when the news of Shâh Rukh's invasion made him return.

(O) Herbert writes Ojone.

abandoned his corps, which continued a long time unburied ; till some of his friends had it carried to Arjis (P), and there interred it. The death of this prince happened in the year 823, and fourth of his reign.

HE had six sons. Pîr Buda Khân, who died before his father : Amîr Iskânder, who succeeded him : Mîrza Jehân Shâh, who succeeded Iskânder : Shâh Mohammed, who had the government of Persia (Q) : Amîr Abfal, who died also before his father ; and Abu Saïd, who was killed by his brother Iskânder <sup>n</sup>.

AMIR ISKANDER, or Mîr Iskânder (that is Alexander) second son of Kara Yusef, succeeded his father, in the year 824 ; and continued the war against Mîrza Shâh Rukh, by whom he was overthrown in Diyârbekr : after which he retired towards the Euphrates, while the victor marched back to Tauris. Yet he was obliged to withdraw into Khorassân with his army, not being able to gain that city, the inhabitants refusing to admit him, both for love and fear of Iskânder, who on Shâh Rukh's departure returned thither. In 828, he deposed and put to death Amîr Shâmseddîn, king of Kalât (or Aklât), in Armenia ; and, in 830, did the like by Soltân Ahmed Kûrdî, governor of the province of Kûrdestân.

Two years after, 832, he took Soltânîyah, in Persia by Shâh Irâk : of which Mîrza Shâh Rukh being informed, marched again into Azerbejdân ; and, at Salmâs (R), was met by Iskânder, and his brother Jehân Shâh ; where they came to a battle ; in which Iskânder being routed fled into Rûmestân (or Anatolia). Yet could not Shâh Rukh even this time make himself master of Tauris. However, having, upon his return to Khorassân, recruited his army, he marched back to the city of Rey, in Irâk, and took it. There Jehân Shâh, Iskânder's brother, was reconciled to Shâh Rukh, who made him a present of the city of Tauris, though not in his possession.

<sup>n</sup> D'HERB. p. 254. art. Cara Josef. TEXEIRA, c. 45. p. 324.

(P) A city in Armenia, on the north side of the lake of Wân, near Kellat, or Akblat.

(Q) He held it twenty-three years, till 833 of the Hejrah, of Christ 1431, when he was killed by Abmed Hamadâni. D'Herbelot says, he was the second prince of the Kara Koyunlû race : that he succeeded his father, and reigned in Persia till slain, as above. See Bibl. orient. art. Mohammed Schach ben Kara Josef, p. 614.

(R) A city about 70 miles from Tauris, on the Shâhi Dariâsi, or the Shâh's lake, which is about 80 miles long.

Yet,

A. D.

1419.

A. D.

1420.

and children

2. Iskânder deseated

Hej. 824.

A. D.

1421.

A. D. 1421. Yet, on this grant, Jehân Shâh armed against his brother; who, being vanquished in battle, shut himself up in Kalât Alenjîk, where the other besieged him. But, while Iskânder continued to defend himself in that almost impregnable fortress, his son, Shâh Kobâd, tired with his father's ill fortune, murdered him, in the year 841 of the Hejrah (S), and sixteenth of his reign; as Iskânder had his own brother, Abu Saïd, soon after he ascended the throne, upon a very slight suspicion.

Hej. 841. A. D. 1437. 3. Jehân Shâh. AFTER the death of Iskânder, his brother Jehân Shâh possessed himself of his dominions; and, when well established in the throne, marched against the king of Gûrjestân, or Georgia, whom he took prisoner. After this, moving about to several parts of Pârs, he reduced them all under his obedience; expelling from some of them the garrisons placed there by Mirza Mahmûd, the son of Baysanger (T), who was dead. These things he performed in the years 856 and 857; in which last he also subdued the province of Kermân. In 861 (U), he marched towards Khorassân; and, the next year, made war on Mirza Ibrâhîm, the son of Alâ-ô'ddawlat, whom he defeated: in which battle Amîr Zadoka Jagatay was killed. Hereupon Soltân Abû Saïd, who then reigned in Bâlkh, advanced against him: but Jehân Shâh having received advice that one of his sons had rebelled in Tauris, he came to an agreement with Abû Saïd; and, returning to his capital, seized the disobedient prince, and closely confined him.

His large dominions; THIS commotion was no sooner suppressed, than Pîr Budak, another of his sons, who was governor of Bâghdâd, revolted also. Jehân Shâh marched thither with his forces; and, after he had held him besieged a whole year, by the mediation of friends, matters were accommodated, about the

Hej. 869. year 869: but, when all things were amicably settled, his brother Mehemed murdered him without the father's knowledge. Jehân Shâh now arrived to a great pitch of power, being possessed of Azerbejdân, Irâk, Pârs or Proper Persia, Hej. 872. Kermân, and other parts of Irân, in the year 872, jealous A. D. perhaps of the growing power of the Ak Koyunlû Turkmâns, 1467. turned his arms against their chief, Uzûn Hassan Beg, who

° TEXEIR. Hist. Pers. c. 45. p. 325, and D'HERB. p. 320. art. Eskander Emir.

(S) Al Jannabi puts the end of his reign in 839.

(T) He was son of Mirza Shâh Rukh, son of Timûr.

(U) A. D. 1456.

was then no more than governor (X) of Diyârbekr; but he was forced to return, through the severity of the winter.

A. D.
1467.

HOWEVER, he took the field again next summer. And, as it was his constant custom to make himself drunk over-night, and sleep till far in the day, the army marched before, and he followed afterwards, attended by about 1000 horse. Uzûn Hassan, who had intelligence of this, took 5000 men with him; and, waiting for him in an advantageous place, attacked him so opportunely, that, before any relief could arrive, he was killed, and two of his sons taken. Mehemed Mirza, the elder, was put to death on the spot, and Yusef or Iffuf Mirza had his eyes put out. Jehân Shâh lived seventy years, and reigned thirty-two. As to his character, he was reckoned the most lewd and wicked prince in those parts<sup>p</sup>, at that juncture of time.

slain by
Uzûn
Hassan.

KALKOKONDILAS, in his history of the fall of the Greek empire, says, this prince, whom he calls corruptly Tzanisa, son of Kara Yusef, and lord of Baghdâd, sent to offer Mohammed II. the Othmân Soltân, 4000 quintals of butter and 1000 camels, not to meddle with the country about Sebaste (or Siwâs) in Anatolia. This the Soltân agreed to, although the other had begun the war, entering that country with 8000 men, after subduing Armenia: but that, in the mean time, Trokhies (so he miscalls Shâh Rukh), a descendant of Timûr, marching from Samarkant, conquered all the country before him: and, laying siege to Baghdâd, sent from thence a great army, under the command of Long Hassan (Uzûn Hassan), to subdue Armenia, and the flat countries of Asia; which that general performed<sup>q</sup>. So confused and erroneous are the accounts which that author has given of foreign affairs.

HASSAN ALI, third son of Jehân Shâh, inherited his father's kingdom, with all his treasures: which being very great, he raised an army of 200,000 horse and foot, to revenge his death; and, not being very wise, gave them a year's pay before hand. At the same time he was preparing to march against another, Soltân Abu Saïd, before mentioned, marched against him. The two armies met; but the battle was no sooner begun, than most of those who had received

4. Hassan
Ali

Hej. 872.
A. D.
1488.

<sup>p</sup> TEXEIR. c. 45. p. 325. D'HERB. p. 367. art. Gchan Schah.

<sup>q</sup> KALKONDILAS, l. iii. c. 14. and l. vii. c. 11.

(X) As it is not said under what prince, it may be presumed, he was sovereign of that country; though not under the title of Soltân or king.

A. D.
1488.

defeated,
and slain.

their pay in advance, went over to the enemy (Y). This treachery of his troops obliged Hassan to fly : but while he escaped from one enemy, he fell into the hands of another : for Uzûn Hassan, meeting him in the way, defeated the remains of his forces, and killed him, with two of his sons, in the year 873<sup>r</sup>. Thus ended the sovereignty of the family or hord of the Black Sheep, which had continued for the space of sixty-four years, and passed to the family of the White Sheep.

S E C T. III.

The Turkmân Dynasty of the Ak Koyunlû, or White Sheep.

THIS dynasty went also by the name of Bayandûrîyah, which they took from the tribe or hord from whence they sprang. Accordingly Hay ibn Yokdan dedicated his Persian history to Soltân Yakûb Bayandûri, the son of Uzûn Hassan, seventh prince of this race, though others reckon him but the second. For Mîrkond and the author of the Nighiaristân make Hassan the founder of this dynasty : perhaps, because that of the Kara Koyunlû seemed to hold the sovereignty before he put an end to it, and succeeded to the dominion of its princes. But Al Jannâbi, and other oriental authors, give five predecessors to Uzûn Hassan, and accordingly assign thirteen princes to this dynasty, instead of eight : to which number the before-mentioned historians would limit them<sup>a</sup>.

1. Tûr
Ali Beg.

THE first of these princes, who made any considerable figure among the Turkmâns of this tribe or branch, was Tûr Ali Beg. Yet there is nothing remarkable transmitted to us concerning him, further than that he erected his principality in Diyârbekr. Although others, as hath been observed, make Armenia Minor to have been the seat of the Ak Koyunlû Turkmâns.

2. Fâkro'ddin
Kotli
Beg.

HE was succeeded by his son Fâkro'ddin Kotli or Kothu Beg : of whom nothing is mentioned, by the historians before us, more than of his father and predecessor. Nor have we so much as the dates, or length of their reigns : but matters begin to clear up a little in that of his successor,

<sup>r</sup> TEXEIR. C. 45. p. 325. D'HERB. p. 435. art. Hassan Ali,
<sup>a</sup> See D'HERB. art. Ac Coinlu, Baianduri, and Turkman.

(Y) This affair is told differently by the same author, in the reign of Uzûn Hassan, founder of the Ak Koyunlû dynasty.

KARA İlûg Ozmân, or Othmân, son of Fâkro'ddîn Kotli Beg. This prince having submitted to Timûr, and conducted him into Asia Minor<sup>b</sup>; the conqueror, in return, bestowed on him the government of Malatîyah, in Anatolia, near the Euphrates, after he had taken it from Ildrîm Bâyezîd, Soltân of the Turks, in the year 803. He likewise conferred great honours upon him. The same year, when Kara Ozmân waited on him at Bîr, on the Euphrates, Timûr presented him with the Kalaat, or vest; and, marching forwards through Diyârbekr, ordered him to form the blockade of Mardîn, while he went forward to besiege Bâghdâd, from which Soltân Ahmed Jalayr had retired. On Timûr's return from that expedition, in 804, Kara Ozmân joined his army, on its way back to Anatolia, in order to give Bâyezîd battle. On which occasion the Turkmân prince, in conjunction with the Amîr Jehân Shâh, did wonders, breaking through the left wing of the Othmâns. After this, Timûr, at Siwâs, conferred on him several honours, and then sent him back to his principality.

A. D.
1400.3. Kara
İlûg Oz-
mân,A. D.
1400.

Hej. 804.

A. D.
1406.his bravery;

THIS is the account we meet with in Sharîfo'ddîn Ali's history of Timûr<sup>c</sup>; which does not agree with what the other oriental writers before us relate concerning Kara Ozmân. They say, that he obtained of Timûr, for his services, the government of the cities of Arzenjân, Mardîn, Roha or Orfa, with other territories of Diyârbekr, and even of Siwâs itself<sup>d</sup>. But, as nothing of this appears from the history of Timûr, just now mentioned, there may be room to doubt of its being fact. On the contrary, the government, not of Siwâs, but Malatîyah, was bestowed on him, and Mardîn continued in the hands of Soltân Aysa, its own prince. The same author tells us, that he was afterwards slain in battle by Iskânder, son of Kara Yusef, second prince of the Kara Koyunlû Turkmâns, in the ninetieth year of his age, and of the Hejrah 809. But this date, at least, must be a mistake: for, according to Mîrkond, he was living in 813 or 814, when Kara Yusef drove him out of Diyârbekr<sup>e</sup>; and Eskûnder did not succeed his father till the year 823. If therefore we substitute 829 in the room of 809, it will give his successor a reign of twenty-eight years instead of forty-eight; which seems too long.

His death.

Hej. 829.
A. D.
1425.

HAMZA BEG succeeded his father Karah İlûg Ozmân; with regard to whom we find nothing more than that he died in the year 848.

4. Ham-
za Beg.<sup>b</sup> D'HERBELOT, art. Turkman, and Pocock Suppl. p. 59.<sup>c</sup> L. v. c. 17, 29, 30, 38, 64.<sup>d</sup> Pocock Suppl. p. 59.

D'HERB. art. Turkman.

<sup>e</sup> See before, p. 105.

A. D.

1467.

5. Jehân Ghîr.

6. Uzûn Hassan

HAMZAH had for his successor Jehân Ghîr, son of Ali Beg, son of Kara Ozmân. He died in the year 872; having been deprived of almost all his power by his brother Uzûn Hassan.

UZUN HASSAN signifies, in Turkish, Long Hassan; whence the Arabs call him Hassan al tawîl, which imports the same. He is also named Hassan Beg, or Beyg; that is, Lord Hassan (A). It has already been observed, in the life of Jehân Shâh, third prince of the Kara Keyunlû family, that Uzûn Hassan slew him at an attack, in the same year; whereby he revenged the injury done his grandfather Kara Ozmân, by Kara Yusef, father of Jehân Shâh. Hassan Ali, who succeeded this last prince, immediately sent to implore the assistance of Abû Saïd Mirza, third successor in the empire of Timûr (B), who then wintered at Marû, in Khorassân. Abû Saïd, led by generosity, but more by ambition, thinking this would open a way to enlarge his conquest westward, he set forward, at the head of a great army, with a design to attack the provinces of Irâk and Azerbejân. When he arrived on the borders of this last province, Hassan Beg sent several ambassadors, to demand peace: but Abû Saïd, still insisting that the other should come to his camp, at the same time marched in order to pass the summer at Karabâg (in the province of Arrân), where Hassan Beg usually resided. But this Turkmân having the address to cut off his provisions and forage, the greater part of the army dispersed, and the rest went over to his enemy. In this distress, fearing to be hemmed in, he took to flight: but, being pursued, he was brought to Hassan; who would have spared his life; but, by advice of his council, put him to death, in 873 c.

slays Abu Saïd,

Hej. 873.

A. D.

1468.

and Hassan Ali.

AFTER this defeat, Hassan Beg defeated and killed Hassan Ali, as hath been related; whereby Tauris and Azerbijân fell into the hands of the conqueror. When Jehân Shâh was slain, his son Mirza Yusef was taken, and had his eyes put out, as was said before; in which condition he retired to • D'HERB. art. Abu Saïd Mirza, p. 34.

(A) Corruptly written Ozun Azem Bek by Texeira; and Usum Chafan, or Casan, by Leunclavius, and other European authors.

(B) He was son of Mohammed, son of Mirân Shâh, son of Timûr, and succeeded Abdallah, son of Ulug Beg, son of Shâh- rukhs, in the dominions of the province of Mawara'nahr; having been in possession of Khorassân before. He afterwards extended his empire, from Kâshgar eastward, in Little Bûkhâria, to Tauris, in Persia, westward. He had also Kermân, in Persia, and Indostân, as far as Multân.

Shirâz,

Shirâz, the capital of Pârs, or Proper Persia. Where he continued as sovereign; but not long: for Uzun Hassan, after the defeat of his brother Hassan Ali, marched against him; and, entering Shirâz by force, put blind Yusef to death. Being thus become master of the province of Pârs, he entered that of Kermân, and subdued it. Afterwards he turned towards Bâghdâd, and took it, with the rest of Arabian Irâk.

A. D.
1468.

THESE great successes, in so short a time as two or three years, made him think himself a match for Mohammed II. Soltân of the Othmân Turks; whose dominions he invaded in the year 876 (C): but, being met by the Soltân near Arzenjân, was overthrown, and his son Zeynel (or Zeyno'ddîn) governor of Kastîn slain, as is before related<sup>d</sup>. Al Jannâbi observes, that after this defeat his affairs were not prosperous. He died in 882, after a reign of eleven years; as did much about the same time Ogurlu Mohammed, the eldest of his seven sons. The five who survived, were Khalîl Mirza, Maksûd Beg, Yakûb Beg, Masîh Beg, and Yusef Beg. Of these, Khalîl, Maksûd, and Masîh, reigned after him<sup>e</sup>. He had to wife the daughter of Kalo Johannes, emperor of Trebizond, who brought him a daughter, named Martha: which Martha, according to the western historians, was mother of Ismaël Sefi, founder of the next dynasty in Persia.

defeated by Mohammed II.A. D.
1471.A. D.
1477.

his death.

KHALIL Beg, by some called Khalîl Soltân, ascending the throne upon his father's death, immediately sent his brother Yakûb Beg to govern the country of Diyârbekr. Presently after, Morâd Beg invading his dominions, he routed his forces, and made him fly to Firâz Kâh, a strong fortress; whose commander, Husséyn Beg Jelchi, admitted him, and then sent him prisoner to Khalîl, who put him to death. In the interim, Yakûb Beg, revolting in Diyârbekr, marches with his army to Tauris, attended by his brother Maksûd Beg. On advice of this, Khalîl hastes to meet them; but is routed and killed by his brother Yakûb, in 884, when he had reigned but six months<sup>f</sup> and fifteen days. Others say, he was so hated by his subjects, on account of his cruelty, and other vices, that the assassinated him<sup>g</sup>.

7. Khalil Beg.

YAKUB Beg, having slain his brother, took possession of the throne: in the year 886, one of his generals, called Byander Beg:

8. Yakub Beg.

<sup>d</sup> See Hist. Othmân Turks.<sup>e</sup> TEX. c. 46. p. 329.

D'HERB. p. 916. art. Uzun Hassan.

<sup>f</sup> TEX. ubi supra.<sup>g</sup> POCOCC, Suppl. p. 60.

(C) Some oriental authors place this action two years after. See D'Herbel. Bibl. Orient. art. Mohammed Khân, p. 614.

A. D.
1481.

Beg, rebelled against him ; but, being met by him with the forces at Savah, or Sawah, a city near that of Kom, was defeated and slain. This same year, Soltân Mohammed II. died at Constantinople, and was fatal also to Sheykh Hayder : who, marching from Ardevîl into Shîrwân, in order to revenge himself on Ferokhzâd (D), its king, who had slain his father in a former invasion, was routed, and killed in battle, by the assistance of the troops of Yakûb Beg, under the conduct of Soleyman Beg Bigan. This prince died at Karabâg, near Taurîs, in 896, in the 28th year of his age, after a reign of twelve years and eight months<sup>h</sup>. Other authors say but two months ; and that he was taken off by poison. This misfortune is attributed to the death of his mother, a woman of excellent qualities ; which happened eighteen days only before that of her son. Her custom was every week to assemble the principal persons of that family, about twenty in number, and inculcate such things as tended to keep up peace among them : but, with her, concord also departed ; and they began to quarrel among themselves. He was reckoned to be learned ; and composed verses both in Turkish and Persian. He corresponded by letters with Bayezîd II. Soltân of the Turks ; between whom there was a friendship<sup>i</sup>.

9. Bay
Sanker ;

BAY Sanker Mirza, son of Yakub Beg, succeeded his father ; and, being only ten years old, was under the tuition of Sufi Khalil Mufîhûlû, one of his generals<sup>k</sup>. There were great commotions and troubles upon his accession to the throne ; because those of the hord of Bayandurîyah were for advancing Masîh Beg, or Mirza, uncle to the infant king, and brother to his father. These, joining with him, made war on Sufi Khalil ; who, presently taking the field, came to a battle, wherein Masîh was defeated and killed : his nephew Rustam Beg, son to his brother Makshûd, was taken also, and sent prisoner to the fortress of Alenjîk (in Armenia). At this time, Soleyman Beg Bigan, who had routed and slain Soltân Hayder, as before mentioned, advanced from Diyârbeckr, in defence of Ferokhzâd, King of Shîrwân, whom Khalil overthrew and killed at Alenjîk (E).

slain by Rustam.

In the mean time, Haybe Soltân Bayandurî, who had the command of some troops, assailed Alenjîk, and rescuing Rus-

<sup>h</sup> TEX. p. 330. D'HERR. p. 467. art. Jacoub Begh.

<sup>i</sup> Po-

cock, ubi supr. <sup>k</sup> TEX. p. 331.

(D) In Tecaira he is called Farnakysar.

is a plain country to the south of the rivers Arrâs and Kür, bordering on the Caspian sea.

(E) Tecaira writes Moan : it

tam Beg, proclaimed him king. The new monarch, with these forces, joined with many more which resorted to him, marched towards Tauris in quest of Bay Sanker; who, on their approach, abandoned the country, and fled with his governor to Diyârbekr: but, being pursued by a body of Rostam's troops, Khalîl was taken, and put to death: however, Bay Sanker escaped for that time, and Rustam Beg remained in possession of the kingdom<sup>1</sup>. This is the account given by Mirkond. Al Jannâbi, who places Masîh Beg in the throne, instead of Bay Sanker, says he had for a competitor, besides this latter, Ali Beg, son of Khalîl Beg, the sixth prince of this dynasty: but the author of the Lebtarikh reckons neither Masîh nor Ali Beg among the number, any more than Mirkond<sup>m</sup>.

A. D.

1481.

ROSTAM Mirza (or Beg, as in Texeira), son of Makfûd Beg, and grandson of Uzun Hassan Beg, as soon as he came to Tauris, released Ali Mirza, or Pâdishâh, and Shâh Ismael, two sons of Sheykh Hayder, out of prison; and, taking the field with the first of them, marched in quest of Bay Sanker; who came to meet them between Ganjeh and Bardaa (F): but was there by them routed and slain. After this victory, Ali Mirza, to whom it was in great measure owing, retired with his brother to Ardevîl, his native country, with the permission of Rostam; who, repenting that he had let him go, as fearing his presence, and the memory of his father, might occasion some commotion in that city, presently set forward at the head of his army towards Ardevîl, in order to get Ali Mirza and Ismael once more into his hands. The two brothers, resolving to defend their liberty, with what forces they could gather, gave him battle, and were defeated. Ali was killed on the spot; but Ismael the younger had the good fortune to escape into the province Ghilân, or Khilân, in Persia, bordering on the Caspian sea.

10. Rost-

am Mirza;

Hej. 897.

A. D.

1491.

releases Hayder's
sons;

AFTER this, in the year 902, Ahmed Beg, son of Ogûrlu is slain. Mohammed, and grandson of Uzun Hassan Beg, marched from Diyârbekr against Rostam; who, engaging him near Tauris, lost the victory, and fled to Gûrjestân, or Georgia; where he was killed, when he had reigned five years and six months<sup>n</sup>;

A. D.

1496.

<sup>1</sup> TEX. p. 331. D'HERB. p. 901. art. Turkman and Massih, p. 561. <sup>m</sup> Id. ibid. and Pocock, Supl. p. 61. <sup>n</sup> MIRKOND ap. Texeir. cap. 46. & ap. D'Herb. p. 740. art. Rostam Beg.

(F) Cities in the province of and Arrâs; to which Eriwân belongs, between the rivers Kûr

A. D. and was succeeded, according to Al Jannâbi, in the year 904<sup>a</sup> 1496. by his conqueror.

11. Ahmed Beg ; AHMED Beg (or, as Al Jannâbi names him, Soltân Ahmed), having expelled Rostam, ascended the throne. He gave the government of the kingdom of Kermân, in Persia, to Haybe Soltân ; and that of Pârs, or Proper Persia, to Kazem Beg Perâki. These two, in requital of his favours, conspired together, and rebelled against him. Ahmed, on the news of their revolt, marched against them ; but, after some encounters, he was slain in a battle, which he lost near Isfâhân, in Persian Irâk °. According to Al Jannâbi, this prince had fled to Constantinople, for fear of his uncle Yakûb ; from whence he was invited by the great lords of the kingdom : but that, having a mind, after his accession to the throne, to introduce the more severe Oshmân discipline among his soldiers, the principal officers of his army were so disgusted with him, that they conspired to depose him. For this purpose, they sent to Morâd Mirza, son of Yakûb Beg, who was then in Shîrwân, to come and take the kingdom. Morâd, hastening to Azerbejân on this invitation, attacked Ahmed Beg ; and, having vanquished his forces, put him to death, when he had reigned about one year. After this, the same licentious officers, violating their faith to Morâd, called in Alwand Beg, or Mirza ; who, by their assistance, seized on, and threw him in prison <sup>p</sup>.

put to
death.

AT the time of Ahmed Beg's death, there remained of all the race of Uzun Hassan Beg only three youths, his grandsons ; Soltân Morâd (or Morâd Mirza), who was in Shîrwân, as hath been said ; Alwand Beg, the son of Yusef Beg, in Azerbejân ; and Mohammed Mirza, brother to Alwand, at Yazd, or Yezd, in Pârs. All the dominions of Persia, which had been in possession of the hord of Ak Kazyunlu, were then divided among them <sup>q</sup>.

12. Alwand Beg ;

ALWAND, or Alwend Beg, was saluted king by Kâzern Beg Pernâki, and Gâzi Beg Bayandûri, his generals, and kinsmen : these were joined at Tauris by Haybe Soltân ; who came from Kermân. At the same time, Mohammed Mirza, who was at Yazd, assumed the title of king of Isfâhân, or Irâk ; but, on Alwand's marching against him, he withdrew, without making any opposition, into the fortress of Sthi, then governed by Husséyn Keyah Jelbi. This commander joining Mohammed, they both advanced towards Alwand, who was expelled by Mohammed ;

° MIRKOND, ubi supr.

<sup>p</sup> AL JANNAB. ap. Pocock. Sup. ad Hist. Dynast. p. 61. D'HERB. Bibl. Orient. p. 901. art. Turkman.

<sup>q</sup> MIRKOND, ubi supr.

battle ;

battle ; which Alwand lost, and retired to Tauris. Being pursued thither by Mohammed, he ventured out again ; and was again routed, with the loss of Haybe Soltân ; upon which he fled to Diyârbekr. A. D. 1498.

DURING these confusions, the brothers of Haybe Soltân declared Soltân Morâd, who was then in Shîrwân, king of Irâk ; and, conducting him thence with a considerable army, moved in quest of Mohammed Mirza ; whom they met near Ispahân, defeated and killed, in 905, after he had reigned one year <sup>1</sup>. A. D. 1499.
Al Jannâbi says, that, although Mohammed had dispossessed his brother Alwand of the throne, yet he could not mount it himself : for that Morâd Beg, being delivered out of prison, seized it, and put him to death <sup>2</sup>.

By this means he obtained the kingdoms of Pârs and Irâk, <sup>13</sup> Morâd Beg ; while Alwand remained possessed of Azerbejdân. In the year 906, they both raised forces ; and, taking the field, met at Kasbîn, or Kazvîn ; where, without the decision of the sword, by the interposition of friends, they agreed that each party should hold what was already his own. This was a miserable time all over Persia for robberies, violence, famine, pestilence, and universal confusion. Next year, Ismaël, son of Sheykh Hayder, or Haydor, marched with his army from Nakhshivân to Tauris, the residence of Alwand ; who, abandoning the country, fled to Bâghdâd, and thence to Diyârbekr ; where he afterwards died. Thus Azerbejdân fell under the dominion of Ismaël ; who, in 908, made war on Soltân Morâd. This prince advanced from Shîrâz to meet him ; and, joining battle at Hamadân, was defeated with the loss of 10,000 men. Hereupon he fled back to his capital ; but soon after, leaving Pârs and Kermân to the victor, retired to Bâghdâd ; where he was received by the governor, Bari Beg. However, Ismaël would not let him remain there : for next year, advancing with his forces against them, they abandoned that city, and fled to Karamân, or Karamâniâ. Morâd, having continued there for some time, returned to Diyârbekr ; where the Kezilbâsh (G) killed him, in 920 : and in him ended the sovereignty of the hord of Ak Koyunlu Turkmâns, in Persia <sup>3</sup>. A. D. 1500.
A. D. 1501.
A. D. 1502. conquered by Ismael.
A. D. 1514.

<sup>1</sup> MIRKOND, ubi supr.    <sup>2</sup> AL JANNABI, ubi supr.    <sup>3</sup> MIRKOND, ubi supr. D'HERB. p. 624. art. Morad Beg. AL. JANNABI, ubi supr.

(G) Or Red Heads ; that is, by the Turks and Tatars, from the Persians, so called in sneer their red bonnets.

CHAP. II.

The History of the Usbeks.

SECT. I.

The Origin and Affairs of the Usbeks, till their Settlements in Great Bukharia; and Karazm.

Usbeks whence named.

IT has been observed before in the history of the Khâns of Kipjâk, that the Usbeks derive their name from Ussak, the seventh Khân of that country, descended from Jenghîz Khân; which his subjects assumed in honour to him, for having introduced the Mohammedan religion into his dominions. This prince tried his fortune twice against Abûsaïd Khân, the last sovereign of the Mongls, in Irân, or Persia at large; and died in the year 1342. But, to give our readers the history of the Usbeks and their Khâns more distinctly, it will be necessary to ascend as high as Juji, or Tusbi Khân, eldest son of Jenghîz Khân, and first Khân of Kipjâk.

Bâtu's
conquests.

THIS prince, intending to make war on the Cherka's (A), Bashkîrs (B), Urûs's (C), and other bordering nations, had caused a prodigious quantity of provisions to be gotten ready; but death preventing him, his father, Jenghîz Khân, resolved that Bâtu, son of the deceased Juji, called by our author Bâtu Saghin Khân, should prosecute the design. Yet was it obstructed a second time by the death of that conqueror, till it was revived by Ugaday (or Oktay), successor of Jenghîz Khân, in the eastern parts of Tartary: who, after his return from his expedition into Kitay, or Katay (that is, the northern part of China) sent Bâtu (D), with a numerous army, into the countries above-mentioned; where, after he had taken many cities from the Urûs (or Russians) he, at length, set down before Moskow; near which the Urûs, with their allies, the Nemetz (E), had intrenched themselves.

(A) Or Cherkassians: the Italians write Circassi; whence we corruptly Circassians, instead of Chirkassians.

(B) A tribe of Turks or Tatars, called Paskati by Rubruquis; dwelling in the north part of the kingdom of Asfraktân.

(C) Rûs, or the Russians.

(D) Who had accompanied

Oktay in his expedition to Kitay, with five of his brothers.

(E) The orthography in the translations of Abûlghâzi Khân's history is so corrupt, that it is difficult to tell whether this word must be pronounced Nemetz, Nemey, or Nemetch. By these people are to be understood the Germanens. The Arabs call Germany Nemisa.

B A T U,

BATU, having tried in vain for three months to force them, Sheybani his brother Sheybani, who accompanied him in the expedition, Khân; procured of him a reinforcement of 6000 men; then causing all his troops to alight, at day-break attacked the enemy behind, while Bātu charged them in front, with such bravery, that they fled, after losing 70,000 of their best soldiers. This great victory rendered the conquest of several other cities and provinces easy. After his return, loaded with riches and glory, Orda, surnamed Itzen (F), eldest son of Juji, to reward Sheybani's good services, made him a present of 15,000 families. Bātu did the like, giving him, at the same time, all the places conquered from the Russians and their allies; with as many people out of the tribes of the Karis, Naymans, Karliks, his settle- and Vigurs (or Oygurs), as were necessary for the guard of ment. those towns, and support of his court: but on condition, that, settling in the country between his (Bātu's) dominions and the lands of Orda Itzen, he should pass the summer about the mountains of Arál (or the Eagles) and river Jaił; and the winter more to the south, about Karakum (G), Arakum, and the rivers Sir and Sara Su. Accordingly, he sent one of his sons to take possession of the Russian and Nemetzian cities, where he and his descendants dwelt: but, because of the distance, our author could not tell where they were situated.

SHEYBANI Khân, who left twelve sons (H), was succeeded by Báhadr, his second; and Báhadr Khân by Badakul, Sheykh. the eldest of his four (I). After Badakul Khân, his only son, Mengu Timúr (for his wit and courage named Kutluk Mengu Timúr), ascended the throne. He had six sons (K); from the last of whom, Bekkondi, was descended Kujum Khân (L); who, after forty years reign in the country of Turán (M), becoming blind with age, was driven out by the Russians, in 1594, and retired to the Alankats (N). Mengu Timúr Hej. 1003

(F) It may be read also Ijn, or I ben.

(G) That is Black Sand. Some desert towards Kipjak.

(H) Their names are, 1. Bayan; 2. Bahadr; 3. Karak; 4. Balka; 5. Zirik (or Jirik); 6. Mergán; 7. Kurtga; 8. Ay-eji; 9. Sagbilgan; 10. Bayan-jar; 11. Majar; 12. Konji.

(I) Viz. 1. Badakul; 2. Bik Timúr; 3. Yankajar; 4. Yessubuga-Badakul.

(K) 1. Ilfak; 2. Janta; 3.

Fulád; 4. Siunj; 5. Temúr Bunga; 6. Bekkondi.

(L) Or Kuchum Khân. He was the son of Muráza Khân, son of Mamulak Khân, son of Hajim Mohammed Khân, son of Ali Oglan, son of Bekkondi.

(M) Rather the country of Tura, in Siberia, where this Khân reigned.

(N) The same with the Kara Kalpaks; who are at present possessed of the western half of Turkestan.

dying, Fulád, his third son, succeeded : after whose death, his sons, Dawlat Sheykh Oglán, and Arabsháh, divided the dominions ; dwelling in summer towards the river Jáik, and in winter about the Sir.

Abúlgayir Khán. DAWLET Sheykh had a son, named Abúlgayir ; who made himself formidable to all his neighbours. He had eleven sons ; of whom Shabadakh Soltán, the eldest, had two : the first called Mahamed, surnamed Shabbakht ; the other Mahamed Soltán ; whose son, Obeyd Khán, reigned in Great Búkhária. The second son of Abúlgayir was Kheja Mahamed ; but being exceeding foolish, the Uzbeks called him Kheja Amtintak. His son, Janibek, was as foolish as his father ; and Iskander Khán, the son of Janibek, was no less silly than his father and grandfather. However, he was very devout ; and loved both hunting and hawking. The son of Iskander was Abdóllah Khán ; whose son, Abdólmumin, was the last of that branch of Sheykhání Khán ; of which two princes, who were men of understanding, something farther will be said hereafter <sup>a</sup>.

Yadigar Khán. ARAB Sháh, the other son of Fulád, was succeeded, in his share of his father's dominions, by his son Haji Taulay ; who had his son Timúr Sheykh for his successor. Timúr Sheykh was a prince of great hopes : but dying young, and without issue (being killed in an engagement with the (O) Kalmúks, all his subjects retired to other princes, excepting the Vigúrs ; who, when they went to take leave of the Khán's widow, being informed by her, that she was three months gone with child, they resolved to stay till the time of her delivery ; when she brought forth a son, called Yadigar. Hereupon they sent word to the Naymáns ; who, having hovered about to wait the event, upon this advice, returned to their obedience : and ever since the Vigúrs have complimented them with the left hand ; which is the most honourable post.

Burga Soltán. YADIGAR Khán had four sons. The first, named Burga Soltán, was a prince of much courage. His breast was formed of one single bone. He lived in the time of Abúlgayir Khán above-mentioned ; but was much younger than he. Abusáid Mirza (descended from Amír Timúr (or Tamerlan), who then reigned in Mawará'nahr (or Great Búkharia), after slaying Abdólatif Mirza, over-ran the whole country, and forced his

<sup>a</sup> ABULGHATI KHAN. Hist. Tatars, &c. p. 205. part 8. c. 1.

(O) So the Eiláks, or Aláks. them Hassak Párák. See before, are nicknamed by the Uzbeks ; vol. iv. p. 15. who are, in return, called by son, Mahamed Juki, to fly for refuge to Abû'lgayir (P); whose wife was Juki's aunt. Some time after, news being brought that Abûsâid had marched, with all his forces, towards Khorassan, and from thence to Mázânderân, Abû'lgayir sent 30,000 men, under Bûrga Soltân, and Mîrza Mahamed Juki, towards Tâshkunt; which surrendered without opposition. Proceeding thence to Shâh Rukhiya (or Fenakant), it was soon taken. They then passed the Sîr, and turned towards Samarkant; whose governor, Amîr Mafîet, advancing to meet them, was intirely defeated. After this, they reduced all the towns in the countries of Kuzîn, Karmîna (Q), and Mawara'l-nahr (R); excepting Samarkant and Bokhâra.

A. D.
1449.

ABUSÂID Mîrza, who, on the first news of this invasion, turned back with all his forces, being arrived at Bâlk, his exploits; Bûrga Soltân was for preventing his passage of the Amû: but Mahamed Juki, and the lords of the country, contrary to his advice, repassed the Sîr, and got into Shâh Rukhiya; which, after four months siege, surrendered to Abûsâid, in 860 (S). Some time after, Mûsa Bey, who dwelt in the dominions of Yadigar Khân, having been defeated by Khojâsh Mîrza, another lord, fled for assistance to Bûrga Soltân. This prince, who had a great respect for him, was willing to have succoured him: but perceived he could not do it effectually, till his father, Yadigar, was proclaimed Khân; though he had already been acknowledged as such by his subjects. As soon as this affair was settled, Bûrga Soltân raised troops, and took the field with Mûsa Bey; advancing through the snow, which fell very thick; nor would turn back, and put off the expedition to another time, although his troops suffered more and more every day. At length, when importuned by Mûsa Bey, and his officers, and friendship; he declared, that he would give over the pursuit, in case they did not, within two days, hear any news of the enemy. After this, in crossing a high mountain, they discovered troops marching in the valley beneath; and finding by his spies, that it was Khojâsh Mîrza, whom he was in quest of, he advanced with his forces; and attacked the enemy so briskly, that he intirely defeated them. A great number of men were killed,

(P) This was about the year 1449. is restrained commonly to Great Bukhâria.

(Q) In Great Bukhâria, towards Karazm.

(R) It is an Arabic word, and signifies Transoxana, or, literally, the country beyond the river; meaning the Jikûn, or Amû; and

(S) That is, A. D. 1455: but in the reign of Atûsâid, we find this affair marked, H 865, A. D. 1460; which is doubtless the true date of it.

A. D.
1481.

and among the rest Khojash ; whose daughter, Malay Khân-zâdek, being found among the captives, Bûrga Soltân married her in the winter-quarters, which he took up thereabouts.

injures
Shâh
Bâhkt
Soltân ;

MEAN while, Abûlgayir Khân was become so formidable to all the neighbouring princes, that, uniting their forces, they declared war against him ; and, having defeated his troops by dint of numbers, put him to death, with such of his children as fell into their hands. On this occasion, Bûrga Soltân, willing to fish in troubled water, appropriated to himself certain lands and subjects belonging to the deceased Khân, notwithstanding the great friendship which had always subsisted between them ; and that action cost him his life : for some years after, Shâh Bakht Soltân returning into the dominions of his grandfather Abûlgayir Khân, all the antient subjects of that prince came and submitted to him. But although he had thus re-entered into the possession of his patrimony, he did not immediately demand restitution of Bûrga Soltân : on the contrary, dissembling his resentment, he lived in good understanding with him ; not doubting but time would furnish him with an opportunity of revenge.

who sur- prises and
Hej. 886.
A. D.
1481.

AT length, in 886, Bûrga Soltân happening to fix his winter-quarters near those of Shâh Bakht Soltân, who was posted on the banks of the Sir ; this latter ordered a great number of his people to attend him, under pretence of a hunting-match the next day : but, setting forward at midnight, he on a sudden turned towards Bûrga Soltân's camp, telling his soldiers that he was going to attack that prince, and forbidding them to plunder, till they had secured his person. Being arrived thither at break of day, he pressed forward directly to the Soltân's tent : but Bûrga, on hearing the noise, jumped out of bed ; and, wrapping himself in a robe of sable, passed out at one side of the tent, as the soldiers entered the other. In this condition he fled to a pond at some distance, and hid himself among the reeds : but had the ill luck to wound his foot by the way so deeply, that he had much ado to stop the blood.

puts him
to death.

MEAN time they who had been sent by Shâh Bakht Soltân to pursue such as fled, having met with a Vigâr of distinction, named Munga, he told them that he was the person they looked for : and being asked by Shâh Bakht, who easily perceived the deceit, what were his reasons for so acting ? replied, " He had so many obligations to Bûrga Soltân, that he " thought it his duty to risque any thing to deliver him from " danger ; and judged that his personating him would create " a delay, which might secure his escape." This answer exceedingly pleased Shâh Bakht, and gave him a high idea of Munga's virtue. However, he did not forbear searching after

Bûrga

Bârga Soltân, but sent out men a second time ; and, as it had shewed that night, some of them happened to discover the prints of bare feet ; and, following the tract, found at length drops of blood, which brought them to the place where he lay concealed. In this condition, they led him to Shâh Bakht Soltân ; who, after being convinced that they were not deceived a second time, commanded him to be put to death immediately, and seized upon all his subjects<sup>b</sup>.

A. D.

1481.

KHOJA Mahamed Soltân, the son of Abûlgayir Khân, Khoja who had accompanied his nephew in this expedition, espoused the widow of Bârga Soltân, daughter of Khojash Mirza, above-mentioned, called Malay Khânzâdeh. This Khoja Mahamed is the same who, for his silliness, was named Khoja Antintak ; and although every body knew that the widow of Bârga Soltân was with child at the death of her husband, yet he was willing to have it thought, that Jâni Bek, of whom she was delivered (six months after), was his own son : and for such indeed he must have passed, had his foolishness been a proof in the case.

ALTHOUGH, by this misfortune which happened to their Uzbek father, the children of Bârga Soltân were deprived of their dynasties ; patrimony, yet some years after they acquired new dominions ; to which the conquests, achieved by Shâh Bakht Soltân, cleared the way for them. And here it may be proper to observe, that the descendants of Sheybânî Khân established two considerable dynasties in the countries to the south of the river Sîr : the first in great Bukhâria, possessed by those of the branch of Abûlgayir ; the second in Karazm, whose Khâns were of the posterity of Radigar Khân ; of whom we shall treat in their order.

HERE likewise we cannot forbear touching on a particular, why so which we have taken notice of elsewhere<sup>d</sup> ; viz. how the name named. of Uzbeks came to be appropriated to those tribes who were subject to the descendants of Sheybânî Khân, and passed with them into great Bukhâria and Karazm : for the name, we are told, came from Uzbek Khân, a descendant of Bâtu, the brother of Sheybânî ; who possessed a different part of Kishâk ; and that it was assumed by Uzbek Khân's subjects. Yet, at present, we find it transferred to the posterity and subjects of Sheybânî Khân ; while those of Bâtu no longer retain it.

<sup>b</sup> ABULGHAZI KHAN. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 210, & seqq.

<sup>c</sup> Ibid. p. 220.

<sup>d</sup> See the history of Karazm, which follows th s.

A. D.

1498.

S E C T. II.

The Uzbek Khâns of Great Bukhâria.

Introduction.

THE memoirs and extracts, transmitted to us from the oriental historians, speak but very little, and confusedly, of the Uzbek princes who have reigned in this large region, which has been already described *. They give us neither all their names, in order of succession, nor the time when their respective reigns began, or ended. What is more extraordinary; although the dominion of the Uzbeks still subsists, both in that country and Karazm, yet the authors, from whose hands we have received those extracts, represent it as extinct above 200 years ago (A). However, we learn from other quarters, that their power is still in being; although those authors afford little more particulars concerning them: but the Shajarek Turki of Abûlghâzi, Khân of Karazm, who was an Uzbek himself, published in English, not many years since, furnisheth us with a series of the affairs of his own country, in the reigns of its Khâns, down to the middle of the last century. With the history of Karazm, he hath occasionally mixed that of Great Bukhâria, on account of the wars, which happened from time to time between those two states: so that it affords the best memoirs concerning these Uzbeks, to be met with any-where; although they fall far short of forming a complete history of them, as he did not undertake to write it with the same preciseness that he did that of his own country.

v. Khân
Shâh Bakht.

A. D.

1498.

AFTER Shâh Bâkht Soltân (B) had surprised and put to death Bûrga Soltân, in the manner before related, he, by degrees, subdued all the neighbouring princes in Tartary; and having, by a long train of victories, considerably augmented his forces, he entered Great Bukhâria, with a numerous army, in 901 (C); and made himself master of it, after he had driven out Soltân Bâbr, the last of the descendants of Timûr Bek in that country; and from this year is his reign dated. Shâh Bâkht, with an intent to extend his conquests, passed the Jihûn, and invaded Khorassân; where he was opposed by Soltân Husfayn Mirza, who obtained some signal victories over the Uzbeks, and designed to have expelled them. For this end, he * See before, vol. v. p. 108.

(A) See D'Herbelet Bibl. Ori. p. 771. art. Schaibek Khân; and Texeira Hist. Pers. p. 336.(B) He is also called Shaybeg, and Shaybek Khân, by authors.

(C) Some place this invasion in the year 900.

raised a numerous army, in order to invade Great Bukhâria : but dying by the way at Wadekis, in 911, Shâh Bâkht, in his turn, invaded Bâdi Azzamân, the son and successor of Soltân Hussayn ; who, not being able to oppose him, abandoned the country to the enemy, and fled to Kandahâr ; where raising forces, he returned to meet the Uzbek : but, being defeated, fled into Persia, to Shâh Ismaël Sofi <sup>b</sup>.

A. D.

1505.

A. D.

1505.

MEAN time, Shâh Bâkht Soltân conquered the greater part of Khorassân, and put to death all those of the family of Soltân Hussayn Mirza, who fell into his hands : so that, as numerous as this family was but a little while before, not more than two or three of them escaped the slaughter. After this, Shâh Bâkht marched into Karazm, which had been under Soltân Hussayn's dominion ; and subdued it also. Five or six years after this revolution, Shâh Ismaël, espousing Bâdi Azzamân's cause, marched against the Uzbeks in 916 ; and, meeting them near Marû, a bloody battle was fought, wherein Shâh Bâkht was killed, with the greater part of his army, after he had reigned twelve years : in consequence of which, Karazm, and most of what the Uzbeks had acquired in Khorassân, fell under the dominion of Shah Ismaël : but, on his death, Karazm revolted to the Uzbeks.

Hej. 916.

A. D.

1510.

SHAH Bâkht Khân was succeeded by Kushânji Khân ; who is reckoned the most noble and powerful of all the Uzbek princes who reigned in Great Bukhâria. In 918, Soltân Bâbr returned out of India ; and, being joined by Ahmied Isfâhâni (D), passed the Jihûn (or Amû), and ravaged the country about Kârshi. In short, they had almost reduced the whole country, when Kushânj Khân, setting forward with an army, met and defeated them. The Persian general was killed on the spot ; and Bâbr fled back to India. In 936, Kushânji Khân marched into Persia against Shâh Tahmâsp, son of Ismaël : but was defeated, and retired to his own dominions. After this, he returned to Marû, and would again have broken into Persia : but a peace being concluded between the two monarchs, Kushânji went back to Samarkant ; where he died the same year, after a reign of 28 years <sup>c</sup>.

2. Khân

Rushenji.

A. D.

1512.

A. D.

1539.

<sup>b</sup> ABULGH. ubi supr. p. 222. D'HER. Bibl. Orient. p. 38, 163. art. Abusaid Mirza, and Miran Shâh ; also TEX. Hist. Pers. p. 320. <sup>c</sup> TEX. Hist. Pers. p. 335. D'HERBEL. Bibl. Orient. p. 771. art. Schaibek.

(D) Perhaps the same with in Texeira, Ismaël sent with an Najemi (rather Ajemi) Soni ; army to assist Bâbr. whom, according to Mirkond

A. D.

1532.

THIS prince was succeeded by his son Abusaïd Khân ; who reigned four years, without doing any thing remarkable ; and died in 939<sup>d</sup>.

3. Khân
Abusaïd.
 4. Khân
Obeyd.

OBEYD Khân succeeded Abusaïd, and was the son of Mo-hammed Soltân, brother of Shâh Bâkht Khân, who reigned in Great Bukhâria. This prince, entering Khorassân, took some cities ; while the Uzbeks of Karazm doing the like on their side, Shâh Tahmâsh thought fit to conclude a peace with those unwelcome guests. Stirred up by Omar Gâzi Soltân, who fled to him from Karazm, this Khân, in conjunction with the Khâns of Samarkant (E) and Tâshkunt, in 949, entered that country ; which they over-ran, seizing Avânîsh Khân, and all the princes of his family : whom he divided, together with the towns, among his confederates. Dîn Mahammed Soltân, eldest son of Avânîsh Khân, invading Karazm, as soon as Obeyd Khân was withdrawn, retakes Khayuk and Urgheñj. On this news, Obeyd Khân returns with a numerous army : but being met the same year by Dîn Mahammed, with much inferior forces, was intirely defeated ; and the princes, his relations, restored by an exchange of prisoners<sup>e</sup>.

A. D.

1550.

ABOUT the year 957, Obeyd Khân, entering Khorassân, took Marû from the Persians ; but growing jealous of the governor, and sending an army to displace him, that officer surrendered it to Dîn Mahamed, then Khân of Karazm. After this, Nûr Mahamed Soltân, grandson of Dîn Mahamed Khân, being envied the possession of his grandfather's estate in Khorassân, by the princes of his family, they combined to take it from him. Hereupon he delivered up his four cities of Marû, Nasay (or Nesa), Taurfurdi, and Duruhm, to Obeyd Khân ; imagining that this prince would leave him in possession, and be content with receiving tribute from him : but he found himself deceived<sup>f</sup>. The time of Obeyd Khân's death is not mentioned. Texeira and D'Herbelot, after Mirkond, place it in 1540 (F) ; allowing no more than six years to his reign : but this must be a great mistake. According to Abû'lghâzi Khân,

<sup>d</sup> TEX. Hist. Pers. p. 335. D'HERB. Bibl. Orient. p. 771. art. Schaïbek. <sup>e</sup> ABULGH. ubi supr. p. 253, 256. <sup>f</sup> Ibid.

P. 273, 277.

(E) In 1556, Berrak Khân reigned at Samarkant, and Seyd Burkan at Bokhâra. De la Croix. Hist. Gengh. p. 394.

(F) In the city of Bokhâra ;

yet, in 1556, according to a former note, Bokhâra had its own Khân ; to whom possibly Obeyd succeeded by inheritance, or conquest.

he must have reigned above fifty years, and died about 1584, or the year following §.

OBEYD Khân seems to have been succeeded by Iskânder Khân, son of Jâni Bek, son of Khoja Mahamed, son of Abû'lga-yir Khân, who reigned in Kipjâk. There is nothing remarkable mentioned relating to this prince, who was not right in his senses. On the death of his predecessor, Nûr Mahamed went and recovered his four cities out of the hands of the Bukhârian Usbeks. Shâh Abbâs I. of Persia, being also desirous to profit by that event (G), went and took Marû from him <sup>h</sup>. We find nothing which may give light, either as to the beginning, end, or length, of his reign.

ABDO'LLAH Khân, son of Iskânder Khân: when he began his reign is likewise uncertain: only we find, that some years after the death of Ali Soltân, which happened in 1571, Abdo'llah invaded Karazm; but retired, on the approach of Hajim, or Azim, Khân. Some time after, the sons of the latter having stripped a Turkish ambassador at Urghenj, who was on his return from Great Bukhâria, Abdo'llah Khân entered Karazm a second time, with a great army; and, having conquered it chiefly by fraud, carried ten princes of the Khân's family into Bukhâria; where he put them all to death.

MEAN time Hajim Khân retired into Persia to Shâh Abbâs, in the year of the Serpent (H). Two years after this, Abdo'llah Khân invading Khorassân, Hajim Khân took the opportunity, while the Shah marched against the invader, to surprise Urghenj and Khayuk: but those places were soon recovered again by the troops of Abdo'llah Khân; who in person besieged Hazarâst, and reduced it. After this, he returned into Great-Bukhâria; where he died the last day of the year 1597, Hej. 1006 called Taïk, or the Hen. According to Texeira and D'Herbelot, this active prince died in the year 1540, and reigned but six months <sup>i</sup>.

ABDO'LMO MIN Khân, son of Abdo'llah Khân, by a daughter of Dîn Mahamed, Khân of Karazm, succeeded his father. Being at the time of his father's death in Khorassân, he

§ See the history of Karazm in the next chapter.

p. 278.

<sup>i</sup> Ibid. p. 290, 300, & seqq.

<sup>h</sup> ABUL.

(G) As from hence it appears, that Abbâs took Marû soon after Obeyd Khân's death: and, as Abbâs began his reign in 1585; therefore Obeyd Khân must have lived till that year, if not beyond it: unless the name of Tahmâs should be put instead of Abbâs; which would reduce the date of that event to 1575.

(H) This, reckoning back from the death of Abdo'llah Khân, must be the year 1593.

A. D. 1598. set forward to return home: but, on his way, at Zamin on the river Amú, was slain by his own people <sup>k</sup>.

IMAM Kuli Khán, son of Yar Mahamed Soltán, succeeded Abdo'momín Khán (I). In the year 1620, Arap (or Arab) Alahamed, Khán of Karazm, having been defeated by his two rebellious sons <sup>l</sup>; Abú'lgházi Soltán, who had joined his father, fled, after the battle, into Great Bukhária, and was received kindly by the Khán. In 1622, Isfándiar Soltán, having recovered Karazm, and put his two rebellious brothers to death, Abú'lgházi returned to Urgheñj: but his subjects leaving the country on the appearance of a comet, a year or two after, he retired to Turkestan; where he staid two years at the court of Tursum Khán, and then went into Great Bukhária (K) to Imám Kúli Khán; who receiving him but coldly, because he had first taken refuge with his enemy, he returned again to Karazm on the invitation of the Turkmáns <sup>m</sup>. Imám Kúli Khán died about the time (L) that Abú'lgházi Khán was proclaimed Khan of Kárazm <sup>n</sup>.

8. Khán
Nadir
Maha-
med. HE was succeeded by his brother, Nadír Mahamed Khán. In 1644, the Turkmáns, who resided about Kayuk and Hazar-áse, in Karazm, refusing to submit to Abú'lgházî upon his being proclaimed Khán, put themselves under the protection of Nadír Mahamed Khán; who conferred the government of those two places on his grandson, Khifferan Soltán: but soon after, recalling him, he sent one of his lords to command in his room. In the mean time he was himself dethroned, in 1646, by his vassal lords, for his harsh treatment of them <sup>o</sup>.

9. Khán
Abdo'l.
aziz. HE had for successor his son Abdo'lazíz Khán. This prince having formed a design to conquer the country of Bálkh, its sovereign, Subhán Kúli Khán, sent to intreat aid of Abú'lgházi Khán; who, laying hold of so fair an opportunity to revenge the injuries done to his family by Abdo'llah Khán, entered Great Bukharia for several years successively, destroyed several towns, and committed great ravages. At length, in 1658, a peace was concluded between them <sup>p</sup>, as will be related more at large hereafter <sup>q</sup>. Since that time we have no regular account of the Kháns of this country.

<sup>k</sup> ABUL. p. 309, & seq.
p. 315. 324. 344, & seqq.
p. 356, & seqq. & TAREIR. Hist.
ubi supr. p. 365, & seqq.

<sup>l</sup> Ibid. p. 324.

<sup>m</sup> Ibid.

<sup>n</sup> Ibid. p. 336.

<sup>o</sup> Ibid.

<sup>p</sup> ABULG.

of Karazm, in next chap.

<sup>q</sup> See the history of Uzbek Kháns

(I) In the year 1598, it may be presumed.

(K) About the year 1627.

(L) Perhaps in 1642.

THE Persian historians, according to Texeira, and D'Herbelot, make Abdo'llatîf, son of Kushânji Khân, to succeed Abdo'llah Khân, 1540. The first says, he died the next year; and that in him ended the sovereignty of the successors of Jenghîz Khân, in Mawara'nahr<sup>1</sup>. But this is probably some mistake committed by Texeira, since D'Herbelot says, from the authority of the Lebtarîkh, that Abdo'llatîf was living in the year 1541, when that book was written<sup>2</sup>. However that be, the reader may perceive a wide difference between the account of the Uzbek affairs given by Abûlghazi Khân, and by the Persian historians; although, at the same time, he can be at no loss to determine, which of the two authorities is most fit to be relied on.

A. D.

1540.

Defects of historians.

C H A P. III.

Kingdom of Karazm.

S E C T I.

A Description of Karazm, its Name and Extent, Soil and Produce, Rivers and Lakes.

K A R A Z M, or Karezm, as this Country is called by Abû'l-ghâzi Khân, and the Persian writers, is pronounced by the Arabs Khowarazm; it was known to the antient Greeks by the name of Khorasmia, as appears from Herodotus, Ptolemy, and other authors of that nation. It was in this country, that Kay Khosrû, third king of Persia, of the Kayamian race, defeated and slew Sheidah, son of Afrâsiab, king of Turkestan; and the facility with which this victory was gained, gave name to this province; for Kowarezm, in the Persian language, signifies an easy victory.

THIS kingdom is at present bounded on the north by the country of Turkestan, and the dominions of the great Khân of the Eluths, or Kalmûks: on the east by Great Bukhâria; from which it is separated partly by the mountains of Irdar<sup>3</sup>, and partly by the deserts of Karak and Gâznah: on the south by the provinces of Astcrabâd and Khorassân (A) belonging to Irân, or Persia at large; from which it is divided by the river Jihân, or Amû, and sundry deserts of a vast extent<sup>a</sup> : and on the west by the Caspian sea.

<sup>1</sup> TEX. ubi supr. p. 336.<sup>2</sup> D'HERB. ubi supr. p. 772.<sup>3</sup> See ABULG. Hist. Turks, p. 364.(A) Kämpfer confounds Khorassân with Khowarazm. Amœn. Exot. p. 135.

Soil and
produce.

It may be about 440 miles in length, from south to north ; and 300 from west to east ; being situated between the 39th and 46th degrees of latitude, and the 71st and 77th degrees of longitude. The country consists for the most part of vast sandy plains, like those of Great Tartary. Some of them are barren deserts : but others afford excellent pasture. There is good land in several of the provinces, where vines grow ; of which wine is made : however, water is very scarce ; the rivers being very few, as well as the mountains<sup>b</sup>.

Soil and
produce.

KARAZM, according to Bentink, is extremely fertile, where watered ; and Abûlghazi Khân himself recommends it as a fine country<sup>c</sup>. The melons here, called by this last author Arbûs (and by Jenkinson Karbus), are the true water melons. They are of the size of ordinary gourds, or pumpions ; commonly round, and green on the outside : but within of a much deeper colour than the common melons ; although some are perfectly white : but these are not the best. Their seed is quite black, and shaped like that of the pompion ; but rounder. It is also transparent, and dispersed all through the fruit ; the whole of which is eaten, excepting the rind and seed. The substance is much finer, and of a better flavour, than that of ordinary melons. It is exceedingly cooling, and one may eat as much as he will, without the least danger. The fruit will keep a long time ; on which occasion our author observes, that they carry them from Astrakhân (where they are near as good as in Karazm) to St. Petersburg, for the court of Russia ; and that they are as good in the middle of winter, as in their proper season : but he adds, that they are gathered green, and ripen afterwards<sup>d</sup>.

Rivers.

KARAZM owes all its fertility, in a manner, to three rivers, and a great lake. The rivers are the Amû, Khesil, and Sir. The Amû, as it is called by the Uzbeks and Persians, is the Jihân of the Arabs, and Oxus of the ancient Greeks. It has its source to the N. N. E. of the kingdom of Kashmîr, towards the frontiers of Little Bukhâria, in those high mountains, which separate it from the dominions of the Great Mogul. It crosseth the southern part of Great Bukhâria, from east to west ; then, winding northwestward along the borders of that country, enters Karazm in the same direction ; and, forty leagues from its mouth, divides in two arms or branches.

<sup>b</sup> Short way to know the world, or Compend. of Mod. Geogr. p. 253. <sup>c</sup> Hist. Turks, ubi supr. p. 230, & 419. <sup>d</sup> Ibid. p. 433, & seq.

That on the left hand, turning westward, falls into the Caspian Rivers and sea (B), towards the borders of the province of Astara, be- lakes.
 longing to Persia. But the right hand branch, which formerly passed before the city of Urghej, and met the sea (C), twelve leagues to the north of the former, about fourscore years ago, quitted its antient chanel, six leagues from the place where it changes its separated from the other branch; and, changing its course bed.
 more to the north, threw itself into the river Khesel, on the other side of the little town of Tûk: so that its old chanel, which ran before Urghej, is at present dry; which, leaving that city destitute of water, has greatly impaired it. The Amû abounds with all sorts of excellent fish: and its banks are the most charming in the world. Along them grow those excellent melons, and other fruits, so much esteemed in Persia, the Indies, and Russia; whither they are carried.

THE river Khesel, Khesil, or Kesil, as the Uzbeks name it, The Khe- rises in the mountains to the north-east of the province of Sogd, sel; or Samarkant; and running westward, with some turning to the north-west, between the Amû and Sîr, falls into the lake of Arâl, fifty or sixty miles after it has been joined by the Amû. The sides of the Khesel are exceedingly fertile, where-ever they are cultivated: but then it must be confessed, that the greater part of them are neglected by the inhabitants: nor do they make use of those excellent pastures which are found along this river; although they are much better than those which enrich the sides of the Amû. At present, there is not its course one considerable town to be seen upon the Khesel. Besides, turned.
 the few small ones, that are situated on it, are half desert: because the Uzbek Tatars, of both Great Bukhâria and Karazm, chuse rather to be near the frontiers of the Persians, than of the Eluths (or Kalmûks), and Karakalpakks; seeing there is more to be gained by their incursions on one side than on the other. The waters of this river are vastly increased by the junction of the Amû, before-mentioned. But, of late years, the Tatars of Karazm have also turned the course of the Khesel from the Caspian sea (D) into the lake of Arâl (or Eagles), on the following occasion.

PETER I. emperor of Russia, having been informed, that Th. Daria, gold ore was found in great abundance on the coast of the Caspian sea, at the mouth of the river Sîr, called also Daria; and judging that a new course of trade, between Siberia and the

(B) Perhaps at the town of Munkishlak.

(C) It fell into the gulf, or bay, of Balkân, or Ataklân.

(D) It fell into Peter's Bay, in the north part of the eastern coast of the Caspian sea, according to D'Anville's Map.

Rivers
and lakes.

southern countries of Asia, might be carried on by means of that river, ordered certain persons, skilled in maritime affairs, to accompany the Kossiks, of Jaik in several of their expeditions along the shores of that sea, in order to discover the mouth of the Daria. These people, finding that no considerable river discharged itself into the Caspian sea, between the Yemb, or Yemba, and the Amu, excepting the Khesel (E), concluded that this must be the river which they looked for : especially as the Kossiks assured them, that it was named Daria : not knowing that the word Daria is an appellative, signifying a river in general, among the Persians (F).

Expedition of Beck-owitz.

HOWEVER that be, after they had founded the entrance of the Khesel, and taken notice of several marks whereby to know it again ; they returned, and made their report to the emperor : who thereupon, in 1719, sent one Brigadier Beckowitz, by the way of Astrakhan, with 2500 men, to take possession of the mouth of that river. He pitched upon that officer, because he was a Cherkassian (G), and understood the Tatar language perfectly well. But the Tatars, growing jealous to see him arrive several times on that occasion, turned the course of the Khesel northwards, by three chanel, the land being low on that side, into the lake of Aral ; and then stopped up the entrance towards the sea : so that Beckowitz, arriving some time after with his vessels to the mouth of the river, found it quite dry.

The Khan's artifice

NOTWITHSTANDING this discouragement, in obedience to his orders, he landed his troops ; and began to build forts thereabouts, as well as the ground, which was exceeding sandy, would permit. They were scarce in a condition of defence, when the Tatars of Kiva (so the Russians call the Usbeks (H), of Karazm), came down upon him with great numbers of troops : but Beckowitz opposed them with so much resolution, that the Khan, who was at the head of them, despairing to conquer him by force, set about to ensnare him by fraud. To this end, he sent to inform him privately, “ that in his heart “ he was sincerely a friend to the Russians, and desired nothing “ more than to see them settled near his own dominions : but “ that at the same time he was obliged to seem their enemy

(E) For the Sir falls into the lake of Aral.

(F) Likewise among the Usbeks.

(G) Webber says he was a Cherkassian prince, captain of the Tsar's guards : that he was immensely rich, and had married the most beautiful lady in all Russia ; and that he had been sent before this, in the year 1715.

(H) From the Khan's camp, called Khiva, or Khivak.

in

“ in appearance, and oppose them, in order to comply with Rivers
 “ the humour of the princes, who were his relations and and lakes.
 “ neighbours. In short, that it was resolved in council to “ make a last effort the day following; and, in case they had “ no better success than in their former attacks, he would do “ his endeavour to bring about an accommodation.”

BECKOWITZ gave credit the more easily to this declaration, as the Khàn had already caused protestations of the same kind to be made at the court of Russia, by an envoy sent for that purpose. Next morning, the Tatars did not fail to renew the attack; which they did with such vigour, that great numbers of them, contrary to custom, alighted off their horses. But having been repulsed, at length, with loss, the Khàn sent one of his Mursa's to the Russian general, to know on what account he had landed an army in his dominions, and what he wanted? Hereupon Beckowitz demanded, that the sluices, made in the river Khefil, should be stopped up; and the mouth of it opened again, that so the current might resume its former course. The Tatars having remonstrated that it was not in their power to dam up the chanel, the water ran into them with much rapidity; Beckowitz offered to go and do it with his own troops, provided they gave him hostages for his security. As this was just what the Tatars wanted, they readily agreed to his demands.

HEREUPON the Russian commander, leaving some men to The Rus- guard the forts, set forward with the rest to execute his de- siants slain.
 sign: but the hostages, who served for guides, led him thro' places quite desert, where there were only certain holes of stagnant water, not sufficient for his troops; so that, after five days march, they found themselves quite destitute of means to quench their thirst. In this distress, their guides proposed to divide into several bodies, and march by different roads, that they might the more easily find a supply. Beckowitz was obliged to consent to this proposal, although he saw the danger of it. In short, the Russians having thus separated into parties, the Tatars surrounded them, one after another, and, slaying their leader (I), with most of his men, carried the rest into slavery. When they, who were left in the forts, heard of this misfortune, they reembarked, and returned to Astrakhân.

THE lake of Arâl, that is Eagles, before-mentioned, separates the province of Arâl, to which it gives name, from the La'e of eastern provinces of Karazm. It is one of the largest in the

(I) Webber says, that, refusing to kneel on the red cloth, in order to be beheaded, they ham-

Rivers
and lakes.

north parts of Asia ; being above 25 German leagues in length, from south to north ; about half as much in breadth, from east to west ; and above eighty in circumference. Its waters are exceeding salt, and breed great quantities of the same sorts of fish which are found in the Caspian sea ; with which, however, it does not seem to have any communication : neither does it ever overflow its banks ; although it receives the waters of the Sîr, the Khêsel, and several other smaller rivers. The Karakalpâks, who inhabit the northern coast of it, towards the mouth of the Sîr, and the Turkmâns of the province of Arâl, in summer, convey the water of this lake, by means of small canals or ditches, into the neighbouring plains ; whose surface, when the moisture is exhale by the sun's heat, is covered with a fine crust of crystalline salt : with which the inhabitants of all Karazm and Turkestân are plentifully supplied <sup>c</sup>.

affords
much salt ;

situation
and extent.

ACCORDING to Kyri'llow's map of the Russian empire, this lake resembles in figure the Caspian sea, and is more than half as long : being 340 miles from south to north, and 160 broad in the south part ; although not half that breadth in the north end : but, in all probability, these dimensions are too great, as well as its distance from the Caspian sea ; which is there made to be 200 miles. Into this great lake the Khêfil discharges itself, on the south side, by three canals ; and the Sîr, on the north side, by two : of which last river we have given an account elsewhere.

S E C T. II.

Provinces of Karazm.

Provinces. KARAZM is divided into many provinces, as appears from Abûlg'hâzi Khân's history, who mentions several of them ; which Beitink, his commentator, has succinctly described. From him, therefore, we shall insert an account of them ; which will be of great use to the reader, in perusing the subsequent history of the Khâns of this country. These provinces, so far as we know of them, are twenty in number ; which that author mentions in the following order.

Ogurza. 1. OGURZA (or Ogurja), is a large province, situate towards the coast of the Caspian sea. It was very fertile heretofore, when the northern branch of the river Amû, which ran through it, took another course : since that time it became a desert, for want of water to moisten its lands. This country takes its name from the great quantity it formerly produced Provinces. of cucumbers ; which, both in the Tatarian and Russian language, is called Ogurza.

<sup>c</sup> ABULGH. Hist. ubi supr. p. 444, & seqq.

2. PISHGA, a little province, situate to the east of the Pishga city of Urgheñj ; which has been but thinly inhabited ever since the northern branch of the river Amú ceased to pass through it, as formerly.

3. KARAKIZIT (or Karakijit), a small province, situated between those of Pishga and Ogurza, which is grown very thin of people, since the river Amú deserted Urgheñj ; to the west of which it lies.

4. GHILKUPRUK, a small province, situated to the south of the southern branch of the river Amú, in the confines of the provinces of Khorassân and Astarabâd.

5. GORDISH, a little province lying between those of Gordish. Pishga and Kumkant. It is one of the most fruitful, and best cultivated, in all Karazm, as being watered by the Amú ; which in this country quitted its old chanel to join the Khesel, as before-mentioned.

6. THE small province of Kumkant lies to the east of Gordish, towards the northern banks of the river Amú ; which in the borders of those two provinces divides into two branches.

7. YANGHI (or Yenghi) Shâhr, a little province, near the right bank of the southern branch of the river Amú ; which is of no great consequence at present.

8. BURMA, one of the largest provinces of Karazm, to the east of the city of Wazîr, towards the frontiers of Great Bukhâria. It is very populous, as well as fertile ; and produces the most delicious melons in all the kingdom.

9. BAYALKIRI, a little province to the north of Urgheñj. It is very sandy, and desert ; because it wants water.

10. KESIL Rabat lies towards the Khesel, or Kesil, and to the north-west of the town of Tûk. This little province is very populous, and produceth all kinds of delicious fruits in abundance.

11. GARDANKHAST, a large province, situate between the cities of Khayuk and Hazârâsb (A). It has pretty good pasturage ; and is almost wholly peopled by the Sarts, who are the antient inhabitants of Karazm.

12. YANGHI-ARIK, a small province on the north side of the Amú, and bordering on Great Bukhâria ; at the foot of the mountains which separate it from Karazm.

13. BAKIRGAN, a large province, on the north side of the river Khesel, and north-east of the town of Tûk.

(A) In the French, Hassarasap.

- Provinces.* 14. KUIGAN, another large province, north of Bakirgan and the Khesel, extending as far as the borders of the Karakalpaks and the Kalmuks (or Eluths). It consists, for the most part, of vast plains; producing excellent pasture, like all the other sandy grounds of Great Tartary.
- Ikzi Kumani.* 15. IKZI Kumani (B), a little province towards the southern banks of the Khesel, and west of the territory of Khayuk.
- Khika.* 16. KHIKA, another small province on the south side of the Khesel. It lies east of the territory of Ták, and west of the province of Ikzi Kumani.
- Tarkhân.* 17. TARKHAN, a little province, situate to the north of the Khesel, and west of Bakirgan. It abounds with excellent pastures: but lies uncultivated.
- Bamaburinak.* 18. BAMABURINAK, a little province to the north of the Khesel, towards the southern coast of the lake of Arál, and west of the province of Tarkhân.
- Koghertlik.* 19. KOGHERTLIK, a large province, situate on the borders of Great Bukhâria, and north of the province of Tan-ghiarik.
- Arál.* 20. THE province of Arál, towards the coasts of the Caspian sea, is very large; extending from the mountains of Abûl-kân, to the north of the old mouth of the northern branch of the Amû; which is now dry, as far as the country of the Karakalpaks. This part of Karazm is, at present, almost wholly inhabited by Turkmâns; who find there, in many places, excellent pasture for their flocks. But, for the general, the province of Arál, which takes its name from the lake before described, is mountainous, sandy, and barren <sup>a</sup>.
- Other provinces.* BESIDES the provinces above described, Abû'lghazi Khân mentions others in his history; particularly, those of Abû'l Khân and Dehestân <sup>b</sup>. The first seems to be situate where the mountain of Abû'l Khân stands, on the north side of the ancient chanel of the northern branch of the Amû; and the latter properly belongs to the province of Khorassân, bordering on that of Jerjân.

<sup>a</sup> ABULGH. Hist. p. 434.<sup>b</sup> Ibid. p. 235.

(B) Or Ikzi Kumani. This seems to be a remains of the Kumani, or Komani; a warlike nation, who, for a long time, possessed the country along the north side of the Caspian sea, as far as the river Don, till conquered by Jenghiz Khân, and his successors in Kipjâk.

S E C T. III.

The Cities, and other remarkable Places, of Karazm.

KARAZM was in former times full of cities, towns, and castles; remarkable for their beauty, strength, and abundance of people. This was its case, it may be presumed, for a long series of ages, as well antiently under its own kings, as while it was a province of the Persian and Arabian empires; but, in all probability, it flourished most when it became an independent kingdom under the family of the Kharazm Khâns; who annexed to it, by conquest, all Irân, or Persia at large; and Turân, or the countries to the north of the Jihûn, or Amû; forming a great empire, of which Orkanj was the capital. But at present the cities of Karazm are but few, and reduced below the condition of ordinary towns, through the destructive power of the Usbeks; who have brought ruin and poverty where-ever they settled <sup>a</sup>.

Cities and towns.

Full of cities.

ORKANJ, or, as it may also be written Urgheñj, is still the capital. This, we are told, is the Mungl name which it took after the time of Jenghiz Khân <sup>b</sup>; before it seems to have had the name of the country Karazm, or Khovarazm, as we often find it was called. The Persians, instead of Orkanj, write Korkanj. In the tables of Abulfeda, Nâssiro'ddîn, and Ulugh Beg, we find two cities of the name of Korkanj; Great Korkanj, or Nu Korkanj, and Korkanj the Lesser, or Jorjanîya, of Khovarazm, to distinguish it, doubtless, from Jorjaniya, of Persia. The first was the metropolis of the country; and both were situated on the west side of the Jihûn (or Amu), ten miles asunder <sup>c</sup>. At present it is called Urgheñj, or Urkenj, by the Usbeks; for so Abû'lghâzi Khân names it (A). Jenkinson writes it Urgence <sup>d</sup>; and Johnsen, his fellow-traveller, from a merchant of Bokhara, Urgensh, and Urgense <sup>e</sup>. The English traveller, at the end of Tavernier, says, that some call it Yurgench; others Jurgench, which comes near Jorjaniyah: he likewise writes Urgensh <sup>f</sup>. Whence this variety of names arises, we know not; unless from the custom of different nations, to alter the names of foreign places.

Orkanj, or Urgensh.

<sup>a</sup> ABULG. Hist. ubi supr. p. 438.

<sup>b</sup> LA CROIX Hist.

Geng. p. 240.

<sup>c</sup> ABULFEDA Deser. Chowarasm. p. 23.

26. Edit. Hudson.

<sup>d</sup> PURCHAS. Pilgr. vol. iii. p. 236.

<sup>e</sup> HAKL. Collect. vol. i. p. 335.

<sup>f</sup> P. 115.

(A) In the French and English translations it is written Urgens; the g being hard, according to the German orthography; so that it answers to Urgheñs, or Urkens: but in the name, as given by the English authors, it is doubtless soft, or stands for j consonant.

THIS

Cities and towns.

Its ruinous state;

THIS city, call it Orkanj, Jurjench, or Urjenſh, is situated in a great plain, to the north of the river Amû, twenty-five German leagues from the eastern shores of the Caspian ſea. The place was very conſiderable in the ages paſt : but ſince the Tatars became its maſters, it has fallen ſo much to decay, that, at preſent, it makes but a pitiful figure, being no more than a great ſcrambling town, about a league in circumference. This is owing partly to the diſorderly government of the Uzbeks, and partly to the deſertion of the northern branch of the Amû, which formerly ran by the walls of the city ; but having, for ſome time paſt, taken another courſe, and by that means deprived both the city and its territory of water, it has cauſed many of the inhabitants to forſake it, and rendered the neighbouring country barren, which before was very fruitful.

walls and caſtle ;

THE walls of Urjenſh are of ſun-burnt bricks, with a kind of ditch, which is very narrow, and full of rubbiſh in ſeveral places. The houſes alſo are no better than paltry cabbins of earth. It has indeed a caſtle, built with bricks ; but ſo ruinous, that ſcarce a fourth part of it is inhabitable. The brick moſks likewiſe are nearly in as bad a condition : for the Tatars in general are very ready to deſtroy buildings ; but very backward either to erect any new ones, or to keep the old in repair. The only thing belonging to this city, which they take any care of at preſent, is a great broad ſtreet, towards the middle of it ; which ſerves for the common market-place, and is covered from one end to the other, to preſerve the goods ſold there from the weather. Although Urjenſh is ſituated very conveniently for commerce, being the rendezvous of all the buſineſs carried on between the Bukhârs and the countries on the weſt ſide of the Caspian ſea, yet, at preſent, the trade is very inconfiderable : becauſe foreign merchants, finding no ſecurity among the Mohammedan Tatars, very few of them will venture thither. The ordinary duties paid at Urjenſh are no more than three per Cent. : but the extraordinary amount, very frequently, beyond the whole merchandizes.

trade inconſider-able ;

THE Khâns of Karazm commonly winter in this town ; but in ſummer they encamp on the banks of the Amû, or in ſome other agreeable place of the country, as beſt ſuits their convenience.

capital of Karazm ;

URJENSH has not always been the capital of Karazm. According to Abû'lſeda, Kath, or Kat, was formerly the metropolis<sup>h</sup>. The governor of Karazm was surprised in this Cities and city by him of Jorjân, in Persia, in the reign of Nâh ibn towns. Manfûr, of the Sammânian family<sup>i</sup>. How long it continued so is uncertain: nor does it appear on what occasion the royal seat was removed, as it seems to have been, from Urjensb; though possibly that happened on account of the inundation which once ruined it<sup>k</sup>. However that be, Urjensb, under the name perhaps of the city of Karazm, was, in all probability, the seat of the Karazmian empire, founded by Kothbô'ddîn, in 489; and so continued ever since, excepting now-and-then that the Uzbek Khâns have thought fit to reside for a while at Wazîr, Khayuk, or some other place.

A. D.
1092.

ALTHOUGH at present Urjensb is reduced to so low a state, once very yet it was once, like all the other cities of this country, both great; rich and populous. In the year 582, when Soltân Shâh besieged it, the inhabitants, who had submitted to his elder brother Takaşb, were so numerous, that they kept their gates open in his view<sup>l</sup>: and thirty years after, when Jenghiz Khân took it, in 1221, the Mungls put 100,000, some say 200,000, people to the sword<sup>m</sup>. Urjensb began to flourish again under the family of the Sofi's; and was a great city, when Timûr Bek (or Tamerlan), having, in 1379, taken (C) it from Yusef Sofi, and conquered the kingdom, caused it to be razed in 1388, and the ground sowed with barley<sup>n</sup>. It is probable, that it was repaired three years after, when, by the conqueror's order, the country was repeopled, and restored to its antient splendor. But from that time, it may be presumed, that Urjensb never was able to recover itself; and the government of the Uzbeks, which since then it has fallen under, so injurious to commerce, joined to the inconveniences attending the turning of the river Amû off from the town, has completed its ruin<sup>o</sup>.

A. D.
1186.

URJENSCH seems to have been in no better condition at present when Mr. Jenkinson was there, in 1558, as appears from his miserable account of it; which is as follows. The city, or town, stands on level ground: its walls, as well as houses, are of earth; and, by estimation, four miles in compass. The buildings within it are ruined, and out of good order. It hath one long

<sup>h</sup> Descr. Chowar. p. 27.

<sup>i</sup> TEXEIR. Hist. Pers. p. 160.

<sup>k</sup> Descr. Chowar. p. 23.

<sup>l</sup> D'HERBEL. Bibl. orient. p. 835.

art. Takash.

<sup>m</sup> LA CROIX, Hist. Gengh. p. 256.

<sup>n</sup> Hist.

Tim. Bek, vol. i. p. 306.

<sup>o</sup> ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, p.

440, & seqq.

(C) Korkanj Minor was then the regal seat, according to La Croix, in the notes.

Street;

Cities and towns. street; which is covered above, and is the place of their market. It has been won and lost four times within seven years, by civil wars. Hence it comes to pass, that there are but few merchants dwelling in it; and these so poor, that he could not sell above four pieces of kersey in the whole town. The chief commodities sold there come from Boghâr (or Bokkâra), and Persia; but in very small quantities, not worth mentioning. All the country from the Caspian sea to this city is called the land of Turkmân, and is subject to the Khân<sup>p</sup>, its latitude.

THE latitude of this city, as given by the same author, is 42 degrees, 18 minutes<sup>q</sup>: which seems the more exact, as it differs but one minute from that assigned it by the most famous oriental astronomers (E). This English traveller, who passed through Karazm in his way to Boghâr, or Bokkâra, mentions two or three other places in the country, as Manguislaw, Sellizûr, and Kayt.

Manguislaw.

MANGUSLAU, a very good port, twelve leagues within a bay. Both governor and people proved very bad, as exacting double the ordinary price of carriage and provisions. Jenkinson gives the latitude of this place 45 degrees: but, in all probability, it is the same place with Mankisblak, hereafter-mentioned; and, consequently, cannot have more than about 40 degrees of latitude.

Sellizûr.

SELLIZUR, called also Shayzûr, is twenty-four days journey of the karawâns from Manguislaw, and two from Urgensh. It was a castle, seated on a high hill, where then resided the king, called Azim (F) Khân, with three of his brothers. The palace was not strong, being built of earth, and made a poor figure.

Fruits and grain.

To the south of the castle the land is low, but very fertile; producing many good fruits, particularly one called a Dinie. It is very large, and full of moisture; the people eating it after meat, instead of drink. There is another, called Karbûs (G), the size of a great cucumber, yellow, and sweet as sugar. Here is also a certain corn, called Jegur, whose stalk resembles a sugar-cane, and is as tall; but the grain is like

<sup>p</sup> PURCH. ubi supr.

<sup>q</sup> HAKLUYT collect. vol. i. p. 335.

(E) Viz 42° 17' according to Albirûni, a native of Karazm; which latitude was afterwards adopted by Ulugh Beg, in his tables. sim; that is, Hazim, or rather Hajim; the ds being commonly used to express the English j consonant.

(F) In the translations of Abû'lchâzi Khân's history, Had-

(G) Or Arbus, before described.

rice, growing at the top like a cluster of grapes. The water with which all this country is supplied, is conveyed by canals out of the Oxus (or Amû); so that it falleth not into the Caspian sea, as formerly: and, in a short time, all that land is likely to become a wilderness, for want of water<sup>r</sup>. Which prediction of our author has come to pass.

THE towns besides Urjensb, mentioned by Abû'lghazi Khân, and described by Bentink, are the following seven:

TUK, a little town, six leagues to the north-east of Tûk. Urjensb, at a small distance from the southern bank of the Khesel.

KHAYUK lies towards the borders of Great Bukhâria, half a day's journey from the river Khesel. It is the best city in all Karazm, next to Urjensb: yet the houses are no better than miserable cabbins, being as inconvenient within as without. The neighbouring country is fertile enough; but very ill cultivated. However, one meets there with some vines; which the Sarts, who dwell in this town, take care of. They make also a kind of red wine, which is pretty good.

WAZIR, situated towards the northern bank of the river Amû; but, like the rest of the towns, is at present inconsiderable.

KUMKALA is a small town, in the middle of Karazm, to the north of Wazîr; but not worth taking notice of.

THE town of Kâht (Kâth, or Kât (H)), is situated on the north side of the Khesel, towards Great Bukhâria; and is of consequence at present only on account of its passage over that river.

HAZARASB, situated on the north side of the Khesel (I), is also become inconsiderable, since it fell into the hands of the Uzbeks.

MANKISHLAK, a small town on the shore of the Caspian sea, on the north side of the southern branch mouth of the river Amû (K). The town itself is inconsiderable, consisting

<sup>r</sup> PURCH. ubi supr.

(H) Abû'lfeda calls it Kâth; Jenkinson, Kait; and only says, it is a castle, where Soltân Saramet resided. Purch. Pilgr. vol. iii. p. 237. It was formerly the capital of Karazm; and there were two of the name, as well as of Orkanj, or Urjensb.

unless it be a town of modern building: for Abû'lfeda places it on the Jibûn, or Amû. The name signifies, in Persian, a thousand horses.

(K) This situation is agreeable to what may be inferred from Abû'lghâzi Khân's history; who frequently mentions it, as lying towards the bottom of the

Caspian

Cities and towns.

sisting of about 700 houses, or rather pitiful cabbins, built of earth; but its port is magnificent, and the only one to be found in all that sea. As it is large, secure, and deep, it would in any other hands but those of the Tatars, soon become a place of great trade; but, at present, seldom any ships arrive there (L). The town is inhabited only by Turkmâns, who can bear the neighbourhood of the sea better than the Uzbeks <sup>s</sup>.

Other
cities.

ABU' LGHAZI Khân mentions several other towns of Karazm in his history, besides the preceding <sup>c</sup>. The Uzbeks of this country have likewise some others in Khorassân; which, by degrees, they conquered from the Persians. As Durûn, Nasay (or Nesâ), İbürd (or Bawerd), Mahân, Bâghabâd, Tawrsurdi, and Marû. These places however were, in all likelihood, recovered from them a few years ago by the late Nâder Shâh; who, we are told, chastised them severely, and drove them beyond the river Amû. But whether they have not taken the opportunity of the troubles which arose in Irân, or Persia, on that prince's death, to re-enter into possession of those cities, is what we cannot venture to assure our readers.

S E C T. IV.

The Inhabitants of Karazm; their Manners, and Customs.

KARAZM is at present inhabited by three sorts of people; the Sarts, the Turkmâns, and the Uzbek Tatars.

The Sarts.

WITH regard to the first of these, we are only told, that they are the ancient inhabitants of the country, and support them-

<sup>s</sup> BENTINK Hist. Turks, p. 442, & seqq. & alibi.

<sup>t</sup> Ibid. p. 235.

Caspian sea: and, as Jenkinson, in his passage from Manguslau to Urjensh, came to the bay where formerly the Oxus, or Amû, fell into the Caspian sea before it was turned into another river, Manguslau, must, we presume, be the same with Man-kishlâk. For the mouth of the dry channel lies in a latitude considerably more south than Urjensh; and it is not likely, if Manguslau was in the north part of the Caspian sea, that they should travel so far south, and round about, instead of taking the direct and shorter road thro' the country. Either, therefore, Jenkinson, or the printer, mistook as to the latitude of Manguslau, or some other particulars, or his journal was corrupted; as we have been credibly informed it was, to serve some particular purposes.

(L) In the flourishing times of the Karazmian empire, it may be presumed, a great trade was carried themselves, like the Turkmâns, by their cattle and husbandry<sup>a</sup>. The Turk-

 What we are to understand by the antient inhabitants, seems mâns.
 not easy to determine : whether the original inhabitants, who first possessed the country ; or those who were settled there before the Uzbeks became masters of it : which latter is most probable. Nor is it so likely that they are a people sprung from one and the same stock, as a mixed people, composed of the remains of Persians, Arabs, Turks, and other Tatar tribes, who have successively conquered the country ; especially those of the latter kind, which their way of living in good measure confirms. But as neither Abûlghâzi Khân, nor his commentator Bentink, has thought fit to give us any light into the original or history of these Sarts, we must confess ourselves unable to satisfy the curiosity of our readers.

1. Of the Turkmâns.

THE Turkmâns, or Turkomâns, as our historians call them, Turk- came originally from Turkesân, or the parts of Tartary to mans, the north of Karazm and Great Bûkhâriâ. They separated their ori- from the Kankli, with whom they dwelt in that country, to- gin.
 wards the eleventh century, with an intent to seek their fortune somewhere else ; and settled in Karazm long before the Tatars, as Abûlghâzi Khân relates. They divided into two parties, one of which went round the north side of the Cas- pian sea, and settled in the western parts of the greater Ar- menia ; from thence called Turkomania, or the country of the Turkmâns. The second party turned south, and rested about the banks of the river Amû, and the shores of the Cas- pian sea (A) : where they still possess a great number of towns and villages, in the countries of Karazm and Astara- bâd, a province of Irân, or Persia at large.

THIS branch of the Turkmâns has been hitherto unknown Oriental to the European historians and geographers ; although they Turk- are much more numerous at present than that of the western mâns : Turkmâns. The authors who have given extracts from the eastern writers, take but little notice of them ; and others relate no more of their history than what occurs in the Byzan- tine and such western historiographers, who lived at too great a distance to be acquainted with their affairs.

<sup>a</sup> BENTINK Hist. Turks, p 235.

carried on here ; and it is still a place of passage for ships from the coast of Shirvân and other parts of the Caspian sea.

possessed of all the coast from Manguslau, where he landed, till he left the shore, four days before he reached Sellizâr.

(A) Jenkinson found them

*The Turk-
mâns.* THE Turkmâns seem to be descended from the Turks, or to differ from them, only as the wandering Arabs, called Badwîns, who live under tents, do from those who dwell in cities. As the western branch of the Turkmâns formed the famous dynasties, under the denominations of the Black and White Sheep, in Armenia, and the neighbouring provinces; so from this eastern branch some oriental authors derive the three famous dynasties of the Seljûk Soltâns, who, for several ages, held in subjection the countries of Asia from the Archipelago to Hindîstân.

*shape,
dress, religion:*

THE Turkmâns of this latter branch are shaped much like the western: that is, are tall and robust, with square flat faces; only they are much swarthier, and have a greater resemblance of the Tatars. In summer they wear long gowns of calico, or thick cloth; and, in winter, sheep-skin gowns, of the same kind. Cattle and agriculture afford them subsistence, according to the different parts they possess. In winter they inhabit towns and villages about the river Amû, and towards the coasts of the Caspian sea. In summer they encamp where they can meet with the best pastures, and good water. They all profess the Mohammedan worship. Such of them as are settled in the country of Astarabâd generally follow the Persian sect; but they who dwell in Karazm conform with the Uzbek Tatars in sentiments of religion: although neither one nor the other give themselves much trouble about it.

*character,
and number.*

THESE eastern Turkmâns are exceedingly restless, and with great difficulty submit to the Tatar yoke. They are very brave, and, at least, as good horsemen, but not so great robbers, as the Uzbeks: by whom being treated as conquered subjects, they are obliged to pay tribute, and suffer several other impositions. To this is principally to be imputed the great animosity which they bear those rigid masters: but the Turkmâns who dwell under the dominion of the Persians are treated in a much better manner. Both together may amount to 100,000 families. These people are still divided into tribes, like all the other branches of the Turkish nation; and their chiefs enjoy the same prerogatives<sup>b</sup>.

*Their
tribes;*

ABU'LGHAZI Khân, who was a great enemy to the Turkmâns, and from time to time destroyed great numbers of them, makes frequent mention of them, on several occasions: sometimes according to the country they inhabit; as the Turkmâns of Mankîshblâk, Abûlkhân, and Dehîstân<sup>c</sup>: which last

<sup>b</sup> BENTINK ap. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 426, & seq.
p. 235.

<sup>c</sup> Ibid.

territory belongs to Persia : but oftener by the names of their The Uzbek respective tribes. The principal of which are, 1st, Adâkli beks. Khîsser-ili. These dwell on both sides of the Amû, from the province of Pishga to that of Karakîzet<sup>d</sup>. 2. Ali-ili, inhabiting from the province of Karakîzet to the mountain of Abû'lkhân. 3. Ti-u-azi, who possess the rest of the banks of the Amû, from Abû'lkhân to the sea. These three tribes are named Utzil<sup>e</sup>. Besides these three tribes, we meet with the names of several others, whose particular settlements are not mentioned; viz. Taka, Sârik, Yamut, Irsîri, Khorassân Saluri<sup>f</sup> (these five made formerly no more than one tribe), Itzki Saluri, Hassan Ikdur, Jândur, Arabâz, Koklan, Adâkliş, Karamit<sup>h</sup>, and some others, less considerable<sup>i</sup>.

JENKINSON remarks, in his travels to Bokhâra, that their all the country from the Caspian sea to Urgens is called the country. land of Turkmân; and that the inhabitants between that sea and the castle of Sellizur, as well as of all the countries about that sea, live without either town or house, in the open fields; removing from place to place in great companies, with their cattle<sup>k</sup>.

2. Of the Uzbek Tatars.

The name of Uzbeks, which the Tatars of Karazm and Name and Great Bukhâria bear at present, is derived from Uzbek origin. Khân of Kipjâk, as related by Abû'lghazi Khân<sup>l</sup>: and this custom, to assume the name of the prince, in token of his people's affection, has always been in use with the inhabitants of Tartary: of which we have instances in the names of the Moguls, or Mungls, Tatars, and the like.

WHEN Ilbârs Soltân was invited by the inhabitants of Urgenish to come and take possession of Karazm<sup>m</sup>, about the year 911, the Uzbeks possessed all the country of Kipjâk (or Kapchâk), eastward to the river Irtish, and southward as far as the river Sîr, besides Great Bukharia, which they had newly subdued under the conduct of Shâh Bakht (*) Soltân. This prince likewise added to his other conquests the greater part of Khorassân, with Karazm, which then depended on that province. However, only a small number of Uzbeks seem to have settled in the country, till such time as Ilbârs, and his brother, brought the rest of them out of Kipjâk.

A. D.
1505.

THE body of Uzbek Tatars, both in Karazm and Great Uzbek

<sup>d</sup> BENTINK ap. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 236. <sup>e</sup> Ibid. p. 236 tribes.
& 239. <sup>f</sup> Ibid. p. 238. <sup>g</sup> Ibid. <sup>h</sup> Ibid. p. 256. <sup>i</sup> Ibid.
p. 238. <sup>k</sup> PURCH. Pilgr. vol. iii. p. 237. <sup>l</sup> ABU'LGH. Hist.
Turks, &c. p. 235. <sup>m</sup> Ibid. 226.

(*) See p. 124. Note B.

The Uz-
beks.

Bukhâria, is composed out of four tribes; viz. the Vigûrs, or Oygûrs, Naymâns, Durmâns, and Kunkurats, or Kongorats. The two first were of the four given to Sheybani Khân, son of Fuji Khân<sup>n</sup>. On which occasion a certain author observes, that if all the inhabitants of Kipjâk took the name of Uzbeks from Uzbek Khân, it is strange none but those four should retain it. Nor is there any accounting, why the Tatars of Krim are not called Uzbeks; but, by supposing either, that the name extended only to those four tribes, and that the subjects of Uzbek Khân were limited to them; or else, that the rest of the Tatars, who inhabited Kipjâk, changed it by degrees, according to the above-mentioned custom, so much in use with them.

away of
living;

THE Uzbeks, for the most part, live by rapine, resembling in all respects those of Great Bukhâria; excepting that they are far less polite, and more restless. They dwell in winter in the towns and villages which are towards the middle of Karazm; and in summer the greater part of them encamp in the neighbourhood of the river Amû, and in other places where they can meet with favourable pasture for their cattle; always waiting for some convenient opportunity to rob and destroy. They never cease making incursions upon the adjacent territories of Persia or Great Bukhâria; and are to be restrained by no treaties or engagements whatever, in regard all their riches and support consist in the slaves and plunder, which they carry off on those occasions.

encamp for convenience

ALTHOUGH there are excellent pasture-lands in many parts of the country towards the banks of the Khêzel, yet the Uzbeks seldom remove thither with their cattle in summer; because there is nothing to plunder on that side: for the Kara Kâlpâks (or Mankâts), who are their northern neighbours, are as dexterous at the business as themselves; and what they can find to steal from one another is not worth the trouble of going for. Beside, the Mohammedan Tatars do not make mutual incursions, unless they are at open war together. As for the Kalmûks (or Eluths), who border on Karazm to the north-east, they usually quit the borders of the Mohammedan Tatars towards the beginning of summer, that they may not be exposed to their inroads; and return not thither again till the winter, when the rains and snow have rendered the roads impassable on that side.

of making inroads:

HENCE it is that none but the Sarts and Turkmâns reap the benefit of the pastures. The former seek those which lie eastward, towards Great Bukhâria, and the Turkmâns go in quest of such as are situated towards the shores of the Caspian The Uz- sea, and mouth of the Amû. However, the Uzbeks frequently encamp on the sides of this river; where they are at hand to throw themselves into the Persian provinces, on the first occasion which presents, and carry off wherewithal to make good cheer in the winter. Although the Uzbeks have fixed habitations, yet, in travelling from one place to another, they carry with them all their effects of value, like the Eluths and Mungls; conformable to the way of living in use among their ancestors before they had settled dwellings<sup>o</sup>.

ACCORDING to Jenkinson, these Tatars never ride without their bow, arrows, and sword, although it be in hawking, or taking any other pleasure. They have no arts or sciences among them, but live an idle life; sitting round in great companies in the fields, and passing their time in idle discourse. They have not the use of bread: neither do they till or sow. They are great devourers of flesh; which they cut in small pieces, and eat greedily by handfuls: especially horse-flesh. Their chief drink is sour mare's milk, like that in use with the Nogays; with which they will get drunk. They have no rivers, nor places of water, in this country, from Manguslau, where the author landed, to the bay where he arrived, twenty stages distant; excepting some wells of brackish water, more than two days journey asunder. They eat their victuals upon the ground, sitting with their legs double under them; which is their posture also when they pray.

THE same author observes, that the inhabitants dwelling between the Caspian sea and Urjensh (including, without doubt, the Uzbeks as well as Turkmâns) have abundance of camels, horses, and sheep, both wild and tame. Their sheep are extraordinary large, with great tails, weighing sixty or eighty pounds. There are many wild horses in the country, which the Tatars frequently kill with their hawks. These birds are lured to seize upon the head or neck of the beast; which, being tired at length with toiling to get rid of this cruel enemy, the hunter, who follows his game, comes up and kills him. There grows no grass throughout this part of the country, but a brush or heath; which yet is very fattening. Jenkinson adds, that these people have not the use of gold, silver, or any other coin; but barter their cattle for necessaries<sup>p</sup>.

PERHAPS this author speaks of the Turkmâns only in this respect: for we find there is money in the kingdom; parti-

<sup>o</sup> BENTINCK ap. Hist. Turks, p. 429, & seqq.
 P PURCH.
 Iligr. vol. iii. p. 237.

cularly

Government.

cularly a piece of silver called Tanga (B), which is current both in Karazm and Great Bukharia. It is large, and Bentink believes the only silver money coined by the Khân of these provinces. This is round, pretty fine, and in value near the fourth part of a crown. It has on one side the name of the country, and on the other that of the country with the year of the Hejrah. The rest of the money made in this country consists in small pieces of copper, of different sizes, which answer to our pence, half-pence, and farthings. The money of Persia passes also in these provinces, especially towards the borders of that country<sup>a</sup>.

S E C T. V.

The Government and Revolutions of Karazm.

The Khân's authority.

KARAZM is commonly divided among divers princes of the same house; of whom, notwithstanding, only one has the title of Khân, with a kind of superiority over the others, just as he has power or skill to improve it. The usual place of his residence is Urjensb, or some other city which he chuses; although, during the summer, he, for the general, encamps on the sides of the river Amû. And, as his camp is called Khiva, his subjects are commonly denominated the Tatars of Khiva (C). This Khân is sovereign in his own dominions, and in no sort depends on him of Great Bukharia, or any other prince<sup>a</sup>.

JENKINSON informs us, that, in 1558, when he was in this country (which, however, he no-where names) it was in the hands of six brothers; one of whom, called Power of Azîm (D), had the title of Khân: but adds, that he was the prince. very little obeyed, excepting in his own territory, and the place where he resided (E). For that each would be king in

<sup>a</sup> BENTINK ap. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 428. & seq.

<sup>a</sup> Ibid. p. 423.

(B) Abûlgâzi Khân mentions it in his history, p. 239.

(C) That is by the Russians, as hath been observed before, in the account of Beckovitz's expedition to discover the Daria.

(D) In Abûlgâzi Khân's history written Hadjim, which may be pronounced either Hazim or Hajim. He was elected

Khân in 1557, and had five brothers living.

(E) He dwelt then, according to Jenkinson, at Sellizûr. two or three stages west of Urjensb; of which last Ali Soltân was king. We shall find, in the following history of the Khâns that Ali Soltân had for his share, Urjensb, Hazarâsb, and Kât.

the

the share which belonged to him; and one brother fought continually to destroy another, for want of natural affection: which our author ascribes to their being born of different women, and commonly the children of slaves. Every Khân or Soltân hath at least four or five wives (F), besides concubines. These brothers are generally at war together; and when any of them is vanquished he flies to the desert, with his followers; and there lives, by robbing the karawâns, and all they meet with, till he is strong enough to invade some of his brothers again <sup>b</sup>.

NOR is it difficult to bring this about: for Bentink observes, that as the Turkmâns, who were the first occupants, are always in opposition to the Uzbeks, the princes of the reigning house know how to make use of this jealousy, and draw to their side the faction which thinks itself neglected by the Khân. It is to this extreme facility of making a party, that those troubles, which continually distract Karazm, are principally owing.

THIS state can with ease set on foot forty or fifty thousand able horse. What Abû'lghâzi Khân reports of his infantry and musketeers <sup>c</sup>, shews that he had profited by his imprisonment in Persia: for, before his time, that way of fighting was intirely unknown to the Uzbeks. Nor do they seem to have retained that kind of warfare: for, at present, they take the field only on horse-back; and it is a rarity to see fire-arms among them <sup>d</sup>.

KARAZM is an antient kingdom, and hath undergone a great many revolutions. In the time of Herodotus it was subject to Persia, having been one of the provinces over which Darius placed Satrapas. But nothing very material occurs concerning it, till it was possessed by the Arabs, in the year 61, and for a long time after; farther than that it was a province of their empire, under a governor, like the rest of the countries conquered by them. Upon the declension of the power of the Khalîfahs, when the governors seized the provinces intrusted to their care, it is probable that Karazm acted like the rest, in setting up for itself; although, in the histories hitherto come to our knowledge, we meet with no king of this country before Mamûn cbn Mohammed, who reigned some time after the year 385. For, not long before that, we find it under a governor, named Abu Abdo'llah <sup>e</sup>.

Forces of Karazm.

A. D.
680.

conquered
by the Arabs,

A. D.
995.

<sup>b</sup> PURCH. Pilgr. vol. iii. p. 237.    <sup>c</sup> Ibid. 357.    <sup>d</sup> Ibid. p. 431.    <sup>e</sup> TEXEIR. Hist. Pers. p. 260.

(F) As Mohammedans, they can have no more than four.

Government.

A. D.
1016.

and Seljûk Turks.

A. D.
1092.

Karazmian empire

A. D.
1193, or 1196.

A. D.
1218.

conquered
by Jenghîz
Khân;

A. D.
1348.

but it does not appear for whom. At length it fell under the dominion of Soltân Mahmûd Gâzni, king of Khorassân; who, after the death of Mamûn ibn Mamûn, in 407, took that kingdom from the usurper, and made it a province of his empire <sup>f</sup>.

KARAZM continued in this state under the families of Gâzni and Seljûk, successively, till, upon the death of Mâlek Shâh, surnamed Jûlâlî'ddîn, third Soltân of the Seljûk Turks, in 489, Kothbî'ddîn (G), then governor of that province, taking advantage of the broils which ensued upon the demise of that great monarch, assumed the title of king <sup>g</sup>. But that title was better established by his son and successor Mohammed, surnamed Atsîz <sup>h</sup>; though not without great opposition from Soltân Sanjer, son of Mâlek Shâh, who often reduced him to a dependency. But it was Takâsh, sixth Soltân of this dynasty, who firmly established the empire of the Karazmians, by the ruin of that of Seljûk: which he put an end to in Irân, by the death of Togrul Arslân, in 590 or 593; and added the dominions of that brave but unfortunate prince to his own. His son Kothbî'ddîn Mohammed extended the empire yet farther, by the conquest of all Irân, or Persia at large, and Mâwarâ'nâhr, or Great Bukhâria; and was the greatest prince in all Asia, in 615, when Jenghiz Khân invaded and deprived him both of his territories and his life.

As Jagatay Khân, son of that conqueror, had only a part of Karazm in his share of his father's dominions, as set forth by the oriental historians <sup>i</sup>, it looks as if the whole country had not been subdued, or, at least, that part of it revolted, and became independent. Be that as it will, it is very probable, that, on the declension of the power of the Khâns of Jagatay (H), on the death of Chûzân or Khâzân Khân, in 749, if not before, Karazm either set up a king of its own, or fell a prey to some other power <sup>k</sup>: for in the time of Timûr Bek, we find it possessed by Huffayn Sefi, son of Yang-bâday, of the hord of Kongorat, one of the four Uzbek tribes, which, at present, possess Karazm and Great Bukhâ-

<sup>f</sup> ABU'LFARAJ Hist. dynast. p. 220. D'HERBEL. p. 534.
<sup>g</sup> LA CROIX Hist. Gengh. p. 129. D'HERBEL. Bibl. orient. p. 276. <sup>h</sup> D'HERBEL. art. Atsîz. <sup>i</sup> LA CROIX Hist. Timûr Bek, p. 307. ABULGH. Hist. of the Turks, &c. p. 165. <sup>k</sup> LA CROIX, ibid. p. 147.

(G) He succeeded his father Bushkin, formerly slave to Balkatekin, his predecessor, but advanced by Mâlek Shâh to the government of Karazm.

(H) So the countries subject to Jagatay were called after him, ria. What is still more remarkable, it is called a great empire<sup>1</sup>; and continued in that family of the Sofi's, till conquered by Timûr, in the year 781 and 790, when he razed the capital (called the city of Karazm in his history) to the ground, and sowed it with barley, as before related. But three years after, he restored both the city and kingdom to the condition it had been in before.

Government.A. D.
1379.
and 1388.

AFTERWARDS Karazm continued in the hands of the descendants of Timûr Beg in Mâwara'nâhr and Khorassân; on which last it was then dependent, till the famous Shâh Bakht Soltân, with his Uzbeks, subduing those two provinces, about the year 904, it fell of course into the hands of that conqueror. Soon after, Shâh Bakht having been defeated and slain by Shâh Ismael Sofi, in 916, Karazm returned once more under the dominion of the crown of Irân, or Persia at large: but, about two years after, the inhabitants, revolting against the governors, sent for Ilbârs Soltân; who, coming with his Uzbeks out of Turkestan, was proclaimed Khân, in 918 (I), at Wazîr<sup>m</sup>; and his descendants have continued ever since in possession of the country<sup>n</sup>.

by the Uzbeks.A. D.
1498.A. D.
1510.A. D.
1512.

S E C T. VI.

History of the Uzbek Khâns of Karazm.

1. The Khâns from Ilbârs Soltân, till his Descendants were expelled Karazm.

BURGA Soltân, son of Yadigar Khân, having been slain by Shâh Bakht Soltân, son of Abû'lghazi Khân, in the manner related in the foregoing chapter, left two sons, the elder Ilbars, the other Pilbars, who was surnamed Bilikaj; because he became lame in his feet by a fit of sickness, which he had when a child. These two brothers were very brave, and lived on lands belonging to their father's dominions, as private men. Mean time Shâh Bakht Soltân, growing very powerful, conquered Great Bukhâria, with most of Khorassân; and having subdued Karazm, which at that time depended on Khorassân, placed a governor in Urghej, or Urjensh, the capital of that kingdom. But five or six years after this revolution, in 916, being defeated, and slain, near Marû, by Shâh Ismael Sofi, his governor of Urjensh fled; upon which the

Revolution in
Karazm.Hej. 916
A. D.
1510

<sup>1</sup> LA CROIX, ibid. p. 148. <sup>m</sup> ABU'LGH. ubi supra, p. 226. <sup>n</sup> Ibid. p. 420, & seqq.

(I) In the original it is 911; but this must be a mistake.

1. Khân, Shâh sent magistrates to the cities of Khayuk and Hazârâst, Ilbârs. Urjensh and Wazîr. The governor of this last city, on his arrival, gave the principal inhabitants a sumptuous entertainment, and made them presents: but Omar, the Kâzi (or judge), who absented himself, under pretence of being indisposed, sent for some of them next day, and represented, that the church was in danger from this governor, Shâh Ismaël having changed the faith (A) thirteen years before. The citizens, alarmed at the thoughts of innovations in religion, went two years after to a person noted for piety, in the province of Bakirgan, proposing to make him Khân, and cut the throats of the Persian garrison. But he rejected the offer, and advised them to elect Ilbârs, son of Burga Soltân; whom he recommended for his good qualities, having often seen him in his annual journies into the country of the Uzbeks (B).

Ilbârs
invited; THE burghers, taking this holy man's advice, dispatched two of their number to Ilbârs with a letter, inviting him to repair to Wazîr. Ilbârs set forward immediately with the deputies, and stopped near that city; while the conspirators, who were the principal lords, causing the inhabitants to take up arms, cut the throats of the governor and all his people. Next day they set out to meet Ilbârs, who, being joyfully received, both by the Sârts and Uzbeks, was proclaimed Khân, in the year 911, which is that called Koy, or the Sheep (C).
Hej. 911.
A. D. Wazîr had then depending on it, of all its towns, no more 1505. than Tarsak and Yenghi Shâhr; which last was given to Bilbârs Soltân. The governor of Tarsak escaped to Urjensh; and having informed the governor Subhân Kûli of what had happened at Wazîr, the latter summoned the citizens, and told them, "that if they were weary of submitting to his orders, or wished for a change, they might freely declare it; for that he did not intend to be any charge to them, or to reside in their town against their wills." They unanimously answered, "that, as they had no reason to complain either of him or the Shâh, they desired he would continue among them:" adding, "the Uzbeks were naturally so in-

(A) Asserting Ali to be the true successor of Mohammed, instead of Abûbekr, Omar, and Othmân, whom he reckoned usurpers: a point of vast importance among Mohammedans.

(B) They then inhabited all the country of Kipjak, or Kapchak, from the river Tak, in the west, to the Irtish eastward, and the Sir southward.

(C) See the Mungl Kalendar, vol. i. p. 309.

" constant,

" constant, that they would soon leave their new Khân in " the lurch <sup>a</sup>." 1. Khân, Ilbârs.

THE governor, upon these assurances, backed by an oath, resolved to stay among them; and sent a spy to Wazîr, to learn the strength of the enemy, while he put himself in a condition of defence. Three months after, Ilbârs Khân, advancing to Urjensh, defeated the governor's army; and, entering the city with them, put him and all the Persians, with the principal inhabitants, who had assisted them, to the sword: but, finding that he had not men enough to secure his conquests, most of the Uzbeks being subject to his uncles, he proposed inviting the sons of Abûlah and Amûnak (D), all approved of this motion of the Khân, excepting one Vigûr, of the common people; who alleged, " that it was a favourite maxim of sovereigns, if they had a mind to preserve peace to themselves, to keep their relations at a distance from their dominions; that the restless spirits among them should not be in a situation to disturb the tranquillity of the state." But the Khân, and the lords of his counsel, were so far from approving of this advice, that they took it very heinously, as spoken out of enmity to the princes; and to sow discord in his family.

As soon as this matter was settled, Ilbârs Khân gave his kinsmen to understand, that he had already gotten possession of Wazîr and Urjensh; but, not having had forces enough to reduce Hazârâsh and Khayuk, he invited them to come with their subjects, and share in the conquest of so fine a country. The princes, on this encouragement, immediately repaired to Ilbârs Khân, who gave up to them Urjensh with its dependencies, and returned to reside at Wazîr. The new-comers, by their incursions, so incommoded the Persian garrison of Khayuk and Hazârâsh, that they abandoned those towns. After this, they carried the war into Khorassân; and, after the death of Shâh Ismaël, took all the towns between Durûn (E), and the mountains to the west of the city of Khorassân (F): but they were strenuously opposed, as well by the Turkmâns, who possessed the towns which lay on the borders of the provinces of Astarabâd and Khorassân, as those who dwelt to

<sup>a</sup> ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 224, & seqq.

(D) The brothers of Burga Soltân. The first had one son, the other six sons.

(E) Written also Daruan and Dargan.

(F) De l'Isf. in his last map of Persia, places this city, or the remains of it, near Abiwerd, or Baaverd, in latitude 39 degrees.

2. Khân, wards Abûlkhân and Mankishblâk, on the Caspian sea in Karazm. Bilbârs Soltân, the Khân's brother, was in most of these actions; and, though lame, led on his troops bravely among the thickest of the enemy, being carried in a light chariot, drawn by a single horse, and accompanied only by five or six chosen men.

2. Khân, THESE two brothers died within a little while of each other, Soltân and left several sons. Ilbârs Khân was succeeded by Soltân Hâji, son of Bilbârs Soltân, who was the eldest of all the family (G), and proclaimed at Wazîr: but, as he had only a few subjects, the whole power fell into the hands of Soltân Gâzi, eldest son of Ilbârs Khân (H), a prince of great genius. Ilbârs Khân gave to all his sons the surname of Gâzi, which signifies a man who subdues people of another religion; in memory of their having vanquished the Persians at Urjensh and Wazîr: but our author knew not the reason why Bilbârs Soltân gave the name of Hâji (I) to his sons.

3. Khân, AFTER the death of Hâji Khân, that honour was Hassan transferred on Hassan Kûli, son of Abûlak, who reigned in Urjensh, Kûli. as being the eldest prince of the house of Yadigar Khân: for, although they were all descended from the three brothers, Burga Soltân, Abûlak, and Amûnak, and so made but one house, yet each had his own particular dominion. The six sons of Amûnak (K) had at this time six sons, of age to do for themselves, besides younger children. Hassan Kûli Khân, who was the only son of Abûlak, had likewise several sons; of whom Bilâl, the eldest, resembled his father in every thing, as well as his good disposition. In the reign of this Khân, the seed of envy and discord began to sow it itself among the afore said princes: for as the Khân's revenue greatly exceeded that of the rest, they at length grew uneasy at it; and, joining their forces against him, laid siege to Urjensh. Hereupon Hassan Kûli Khân sallied out, on foot, with all his men, and, posting himself on the counterescarp, fought bravely, from morning till night, against the confederates: of whom, among others, was slain Aganay, the youngest of Amûnak's sons, rebel;

The princes

(G) The eldest of the reigning family is always chosen Khân, except in extraordinary cases.

(H) Ilbârs Khân had seven sons; but our authors knew the names of only two, Soltân Gâzi, the eldest, and Mahamed Gâzi, the second. Bilbârs left five; but only Soltân Hâji is named.

(I) Perhaps he considered his expedition along with his brother, in this Gâzi, or holy war, as a kind of religious pilgrimage.

(K) They were, 1. Safan. 2. Buzzûga. 3. Avânash. 4. Kâbl. 5. Alûttay; and, 6. Aganay.

then

then only twenty years old; whose head was cut off, and sent into the city: which so enraged his brothers, and the other chiefs of their party, that they forced the Khân to retire into Urjensb, and fight within the walls<sup>b</sup>.

3. Khân,
Hassan
Kûli.

puts him
to death.

AFTER the siege had continued four months, provisions became so very dear, that many people deserted to the confederates; which, by degrees, so weakened the Khân's forces, that the allies, having at length given a general assault, entered the city, sword in hand, in spite of the incredible efforts made by that prince, and the few men he had left, of whom they made a great slaughter. After this they put to death Hassan Kûli Khân, with his son Bilâl, and banished the rest into Great Bukhâria: where, at the time our author wrote, there were living fifteen of their male descendants.

THE confederates, having thus gotten the whole power into their hands, agreed on a new division of the cities of Karazm. To the descendants of Burga Soltân fell those of Wazîr, Yenghi Shâhr, Tarsak, and Durân, with the Turkmâns of Mankîshlâk: the posterity of Amunak had all the other towns, viz. Urjensb, Khayuk, Hazârâsh, Kât, Buldumsaz, Nikîshâta, Borunda, Bâghabâd, Nasay (L), Iburdu (M), Zabarda, and Mahâna, with the Turkmâns who inhabit the countries of Abûlkhân and Dehestân.

Divisions of Ka-
razm.

HEREUPON Safian Soltân, eldest son of Amunak, who succeeded Hassan Kûli Khân, sent to tell those of Abûlkhân, that, unless they agreed to pay a yearly tribute, he would destroy their habitations. The Turkmâns, voluntarily assenting themselves, sent him the tax, as a free gift: but the Khân, not content with such a precarious contribution, next year dispatched forty men to levy it both in Abûlkhân and Dehestân. These tax-gatherers having dispersed themselves thro' the country for that purpose, expecting to meet with no opposition, the Turkmâns took them, and cut all their throats, at the same time. Upon this news Safian Khân, accompanied by his four brothers, marched against them, at the head of his army; and, arriving at the first habitations of them, along the Amû, to the west of Urjensb (N), met, at first, with much resistance: but, at length, the Turkmâns fled to the mountain Dsu (or Ju), three stages north of Abûlkhân; where, being distressed for want of water, they submitted to pay

4. Khân,
Safian
Soltân.

The Turk-mâns submit.

<sup>b</sup> ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. 228, & seqq.

(L) Or Nesâ, called also Little Damaskus.

(M) Also Abiwerd, or Bawerd.

(N) See before, p. 143.

4. Khân, 40,000 sheep yearly; viz. the tribes of Tâka, Sârik, and Safian. Yamut, 8,000; those of Irfari and Khorassan Sahuri 16,000 each.

THE other tribes agreed also to pay in the following proportions; Ijki Sahuri, 10,000; Hassan, 16,000; Ikdâr and Jawdâr, 12,000; Arabâz, 4,000; Koklân, 12,000; Adâkli, 12,000; besides a tenth more, each, for the Khân's kitchen. As for the tribes called Uchil, or the three branches, who dwelt on the Amû, it was stipulated, that Adâklik Hiffer-illi should furnish yearly a certain number of soldiers for the Khân's service; while they of Ali-illi and Tiuâzi should pay their contribution in merchandizes<sup>c</sup>.

5. Khân, Buzzûga. SAFIAN KHAN dying, after a reign of some years, left five sons (O): but his brother Buzzûga Soltân succeeded him. About that time Obejd Khân (P), who then reigned in Great Bâkhâria, took some towns of Karazm, which the Persians before possessed; and his Uzbeks made continual war upon the rest of the towns of that country, which were still under the dominion of the Shâh, carrying a way great numbers of captives. On the other side, the Uzbeks of Karazm, who possessed the cities of Ibûrdu, Nasay, and Durûn, did no less annoy the inhabitants of Khojân and Esferayn (Q), towards the borders of Ghilkûpruk province, Nasay being only one day's journey distant. Shâh Tahmâsb (R), unable to remedy these disorders, because he was at war with the Soltân of Rûm (S), resolved to make an alliance with the Uzbeks. For this end, he dispatched an envoy to Urjensb, to demand a princess in marriage; saying, his master thought it a great honour to wed a lady of the blood of Jenghîz Khân, after the example of Amîr Timûr, who, on that occasion, got the name of Kuragân (T).

Peace with Shâh Tahmas. BUZZUGA KHAN, accepting the proposal in favour of his niece Aysba Bika, daughter of Safian Khân, because

<sup>c</sup> ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 234, & seqq.

(O) Viz. 1. Yussef. 2. Yunus. 3. Ali. 4. Aghib. 5. Paluânkûli.

(P) He was the son of Mahamed Soltân, brother of Shâh Bakht Soltân, who conquered Great Bukhâria, as before related.

(Q) Esferayn lies near the borders of Jorjan, in Persia.

(R) Or Tahmâsb. This is the prince commonly called Shâh Tahmas I. of Persia.

(S) So the orientals stile the Othmân emperor, because possessed of the countries formerly subject to the Romans.

(T) Others write Kurbkân, and Gurkhân, which signifies the son-in-law, and relation of the Khân.

he had none of his own, sent Aghish Soltân, one of his brothers, and nine vassal lords to the Persian court to finish this alliance. The Shâh received that prince with great distinction, and made him a present of the town of Khojân. He sent to Buzzûga Khân ten wedges of gold, and as many of silver, each as large as a tile; with ten fine horses, whose saddles and harness were trimmed with gold. To his spouse he sent nine pieces of cloth of gold, 1,000 pieces of silks, and abundance of magnificent habits; after which she was conducted to the Shâh's court.

BUZZUGA KHAN died (U), after he had reigned twenty-seven years, and Avânash, his brother, was proclaimed Khân. His eldest son Dîn Mahamed (X), who had an early genius for war, when he was nineteen years old, resolved to make an incursion with forty men towards Astarabâd. Passing the south branch of the Amû, at Sidâlik Tâka, he met, in the defile of Dinâr, a man belonging to a lord of Mahamed Gâzi Soltân, who resided at Durûn, driving nine camels and thirty sheep. Among these, he observed a yellow goat, and desired he might have it, for his people's subsistence on the road, promising to make his master amends at his return: but the fellow refusing to gratify his request, he ordered his men to beat him, and take all his drove. After this, Dîn Mahamed pursued his journey, and had the wished-for success: but, on his return, was met on a party sent out by Mahamed Gâzi, who took all his booty of cattle, and himself prisoner, letting his followers go their way. Being brought before the Soltân, he for a time confined him; and then, having punished him, sent him, under the guard of Risba Khudayberdi and six men, to his father Avânash Khân, with orders to tell this prince, that he had sent him his Tugma (Y), after punishing him for invading the Persian territories, without his permission, and stripping some of his people<sup>d</sup>.

DIN MAHAMED, impatient to be at liberty, from time to time, made great outcries, that if any of his men had stopped on the road, they might come to his assistance. On the other hand, every time he made a noise, the lord, who conducted him, bawled out Risba, which was his usual word: but Dîn Mahamed, believing he made those exclamations with design to insult him, took such offence at it, that

<sup>d</sup> ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 238, & seqq.

(U) Buzzuga Khân left three sons; 1. Dost Mahamed. 2. Ish Mahamed. 3. Eurum, otherwise named Ish Dost.

(X) He had two other sons, Mahmûd and Ali.

(Y) Tugma is a word of reproach, and signifies Bastard.

6. Khân,
Avânash.

it cost Risba his life. One day, when his guards were asleep, in the country of Gordish, some of his men, who knew his voice, and had followed him at a distance, coming up, set him at liberty, and cut the throats of his guards; whom they buried out of the way, deep in the sands. On his return, his father, who did not love him, having asked him, how he got out of the scrape? he answered, that Mahamed Gâzi was indeed angry with him at first; but was soon reconciled, and sent him back with a present of some horses and habits: which his father believed to be matter of fact.

kills Ma-
hamed
Gâzi.

AFTER this, Dîn Mahamed getting two seals engraved, one with his father's cypher, the other with that of his mother-in-law, who was sister to Mahamed Gâzi; he wrote letters to him in both their names, informing him, that she was very sick, and earnestly desired to see him. Her brother immediately set forward; and arriving in an evening, when the Khân was out a hawking, went directly to his sister's apartment. As he perceived her to be very well, and she told him she had sent no letter, he began to suspect some treachery, and left her that instant, with design to take horse again: but, hearing much noise in the street, which faced the castle, he made to the Khân's stables, thinking to escape by a back-door that opened into a by-lane; which being full of people, he hid himself in a heap of dung that lay in a corner.

Ali Sol-
tân slain

DIN MAHAMED, who had seen Mahamed Gâzi go up to his sister's apartment, followed with some of his forty men: but, not finding him there, he went, by the direction of some women slaves, toward the stables; where, after much search, one of them perceived a bit of his scarlet robe sticking out of the dung; on which he went and told Dîn Mahamed, who came and slew him on the spot. Upon this alarm, one of Mahamed Gâzi's men ran to Wâzîr, to inform his brother Soltân Gâzi; who, in the first transports of rage, slew Ali Soltân (son of Safian Khân), his wife's brother, who unfortunately was just then come to visit her. When Avânash Khân returned from hunting, and was made acquainted with the murder committed by Dîn Mahamed, who had made his escape, he assembled his council, to deliberate what was to be done upon so extraordinary an occasion: but they were scarce come to a resolution in the affair, when a courier arrived with the news of the murder of Ali Soltân; which threw them into farther confusion<sup>e</sup>

<sup>e</sup> ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 247, & seqq.

MEAN time the Khân's nephews, who were all of Amû-nak's posterity, being informed of what had happened at Ur-jenſh and Wâzîr, foreſaw that it would occaſion a civil war; and therefore repaired to Ur-jenſh: from whence, on the other hand, Mahamed Gâzi's people retired to Wâzîr. Avânâſh Khân, for his part, had no inclination to a war: but his nephews, in ſome meaſure, forced him to raiſe an army, and march towards that city. On this advice, Soltân Gâzi ſent to the descendants of Bilbârs Soltân, at Yenghi Shâhr: but, without ſtaying for them, advanced with what troops he had, to meet the Khân, as far as the province of Komkint, which lies to the weſt of Wâzîr. He was chagrined, on ranging his troops, to find that there were not men enough to make a front equal to that of the enemy; but more, to hear a ſoldier, by way of mockery, for he was not beloved, ſay, “ that “ he might ſupply the defect with his horſes and cows; of “ which, till then, he had made more account than of his “ warriors.” In ſhort, the two armies coming to an engage-<sup>forced out</sup> ment, he was there killed, with fifteen princes deſcended of Ka- from Ilbârs Khân. His ſons, Omar Gâzi Soltân and Shîr Gâzi Soltân, and two daughters, falling into the hands of Akâttay Soltân, brother of the Khân, he ſent them into Great Bukhâria.

THE other princes, who made haſte to join Soltân Ghâzi, hearing of this diſaſter, fled alſo into Great Bukhâria, not daring to return to Yenghi Shâhr. After which, the descendants of Amûnak put to death all the poſterity of Burga Soltân who fell into their hands; excepting the women, whom they kept as captives. Thus was the race of Ilbârs, once ſo numerous, almoſt extinguiſhed; at leaſt, none of them were to be found in Karazm. After ſo great a revolution, the country was divided among the descendants of Amûnak; and Dîn Mahamed Soltân had for his ſhare the city of Durân.

MEAN time Omar Gâzi Soltân, ſon of Soltân Gâzi, ar-<sup>reſtored by</sup> riving in Great Bukhâria, put himſelf in the ſervice of Obeyd Obeyd Khân (Y); and, although no more than ſixteen years old, Khân. ſignalized himſelf on ſeveral occaſions. He beſtirred himſelf ſo effectually in his own behalf, that the Khân, in conjunction with Juanmart, Khân of Samarkant, Barak, Khân of Tâſhkunt, and the prince of Hiffâr, entered Karazm with their united forces. On the news of their approach, the princes poſſeſſed of Khayuk, Huzârâſh, and other neighbour-

(Y) He was nephew to Shâb which laſt is the common an-
Bakht Soltân, and ſon of a ceſtor of the Uzbek princes ſet-grandſon of Abûlgayir Khân; tled in Great Bukhâria.

6. Khân, ing towns, repaired, with their troops, to join Avânaſh Khân: but he, not daring to wait the enemy's coming, retired into the deſerts. The confederates, arriving at Urjenſh, detached ſome troops after the fugitive princes: who being taken, Obeyd Khân made a diviſion of them; and, as Avânaſh Khân fell to Omar Gâzi's ſhare, he inſtantly put him to death. The Khân gave Urjenſh to his ſon Abdo'lazîz Soltân, and one of the four Uzbek tribes who dwelt in Karazm, to each of the four invading powers; who, after appointing their intendants over them, returned to their own dominions.

Dîn Ma-
hamed

WHEN Avânaſh Khân was made priſoner, his two ſons, Mahmûd and Ali, took refuge with Dîn Mahamed Soltân, their eldeſt brother, at Durûn; whither alſo fled Yuſef and Yunus, two ſons of Saſhan Khân, with other princes, and young men of quality. But Kâhl Soltân and Akâttay Soltân, brothers of the Khân, were carried into Great Bukhâria, with all the children of the latter, excepting Hajîm Soltân: who, being at that time eighteen years of age, put on a mean garb, and retired to an old domeſtic of his father's, whoſe horſes he kept, as if one of his ſlaves; till, the affair taking wind, his protector, for both their ſafeties, conveyed him to Durûn<sup>f</sup>.

takes Kha-
yuk;

NOT long after this, Dîn Mahamed, accompanied by all the refugee princes, ſet out for Urjenſh, with 2000 men, whom he reinforced in the province of Gordîſh by 1000 Turkmâns: but it appearing, when they came to the country of Pîſhgâ, that their forces were too few to attack the city; and beſides wanting boats to paſs the Amû, they bent their courſe towards Khayuk: becauſe on that ſide there was no need of boats, and they had hopes of getting thither undiscovered, as but few people dwelt on that road. Being arrived, they took the city, without much difficulty; and put to death the commander, with ſome of his garrifon. Upon this news, the governor of Hazârâſh repaired to Urjenſh; and Abdo'lazîz Soltân, fearing to fall into Dîn Mahamed's hands, retired into Great Bukhâria. Obeyd Khân, on his ſon's return, immediately raiſed a numerous army, and marched towards Urjenſh; but, arriving at the Karamit Turkmâns, ſtopped there, with part of his forces, and ſent forty thouſand men, under two generals, to that city.

attacks
and defeats

ON the firſt advice of the enemy's march, Dîn Mahamed Soltân left Khayuk, with deſign to meet them: but as his forces did not exceed 10,000 men, the princes and lords, who accompanied him, adviſed him to return to Durûn;

<sup>f</sup> ABU'LGH. Hiſt. Turks, &c. p. 251, & ſeqq.

alleging,

alleging, that as soon as Obejd Khân, who came only to secure Urghej, perceived they were retreated, he would retire also; and that then they might turn back, without noise, and take the city. But Dîn Mahamed persisting in his resolution to give the enemy battle, 220 of his principal officers alighted; and, falling at his feet, intreated him to return. Having renewed their supplication in this manner three times, he at last fell in a passion, and flung himself off his horse also: then taking up a handful of dust, scattered it on his head, and cried out, "I devote myself to God, and my body to the earth." After this, turning to the lords who surrounded him, said, "I consider myself as a dead man; and if you esteem your lives more precious than mine, you are at liberty to return: but if you will share with me the glory that attends us, let us march." Hereupon, remounting his horse, he continued his march; and all his army followed, shedding tears.

6. Khân
Avanâsh.

MEAN time, Dîn Mahamed being informed, that the enemy had in the night passed by Hazârâsh, and would be upon his back the next day, he halted in the evening at a pond, since called Shikâst Kâli, in the province of Jardankhast. He ranged his troops on the west side of the pond, which was then dried up; and having had notice before day, by his scouts, of the enemy's approach, first sent his brother Ali Soltân, who was but eight years old, with six trusty men, a little aside from the field of battle (to the end that, if he lost the victory, there might remain at least one sprig of their family); then divided his forces into two bodies; one commanded by himself, the other by Yusef Soltân, eldest son of Safian Khân: these he posted on both sides of the road, and waited with profound silence. The Bukharian army soon appeared, having at their head most of their commanders, with four torches to light them; whom Dîn Mahamed let pass, and then fell suddenly on the troops which followed; charging them so briskly that they were soon broken, and obliged to fly, notwithstanding their great superiority &c.

Obejd
Khân's
army.

TOGAR Bahâdr, one of the chiefs of the Kunkurats, and the Soltân's vassal, killed sixty men in the battle with his own hand. Dîn Mahamed had advanced so far among the enemy, that the bow fell from his side unknown to him; which Hajim Soltân (Z), who accompanied him, having recovered, "Brother," said Dîn Mahamed, that which you have done to-day for me, shall be the knot of an everlasting friendship between champion.

An Uzbek

* ABULGHAZI KHAN. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 255, & seqq.

(Z) Jenkinson, in his voyage to Bogar, writes Azim.

7. Khân
Kâhl.

“us.” He was then twenty-eight years of age, and Hajim Soltân eighteen. This victory was complete : for, besides the soldiers slain and taken, most of the principal officers of the enemy fell into the victor’s hands ; which enabled him to recover the captive princes of his family, by an exchange of prisoners. For this purpose, the persons of distinction were suffered to go, on their parole, into Great Bukhâria, accompanied by Hajim Soltân ; who executed his commission so well, that, in 949, he brought back his father Akattay Soltân, Kâhl Soltân, and the other princes, whom the confederate Khân had some time before carried into that country.

Hej. 949.
A. D.
1542.

Religious
jeud.

AFTER the battle, Dîn Mahamed ordered the prisoners to be brought before him ; and there being among them Hafis, one of the principal lords of Obeyd Khân’s court, he demanded on what account he had told his master, that the inhabitants of Urjensb were not true believers, but of a different faith from the Mussulmans. The lord, alarmed at this question, fell at his feet, and made answer, “ It is at this juncture, “ that I shall find whether you are true Mussulmans, or whether you be of a different religion.” Meaning, that, if they were of the same religion with him, they would pardon him. To this answer Dîn Mahamed Soltân made no reply ; in regard that report, concerning the people of Urgbenj, was not ill grounded, as they had discovered an inclination for the religion of the Persians.

2. From the Revolution under Avanish Khân, till Karazm was seized by Obeyd Khân, of Great Bukhâria.

7. Khân
Kâhl.

THE descendants of Amûnak having thus recovered their possessions in Karazm, by the valour of Dîn Mahamed Soltân, they conferred the dignity of Khân on Kâhl Soltân ; who fixed his seat at Urjensb. Akattay Soltân had Wazîr ; Hajim Soltân, his son, Bâghabâd ; the descendants of Soltân Khân (A), had Khayuk ; the sons of Buzzûga Khân, Hazârâsb ; and Dîn Mahamed Soltân, and his brother, the cities of Durân, Yawsurdî, and Nasay (or Nesa).

8. Khân
Akattay.

AKATTAY, who succeeded his brother in the dignity of Khân, gave Kât to Sheykh Mahamed and Shâh Nazer, two sons of Kâhl Khân ; Urjensb, with its dependants, to Ali Sol-

(A) These were Yunus and Paluânkûli, the two sons of Saffian Khân then living. The other three were dead ; Ali Soltân killed by order of Soltân

Gâzi, as before related ; Aghisb Soltân died at Khojân, in Khorafsan ; and Yusef, the eldest, by loss of blood, after venesection ; the vein opening in the night.

tân, youngest son of Avânish Khân; continuing himself to reside at Wazîr: but he did not long enjoy the sovereignty; which happened on the following occasion. Yunus Soltân, son of Safian Khân, a prince of much ambition and courage, who had married the daughter of a Biyawî of the Mankats, departed one day from Khayuk, with forty chosen men; under pretence of going to pay a visit to his father-in-law, who dwelt near Urjensb. Having passed Kât, and arrived at Tûk; which he knew then to be empty (all the inhabitants, both of the town and country, being gone towards Urjensb and Wazîr) he got upon a tower, from whence he could see Urjensb; and expressing a desire to be there, as being his native place, his men told him, they were ready to follow him where-ever he pleased <sup>h</sup>.

BEING arrived about midnight at the south gate of the city, Yunus they put their horses apart, and entered the ditch on foot; where they lay hid, till the guards, with their torches, had passed by. Then, by the help of a long pole reared against the wall, they all mounted; and, going directly to the house of Mahmûd Soltân (left governor by his brother Ali, who went to live at Nafay), seized and sent him to Wazîr, to the custody of Akattay Khân; whose daughter he had married. Mahmûd, who was a very wicked man, never ceased to importune the Khân to go and reduce Urjensb, till he had consented; especially considering that Yunus had only forty men, and it was not likely the Usbeks of that city would assist him against their sovereign: but, being advanced near that place, he found Yunus with a good body of troops expecting him; and, coming to a battle, was put to flight.

KASSE M, son of Yunus, by the daughter of the Khân, undertook to pursue him, crying out, "Grandfather, whither would you go in this hot weather? You had better rest yourself to-day under some tree, and early to-morrow morning continue your journey." But Akattay Khân's answer was, "Your father has a heart as black as a pot: but if your intentions towards me be good, leave me to continue my road, and do me no harm." Kassêm, finding that fair means would not do, made use of foul, and forced him to go with him to Urjensb. Upon this news, all the Usbeks about Urjensb, having assembled tumultuously, acknowledged Yunus for their Khân, without consulting the other princes. A few days after, Yunus Khân sent to tell the four sons (B) of Akat-

<sup>h</sup> ABULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 259, & seqq.

(B) These were Fulât, Timûr, Alla Kûli, and Soleyman.

9. Khân Yunus.

tay Khân, who lived at Wazîr, “ that, although they had no “ desire to take their father, yet they were obliged to convey “ him home with them, as they found him quite spent with “ the cholic ; which still violently afflicted him.” Presently after, he sent four men to the house, which served for the Khân’s prison, with orders to bind his hands and feet, and then impale him alive ; taking care that no marks of a violent death should be found on his body. As soon as the fact was perpetrated, he sent the corps to Wazîr, with many compliments of condolence to the Khân’s sons ; who he supposed would conclude that their father died of the cholic.

9. Khân Yunus.

As soon as the princes, who were at Wazîr, heard the news of their father’s murder, they sent to their elder brothers (C), who resided at Baghabâd, which depended on Khorassân, to join with them in revenging such an atrocious crime. The brothers accordingly joined their forces, and went forward towards Urjensh : but when Yunus was informed, that they had passed the Amâ, not daring to wait for them, he fled into Great Bukhâria, with his brother, and the sons of Kâhl Khân. On the road most of his people abandoned him ; and his son Kâssém lost his way, accompanied only by one man ; who, under pretence of going to get victuals for them, went to Urjensh, and betrayed him to Hajâm Soltân. This prince immediately sent persons to fetch him from the pond, from that time called Khân Zungali (where he lay hid among the reeds), and caused him instantly to be put to death. Which revolution happened in the year 956.

Hej. 956.
A. D.
1549.
Another
revolution.

THE descendants of Safian Khân and Kâhl Khân having been thus intirely stripped of all they enjoyed in Karazm, the children of Avinash Khân continued in possession of Durûn (‡) and Yawrfurdi ; which depended on Khorassân. The sons of Akattay Khân held Urjensh and Wazîr ; and Buzzâga Khân’s three sons, Ish, Dagt, and Burum, became masters of Khayuk, Hazârâsh, and Kât. After which, they conferred the dignity of Khân on Dîn Mahamed Soltân<sup>1</sup>.

10. Khân Dîn Mahamed ;

THIS prince, who could not sit idle, began to invade Khorassân ; which obliged Shâh Tahmasb to send an army thither ; who took from him Yawrfurdi. As soon as the Perjian troops were retired, the Khân posted to Kazwîn, where the Shâh resided, and prayed him to restore that city : but Tahmasb being deaf to his entreaties, he got the royal seal counterfeited, and then wrote a letter in the Shâh’s name to the governor of Yawrfurdi,

<sup>1</sup> ABULC. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 263, & seqq.

(C) Hajân and Mahmûd. (‡) Written Darâân.

Surdi, ordering him to deliver it up to Dîn Mahamed Khân, and come himself to court. A few days after, while Shah Tahmâsh was hunting, he slipped from the company, with his followers; and, hasting to Yawrsurdi, delivered the letter to the governor: who, readily obeying the supposed command, surrendered up the town to him, and departed for Kazwîn. As soon as his back was turned, Dîn Mahamed ordered the gates to be shut, and all the Persians in the place to be put to the sword.

10. Khân
Dîn Ma-
hamed.

AT this news, Shâh Tahmâsh set out with a considerable army to take revenge for the deceit: but when he came to the little river Kara Sû, near Masbbud (D), he was informed that the Khân was arrived in the camp, with a retinue of fifty horse. This account appeared so ridiculous to him, that he would not believe it, till they brought him word, that the prince was at his tent-door. Dîn Mahamed Khân, entering at the same time, fell on his knees before the Shâh; who was so surprised at his extraordinary boldness, that, not content with putting his right hand on the Khân's left shoulder, he thrust his left into that prince's bosom, to try if his heart did not beat: but, perceiving no motion there more than what is usual, he could not avoid admiring the intrepidity of his supplicant. On this account, he pardoned him all that was past; and, having feasted him magnificently, sent him home next day, laden with rich presents; conducting him in person to some distance from the camp.

his great resolution;

SOME time after this, Obeyd Khân, of Great Bukhâria, gave the command of it to Yulum Bey, a chief of the Naymâns: but the Khân, growing jealous of him, through the suggestions of envious people, sent for him to court. As Yulum Bey was not over-hasty to obey these orders, Obeyd Khân, concluding that he designed to revolt, sent an army of 30,000 men against him. Yulum Bey, now put to his last shifts, had recourse for succour to Dîn Mahamed Khân; who set forward immediately with his troops: but, as they were only a few, he ordered every man to cut down three small trees; and, fixing one on each side of his horse, tie the third to his tail; which left marks on the soft and marshy ground, as if a great army had passed that way. The Bukharian generals, being informed that the Khân was coming to Yulum Bey's assistance, sent out their spies; who, observing the marks along the road, brought word, that he was advancing with very numerous forces. Up-lucky str-tagem.

(D) A name given to Tûs, in reckoned a martyr. The river Khorassân, on account of the sepulchre of Imâm Rîza, who is Kara Sû runs to the west of it.

10. Khân on this the generals, not thinking it safe to wait his coming, retreated as fast as they could, without seeing the enemy : and Dîn Mahamed Khân, having taken possession of Marû, fixed his residence for life in that city ; where he died in the year Hej. 960. 1552. called, by the Mungls, Sighir, or the Cow, at the age of forty<sup>a</sup>.

A. D.
1552.
Abûl Soltân.

THIS prince, besides the other heroic virtues which he possessed in a high degree, was extremely generous, gracious, and eloquent : he had withal a peculiar brightness of wit. And here it may not be amiss, before we proceed to the next Khân, to relate what became of his sons, and the other descendants of Avânash Khân. Dîn Mahamed Khân left behind him two sons ; the eldest called Saganda Mahamed : but, because he was not in his right senses, his brother, Abû'l Soltân, succeeded in all his father's dominions ; and reigned with wisdom for several years. At length he made an irruption, with great forces, into Khorassân ; and, arriving at Masbhâd, detached his only son, with most of his army, to penetrate deeper into the country : but having advanced as far as the river Kara Sû, to the west of that city, he was met by a great army of Persians ; and lost the battle, with his life : ten thousand men being slain besides. The news of this misfortune so grievously afflicted his father, that he fell dangerously ill, beyond the help of physic. On this occasion, a woman of Marû produced a boy, four years old, which she said she had by the Soltân ; who, having sent for her one night to play on the harp, took a fancy to lie with her. Hereupon one of his physicians, esteemed the most skilful in the country, ordered both the Soltân and the child to be undressed. Then laying the boy on the belly of the dying prince, had a coverlet thrown over them, and began to cry out with all his force, Soltân, behold a son of yours ! As he continued to do this three times a day, the Soltân, by degrees, recovered his former health ; after which he owned the child for his son, and called him Nûr Mahamed.

Nûr Mahamed Soltân.

ABUL Soltân dying, Nûr Mahamed succeeded him in all his dominions : but some years after, the princes of the house of Hajim Khân united against him, under pretence that they would not have the son of a strumpet for their brother. Nûr Mahamed, finding himself unable to resist them, sued for protection to Obeyd Khân, and delivered up his four cities of Marû, Nasay, Yawrfurdi, and Durûn ; imagining, that the Khân would leave him in possession, and be content with receiving tribute : but, finding himself deceived in his expectation, he quitted Great Bukhâria in discontent, and repaired to Ur-Din Mahamed ; where he was well received by his late enemies, and lived five years with them. At length, Obeyd Khân dying, Nûr Mahamed set out to recover his four cities : in which expedition having succeeded, he put to the sword all the Usbeks whom he found in those places ; settling the Sarts and Turkmâns in their room. But Shâh Abbâs Mazi, of Persia (E), willing also to profit by the death of Obeyd Khân, came in person to besiege Marû, with a powerful army ; and took it in forty days, with Nûr Mahamed, who had shut himself up there. After this, he took the three other cities, without any trouble, and sent the captive prince to Shîrâz ; where, with him, ended the posterity of Din Mahamed Khân, eldest son of Avânâsh Khân.

<sup>a</sup> ABULG. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 271, & seqq.

THE second son of this last Khân was Mahmûd, surnamed Sârî Mahmûd ; that is, Yellow Mahmûd, from his complexion. For all the other descendants of Amûnak were of a fine brown. This prince was addicted to all sorts of vices. He loved liquor so well, that, being one day at a house drinking Brâga, and some body coming to tell him the enemy's troops were near ; while all the rest ran to their horses, he, with a great deal of unconcern, took a knife and marked all the pots which had Brâga in them, bidding the host take care of them till his return. This shewed, that his excessive debaucheries had impaired his senses ; and indeed he died soon after without leaving children<sup>1</sup>.

ALI Soltân, the youngest of Avânâsh Khân's sons, possessed at several times the cities of Nasay, Tawrsurdi, Urjensb, Ha-zârâsh, and Kât. He used every spring to cross the Amû, and encamp towards the borders of Khorassân : from whence he sent parties to plunder the Persians ; and in autumn returned to Urjensb. He mustered all the Usbeks in his service every year ; and gave each for his pay sixteen sheep, out of those which he received by way of contribution from the Turkmâns : and, when they fell short, he supplied the defect by the booty-sheep taken from the Persians. Shâh Tahmûsb, on complaints made of these ravages, at length sent Bâdr Khân (F), with 12,000 men, in quest of Ali Soltân. This

<sup>1</sup> ABULO. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 274, & seqq.

(E) This should be Shâh Tahmûsb the first.

(F) The Persians, after the extinction of the descendants of

Timûr Bek in Persia, by way of hatred, or contempt, gave the title of Khân to their military officers, and governors of cities.

10. Khân
Dîn Ma-
hamed.

prince, according to custom, had entered the country of Astara-bâd, with 3000 men, to oblige the Turkmân tribe of Oklikoklân to pay him contribution ; which Bâdr Khân being informed of at Bastâm, he turned that way. At first, Ali Soltân was a little startled at this news ; but, considering that it was dangerous to retreat in the face of an enemy, went and possessed himself of the Kurgân. This river is very difficult to pass, being rapid as well as deep, and the banks extremely high ; excepting in a few places, where it is fordable. Our author, who had often passed it, found the height of them, in many parts, above two cubits. He caused the horses and cattle to be tied behind ; and employed the waggons to cover the front of his troops.

defeats the Persians ;

IN this posture he was attacked several times by the Persians ; but, as they had only cavalry, they could gain no advantage. Hereupon Aba Beg, a Turkmân chief, impatient to see the fight continue so long, sallied out with 300 men of the tribe of Okli, in order to charge the enemy behind, while Ali Soltân attacked them in front. When he was gone, some of the principal Uzbek commanders said it was wrong to let him go ; because it was probable he would join the enemy. Ali Soltân bad them have patience ; saying, “ if they are gone “ to join the Persians, I trust that God will deliver us from “ this danger, and perhaps the enemy may have need of such “ a reinforcement.” But Aba Beg, while they were speaking so much to his disadvantage, had already began the fight : so that, having been vigorously attacked three times by the Persians, he must have been oppressed by their numbers, if Ali Soltân had not in time issued out of his intrenchment, and charged them in front, with such success, that they fell into disorder, and took to flight, after the greater part of them had been slain. The Soltân pursued them till far in the night ; so that Bâdr Khân had much ado to escape, with a few of his men. So great a number of horses were taken, that Ali Soltân having made his esquire a present of every ninth, they amounted to 700 ; not reckoning what fell in division to the officers and soldiers.

death and
character.

FIFTEEN years after this, Ali Soltân, having in one of his expeditions advanced as far as the Zenghel, or Desart, to the south of Khojân, fell ill of a contagious ulcer, which broke out between his shoulders. As he would let no body see it, through bashfulness, the chiefs were obliged to use force, and cut the clothes over the part affected, in order to come at it. Yet, for all the care they took to get him cured, he died of that distemper, in the year 979 (G), at the age of forty. Ali Sol-

Hej. 979.
A. D.
1571.

(G) Called Sighir, or the Corw, by the Mungls.

tân

tân was a prince of so much merit, that his cousin Hâjim Khân often said of him, that he had not his equal among the descendants of Yadigar Khân, in bravery and liberality, sincerity, modesty, and, above all, the art of reigning. As in all his life he had never suffered either to see or touch his naked body, so he would not, when dying, suffer a domestic to feel whether his legs began to grow cold. He did speedy justice to those who demanded it. In one of his expeditions, he hanged a man for taking two Arbusés (or melons) out of a field. He left two sons; Iskânder, who died the same year, and Sanjer, who, being disturbed in his senses, reigned ten years at Nasay, under the conduct of a Naymân lord. Thus much concerning the family of Avânash Khân.

AFTER the death of Dîn Mahamed Khân, the Uzbek princes chose Dost Soltân, second son of Buzzâga Khân, to succeed him at Kayuk, rather than Isb Soltân, the eldest brother; because, although courageous and generous, he was neither so wise nor moderate. He was likewise suspected as to his orthodoxy in religion. Isb, who took this very ill, applied to his brother for assistance to reduce Urjensb: but, arriving with his forces in the territory of Zilpuk (or Jilpuk), which belongs to the country of Kumkant, he found Hajim Soltân in the field ready to fight him, with a much superior army. Hereupon, securing his men behind with a small river, and with his chariots in front, Hajim, after an attack of eight days continuance, was obliged to come to an accommodation. Some years after, Isb Soltân, having formed a new design against Urjensb, Hajim met him between that city and Tek; where Isb covered himself, as before, with his chariots; and, having fought eight days against superior forces, marched out of his intrenchments silently in the night, and surprised Urjensb, to the great astonishment of Hajim Soltân. As soon as he saw himself master of the place, he ordered all the Uigûrs and Naymâns to retire to Wazir, without any of their effects; but let those of other tribes, who were settled there, remain in peace.

AFTER this, each party having endeavoured to secure Ali is put to Soltân, who resided at Nasay, in his interest: that prince declared in favour of Hajim Soltân, whom he joined, accompanied by Abûl Soltân, son of Dîn Mahamed Khân, and besieged Urjensb. Isb Soltân defended himself well at first: but the besiegers at length giving a general assault, while he was riding about from post to post, where his presence was necessary, a Durmân, whose sister he had ravished, wounded his horse in the flank with an arrow. The beast hereupon capered, and

<sup>m</sup> ABULG. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 279, & seqq.

12. Khân threw the Soltân so violently, that he broke one of his legs ;
Hajim. and the enëmy, who had scaled the walls in the interim, coming up, slew him, and a Sart, who was endeavouring to remount him. After this, the Confederates took Khayuk, and put to death Dost Khân, brother of Ish Soltân, whose two sons were sent into Great Bukhâria ; where dying without issue, the race of Buzzûga Khân became wholly extinct. This revolution happened in the year 965, called Ghilki, or the Herse.

Hej. 965.
 A. D.
 1557.

12. Khân THE same year Hajim Soltân, being then 35 years of age (H), Hajim was declared Khân, and went to reside at Wazîr. As, of all Soltân. the posterity of Amûnak, there were left only the children of Avânish Khân and Akattay Khân, they gave the cities of Ur-jensh, Hazârâsh, and Kât, to Ali Soltân, youngest son of the former. Of the four remaining sons of Akattay Khân, Mahmûd Soltân lived with his brother Hajim Khân : Pulâd and Timûr had Khayuk between them, with two Uzbek tribes, for their share <sup>n</sup>.

Story of Timûr
 Soltân.

THESE two brothers were both weak of understanding : but Timûr Soltân knew best how to behave himself of the two ; and joined to a solid conduct, in affairs of government, much bravery on warlike occasions. This prince never went to eat at the house of any person : insomuch that one time, going from Hazârâsh, where he usually resided, to see his brother Pulâd at Khayuk, he refused the invitation of a Vigûr lord, who had the administration of that Soltân's affairs, on account of his indisposition. The reason for his being so reserved was this. One day, when about 15 years of age, while he took a ride for the air, he was invited-in by a countryman who killed a sheep to treat him ; and, at his going away, presented him with a gigot of it. At his return, he went to offer it to his father : but Akattay Khân, offended on the occasion, reproved him, saying, " that he was 50 years old, and had never put any " any one to such an expence : that, if the peasants were obliged to kill sheep to treat him when he was young, they " must kill horses and cows for him when he grew up ; and " that, as his vassals would follow his example, his poor subjects would soon be reduced to beggary. This said, he ordered him to be stripped, and gave him 30 lashes with a rod, laying on so hard, that young Timûr's shirt was all bloody. His brother Hajim, meeting him as he came forth, approved of what his father had done : but advised him to appear next

<sup>n</sup> ABULG. Hist. Turks, p. 267, & seqq.

(H) He was born, Hejrab 930, A. D. 1523.

tân

day in that bloody condition before Akattay Khân; who, repenting of his severity, after exhorting him not to do the like again, made him a present of the Turkmân tribe of Ti-u-âzi, consisting of 6000 families. Hereupon Timûr Soltân made an oath never to go to eat with any body whomsoever, nor suffer any of his people to do so. This prince was very pious, and loved virtuous people: he had withal so excellent a memory, that, although he could neither write nor read, yet he kept an exact account of his revenue.

ON the death of Ali Soltân, Hajim Khân went to reside at Urjensb; his brother Mahmûd Soltân continued at Wazir; Pulâd had Khayuk; and Timûr, Hazârâsb and Kût. Some years after, while Hajim Khân was invading Khorassân, Abdo'llah, Khan of Great Bukhâria, came with an army to besiege Urjensb; but, after losing many soldiers, was obliged to retire into the province of Yenghi Arik; where he waited to secure the places, which he possessed on that side, till more forces arrived: but, hearing that Hajim Khân was returned with a great army to fight him, he thought fit to make peace with Pulâd and Timûr, who were at Khayuk, and retired to his own dominions. Some time after this, the Soltân Khalifah of Rûm (I) sent an ambassador to Abdo'llah Khân, to engage him to attack the empire of Sheykh Ogli (K) on one side, while he attacked him vigorously on the other. Pialasba, who had spent three years in the voyage, going by way of the Indies, was desirous to return through Karazm, and cross the sea of Mazânderân (L) to Shîrwân, then subject to his master; that so he might get to Isâmbul (M) in four months. But when he came to Urjensb, Mahamed and Ibrâhîm, the two youngest sons of Hajim Khân, stripped him of all his equipage, and then sent him to Mankisb-lâk; where some merchants happening to be on their return to Shîrwân, they carried him over in their barks to that province.

• ABULG. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 286, & seqq.

(I) That is, the grand signor, or emperor of the Turks; who, since the suppression of the Khalifah of Egypt, the last of whom was carried to Constantinople by Soltân Selim, in 1516, is qualified by the Mohammedan princes of the Sonni sect, with the title of Khalifah, and assumes it himself.

Sheykh; meaning Ismael Sofi (founder of the race of Shâhs), so called by way of contempt.

(L) So the Caspian sea is called from that province, which lies upon it. It is named also from other countries situate along its shores.

(M) That is, Constantinople; of which it is a corruption, or contraction.

(K) That is, of the sons of the 12. Khân To this first cause of complaint there was joined another. Hajim. They of Great Bukhâria, who performed the pilgrimage to Mekka, in times of peace, always passed through Karazm, and the dominions of the Shâh : but, in time of war, were obliged to go far about by the Indies. It happened that some merchants, relying on the peace, took their route through Karazm : but, arriving at Khayuk, were stripped to their very shirts by Bâba Soltân, son of Pulâd Soltân, and sent home again on foot. These people, at their return, going to complain to Abdo'llah Khân, he told them that he could do nothing in the affair ; for that Bâba Soltân was as much sovereign at Khayuk, as himself could be in Great Bukhâria. Hereupon Hajî Kutas, head of the Karawan, made answer, “ that he would be his accuser before the throne of God, in case he suffered to go unpunished “ an outrage done to the deity himself, in the persons of those “ who went to offer up their prayers to him in his holy “ house.”

Abdo'llah Khân THIS bold remonstrance, joined to a desire of revenge for the loss of the four towns taken from Nûr Mahamed, which by their means he recovered, determined Abdo'llah Khân to renew his design of conquering Karazm, and make war on Hajim Khân. The news of his preparations divided the Uzbeks of Karazm into two parties. One was for making a vigorous defence, the other for submitting so soon as the enemy approached Urjensb ; on a persuasion that they should be well treated and employed by him, even though he should carry them into Great Bukhâria. Hajim Khân, finding by this that he could not depend on his subjects, left his sons, Mahamed and Ibrâhîm, at Urjensb, and returned to Durân, with his eldest son Siunj Mahamed Soltân.

invades Karazm ; MEAN time, Abdo'llah Khân advancing with his army, Mahamed, son of Timûr Soltân, marched with his Uzbeks from Hazârâsb to Khayuk ; designing to make this place the rendezvous of their troops, as his father had done in the former war, and by that means baffled the designs of Abdo'llah Khân. But finding, at his arrival, that Pulâd Soltân resolved to quit the town, and retire to Wazîr, they all set out together at day-break, with a large train of men and chariots (or waggons) ; which took up so much time, that at noon, just as the troops passed out of the city on one side, those of Khojâm Kûli, one of the enemy's generals, entered at the opposite gate ; and next day, pursuing the confederate princes with 3000 horse, on a great trot, overtook them at the borough of Almatîsb Khân ; for they had not continued their march till the same morning. At Khojâm Khân's approach, they covered themselves with their chariots : but the general, having forced that that barricade, after a vigorous resistance, put them to the rout. 12. Khân However, as he lost many men in the action, he did not follow Hajim.

the princes, who went forward in great confusion to Wazir. ~~~~~

WHEN they arrived, they resolved to make proposals of insnares peace; and drove from the city Bâba Soltân, who had been the princes, the occasion of this unfortunate war. Hereupon Pakud Soltân, finding that he could not hinder their design, retired with his two other sons to Hajim Khân, at Durûn; while Mahamed and Ibrâhîm, the Khan's sons, repaired to Wazir to join the confederates; where Ali Soltân, son of Mahmûd Soltân, had the chief command. Mean time, Abdo'llah Khân, appearing before that city, besieged it in form: but finding, after two months leaguer, that it would be difficult to come off with honour in the enterprise, he had recourse to craft. He sent to tell the confederate princes, that since they had thrust out Bâba Soltân, whom he had chief cause to complain of, they might depend on being received by him as his allies and relations. The princes, deluded by these fair promises, entered into a capitulation with the enemy: who, at their request, sent five of his principal lords, attended by 40 horse, to swear in his name, not to meddle with either their persons or effects;
and that he had no evil intention against them P.

AFTER the five lords had taken the oath, the common peo- by a treaty:
ple (who were against the princes trusting to so weak security) desired that they might be arrested, and held in custody, till such time as Abdo'llah Khân should raise the siege, and begin his march. But Ali Soltân, who had the chief sway in the city, which belonged to the children of Mahmûd Soltân, and, though little and crooked, was a great wit, strenuously opposed this motion; alleging, "that, being the Khân's near relations,
" they had nothing to fear from him: that, in case he should " carry them into Great Bukhâria, he would settle them more " advantageously than they were situated in Karazm: nay
" he was perswaded, that Abdo'llah, far from any evil inten" tions against them, would, on the first application, leave " them in possession of Urjenß and Wazir." These reasons being approved of by all the men of distinction, the people were obliged to acquiesce; and the Bukhârian lords, accompanied with the princes, left the city to return to their master's camp. As soon as they arrived there, Abdo'llah Khân, having put them under a guard, and divided their soldiers into troops of ten or twelve men, one of whom was to be responsible for the rest, he sent them all prisoners into Great Bukhâria; whi-

P ABULG. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 292, & seqq.

12. Khân ther he followed with his army, after he had put governors in-Hajim. to all the cities of Karazm; which thus fell into his hands.

3. From the Invasion of Obeyd Khân to the Parricide of Arâp Mahamed Khân.

puts them
to death.

A MONTH after this event, Hajim Khân, and the ten princes of his house who were with him at Durûn, resolved to retire into Irâk to Shâh Abbâs Mazi; on which Pulâd Soltân, third son of Akattay Khân, thinking it would be very unbecoming of him, who was near 70 years old, to seek a sanctuary among people of a different religion, chose rather to repair to Abdo'llah Khân, on a presumption that he would pity his condition, and give him a subsistence. But he found himself fatally deceived: for that prince, on his return to Bukhâria, caused him, and all the other descendants of Amûnak, being twelve in number, who had fallen into his hands, to be put to death the same day, in the town of Sagraj. After this, he laid a yearly tax of a Tanga a head on all the other prisoners above the age of ten; which constrained many to sell their children, in order to raise wherewithal to pay the poll-money. Mean while Hajim Khân set out for Durûn, with the princes, accompanied by 3000 horse: but they deserted so fast on the road, that he arrived with a train of no more than 150 at the court of Shâh Abbâs; who came in person to receive him, and gave him the best treatment imaginable: but Siunj Mahamed Soltân, and his son, went forward to the Soltân Khalifah of Rûm. This happened in the year called Yilân, or the Serpent.

A new invasion.

Two years after, in that named Koy, or the Sheep, the same in which a comet appeared (N), Abdo'llah Khân sent before him his son Abdo'lmo'mîn Soltân, with part of his army, to besiege Esfarayn, in Khorassân. As soon as the Shâh received advice of this, he left Kazwîn, with his forces, accompanied by Hajim Khân, and the other Ustek princes; who, having learned when they came to Bastâm, that there were no more than 60 of the enemy at Khayuk, and 40 at Urghenj, judged this a proper time to recover those places: but as, for the more secrecy, the attempt was to be made without the Shah's knowledge, Hajim Khân and some others declined it, for fear their sudden departure should give offence to that monarch; so that none engaged in the enterprise, excepting Arap Mahamed, and Mahamed Kûl, two of Hajim's sons, and the three sons of Pulâd Soltân. These princes took horse late one evening, and, riding all night, arrived at the Turkmân tribe of Anâr; and from thence by noon at Astarabâd (O). Next morning, Hajîm Khân <sup>12. Khân</sup> having acquainted Abbâs with their design, the Shah, who <sup>Hajîm.</sup> knew the activity of Abdollah Khân, and the improbability of recovering their possessions, during that prince's life, advised him to ride after them immediately, and bring them back. Hajîm overtook them at Astarabâd : but, instead of bringing them back, they prevailed on him to continue with them, till he saw what success they were likely to have ; the Turkmâns having promised them a powerful assistance <sup>9</sup>.

(N) That is, as we compute, A. D. 1593.

thence

DEPARTING therefore altogether from Astarabâd, they <sup>Hajîm</sup> went towards the mountain of Kurân ; where the tribes of <sup>Khân re-</sup> Tâka and Yâmut lent them 500 men. Then crossing the territory of Mankishlâk, whose inhabitants had all removed to the country of Orda Kutuk (P), they came to the tribe of Irjâri, which granted them five or six hundred men ; and thence proceeded towards Pîshga. The princes separating in this province, Hajîm Khân, with his two sons, took the road of Urjensb ; and Bâba Soltân, with his two brothers, went to Khayuk. On the news of Hajîm Khân's approach, Sâri Oglân, governor of Urjensb, retired into the castle : but the Khân having entered by a subterraneous passage, which he ordered to be carried under the wall in the night, he put the governor and his 40 men to death. The Turkmâns after this returned home laden with plunder, leaving Hajîm Khân, and his sons, almost alone at Urjensb. Bâba Soltân had no less success on the other side : for so soon as he appeared before Khayuk, the Sârts, who dwelt in the city, opened the gates to him ; which entering, he slew the governor, Menglish Bey, and his 60 men. When the commanders of Hazârâsb and Kât were informed of these misfortunes, they quitted those cities, and fled towards Great Bukhâria.

TEN days after, Bâba Soltân, having dismissed all his Turk- Khayuk mâns, excepting fifteen, went with his brother Paluânkâli to <sup>taken ;</sup> Hazârâsb ; but, it being the vintage season, Hâmza staid at Khayuk to drink his fill of wine. Just as Bâba got into Hazârâsb, he perceived two officers advancing towards the town on a smart gallop, at the head of 150 horse ; and, suspecting them to be enemies, endeavoured to shut the gate : but he had scarce closed one side, before the first came up, and endeavoured with

<sup>9</sup> ABULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 298, & seqq.

(O) Some read Estarabâd ; in they had with the Markats (or the translation every-where Ir- Karakalpâks), on one side ; and sarabad : others Astrabâd. with the tribe of Irjari, on the

(P) Because of the quarrels other:

12. Khân his lance to keep the other side open. However, some of the Hajim. inhabitants, running thither in the nick of time, shut it also ;
 and with their arrows compelled the enemy to retreat. In their way back, they took a Sárt ; who having informed them of Hâmza's stay at Khayuk, they turned on that side, and arrived there next day at noon, while the Soltân was taking the air. But not daring to use force with so few men, they lay concealed till the evening ; when, assistance coming to them, they opened a passage into the town, under one of the gates ;
 at which having entered, they put all to the sword : a misfortune that much disconcerted the affairs of Bâba Soltân.

by Abdo'llah's troops. To understand who these troops were, the reader must be informed, that Abdo'llah Khân having sent Khojâm Kûli to support his son Abdo'momin Soltân, while he followed leisurely to take the diversion of catching water-fowl beyond Zârjui, in the country of Gordîsh, that general met on the road the commander of Hazarâsh ; from whom he learned what had passed in that city, and then sent him with the news to Abdo'llah Khân.
 On this advice, the Khân dispatched orders to Khojâm Kûli, to march in haste towards Khayuk ; promising to follow him with his whole army. Hereupon the general turned towards that city : but found, at his arrival, that the work had been already done by his van-guard ; which determined him to march for Urjensh.

Maha- In the interim, Mahamed Kûli Soltân, third son of Hajim med Khân, a prince of much courage, having heard of his cousin Kûli's Hâmza's death, kept it very secret ; resolving to go from Ur- bravery. jensh secretly, and join Bâba Soltân at Hazarâsh. He took with him some trusty Turkmâns, and Jagatays ( Q ), with 200 Usbeks, newly escaped from Great Bukhâria, with a view to trade. He began his journey by the river of Urjensh : but, coming near the little town of Zilpuk, found himself on a sudden surrounded by the troops of Khojâm Kûli ; who, believing that the Soltân could not possibly get out of his hands, ordered his officers to take him alive. However, he missed of his aim ;
 for Mahamed Kûli, forming one large squadron with his men, rushed violently upon one of the enemy's wings ; and, breaking through them, retired into the country of the Mânkâts ( R ) ;
 where he endeavoured to draw Kuzuk Khân into his interest, by proposing to marry his sister : but this prince, fearing Ab- do'llah Khân's resentment, in case he gave Mahamed Kûli any

( Q ) The old Mongols, or Mungls, who came with Jaga- tay Khân into these parts ; which took their name from him.

( R ) Or Karakâlpâhs ; who possess the west parts of Turk- estân.

protection,

protection, had him arrested, and sent to the Urûs (or Russians); where he died some time after <sup>12. Khân Hajim.</sup>

H A J I M Khân, being informed of what had happened by a soldier, who was in the fight, left Urjensb, accompanied by his son Arap Mahamed Soltân, and some soldiers, desiging to retire to Mankishblák: but the enemy having overtaken him the third night after his departure, he was obliged to fight them; and, being worsted, he endeavoured to make a retreat. As the enemy continued to follow him, he was forced next morning to stand a new attack; in which he lost more than half of the few men he had with him. So that he was constrained once more to quit Karazm, and take refuge at Astarabâd; from whence he afterwards repaired to the Shâh at Kazwîn. Mean time Abdo'llah Khân went in person to besiege Hazârâsb; and, having taken it, caused Bâba Soltân, and his fifteen men, to be put to death. After this he returned into Great Bukhâria; where he died (S) the last day of the year 1006, called (by the Mungls) Tawk, or the Hen. <sup>Hej. 1006 A. D. 1597.</sup>

UPON the news of Abdo'llah Khân's death, Shâh Abbâs Mâzi gathered a great army, and next year encamped near Bastâm. At this place Hajim Khân desired leave of the Shâh to take a journey towards Great Bukhâria, to try if Abdo'l momîn, who had succeeded his father, would restore him one of his cities, that he might there end his days in quiet. Abbâs having readily consented to his request, he departed, accompanied by Arap Mahamed Soltân, and his grandson Isfândiar Soltân, with a retinue of fifteen persons; leaving behind Barandû, son of Ibrâhîm Soltân. But, having lost his way, during the second day's journey, he found himself at length near the Turkmâns of Tâka, by the mountains of Kurân; where he imagined he was not far from Marû. As this mistake embarrassed him extremely, he resolved to rest there that night, in order to consider what he had best to do. Going at sunrise to sit in the shade to say his prayers, because it was Midsummer, he saw two Naymâns on horseback, coming from towards Tawrsurdi. These had formerly been his subjects, and of those who were carried into Great Bukhâria. As soon as they approached, they wished him long life, and informed him, that Abdo'l momîn Khân, in his return from Khorassân to his own dominions, was slain at Zamîn (T), by his own people; and that they had set-out in quest of him to bring him the news. <sup>After Abdo'llah's death;</sup>

* ABULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 304, & seqq.

(S) So that Olearius must be mistaken, when he says that the Khân, with his brother, and three of his sons, were taken by Shâh Abbâs, and put to death.

(T) Or Zâm, on the river Amû.

12. Khân
Hajîm.

returns
and dies.

H A J I M Khân, greatly rejoiced at these tidings, made such haste to Urgenjb, that he arrived there in eight days, and found the city without either a governor or a garrison: For, on the confusion which followed the assassination of their Khân, the enemy withdrew out of Karazm. Hajîm Khân kept Urgenjb and Wazîr; he assigned Khayuk and Kât to his son Arap Mahamed Soltân, and gave Isfândiar, his grandson, Hazârâsb. Soon after the Usteks, made prisoners by Abdô'llah Khân, took the opportunity to return home; as did in the third year Siunj Mahamed Soltân, from the country of Rûm (or Turky): at whose arrival his father resigned to him the dignity of Khan; and retired to live at Khayuk, with Arap Mahamed Soltân.

Khân Si-
unj Ma-
hamed.

S I U N J Mahamed Khân did not long enjoy the sweets of reigning: for he died a year after his return to Urgenjb; and was succeeded by his son Abdô'llah Soltân: but

Khân Ab-
do'llah.

ABDÔ'LLAH Khân lived no more than another twelve-month after his father.

Hej. 1011
A. D.
1602.

At length Hajîm Khân died in the year 1011, called Bars, or the Tiger, at the age of fourscore-and-one<sup>s</sup>.

13. Khân
Arap Ma-
hamed.

A R A P (U) Mahamed Khân succeeded on the death of his father Hajîm Khân to all his dominions; and on his advancement, added Kât to his son Isfândiar's portion. Six months after, while he passed the summer, with the lords his vassals, on the banks of the river Amâ, the Urûs (or Russians) of Jâik (X), knowing there were no soldiers at Urgenjb during that season, came with 1000 men; and, after they had cut the throats of 1000 of the inhabitants, loaded as many waggons with the most valuable goods; and, burning what they could not carry away, marched off with 1000 females. The Khân, being informed of this in time, went to cut off their retreat at a certain defile: which he so well intrenched and palisadoed, though in a hurry, that the enemy could not force him, till after an attack of two days; and after all, they were obliged to leave their booty behind them. Mean time Arap Mahamed Khân, who had no design to let them escape him so cheaply, having gotten the start of them by cross roads, went to wait for them at another pass; which the Urûs not being able to force, and water beginning to fail, so that they were constrained to drink the blood of their slain, they made a last

Invasion
by Kossaks,

<sup>s</sup> ABULG. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 308, & seqq.

(U) This is the Turkish pro- who dwell on the river Jâik, or nunciation of Arab. Yâik.

(X) These were the Kossaks, effort to break through the barricades : but this attempt suc- 13. Khân ceeded so ill with them, that scarce a hundred of their num- Arap Mahamed.

ber escaped. These remains made over to the river Khesel ;
where they built a cabin, a good way beyond Tuk, and subsisted by fishing, waiting for an opportunity to get back : but five days after, the Khân, being informed of the place of their retreat, sent soldiers thither, who slew them every man.

SIX months after, a thousand Kalmûks (Y), passing between and Kal- the lake Kheja Kûli, and the mountain Sheykh Azîz, came to mûks.
surprise some Uzbeks, who dwelt along the Khesel, towards Kât ; and, having killed a great number of them, were upon their return home, laden with booty and prisoners : but Arâp Ma- hamed Khân, having been informed of their invasion, pursued them so close at the heels, that they had much ado to escape him, after they had been forced to leave what they had taken behind them.

SOME time after, the Naymâns, who never relished well the Plots a- government of this Khân, brought secretly into Khayuk one gainst him.
Khifferân Soltân, a descendant of Ibârs Khân, with a design to kill Arap Mahamed, and set up the other for Khân in his room. But Arâp Mahamed Khân, having timely notice of the plot from two men, one a Kerghis, the other a Vigâr, caused the Soltân to be seized and put to death. As for Sâfi Mirza, the chief conspirator, his own brother Bâba Mîrza killed him, as a person unworthy to live after such a crime ; otherwise the Khân would not have punished him. Two years after, Sâib Mirza, with twenty Vigûrs, went from Urjensb to Samarkant, and brought from thence Seleh Soltân, a descendant of Hassan Kûli Khân, with design to get him acknowledged Khân in Ur- jensb. Of this Arap Mahamed Khân being informed, he hastened to that city, and put the new pretender to death, without enquiring farther after his accomplices ; who, he said, might be innocently drawn into the plot : and although he knew Sâib
Mirza was the author of the whole, yet he would not put him to death, but left it to the Vigûrs to do by him as they judged proper.

TEN years after, the Kalmûks, having invaded Karazm on the side of Bakirgan, plundered many habitations, and returned with a great number of prisoners ; notwithstanding all the haste that was made to pursue them.

ARAP Mahamed Khân had now reigned peaceably for four- Two of his teen years. When one day, being gone to Urjensb, several young sons

(Y) A nickname given the from whom the Russians have Elûsh Mungls, by the Uzbeks ; it.

13. Khán men persuaded two of his sons (Z), Habâsh and Ilbârs (the one sixteen, the other fourteen), to go with them from Khayuk to Arâp Mahamed. Urjensh, in order to get them received in quality of successors to their father. With this intention they actually advanced as far as a fountain in the province of Pilgha, only one day's journey from Urjensh, where they stayed ten days; during which time their father sent for them to come to him, and to tell them that he would give them Wâzîr for a portion. Their answer was, that they would come as soon as their men were gotten together. Arâp Mahamed Khân might have quashed this sedition in its birth, if he had only published his orders that none should join the princes: for he was so much feared by his subjects, that, if he had forbidden them to have any commerce with their wives for a whole year together, they would not only have obeyed his orders, but even avoided coming too near their houses, for fear of giving room for suspicion: but neglecting this precaution, though at the same time he knew many went to visit them, the people imagined that what they did was by his own consent<sup>1</sup>.

ri: against him:

THE two princes, judging themselves strong enough, made an irruption into Khorassân; from whence they returned to their camp laden with plunder, and sent two Persians as a present to their father: after this they dismissed all their troops, excepting fourscore men. Hereupon the Khân sent again a Vigîr lord to exhort them to come before him: but the Uzbeks, dwelling between the provinces of Darugan and Bakirgan, who had joined them, answered, "that the princes had no occasion to go to their father, and that they had nothing to do with him." As this language foreboded a rebellion, the Khân, being seized with fear, at the advice of that lord, retired to Khayuk. Upon this news, the two princes went a second time to ravage the Persian territories; and, at their return, seizing all their father's granaries, distributed the corn among their troops; which increased them considerably. Wheat was at that time so cheap in Karazm, that two hundred weight might have been bought for a Tanga: for nothing but that kind of grain was sown, from the small town of Mahân, to this side of Bakirgan, and as far as the province of Kuigan.

matters
accommodated:

<sup>1</sup> ABULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 312, & seqq.

(Z) He had in all seven; 1. Khân Soltân; 2. Augân Soltân; 3. Izbâr Soltân; 4. Alâi-ghâzi Babâr Soltân; 5. Sharîf Mahamed Soltân; 6. Karazm The second and third were by one mother, the fifth and sixth by another.

THE Khán, who possessed a great extent of land on that side, caused the Khesil to be cut behind the town of Túk, and by means of that opening, and several canals which proceeded from it, watered his meadows : after which, the gap being closed up, the river resumed its course to the sea of Mazánderán. Arap Mahamed Khán, finding the mutineers multiply daily, came to an agreement with his sons, giving up to them Wázir, and all the Turkmáns depending on it : after which, the two princes, followed by 4000 men, went to Alayuk to salute their father.

13. Khán
Arap Ma-
hamed.

FOUR years after this, Ilbárs Soltán assembled troops at Say-zakuduk to the north of Wázir, under pretence of going to besiege Yaxerjardi : but, hearing that the Khán his father was on the road to Urjenš, he went and took Khayuk. Arap Mahamed Khán, being informed of this surprise, turned back by advice of his lords ; who were of opinion, that on his approach Ilbárs would quit the city. But when he came to Khašgan, a little town near Khayuk, Ilbárs sent thither 500 men ; who, entering in the night, seized him and all his retinue. From thence they were convoyed to Khayuk : where Ilbárs detained them all as his prisoners, and distributed among his troops all the money found in his father's chest, which he had been gathering for many years ; as well as the effects of the captive lords. The other brothers, being informed of this detestable action, resolved to make war on Ilbárs ; even Habáš himself offered to join them in the undertaking : but they were diverted from that resolution by some of their lords, who judged that such a proceeding might bring their aged father's life in danger ; while Ilbárs, if let alone, would release him of his own accord : as shortly after it fell out.

WHEN the Khán was returned to Urjenš, with his son Ji-fándiar Soltán, it was resolved to seize Ilbárs Soltán : but he, discovering their design, fled to the desert with only five or six men ; however, they ruined his habitations, and removed the greater part of his subjects. At their return from this expedition, Abú'lgházi Soltán proposed to go kill his brothers Habáš and Ilbárs, who still carried on a close correspondence, as the only way to secure his father's life. But the Khán would determine nothing till he had consulted Zín Háji. Abú'lgházi Soltán returned at the time appointed ; and, understanding that this lord did not approve of his proposal, put his father in mind how he had been deceived before by the brother of Zín Háji, magnifying the forces of those princes, to whom he was sent on their first revolt : which act had obliged the Khán to retire to Khayuk, when he might easily have seized them, but for that false representation. He added, " that as every body else,

Abú'lgházi
Soltán

13. Khân "whom the Khân had consulted, approved of his design, ex-ArapMa- "cepting Zin Hâji, it confirmed him in the opinion, which hamed. "he had all along entertained, that he and his brother Kur- ~~~~~ "bank were both traitors; and held a criminal correspondence "with Ilbars, by means of their two other brothers, who "were the most intimate confidants of that prince." In short, he told his father, that, if he did not follow his counsel, he would repent it when it was too late."

proposes to FOR all this, Arap Mahamed Khân refused to enter into his kill them. measures; nor would Isfândiar Soltân, his eldest brother, be concerned in any such design. Mean time, Habâsh Soltân, who had his spies every-where, being informed, by one of Isfândiar Soltân's principal domestics, of Abû'lghâzi's proposal to destroy him, never could forgive it him.

The Khân FIVE months after, Arap Mahamed Khân, beginning to re-marches pent that he had not followed Abû'lghâzi Soltân's advice, sent orders to Isfândiar Soltân, and him, to repair forthwith to Khayuk, with their troops. In the interim, he sent to tell Habâsh and Ilbars Soltân, that, in case they delivered up to him ten persons, who never ceased giving them evil counsel, he would pardon all which was past; otherwise he would own them no longer for his children. Upon their refusal, the Khân advanced with his troops to Kandum, a borough not far from Khayuk; where he waited for his two sons. Abû'lghâzi Soltân, leaving his men to follow leisurely, rode before (A); and, being come to Kandum, would have had his father march along the right side of the river: while he, with his 800 men, should oblige the Turkmâns, who encamped in the desert, and were more than half of them his subjects, to join him; resolving to destroy such as belonged to his rebel brothers, in case they refused: for, without their assistance, those provinces could not raise 400 men: but the Khân could not approve of his advice this time neither. As soon as Isfândiar Soltân arrived with his troops, they set forward; and, when they came into the province of Ikzi Kumâni, Abû'lghâzi Soltân set upon his father once more to make a diversion among the Turkmâns: though to as little purpose as before. In short, having advanced by slow marches as far as the little canal, called Tasbli Ghermish, the two rebel princes, who had time enough given them to assemble all their forces, came and charged their father so vigorously, that his men began presently to fly, and left the un-against his sons;

8 ABULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 316, & seqq.

(A) He left Kat in the morning, and came to Kandum late in the evening.

fortunate Khân a second time prisoner in the hands of his unnatural sons.

IN this battle, which was very bloody, Abû'lghazi Soltân, being hemmed in by forty men, was brought off by six of his own; who came opportunely to his relief. On this occasion he received a shot with an arrow in the mouth; so that he was obliged afterwards to have some little bone taken away on the fractured side. After this he made towards a river: but had scarce gotten his coat of mail off, before the enemy came running after him, and crying kill! kill! Hereupon, plunging into the stream, which was very rapid, he, with difficulty, escaped drowning, by giving the horse his head, and holding fast by the mane. As soon as he had crossed the river, with three of his men, he took the road to Kât, where he met with ten more; and with them retired into Great Bukhâria to Imâm Kûli Khân, successor of Abd'lmomîn Khân at Samar-kant (B); who received him very kindly *.

13. Khân
Arap Ma-
hamed.
is taken prisoner,

ISFANDIAR Soltân, having retreated to Hazârâst, with his brothers Sharîf Mahamed and Karazm Khân Soltân, Ilbârs and Habâsh came and besieged them: but, coming to an accommodation at the end of forty days, Isfândiar retired to the Shah of Persia, under pretence of performing the pilgrimage of Mekka, and left the city in possession of Sharîf Mahamed Soltân; who, four months after, retired into Great Bukhâria to his brother Abû'lghâzi Soltân. As Karazm, by his departure, fell intirely into the hands of Ilbârs and Habâsh, they divided it between themselves. The first had Khayuk and Hazârâst; the latter Urjensh and Wâzir; with their dependencies. They assigned their father the little town of Kumkâla, to live there with his three wives and two youngest sons: but twelve months after, Ilbârs, sending for his father and two brothers, caused him to be put to death, with Karazm Khân Soltân; and sent Augân Soltân to Habâsh, that he might meet with the same treatment. However, this latter, without whose knowlege all the rest had been done, unwilling to imbrue his hands in his brother's blood, had him sent to

* ABULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 321, & seqq.

(B) This seems to clash with what is related, p. 333 & 334, of Abû'lghâzi Khân's history; where it is said, that, from Kât, he crossed Mâwara'nahr to Samarkant, in order to go to Imâm Kûli Khân, in Great Bukhâria.

From hence also it may be inferred, that Mâwara'nahr is a different country from Great Bukhâria; and that Imâm Kûli Khân reigned at Bokhâra, not at Samarkant.

14. Khân the Czar of Russia; where he remained till he died. As to Isfândiar, the two sons of Isfândiar Soltân, who were both infants, Ilbârs had them educated at Khayuk. Arap Mahamed Khân lost his life in 1031, called It, or the Dog, after having reigned twenty years.

Hej. 1031
A. D.
1621.

4. From the Death of Arap Mahamed Khân to the Reign of Abû'lghâzi Khân.

14. Khân THE news of the Khân's death having reached the Persian court, the Shâh gave Isfândiar Soltân 300 chosen men, to see if he could recover his father's dominions. As he was joined on the road by 170 Turkmâns of the tribes of Tâka and Yamut, he advanced directly to the camp of Habâsh Soltân, near Tûk; but found him not there. That prince was then feasting at the house of one of his lords; when hearing on a sudden the trumpet sound (which is forbidden on any account, except on the approach of an enemy), he instantly took horse, and fled for shelter to Ilbârs Soltân. After this, all those who had any regard for the memory of the late Khân, as well as such who were the subjects of his other sons, came and joined Isfândiar: whose affairs were taking the best turn imaginable, when the face of them was intirely changed by the artifice of one Nâsar Khoja.

defeated by
pious fraud;

As soon as this person, who was descended from a holy man, called Sâghidâta, saw the storm rising, he sent to bid Ilbârs, who had married his daughter, take courage; and promised to join him in two days, with all the men he could get together. To this end he armed fifty men, and pressing all the people he met on the road, went and seized the ford of the river Khêfil, in order to hinder any from passing who had a mind to take part with Isfândiar. This done, he took the Korân in his hands, and began to curse that prince aloud; giving out that he had embraced the Persian sect, and that, where-ever he came, he put to the sword all the men, and made slaves of the women and children. As he supported all this with the solemnest oaths, many of the common people, who could not believe that a man of his birth would violate the most sacred laws purposely to impose on them, instead of repairing to Isfândiar, as they at first designed, went over to the two usurpers.

he recovers Ka-
razm.

ILBÂRS and Habâsh, by this means, quickly found themselves in a condition to march in search of their eldest brother: and the two armies at length meeting, Isfândiar was constrained, after a bloody action, to retire towards Mankisblâk. However, in that place, being joined by 3000 Turkmâns, and a great number of Uzbeks, who began to grow weary of the government of the two princes, he turned back again; and his brothers having advanced to meet him with a considerable army, they continued fighting for twenty-two days successively: but at length Isfândiar gained the victory; and having taken his brother Ilbârs prisoner, caused him to be put to death on the spot. Habâsh Soltân took refuge with the Mankats (C), who inhabit along the river Sîr: but, not thinking himself safe enough with them, he retired to Shârnîk Mîrza, a lord of the Mankats, who dwelt about the banks of the Yem; in hopes of meeting with a good reception from the chief of that tribe, in return for having sent back all the Mankat prisoners within his dominions, when he reigned at Urjensh: but that lord, detesting his heinous actions, caused him to be arrested, and sent him to his brother Isfândiar; who had him executed without delay, in the year 1032, called Tongûz, or the Hog.

14. Khân.
Isfândiar

Hej. 1032
A. D.
1622.

THE news of this event coming to the ears of Abû'lghâzi, Partition and Sharîf Mahamed, at Samarkant, they took leave of Imâm of the Kûli Khân, and returned to Urjensh. At their arrival, they towns. caused Isfândiar to be proclaimed Khân; and divided the dominions of their father among them. The Khân had for his share the cities of Khayuk, Hazârâsh, and Kât; Abû'lghâzi Soltân, Urjensh, with its dependencies (being then just nineteen years old); and Sharîf Mahamed Soltân, Wâzîr.

THE year after, all the principal subjects of Isfândiar Khân Plot a- went in autumn to pay their court to him: but Abû'lghâzi gainst the Soltân, before he set out, invited his brother Sharîf Maha- Turk- med, with three of his vassal lords, to his house; and, in pre- mâns. sence of two of his own vassals, asked him, if there was not some animosity between him and the Khân. On his answering in the negative, he enjoined all the six to secrecy under an oath; and then told them, "that he could not comprehend " what his brother meant by keeping the Turkmâns about " him a whole year: that possibly his design was to destroy " all the Uzbeks about Khayuk, for having always favoured " Ilbârs Soltân; in which case he would be sure to demand " help of them on their appearance at Khayuk: that, for this " reason, the best course they could take was not to go to " that city; since their absence might divert his intention: " but that, if they must needs go thither, it was his advice " to kill all the Turkmâns they should meet on the road; and

(C) Nicknamed Karakâlpâks,

" then

14. Khân " then present themselves before the Khân, with ropes about Isfândiâr. " their necks, to implore pardon ; excusing themselves on " account of the usual treachery of that people, and the great " occasion of complaint given by them in times past." But Sharîf Mahamed Soltân, not approving of killing the Turk- mâns, proposed assassinating the Khân his brother, and then proclaiming Abûlghâzi Soltân in his room.

Vigûrs and Naymâns
slain :

THIS proposal was liked by four of the lords ; but the fifth, named Kurbân Hâji, a Vigûr, and one of Abûlghâzi Soltân's vassals, not only rejected it, but declared, that, if he heard any more mention of such a plot against the Khân's life, he would impeach them. So blunt a declaration having broken all their measures, they went to Khayuk : but four days after, when they were about to return, Isfândiâr Khân caused Abûlghâzi Soltân to be arrested, and all the Vigûrs and Naymâns then in the city, to the number of 500, to be put to the sword. On this occasion, 100 Uzbeks of other tribes were slain, although he had forbidden that any harm should be done to such. In like manner the troops, which were sent to destroy all about Khayuk belonging to those two tribes (whom he was determined to root out), contrary to his orders, slew all the Uzbeks, who dwelt from Hazarâsh, as far as the high stone-tower, where the river Amû divides in two branches (D) ; not sparing the very infants at the breast ².

Stand on their defence ;

THE Khân, after this, sent Sharîf Mahamed Soltân to Ur- jensh, with orders to cause the throats of all the Vigûrs and Naymâns, depending on that city, to be cut. However, on his arrival there, those people gave him to understand, that they were resolved not to suffer themselves to be massacred without selling their lives very dear : but that they were ready to quit the country, or receive Abûlghâzi Soltân, and Maha- med Sayn Beg (one of the Khân's most trusty servants) to inspect their conduct. These proposals appearing reasonable to Sharîf Mahamed Soltân, he sent them to Isfândiâr Khân ; who pitched on the last expedient. As soon as Abûlghâzi Soltân arrived thither, he went and took up his abode by the side of the Kheshil ; which he fortified for his security. A few days after, Sharîf Mahamed Soltân came thither also, with eighty Turkmâns in his train ; who immediately quitted him, and went

² ARULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 328, & seqq.

(D) One of these arms, called by a large chanel into the Keshil, Tokav, passes by that tower ; near Tûk ; which had rendered the other, which is greater, Urjensh, when the author wrote, having quitted its old bed, runs no better than a desert.

to join Mahamed Sayn Beg. Mean time thirty of the most considerable Uzbeks, beyond the river, came to welcome Abû'l-ghâzi Soltân, and offered him 1000 choice men to be employed in his service against Isfândiar Khân. On this occasion, they proposed to begin by killing Mahamed Sayn Beg and his eighty men, because they considered the Turkmâns as the only authors of the late massacre of their brethren; and then, marching to Khayuk, would put to the sword all such of that nation as they found in its neighbourhood.

BUT this project appeared impracticable to Abû'lghâzi Soltân; who knew that the eighty Turkmâns would be so much upon their guard, that, on the least motion of the Uzbeks, they would take flight: so that, before the Uzbeks could reach Khayuk, the rest of them would be removed with their effects; and, what would be still worse, the Kalmûks, in their absence, would come and carry off their wives and children. He was therefore of opinion, that they ought to treat Mahamed Sayn Beg kindly; and send him back laden with civilities, in order to lull Isfândiar Khân asleep: that after this, Sharîf Mahamed should go pass the winter in the little town of Kayuk, near Urjensh; whilst the Uzbeks, beyond the river, began to make an intrenchment, as if for their security against the Kalmûks: that they should place guards along the two roads leading to the country of those Tatars, as though to observe what passed; and that, in spring, a man should come running from those guards, with news of a Kalmûk invasion: that on this advice they should assemble troops, under pretence of going to meet the enemy: but that in the way, joining Sharîf Mahamed Soltân, they should turn on a sudden towards Khayuk; surprise that city, when there could not be at such time more than sixty men about the Khân, and put all the Turkmâns to the sword^a.

THE Uzbeks, however, had no inclination to depart from their design upon Mahamed Sayn Beg and his eighty Turkmâns: but these latter, finelling it out, retired at night-fall, when every body else was gone to rest. The Uzbeks arriving soon after, Abû'lghâzi Soltân told them, that, as the shortest follies are the best, his advice was to send to assure the Khân, that they knew not the reason of Mahamed's sudden departure, having given him no cause to complain; and that, in case they had intended him any harm, they might easily have prevented it. But this advice was not relished by his brother and the Uzbeks, who insisted that they had no other measures to take, than to march with all their forces to Khayuk. According to this resolution of the majority, they set forwards; and, arriving in two days at the bridge of Tâsh Kupruk, they halted there forty days; in which time they killed some Turkmâns, the rest retiring into that city.

^a ABULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 336, & seqq.

14. Khân Isfândiar.

the Uzbeks defeated.

MEAN time the Kalmûks having surprised one part of the Uzbeks camp, and carried a great number into slavery, many of them deserted the army, beginning to have a bad opinion of their success. On the news of this revolt of the Uzbeks, the Turkmâns who dwelt about the mountain Abû'lkhân, and at Mankisblâk, joining Isfândiar Khân at Khayuk, this prince took the field in his turn; and, engaging the Uzbeks in the place above-mentioned, intirely defeated them. Abû'lghâzi Soltân, seeing the battle lost, retired with some of his men into the intrenchment, which they had raised to cover their baggage; where he found four or five hundred busy at packing up to be gone: but, obliging them to dismount, he made them tie their horses together, to take from them all hopes of saving themselves by flight, and then in a posture of defence waited for the enemy. In the evening, Isfândiar Khân drew near: but Abû'lghâzi Soltân, sallying out at the head of 500 men, gave him so warm a reception, that he durst not make a second attempt; contenting himself to intrench with his troops at a small distance. After they had looked at one another in this manner for six days, without daring to engage; on the seventh, they came to an accommodation, which the Khân had set on foot only with a view to draw Abû'lghâzi Soltân into the open field; where he proposed to have put him and all his followers to the sword. But he missed of his aim by an accident: for the Turkmâns had gone to pillage the borough of Khânaka, inhabited by Sarts, just at the time his brother passed out of his intrenchment: however, at their return, the Khân did not fail to pursue him with 5000 men. Abû'lghâzi Soltân, who had in all but 540 men, suspecting his design when he perceived him advance, formed in haste an inclosure with his chariots; and defended himself so well, that the Khân was obliged to come to a second treaty, after having had 80 killed and 2000 wounded in the action: whereas of Abû'lghâzi's soldiers no more than 20 were slain, and 100 wounded. After this Abû'lghâzi Soltân, and his brother Sharîf Mahamed Soltân, fixing their abode at Urjensb, all the Uzbeks, who dwelt before on both sides of the Amû, went and settled about that city^b.

*Karazm
deserted.*

SOME time after, a comet having appeared in the sky, the common people, who were persuaded, considering the extraordinary animosities which reigned among their princes, that it portended some very great calamities, departed by troops, which they call Top, Top, and went into other countries. Nor was it in the power of Abû'lghâzi Soltân, by any means, to restrain their flight: for while he sent after a party which went off on one side, two or three others withdrew another way: some with design to seek shelter in Great Búkhâria, others in Turkeftân, among the Kasáts (D) and Mankáts. So that having, in one month's time, lost three considerable troops of his subjects, he was constrained to retire elsewhere, to avoid lying at the mercy of Isfândiar Khán. Accordingly he bent his course towards the Kasáchia Orda, and visited Isbím Khán of Turkeftân: while Sharíf Mahamed Soltân, who was in the same case, went into Great Búkhâria.

^b ABULGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 340, & seqq.

THREE months after, Isbím Khán, going to Tâshkant, to pay his respects to Tursum Khán, the reigning prince of those provinces, presented Abû'lghâzi Soltân to him; and at the same time mentioned the obligations which they both owed to his house, on account of the protection given to many of their relations, who had fled for refuge to Karazm. Hereupon Tursum Khán received him at his court, and treated him with much distinction: but, two years after, Isbím Khán, having assassinated Tursum Khán, and massacred all those of the Kataguns who were his antient subjects; Abû'lghâzi, who saw there was no less discord between their families than there was in his own, went into Great Búkharia. On his arrival there, he found a very cool reception from Imâm Kúli Khán; because he had applied himself first to Tursum Khán, who was his enemy.

FOR this reason he told the Uzbeks, who had retired thence to Samarkant before him, that he should be obliged to hearken to the Turkmáns, who promised to espouse his interest, to the utmost of their power, provided he would forget what was past. Upon this declaration the Uzbeks assured him, that although they had left the country at the appearance of the comet, yet he might always depend on their zeal for his service: that, on the other hand, they flattered themselves, that he would continue his protection to them; of which, they said, they had the more need, as they daily perceived they could not depend on the promises of his brother Sharíf Mahamed Soltân, who was naturally inconstant, and might, one time or other, side with the Turkmáns against them. In the last

(D) These are the Kasáts, part of Turkeftân, as the Mankáts, or Kasáchia Orda, mentioned below, who possess the east west part.

14. Khân, place, they counselled him to go over to the Turkmâns on Isfândiar. the first invitation, and promised to repair to him in proper time.

returns to Karazm. SHORTLY after, there came a new deputy from the Turkmâns, to let him know, that Isfândiar Khân, being informed they had invited him to their quarters, had retired to Hazâr-âsh, fearing a surprise. Upon this advice Abû'lghâzi Soltân, followed only by five or six persons, went away directly to Khayuk, where he was immediately joined by numbers of people, who flocked to him from all parts. Two months after, he learned, that his brother Sharîf Mahamed Soltân, being reconciled with Isfândiar Khân, was arrived at Hazâr-âsh; and that they both intended to turn all their forces against him. On this information he took the field with what troops he had; and the two armies coming to an engagement, that of Abû'lghâzi Soltân had the better; which obliged his two brothers to sign a treaty of peace. Yet, six months after, when least expected, they came again, and besieged Khayuk, with above 15,000 men, having been joined by all the Turkmâns thereabout. But, although Abû'lghâzi Soltân had no more than 600 with him, he defended himself so vigorously, that he obliged them, at length, to return with loss^c: the consequence of which was a new treaty.

Uzbeks massacred. SOME time after, 3000 families of those Uzbeks, who, three years before, had fled from about Khayuk to the Kaf-sâts and Mankâts, to avoid the fury of Isfândiar Khân, returned and went to settle on the sea-coast, about the mouth of the river Amû. On this news 800 others set forward, on their return from Great Bukkâria, with design to settle in the province of Arâl: but the Khân, who looked on the Vigûrs and Naymâns as the authors of all the misfortunes which had befallen his family, being informed thereof, came upon them by surprise, with some troops, on the banks of the Khêzil, towards Kât, and put them all to the sword, man, woman, and child.

Abû'l-ghâzi Soltân arrested: ISFANDIAR KHAN, taking this occasion to invite his two brothers to court, under pretence of regulating with them what concerned the affairs of the Uzbeks, persuaded Sharîf Mahamed Soltân to repair to the province of Arâl, among those people, as it were of his own accord, and unknown to the Khân. Next morning early, some of the principal Turkmâns coming to visit him on that occasion, he solemnly protested, that Sharîf Mahamed had undertaken the journey without his privity; and, to incense them against

^c ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 343, & seqq.

Abû'lghâzi Soltân, insinuated that it was done by his advice. He went still farther, and told them, that it was this last who had recalled the Uzbeks to settle in the province of Arâl, with a design to employ them against the Turkmâns; and that he had sent his brother thither, to prepare them for the enterprize. He concluded by saying, that, as from thence it appeared he was contriving some dangerous plot against them, their only course was to prevent him by seizing his person.

THIS counsel having been approved of by the assembly, he commanded the gates of the castle to be shut, and sent to arrest Abû'lghâzi Soltân, who was still fast asleep. After this the Khân, carrying him to Yawrsurdî, ordered the governor to send him under a strong guard into Persia: but that officer thought fit, for better security, to conduct him in person to Hamadân, where Shâh Seî (E), the successor of Abbâs, then was. This prince had him conveyed to Isfâhân, where he assigned him a house, and 10,000 Tanga (F) per year, for his maintenance (G): but, at the same time, caused him to be strictly watched, that he might not escape.

ISFANDIAR KHAN died in the first day of the year 1044, called Ghilki, or the horse, after having reigned twelve years, and left two sons, Yushman and Asbrâf. He was succeeded by his brother Sharîf Mahamed Soltân; who fixed his residence at Urjensh. This Khân was much at variance with the Kalmuks (or Eluths); who, in his time, came and seized a great part of Karazm. He died in the year 1052, leaving, as it should seem, the throne vacant, for two years.

5. The Reign of Abû'lghâzi Khân.

Abû'lghâzi Soltân succeeded his brother Sharîf Mahamed in quality of Khân. This prince was born at Urjensh, in the year 1015, called Taufkhân, or the hare, on Monday, in the month of Asfet, at sun-rise, forty-eight days after the defeat of the Kossaks, before-mentioned^d. These Kossaks having, near the river Taik, met with ten merchants of Urjensh, trading to Russia, slew eight, and reserved the other two for guides in their expedition. On this occasion his father Arap

^d P. 178.

(E) He ascended the throne in 1629, at the age of 16.

(F) A silver coin, the fourth part of a crown. See before, p. 148.

(G) This happened about the year 1630: for it was thirteen years before he was proclaimed Khân.

16. Khân Mahamed Khân said, that child will be happy, because his enemies were defeated before he was born (H): and, in regard his mother was descended from Soltân Gâzi, son of Ilbârs Khân, he gave him the name of Abû'lghâzi Bahâdr: and, when he was sixteen years old, married him: at which time he made him a grant of one half of Urjensb; assigning the other half to Habâsb Soltân. The year following (I), upon some difference, which happened between the two brothers, his father gave him the city of Kât, for his portion; and, not long after, the unfortunate battle was fought, wherein the Khân was taken prisoner, and put to death by his unnatural sons^e.

escapes
from Ispahân;

WHAT passed from that time till Abû'lghâzi Soltân was sent into Persia, has been already related. After this prince had remained in that country, in the condition of a prisoner, the space of ten years, he formed the design to make his escape. This having been approved of by three of his domestics, whom he acquainted with it, he called the person who had the guard of him, and ordered him to take to the butchers a horse, which had been sent for his kitchen. This done, he gave him a thousand Tanga, bidding him go buy a pretty slave; and gave him leave to pass the night with her. His ward being gone, full of joy at this present, Abû'lghâzi Soltân and his men went to a neighbouring stable, and took out eight horses. After this, ordering them to shave their beards close, when every body was at rest, he made one of them, who could speak both Turkish and Persian, to put on his best clothes, because he was to represent the master. The second domestic was dressed also like a gentleman; the third wore the garb of a valet, and himself passed for a groom.

suspected
at Bastâm;

IN this equipage they led the horses very softly out of the house, and, mounting, at midnight, when they beat the drum, they arrived at the gate of the city the very instant it was opened: then, continuing their journey, they got safe to Bastâm (K), and passed through the town in the evening, without any accident; but three of their horses failing a little beyond that city, they were obliged to stop at the village of Boyisb, inhabited by Saghits. He who passed for the master, being seated on a carpet at the gate, with one of the valets

^e ABU'LGH. ubi supra, p. 328, & seqq. also 347, & seq.

(H) The Tatars are full of such superstitious whimsies.

(K) A city in the province of Komes, or Kumes, on the

(I) This was in Hejrah 1031, borders of Astarakâd.
A. D. 1621.

standing behind him, while the other held the horses, Abû'l-ghâzi Soltân entered into the place, to exchange the tired cattle. He presently got off two of them. But having asked one among the croud, who flocked about him, which was the way to the village of Maghi? an old man of seventy grew suspicious of him, telling his neighbours, that as scarce one in ten of themselves knew the way to Maghi, he believed this must be the Soltân of the Uzbeks, who was making his escape. He added, that as, in case it was so, there would be couriers after him within a day or two, therefore it would be best to seize and carry him to Bastâm; or, at least, not to exchange horses with him, in regard they who did would suffer for it. On this occasion the counterfeit groom, who spoke the language of the country perfectly well, by way of answer, told the old man a very formal story: that, as his mother had laid her commands on him to go see a person who lived at Maghi, he had prevailed on the lord his master, who sat on the carpet, to take that road. This invention gained the people on his side; but the old man, being still of his first opinion, went to the servant of the overseer of the village, and bade him in haste to acquaint his master, that there were deserters in the place, and that he would do well to have them seized. On this, the valet rode up to Abû'lghâzi Soltân; and, calling him robber, asked him, where he was going? But the pretended groom so awed the valet with the name of his counterfeit lord, and the danger he said he was in of losing his nose, in case his lord should hear what he had uttered, that the valet begged his pardon, and pretended he spoke only by way of jest. After this the groom found no difficulty to exchange his third horse, and get sufficient information of the road f.

avoids the danger:

HAVING made great expedition to pass the borders of Khorassân, he at length arrived in the neighbourhood of Karakum (L), at a place where the road dividing, one led to Mankisblâk, the other to the mountain of Kurân. Resolving now to keep the fields no longer (as till then he had done, to avoid meeting much people), he struck into the latter, and came to a village which belonged to the Turkmâns. At the same time, seeing a boy near the road, he asked him, what kind of people they were? The youth replied, we are Kisilasaks. He then demanded, how they came to be there, gets out of Persia:

f ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 349, & seqq.

(L) Karakum signifies black sand. A black sandy desert, on the borders of Karazm.

16. Khân
Abû'l-
ghâzi.

received by the Turk-mâns :

is proclaimed
Khân :

Hejrah
1053.
A.D.
1043.

attacks
Khayuk,

since they belonged to Mankishlâk ? and was answered, that the Kalmûks had driven them out of their habitations three years before ; and named some families of the tribe of Irsûri, known to Abû'lghâzi Soltân, who dwelt not far off.

THE Soltân, joyful to find himself out of the Persian dominions, went to the village, where he was received with extreme joy by the inhabitants ; at whose invitation he staid there the whole winter : but in spring repaired to the Turkmâns of the tribe of Tûka, who dwelt near the river Amû, at the foot of the mountain Kurân. With these he staid two years, and then went to Mankishlâk ; where he found no more than 700 families, who were reduced under the dominion of the Kalmûks (or Elûth Mungls). The Khân of the Kalmûks, being informed of Abû'lghâzi Soltân's arrival in his dominions, sent one of his principal officers to invite him to court (M). Abû'lghâzi Soltân, accepting of the invitation, was treated with great distinction all the while he staid there, which was a whole year. After which, having taken a resolution of going to Urjensh, the Khân suffered him to depart, and shewed him many marks of friendship. He arrived at that city in the year 1053, called Ghilan, or the serpent ; and, six months after, the Turkmâns proclaimed him Khân, in the province of Arâl, towards the entrance of the river Amû into the sea of Mazânderân. This was in 1054, two years after the death of Sharîf Mahamed Khân. Tuskan and Asbrâf, the two sons of Isfândiar Khân, his predecessor, being in possession of Khayuk and Hazârâsh, the Turkmâns, within their jurisdiction, refused to submit to Abû'lghâzi Khân ; and put themselves under the protection of Nadir Mahamed Khân, of Great Bukhâria, after sending Asbrâf Soltân to the Persian court, to be brought up there.

UPON this, Abû'lghâzi Khân, having sent twice to pillage the habitations of the subjects of Khayuk, the Khân of Great Bukhâria, placed commanders and strong garrisons in that city and Hazârâsh ; and sent the widow of Isfândiar Khân to dwell in the country of Kanski. Having afterwards conferred the government of those two places on his grandson Kâssim Soltân, son of Khisserrân Soltân, Abû'lghâzi Khân resolved to pay him a visit. With this design he embarked his infantry in the province of Arâl, to ascend the river Khesil, as far as

(M) The author does not mention where the Khân kept his court, or whether any part of Karazm was then under his dominion. It was at this time that the author learned the Mogol (or Mungl) language, in which he wrote his history. See Abû'lghâzi Khân's Hist. Turks, &c. p. 31.

the

the bridge of Taşb Kapruk, and followed by land with his cavalry. Being arrived at the place of rendezvous, he marched, with some of his foot, to the village of Kondâm; and, passing a brook which lay between him and the city, concealed one hundred and eighty of his men in a valley: then, with sixty bowmen and twenty musketteers, advanced up to the place, ordering them not to fire till they saw him fire ^{16. Khân}.

THE enemy, perceiving them coming on, made a sally ^{without} with a thousand men, of whom seven hundred had coats of mail; whereas not above five of the Khân's were so accoutred. But that prince, without being dismayed at their numbers, drew dextrously to the place where he designed, and then, marching up, gave them so rude a salute with arrows and bullets, at twenty paces distance, as allayed much of their first ardour; whilst they who lay concealed advancing at the same time to charge them in flank, the enemy fell into confusion, and fled towards Khayuk. The Khân, who was not able to pursue them, for want of horse, returned, and sent his troops into quarters (N).

SOMETIME after this, Nadir Mahamed, Khân of Great Bukhâria, recalled his grandson Kâssim Soltân from Khayuk, and sent Yakûb, one of his lords, to Hazârâşb, to govern what he possessed in Karazm: but having in the interim been dethroned by his vassals, for his harsh treatment of them, they set up his son Abdo'lazîz Soltân. On the news of this revolution, Abû'lghâzi Khân, marching to Khayuk, in the year 1056, called Tauk, or the Hen, found no difficulty to possess himself of that city. After which he caused proclamation to be made, that all the Turkmâns who had quitted their habitations, on account of their late troubles, might freely return home, on his promise never to call to mind their past offences.

ON these assurances, they who dwelt beyond Hazârâşb sent deputies to the Khân; who ordered, that they should all repair to his camp before that city, which he was going to take possession of, and there tender him their faith and homage. The Turkmans being assembled, pursuant to his commands, he, by a messenger, desired them to provide his kitchen with milk and cattle, for that he intended to make a great entertainment the day following. This having been performed, to ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 354, & seqq.

(N) Here Abû'lghâzi Khân he died. What follows of it breaks off his history; having been hindered from finishing it by a grievous sickness, of which

16. Khân the Khân's satisfaction, he treated them in a very splendid manner; but, towards evening, caused all his guests to be killed, to the number of 2000 persons; and then sent to plunder their habitations.

with the Turk-
mâns.

A. D.
1647.

A. D.
1648.

NEXT year, being that called It, or the Dog, in the month of Jomado'lawal, he marched into the province of Tarkhân, in quest of the Turkmâns, who had quitted Khayuk, after Kâssim Soltân's departure; and put to the sword all those whom he met with: but the greater part of them fled into the province of Bamuburinak, whither he went to dislodge them, in the year Zizkân, or the Mouse (O). They who knew not where else to retire, sent their wives and children into the province of Arâd, and intrenched themselves under the ruins of some old walls. The Khân, finding them in this situation, made them some specious proposals of accommodation: but, as they durst not trust him, they marched out on foot, and threw themselves desperately on his troops: however, they were so well received, that not one of them escaped the sword. The day after, Abû'lghâzi Khân detached some of his men towards the province of Arâd, in pursuit of the wives and children of the Turkmâns, who had lost their lives on this occasion, and returned himself to Khayuk. In short, being resolved to reduce the Turkmâns so low, that they should not be able to raise disturbances for the future, he made several expeditions against them, in which he severely chastised them^h (P).

Kalmûks
invasion.

A. D.
1649.

A. D.
1652.

IN the year Saghîr, or the Cow, a Kalmûk lord, of the tribe of Kurlaût, advancing with some troops as far as Kât, caused many people to be killed, and others carried into slavery. Soon after, another, called Boyan, of the Torgaût tribe, coming into Karazm to traffick, the Khân suffered him and his followers to finish their business; and then, pursuing them, defeated their rear, in the province of Yuguruk-bâsh: after which, overtaking the body of their troops, they were constrained to fly, and leave their effects behind them. Three years after, in that called Lu, or the Crocodile, Abû'lghâzi Khân, having been informed that the Kalmûks hovered upon the frontiers both of Great Bûkhâria and Karazm, with strong parties, and made terrible havock where-ever they came, sent Abdo'laziz notice to be upon his guard. Mean time, the lords of the Torgaûts invaded the lands of Hazârâsh, where they destroyed the village Yezdus, and took many people and cattle out of another called Danugân.

^h ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 357, & seqq

(O) The first of the duodecenary cycle of the Mungls.

(P) Particularly the Bayratzs, Ghemergkem illi, and Sarik.

UPON this advice, Abû'lghâzi Khân took horse immediately, to pursue them, contrary to the request of his officers: and, although they had gotten ten days march before him, yet, by riding day and night, he at length came up with their rear, near the mountain Irder, and defeated them. Then, pursuing the rest, he overtook them in the province of Segheri Rabat; where they had so well intrenched themselves that it was impossible to force them: but, on the other hand, as they durst not venture out to continue their journey, they sent all the plunder which they had taken, with their bows and arrows to the Khân, and intreated pardon for the offence; pretending, in excuse, that they did not know the above-mentioned village belonged to him; and promising never to invade his dominions for the future, or suffer any of their nation to do it. Hereupon Abû'lghâzi Khân, considering that none of that tribe of Kalmûks had ever incommoded his subjects before, he sent them their release, and let them return home in peace.

AFTER this, Subhân Kûli, Khân of Bâlk, who had married his brother Sharîf Mahamed Khân's daughter, sent to intreat his aid against Abdo'lazîz Khân, who had taken the field, with an intention to deprive him of his dominions (Q). Abû'lghâzi Khân, though he had designed to pass the rest of his days in repose, yet willing to assist his near relation, and revenge the injuries done his house by Abdo'llah Khân, advanced, in the year called Koy, or the Sheep, into the province of Koghertlik, bordering on Great Bûkhâria; and sent a body of 10,000 men to plunder the city of Karakûl, whilst he went in person against that of Siunjbâla, which he destroyed, with thirty or forty neighbouring villages. After this, he returned for a while to Khayuk; and then, in a second expedition, made the same year, plundered Karakûl in person. Then passing on to the province of Gordish, he defeated an army of 15,000 men, sent by Abdo'lazîz Khân from Kârshi, of whom scarce 1000 escaped. A great part of these 1000 threw themselves into Karakûl; but the Khân, following them, took prisoners all who escaped the sword, and burned the few houses which remained in that town.

IN the year Bizin, or the Ape, he took the town of Zâr-jui; which he intirely destroyed, and plundered the circumⁱ ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 361. & seqq.

(Q) It is of the embassy of these two Khâns to Aureng Zib, the Great Mogol, that Bernier

16. Khân
Abû'l-
ghâzi.
Repulsed
by the Khân.

He invades Great Bûkhâria:

A. D.
1655.

makes great ravages;

16. Khân jacent country. Next year, he went and ravaged the province of Yayzi; which extends from the city of Karakûl to that of Nersem; and, having taken much booty, was gone back to his own frontiers, at the same time that Abdo'lazîz Khân, accompanied by Kasîm Soltân, was on the march, with a numerous army, to make a diversion in the province of Koghertlik: but, as soon as he heard of Abû'lghâzi Khân's return to Karazm, he retreated with so much precipitation, that many of his men killed their horses with haste to get off, although no one had any thoughts of pursuing them. Abû'lghâzi Khân, who in the mean time had taken a turn to Khayuk, made another invasion the same year, with 25,000 men, into Great Bâkhâria; and, having taken the city of Karmîna, gave it to be pillaged, returning with considerable booty, and many prisoners.

Attacked in retreat-
ing, IN his retreat, after he had passed a river over a bridge, he caused his tents to be set up there; and, believing himself very secure in that place, ordered that the baggage should begin to march at midnight, and that the army should follow at day-break, keeping about his person no more than his usual guard of one hundred men. Next morning, some hours after the army had decamped, one of his principal officers entered his tent; and, finding him still fast asleep, cried to him, "Rise, sir; is this a time to sleep here?" But the Khân made answer; "Who is it you would have me afraid of; since we have not heard of any enemy-troops in all this province?" At the same time one came to inform Abû'lghâzi Khân, that troops appeared on the other side of the river. And in reality it was Abdo'lazîz Khân himself, at the head of 60,000 men; who, having been informed, by a beggar, that the Khân of Karazm, from whom he had received an alms on the road, was going to besiege Karmîna, set forward immediately, with all his forces.

by great forces. ABU'LGHAZI KHAN, on the enemy's approach, retired leisurely towards his troops; which being about to pass a little marshy brook, he sent orders for them to halt on this side. Mean time 1000 horsemen, in coats of mail, began to press him at the heels: on which the Khân, having gained a pass, made his hundred men alight (as he did himself), the better to make use of their muskets; and sent orders for his army to return. After this, he detached Yadigar Atalik (lately made the first lord of his court), with thirty men, to attack the 1000 horse, at the entrance of the defile, while he stood ready to support him with the rest. Yadigar executed his orders with so much conduct, that, having first stunned stunned the enemy by a successful fire made on them near at hand, afterwards managed his small force so well, by retiring or advancing, as occasion required, that he disputed the pass, till Anusba Mahamed Bahâdr Soltân (the Khân's son, then no more than fourteen years of age) came to his father's assistance at the head of 600 horsemen, with 300 foot soldiers behind them^k.

ABU'LGHAZI KHAN, having received this reinforcement, found himself in a condition to march out of the defile to attack those 1000 men: but as in the interim the enemy's army had time to approach, they were quickly supported by a great body of troops; which, having surrounded the Khân of Karazm on all sides, would infallibly have handled him severely, if he had not ordered his son Anusba Mahamed, with 400 men, to fall vigorously on the right of a large squadron, which blocked up the road to their army, while he attacked the rest with the remaining 600. This scheme was executed with so good success, that, having forced the enemy's troops on both sides, they made their way thro' them, and rejoined their own; which advanced in haste to rescue their Khân from the danger he was in.

As soon as he had put himself at the head of his army, he caused it to march, under the command of Anusba Mahamed Bahâdr Soltân, to attack the enemy's forces, which began to appear; and when the rest of his troops arrived, he made them advance to the right and left of his son, in order to support him. In this disposition they began the battle, which soon became general; and both armies fought a long time with equal fortune: but, at length, the juvenile courage of the prince prevailing (although it was the first time he had ever been at such an entertainment), the forces of Abdo'lazîz Khân were defeated, notwithstanding their great superiority, and pursued as far as the above-mentioned river. The rout was so signal, that a great number of the enemy, who could not gain the bridge, were drowned in the stream; and their Khân himself, though much wounded, was obliged to swim over, to avoid being taken.

ABU'LGHAZI KHAN, returning to Khayuk, with a great number of prisoners, gave a splendid feast to all his lords and great officers; and, after he had in public extolled the valour of his son, resigned to him the city of Hazârâsh, with subjects for its defence. Next year, called It, or the Dog, the Khân again entered Great Bukhâria, and took the city of Wardansh, which he ordered to be sacked, and returned

^k ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 367, & seqq.

16. Khân
Abû'l-
ghâzi.

A. D.
1662.

loaden with plunder and captives. Four years after, in the year called Bârs, or the Tiger, he made another expedition thither; and, advancing to the very walls of Bokhâra, capital of the whole country, caused all the villages within its jurisdiction to be destroyed. After this, he encamped before the gate Namafga, with a design to take the city by force. But, considering there was no glory in such an exploit, at a time when the Khân was absent at Samarkant, and that there were none but women and Tajiks, or burghers, in the place; he laid aside the design till another opportunity, and returned into his own dominions, with much booty and many prisoners.

resigns the
crown:

ABU'LGHAZI KHAN, being by this time arrived at the age of sixty years, began to consider that there was blood enough spilt to revenge the murders committed by Abd'ollah Khân on the princes of his family; and that it would be acting against the dictates of conscience, to persist any longer in giving disturbance to a prince who was of the same religion with himself, while he could more usefully employ his army against the Kalmûks and Persians. Guided by these sentiments, he dispatched ambassadors to Abd'olazîz Khân, with proposals of peace; which having been accepted of, he recalled his troops from the borders of Great Bukhâria, and sent them towards the country of Khorassân. After this, he resigned the throne to Anûsba Mahamed Bahâdr Soltân, with a design to spend the rest of his days in serving God: but he died not long after, in the month of Ramadhân, 1074, called Tâushbân, or the Hare; when he had reigned twenty years.

Hejrah
1074.
A. D.
1663.

Death and
character.

CHARDIN, who calls this prince Abû'l Kâzi, gives him a very advantageous character. He says, that he knew so well how to disguise the natural barbarity of the Tatars, that you would have taken him for a Persian. He behaved with a grace and affability on all occasions. So that Shâh Safi, for distinction-sake called Mâzi (*), that is, the past reign, observing him to be endowed with so many rare qualities, admitted him into his Mejels, or royal assemblies, where he ranked him on an equality with the grandees of his kingdom. The same author informs us, that, on his being brought to Isfâhân (R), Safi looked on him not as a robber, but a prisoner of war, and paid him all the honours due to a person of royal birth; assigned him a revenue of 1500 Tomâns,

Honoured
in Persia.

¹ ABU'LGH. Hist. Turks, &c. p. 370, & seqq.

(R) According to Chardin, (*) Abû'lghâzi Khân ascribes this title to Shâh Abbâs I. See battle, wherein the Uzbeks lost vol. vi. p. 167.
12 or 18,000 men.

amounting to 6000 pounds; and gave him a stately palace, richly furnished, with a suitable number of officers and retinue to attend him, during the ten years he continued in his capital. After his return (S) to Karazm, he proved a constant friend to Persia; keeping Subhân Kâli Khân (T), and Abdo'lazîz Khân, of Bokhâra, in such awe, that as soon as either of them entered Persia, he was in the bowels of their territories.

BUT, after his death, the crown descending to his son Enûsh Khân, Abbâs II. withdrew his pension, which, in kindness, he had given his father. But the son, who looked on it as a kind of tribute, paid by the Persian monarch to the king of Karesbm, or Orkenj (U), to restrain him from plundering his dominions, judged the surest way to recover it, or at least to make himself amends for the loss, would be, to ravage the frontier provinces. To this end, he entered into a league with the two other Khâns, against Persia; espousing the sister of the prince of Bâlk, and giving his own in marriage to him of Bokhâra.

HOWEVER, Abû'lghâzi Khân having been of the Shiyah sect, which the Persians follow, and not of the Sunni persuasion, such as the Uzbeks (X) profess, Enûsh Khân made profession of the latter: but his allies, as a proof of his sincerity, required that he should begin the war first, promising to assist him the next year with all their forces. Hereupon the prince of Orkenj entered Persia, in the year 1665; but met with a very powerful resistance: for Shâh Abbâs, having been informed of the conspiracy of these petty kings, marched with a great army, resolving to conquer their territories, and annex Bâlk to his own dominions. The Uzbeks, terrified at his approach, thought it best to desist; and, the year following, sent to beg a peace.

(S) The circumstances of his escape are told by Chardin in a different manner from what he relates himself.

(T) That is, the prince, the slave of the Praise-worthy; meaning God.

(U) That is, Karazm, or Uryensb. Orkenj being the Persian name.

(X) Chardin, and several others, write Yusbeks; which, according to the Persians, signifies one hundred lords: to shew, that they are governed by many princes. He adds, that the Yusbeks reject this etymology, as false and injurious; saying, the word is compounded of Yus, he, and bek, lord; as who should say, He the lord, or He is the lord: as if these were the only people on earth who are truly lords. Coronation of Soleyman III. p. 115. But, in all likelihood, this must be a mistake; since, according to the Uzbek history, they take their name from Uzbek Khân, conformable to a custom among the Tatars in general.

16. Khân
Abû'l-
ghâzi.

17. Khân,
Anusha
Maha-
med leagues against Persia;

A. D.
1665.

18. Khân
Hâji Maha-
med.

makes great ravages.

UPON the death of Abbas II. which happened not long after, the Tatars taking heart again, the prince of Orkenj, in 1667, entered Merve Sava (Y) with his Uzbeks; who, finding no resistance, made strange havock. Nor could the governors have prevented it, if they had force enough, considering with what swiftness those people invade a country, and retire. Persia then being governed by a young unexperienced prince, preparations to repel the enemy went on very slowly. At length two great lords set out, with 4000 men, to join the forces which were already in Khorassân. Six weeks after, money was sent to pay the troops in that province, under a convoy of 200 men. But the Uzbeks, getting intelligence of it, sent out a body of 3000 horse; who took their measures so well, that they carried off the treasure, in spite of the troops which were detached to overtake them ^m.

Hâji Ma-
hamed
Khân.

FROM this time to the present we find very little in authors, relating to the affairs of Karazm, till 1714; when, according to Bentink, Haji Mahamed Bahâdr Khân, grandson of Abû'lghâzi Khân, sent a messenger to Peterstburgh, to treat of an alliance with the court of Russia ⁿ. Webber mentions this prince; but calls him only the Khân of Uzbek: and says, the design of the embassy was to prevail on Peter I. to oblige Ayûka Khân, his vassal, not to join with the princes his neighbours, or stir them up against him. On this condition he offered to assist the Tsar with 50,000 horse at any time, and allow his karawâns a passage through his dominions to China: which journey might be performed in four months, the road being good; whereas that through Siberia was very long and troublesome (Z). He proposed likewise to enter into a treaty of commerce with Russia, which would be very advantageous to it.

Em'assy to Russia.

THE ambassador was Acher Bey, about fifty years old, of a lively and venerable aspect, wearing a long beard, and an ostrich feather on his turbân, which is worn by none but the principal lords. He said, his Khân was turned of twenty; and that, the year before, he had married the king of Persia's eldest daughter: that his country was called Uzbek (A); and

^m CHARDIN'S Coronation of Solyman, p. 116, & seqq.
ⁿ AEU'LGH. Hist. Turks, p. 373.

(Y) This must be the territory of Marû, written also Marwa, and Marve, so often mentioned before; and, for a time, belonging to Karazm.

(Z) But, should that road be deserted, it would hinder the peopling of Siberia.

(A) The author mistook the name of the people for that of the country; which has also been so miscalled by geographers.

place

place of residence Khiva, which consisted only of tents and huts; but never fixed to any certain spot (B): that the Khân is a sovereign prince; but his authority limited by a kind of senate: that he was able to raise 200,000 cavalry; in which number were included, in the Tsar's judgment, all his male subjects, old and young: lastly, that the country of Uzbek bordered on China, Hindûstân, and Persia. Among other things relating to this embassy, it is mentioned, that the Tsar liked the ambassador's music well enough^o. On which occasion it may be observed, that the inhabitants of Karazm were formerly very famous for their proficiency in that art^p.

BENTINK informs us, that, between 1714 and 1724, when he wrote, there happened a revolution in that country; of which he knew not the particulars^q. Probably it may be the same with that mentioned by the missionaries of Syria, who acquaint us, that some years before they wrote (C), they saw the prince of the Uzbeks pass through Aleppo, in his way to Mohammed's tomb, with an intention to live there a private life. His son had rebelled; and, having seized him, caused his eyes to be put out, that he might have no longer hopes of ascending the throne. He marched on horseback, with his eyes bound up, conducted by fifty guards. But, since that time, we understand, continues our author, that the son died miserably, and his father was restored^r. It may be presumed, that Hâji Mahamed was the unnatural child; although the title of Hâji, or pilgrim, better suits the blind prince: but Mahamed seems too young to have had such an enterprising son. However that be, in 1719, the Uzbeks of Karazm ought to have had a Khân of an enterprising genius, and who could see well, to command in person the expedition against Beckowitz, sent by the Tsar in that year, to discover the river Daria^s.

^o Present State of Russia, vol. i. p. 20, & seqq. P. LA
^q CROIX Hist. Gengh. p. 240. ABU'LGH. ubi supr. p. 373.
^r See Journey from Aleppo to Damascus, p. 80, & seq. s See
 New collect. of voya. and trav. vol. iv. p. 477 and 514.

(B) This must be understood of his summer-camp (for he dwells under tents in that season); which is not fixed: but his winter residence is Urjensh, or some other city.

(C) The author wrote between 1720 and 1724, when his memoirs were printed in Memoires des missions en Syrie & en Egypt. Tom. vi. p. 198.

B O O K IX.

A Description of Hindûstân, or the Empire of the Great Mogol.

C H A P. I.

Name, Extent, Mountains, Rivers, and Produce, of Hindûstân.

India, its name ;

INDIA, or the Indies (A), takes its name, according to some authors, from the river Indus ; to others, from the inhabitants, named Indows, Hindows, or Hindûs. Hence it is called, by the Turks and Persians, Hindûstân, or the country of the Hindûs : of which Indostan, a name used by Europeans, is a corruption. In the geography of these latter, India, or the Indies, is a term of vast limits, extending over not only a great part of the continent of Asia, but also of the islands of the ocean lying to the south of it. The continent of India is situated between the 84th and 127th degrees of longitude ; and between one degree 12 minutes and 36 degrees of north latitude : containing in length, from west to east, about 2315 miles, in breadth, from south to north, 2110 miles. It is bounded on the north by the countries of Great and Little Tibet ; on the south, with the Indian ocean ; on the east, with China, and the Chinese sea ; and on the west, with Persia, and the Indian sea.

bounds,
and extent.

Division.

THIS large region is divided into three great parts. The peninsula of India within, or on this side of, the Ganges ; the peninsula without, or beyond, the Ganges ; and the main land. The two peninsulas contain several potent kingdoms ; but the third part is, at present, under one sovereign, called the Great Mogol by Europeans. This is chiefly the part which at present we have to do with ; and this only of the three is known to the orientals by the name of India or Hindûstân.

Hin-dûstân.

HINDUSTAN, or the Mogol's empire, is bounded on the north with Great and Little Tibet ; on the east, with Tibet, and the farther peninsula of the Indies ; on the south, with the hither peninsula, part of the Indian sea, and bay of Bengâl ; and on the west, with Persia. It is situated between the 84th and 102d degrees of longitude, and between the

(A) Commonly called the East Indies, to distinguish them from the West Indies.

21st and 36th degrees of latitude; being in length about 1204 miles, and in breadth 960: though in some parts not near so much. Soil, mountains.

THIS is the part of India which consists of the greatest extremes. Towards the north it is very cold and barren; towards the south, very hot and fruitful, in corn, rice, fruits, and other vegetables. The northern provinces are very mountainous and sandy; while the southern are, for the most part, very level country, and well watered with good rivers. Nature of the country.

THE most remarkable mountains are those which surround it on three sides, and serve as a rampier against the bordering nations (B). Those on the west, which separate Hindústán from Persia, are called in different parts by different names, and in general by that of Soleyman Kúh, or the mountain of Soleyman. These mountains are of a vast height, as well as breadth; and are only passable in certain places, through which roads have been made for sake of commerce. The chief are those which lead to Kábul, Gázna, and Kandahâr. This great chain of mountains is inhabited by several different nations of hardy fierce people: the principal of whom are the Afghâns, or Patans, and the Balluchís; who have extended themselves on the side of India as well as Persia. The mountains on the north are called Nagrakút, Hima, or Mús Tâg (which has an affinity with Imaüs); and by other names, which are given also in common to the mountains on the east side, which separate Hindústán from Tibet: but this is for want of due information procured by travellers, since we know that these mountains are differently denominated, both by their inhabitants and their neighbours. The northern part of this eastern chain is, for instance, called Kantel, Kentel, or Kenti, by the people of those parts. The very prospect of them is frightful, being nothing but hideous precipices, perpetually covered with snow; and not to be crossed without the greatest difficulty as well as horror^a.

AMONG the rivers of Hindústán two have been particularly famous from all antiquity, for their great length and capacity, as well as other reasons. These are the Indus and the Ganges. The Indus is called by the orientals Send, Sind, or Sindi. It rises in the mountains, to the north or north- River Indus, or Send.

^a Lettr. Edifiantes, vol. xv. p. 190.

(B) According to the Indian geographers, India is environed almost on all sides by the mountain of Ghate; and is divided into two parts, the north and south, by that of Balagate. Thevenot Trav. part iii. c. 46. p. 80.

east

Rivers,
weather.

east of Hindûstân; but the exact spot is not yet known to us. From thence it runs southward by Kâshmîr and Attok to Multân, where it turns towards the south-west; and, having passed by Bukor and Tatta, falls into the Persian sea, below Lowre Bander, by several mouths. In its course it receives several other large rivers, as the Nilâb, Jamâl, Behât, and Lakka.

The Ganges.

THE Ganges, called in the Indies Ganga, rises in the kingdom of Tibet; and, having taken a large sweep towards the west, and then, by the south and east; enters Hindûstân, or the Mogol's empire, about the 30th degree of latitude, and runs first thence, south-eastward, by the cities of Bekâner, Minâpor, Halabas, Benâres, and Patna, to Rajah Mâhl, where it divides into two great branches. The eastern, having passed by Dákka, capital of Bengâl, enters the gulf of that name, about Chatigan. The western, descending by Kossim-Bazâr, and Hugley, falls into the gulf below Shander-nagor towards Pipeli. The Ganges in its course admits several other considerable rivers into its bosom, particularly the Chun, or Jemna, and the Gûderasu, on the west side; the Perfilis and Lakia on the east side. This river ever has been held in great veneration, and as sacred, by the Indians, who think they are freed from their sins by washing in it at certain times. The Great Mogol also drinks the water of the Ganges, as being deemed lighter and purer than that of any other river.

The heats.

THE weather and seasons are for the general very regular in this spacious country. The winds blow constantly for six months southerly, and northerly for six months, with very little variation. The months of April, May, and the beginning of June, till the rains fall, are so extremely hot, that the reflexion from the ground is apt to blister one's face; and, but for the breeze or small gale of wind, which blows every day, there would be no living in that country for people bred in northern climates: for, excepting in the rainy season, the coldest day is hotter there at noon, than the hottest day in England. However, very surprising changes of heat and cold sometimes happen within a few hours: so that a stifling hot day is succeeded by a night cold enough to produce a thin ice on the water; and that night by a noon as scorching as the preceding. Sometimes in the dry season, before the rains, the wind blows with such extreme violence, that it carries up vast quantities of dust and sand into the air, which appear black, like clouds charged with rain: but fall down in dry showers, filling the eyes, ears, and nostrils of those among whom they descend, and penetrate every chest, cabinet,

cabinet, or cupboard, in the houses or tents, by the key-hole or crevices ^{Precious stones.} ^{Rainy season.} ^{b.}

FROM Surat to Agra, and beyond, it seldom or never rains, excepting in one season of the year; that is, from the middle of June to the middle of September. They generally begin and end with most furious storms of thunder and lightening. During these three months it rains usually every day, and sometimes for a week together without intermission. By this means the land is enriched, like Egypt by the Nile. Although the land looks before like the barren sands of the Arabian deserts; yet, in a few days after those showers begin to fall, the surface appears covered with verdure; which shews the richness of the soil: on which occasion our author observes, that among many hundred acres of divers kinds of grain, he never saw any but what was prime good, standing as thick as the ground could well bear it. When this worst season is over, the sky becomes perfectly serene again, and scarce one cloud appears all the nine months after. However, a refreshing dew falls every night during that dry interval, which cools the air and cherishes the earth ^{c.}

THE produce of India is very rich, in every kind, whether the fossil, vegetable, or animal. With regard to fossils, ^{Precious stones.} we meet with here the most valuable precious stones, particularly diamonds. However, there is properly only one diamond mine in the Mogul's empire, and that is at the town of Soumelpûr, in Bengâl. The other diamond mines are in the hither peninsula of Ganges; and the mines of coloured stones chiefly in Pegu, a kingdom of the farther peninsula, and in the island of Ceylon ^{d.} Quarries of Theban stone are so plenty in some countries of the Râjabs, and elsewhere in the Mogul's empire, that Thevenot saw both mosks and pagods built intirely of stone ^{e.} Nor is Hindûstân destitute of lead, iron, or copper (C). Nay, it is said the country affords silver mines also ^{f.} But, if so, they need not be opened, since the bullion of all other nations is sunk in this empire; which will take nothing else in exchange for her commodities, and prohibits the exporting it again.

^b TERRY Voya. to E. India, p. 272, & seq. Folio edition.

^c Ibid. p. 361, & seq.

^d TAVERN. Trav. part ii. p. 139.

^e THEVENOT Voya. part iii. p. 146.

^f TERRY, ubi supr.

p. 370.

(C) So says Terry; but Bernier affirms, that Hindostân produces no metals: yet Thevenot avers, there is an excellent iron mine in the mountain Nerouer, five days journey from Agra. Trav. Ind. part iii. p. 39.

Grain,
fruits.

Agriculture.

THE soil being brittle, tho' fat, is very easily cultivated. They till it with oxen, and foot-ploughs; sowing their seed in May, and the beginning of June, that all may be over before the rains. Their harvest is in November and December; which are with them the most temperate months in the year. Their ground is no-where inclosed, excepting a little, near towns and villages; which lie scattered very thick over this empire. Nor do they mow their grafs to make hay; but cut it off the ground, either green or withered, as they have occasion to use it.

Grain.

WHEAT, rice, barley, and other grain proper for making bread, grow here in plenty, and are very good; the wheat especially is more white and full than the English.

Fruits.

THE country abounds no less with fruits. Besides pomegranates, citrons, dates, grapes, almonds, and cocoa-nuts, there are, among other plums, that called the mirabolan, of an excellent kind, and remarkable for its curious stone. Plantens, which grow in clusters, are long, like slender cucumbers; very yellow when ripe, and taste like a Norwich pear, but much better. The mango, another excellent fruit, in shape and colour like an apricot, but much larger. If rolled between the hands, when full ripe, the substance within the rind becomes like the pulp of a roasted apple, and is very delicious, being sucked out from the large stone which is left behind. But the best fruit of all in Hindûstân is the anana: it is like our pine-apples, and seems to the taste a pleasing compound of strawberries, claret, rose-water, and sugar. In the northern parts they have variety of pears and apples: limons and oranges are common here, but not so good as in other countries. Lastly, they have very good musk-melons, and water-melons; some as large as pompions, which they resemble in shape. The inner substance of this fruit is spongy; but exceeding tender, and well tasted. Its colour is a mixture of red and white; and in the middle is inclosed a liquor, which is extremely cooling and delicious^f. However, we are told by later authors, that those which are eaten at the Great Mogol's court are brought from Karazm and Great Bukhâria.

Woods and trees.

BESIDES the woods and groves, which adorn the country, you find trees scattered over it; but none of the kinds known in England. They afford abundance of timber, firm and strong, fit for building, and other uses. Some bear leaves as broad as bucklers; and those of others are small, and divided like the leaves of fern: of this kind is the tamarind-tree, whose fruit grows in a pod resembling that of beans. There is one very remarkable tree among the rest : for out of its branches there shoot downwards little sprigs ; which, taking root, in time become supporters to the branches which yielded them. So that the tree, by this means, grows at length to a very great height, and spreads so much in compass, that some hundreds of men may shade themselves under it, in any season ; as the trees in those southern parts of India keep their leaves all the year ^s. This is that which is called by Europeans the Banian, and war-tree. But, of all the trees of this part of India, the cotton and mulberry may be reckoned the chief, on account of the wealth they bring to the natives, arising from the manufacture of callicoes and silks. There are many other kinds of trees, which produce excellent fruits peculiar to the country.

^f TERRY, ubi sup. p. 359, & seqq.

THEY plant abundance of sugar-canes here, as well as tobacco ; both which are much used, and very cheap : but the latter, though good in itself, is not so rich and strong as that reared in America, for want of knowing how to cure and order it.

THE soil of Hindustan affords plenty of roots known to us ; as carrots, potatoes, onions, and garlick ; besides some small roots and herbs for fallads. In the southern parts ginger grows almost every-where. These are all of a good kind : but their flowers are generally no better than painted weeds ; for, although their colours be beautiful to look at, they have no scent ; excepting roses, and some few other kinds ; among which there is a white flower, like the Spanish jasmin, yielding a most fragrant smell. From this is extracted an excellent oil, wherewith they anoint the head, and other parts of the body ^h.

HINDUSTAN abounds with animals, both wild and tame : of the former kind are elephants, rhinoceros's, lions, tygers, leopards, wolves, jackals, and the like. These last seem to be wild dogs ; which in companies run about in the night, and disturb people with their hideous noise. They dig up and eat dead bodies (A). The rhinoceros is a large square beast, bigger than the English ox. The skin is extremely thick, and tough ; all wrinkled, and without hair. It has a strong, but short horn, with the point turned upward, just over the nose ; from whence it has its name (B). This beast is not common in the Mogul's empire : but elephants are very nume-

^s TERRY, ubi sup. p. 353, & seqq.

^h Ibid. p. 360, & seqq.

(A) Some say they are purveyors to the lion, marching before, and directing him to his prey.

(B) In some this horn is very long, and those of Africa have another horn upon the forehead.

Wild beasts.

Elephants.

rousⁱ. They are the largest of all creatures. Our author had seen some, which were twelve feet high; but was told there were others fourteen or fifteen in height. Their skin is black, thick, smooth, and without hair. Their eyes are full, but not proportionable to their bodies; their ears like those of oxen; their tails slender, and not very long. Their legs are like the trunks of small trees, cut off towards the roots; and the feet set round with thick short and broad toes. They are not without joints, as some have fabled: for the elephant can lie down and rise at pleasure. It walks slow; at most three miles an hour: is very sure-footed, and exceeding tractable, as well as sensible. Their trunk is a great length, hanging down between their tusks; and, being of a gristly substance, is endowed with so much strength, that the stroke of it will break the bones of a horse, or camel, and even kill him outright. With it the elephant can likewise pull up great trees by the roots; yet it is so pliable, that with it he can convey victuals to his mouth; and, at the command of his rider, who sits on his neck, take up dirt, dust, or kennel-water, and dash it in the face of any body^k.

Game in common.

THERE is plenty of venison, or game of several kinds; as red deer, fallow deer, elks, antelopes, kid, hares, and such-like. All these are in common; for none are imparked, so that one sees them every-where on the road: but, as they may be any body's who will be at the pains to take them, they do not increase to damage the husbandman, or do other mischief. The elks are very large, strong, and fierce creatures. The antelopes also differ somewhat from those of other countries. They have even more courage, and are to be distinguished by their horns, which are blackish, and one foot and a half long; whereas the horns of antelopes elsewhere are greyish, and not half that length. Those of the former grow winding to the point like a screw. The Fakîrs and Santons commonly carry two of them joined together, and armed with iron at each end, which they make use of as a little staff^l.

Elks, An-
telopes.

Musk-cat. AMONG the wild animals may be reckoned the musk-cat and monkey. The musk-cat is pretty common; particularly in the province of Azmîr. It is snouted like a fox, and no bigger than a hare. It has teeth like a dog, and is of the colour of a stag. The musk is contained in a kind of bladder, or purse, under the belly. The woods and groves, especially in the southern parts of Hindûstân, are full of apes, monkeys, and baboons; which live among the trees, and climb them at ⁱ TERRY, ubi supr. p. 366, 371.

^k Ibid. p. 380, & seqq.

^l Ibid. p. 359. THEVENOT, part iii. p. 38.

pleasure. Our author had seen some of them taller than the largest English greyhounds ^m. Tame animals.

HINDUSTAN affords variety of beasts for carriage ; as camels, dromedaries, mules, asses, horses, oxen, and buffalos. Beasts of carriage.
The camels here have an odd quality ; for they cry and make a hideous noise at night when their burthens are taken off : but are very quiet when laid on.

THE horses are very good, well-shaped, and high-mettled. Some are black ; but most of them white, and curiously dappled. Many are pied and spotted all over ; nor are there wanting some which are of other bright colours. The oxen are not very large, and have a great bunch of gristly flesh between their shoulders. Their flesh is very sweet and tender, besides much whiter than that of English breed ⁿ. Oxen use As they are very tame, many people use them as they do horses to ride on ; though they commonly go but a slow pace. Instead of a bit, they put one or two small strings through the gristle of the nostrils, and, fastening the ends to a rope, use it instead of a bridle ; which is held up by the bunch he has on the fore part of his back. They saddle him as they do a horse ; and, if spurred a little, he will go as fast. These are generally made use of all over the Indies ; and with them only are drawn for horses. waggon, coaches, and chariots. They are yoked at the end of the pole, by a long yoke laid on their necks, and the coachman governs them by the rope before-mentioned. These oxen are of different sizes ; but generally very hardy : so that some will travel fifteen leagues a day. There is one kind almost six feet high ; but they are very rare : and another, called dwarfs ; because not three feet in height : these have a bunch on their backs like the rest, go very fast, and serve to draw small waggons. For this sort of carriage white oxen are in most esteem ; but they are held at an extraordinary rate. In the province of Azmîr, or Asmîr, the roads being very stony, they shoe their oxen when they are to travel far ^o.

THE buffalo is very large and strong, having a smooth skin Buffalo. without hair ; which makes excellent buff. The female yields very good milk : but their flesh neither so palatable nor wholesome as beef. They are much employed to carry water, for the supply of families, in large skins, which hang on both sides of them. The Hindustân sheep differ from the English in their great fleshy tails ; which are very weighty. Their flesh is very good, but their wool coarse ^p.

^m TERRY, p. 368. THEVE. p. 51. ⁿ TERRY, p. 359, 360, 365, 375. ^o THEV. NOT. part iii. p. 51. ^p TERRY, p. 359, & seq.

Reptiles and insects. HINDUSTAN is much infested with reptiles and insects; some of a noxious kind. Of the former are lizards, scorpions, snakes, and rats. The lizards are of a dark-green colour, and small; they often are seen in houses, but not hurtful, like the Lizards. other three kinds of animals. Scorpions are very common, and frequently creep into houses; especially in the rainy season. They are of the shape and size of crayfish; they also are black like them before they are boiled. They have a little round tail, which usually turns up, and lies on their back: at their sting. the end of it is the sting; which they do not draw in and let out of their bodies, like other venomous creatures; but always appears ready to strike. It is very sharp and hard; not long, but crooked like the talon of a hawk. Its sting is very painful, and mortal, if the patient has not some present remedy; such as oil of scorpions, to anoint the part affected; which is a sure and sudden cure. Or if the scorpion itself be taken and beaten to pieces, the oily substance which it affords is a present remedy^r. However, we are told, that the best medicine is the actual cautery. They take a burning coal, and hold it as long and as near the wound as they can. The venom keeps the patient from being incommoded by the fire, while the poison is perceived to work out of the orifice by degrees; and in a short time after he is perfectly healed^s.

Snakes. SNAKES and serpents are here sometimes used in executions. Our author gives an instance in a man who had killed his mother. The Great Mogol ordered two snakes to be set upon him: each twined about one of his thighs, and bit him in the groin. After they were taken away, he complained of a violent fire which ran through all his limbs: and his whole body began to swell exceedingly. He kept his feet about a quarter of an hour, then fell; and, near half an hour after, expired in grievous torture^t.

Large Rats. THE rats here are very large, and so bold that they attacked some of Sir Thomas Roe, the English ambassador's retinue, in their beds at night; biting them by the fingers, toes, ears, and noses; or, in short, any part of their bodies, which they could get at.

Insects troublesome. THE most troublesome insects in this hot country are flies, musketos, and chinchés (or bugs). The first kind swarm so thick in the heat of the day, that they would fill their cups, and cover their meat, if it was not for servants; who, all the while they are eating, are employed to drive them off with

^r TERRY, p. 371, & seq.
^s F. 452.

^s THEVENOT, p. 51.

^t TER.

napkins. And as they are annoyed with the first by day, they are no less plagued in the night with the two other sorts of insects; the last of which offend as much with their stench, as their bite ^{Fowl and birds.}

HINDUSTAN breeds plenty of peacocks, partridges, quails, geese, ducks, pullets, pigeons, doves, and variety of other good fowl. They do not cut their chickens; so that they have no capons there, except the human ^x: the inhabitants being less tender-hearted to men, than other animals. The partridges are smaller than ours: among the hens there is a small sort, whose skin is perfectly black; but the flesh very white and delicious ^y. The pigeons differ from ours only in colour; being all over green. These and parrots are taken in this manner. The fowler, marching behind a sort of shed, or screen, comes on the birds, who, seeing no man, never offer to fly away; and, without any difficulty, surprises them with a wand daubed with bird-lime. The Indians are no less dexterous at catching water-fowl; for, swimming after them, with a pot on their heads, covered with feathers, they pull those they come-up with under water by the feet; the rest, never suspecting the deceit, and imagining their companions have only dived, are all by degrees taken ^z.

THERE are two kinds of bats in this country. One like those in Europe; the other of a singular make. It is eight inches long, and covered with yellowish hair: the body is round, and as big as that of a duck. It has the head and eyes of a cat, and a sharp snout like a great rat: the ears prick-up, are black, and without hair. The wings are almost two feet long, and seven or eight inches broad; joined to the body along the sides from the shoulder downward. They are of a black skin, resembling wet parchment. The four legs, or arms, seem to be glued within the wings; each as big as a cat's thigh, and towards the joint almost as thick as a man's arm. The two foremost, from the shoulder to the fingers, are nine or ten inches long; and each is fleshed into the wing, perpendicular to the body, being covered with hair, and terminating in five fingers; which form a kind of hand. These fingers, which are black and without hair, have the same joints with those of a man, and serve the animal to stretch out its wings, when it has a mind to fly. Each hind-leg, or arm, is but half a foot long; and, being fastened to the wing, parallel to the body, reaches to the lower part of the wing, out of which peeps a little hand, much like the human; only instead of Extraordinary bats.

^u TERRY, p. 372.
partiii. p. 24.

^x Ibid. p. 359.

^y BERNIER,

^z THEVENOT, ubi sup. p. 38.

Provinces and cities. nails it hath claws. The hinder-arms are black and hairy, like those before; but somewhat smaller. These bats have no tails; but under the wings appear two teats, each as big as the end of one's little finger. They stick to the branches of trees, with their claws; fly almost out of sight; and some, who had eaten of them, said they were good meat ^a.

Little birds. AMONG the birds, which frequent the woods, there is a species less than the wren; which are very beautiful, being neatly shaped, and covered with curious parti-coloured feathers, embellished with various little spots: nor do they delight the eye with their form more than the ear with variety of pleasing notes. Nature has instructed them to build their nests in the twigs at the extremity of the boughs of trees; where they hang like little purse-nets, out of the reach of the smallest monkeys ^b.

Fishes. LASTLY, with regard to fish: not to mention crocodiles, which infest many rivers, there is variety of what is very good; especially two sorts, resembling our pike and carp ^c. Both fish and flesh is very cheap all over India; which is owing in great measure to the Hindûs not eating animal food.

CH A P. II.

Provinces of Hindûstân.

Number of provinces. ALTHOUGH Hindûstân, or the empire of the Great Mogol, comprises many provinces; yet they are not so numerous as the earlier authors represented them. Terry, for instance, reckons up no fewer than thirty-seven: but Thevenot was assured by an Indian, who was acquainted with the geography of his country, that the empire contained no more than twenty, exclusive of Vizîafûr, and Golkonda; and that they who have counted more have been misinformed, since of one province they must have made two or three ^a.

THIS remark is confirmed by a late writer; who has given two lists of the provinces from the Mogol historians, as they stood, one in the time of Shâh Jehân ^b, the other in that of Aurang Zib ^c; as follows:

^a THEVENOT, p. 70.

^b TERRY, ubi sup. p. 363.

^c BERNIER, ubi sup. p. 25.

^a THEVENOT'S Trav. Ind.

part iii. c. 3. p. 5.

^b FRASER'S Hist. of Nadir Shah, p. 26.

^c Ibid. p. 34.

| Provinces. | Chief Cities. | Provinces and cities.
their names ; |
|--------------------------------------|----------------------|--|
| 1. Dohli . | Idem. | |
| 2. Agra . | Idem. | |
| 3. Ajmîr . | Idem. | |
| 4. Aleh abâd . | Idem. | |
| 5. Panjâb . | Lahûr . | |
| 6. Audih [or Haud]. | Idem. | |
| 7. Multân . | Idem. | |
| 8. Kabûl . | Idem. | |
| 9. Kashmîr . | Shrinâgr . | |
| 10. Guzerat . | Ahmed abâd . | |
| 11. Bahar [or Patna]. | Pâtna . | |
| 12. Send . | Tâtтар . | |
| 13. Dawlat abâd . | Awrengabâd . | |
| 14. Mâlva . | Eujîn . | |
| 15. Berâr . | [Shâpûr]. | |
| 16. Khândîsh . | Brampûr . | |
| 17. Bedr . | Zâffer abâd . | |
| 18. Bengâl . | Dakka . | |
| 19. Odissâ . | [Jakanat]. | |
| 20. Heyder abâd . | Heyder abâd . | |
| 21. Vijapûr . | Vijapûr . | |

THIS list of cities differs from the other, not only in the order of placing the provinces, but in the number and names. In that of Shâh Jehân, the provinces of Heyder abâd, formerly known by the name of Golkonda, and Vijapûr, or Viziapûr, are wanting, as not having been conquered till the time of Aureng zib ; and, in the list of this latter prince, those of Bilkh, Kandahâr, Buddakshân, and Buglâna, are wanting ; the three first having been lost again, and the last perhaps joined to some other province, as to that of Dawlat abâd. On the other hand, the provinces, which in the above list are named Panjâb, Send, and Bedr, are, in the list of Shâh Jehân, called Lahûr, Tâtta, and Tillingâna. In like manner, as these lists differ from each other in the respects before-mentioned, so they do from that of Thevenot, and other authors. What is worse, some of the provinces in Frazer's lists having changed their names, or being called by names different from those given by other travellers, we are at a loss how to draw the parallel. Thus, altho' we know that Heyder abâd is Golkonda, Bedr is Tellengâna, or Telenga, and Dawlet abâd, Balagât, joined perhaps with Buglâna, yet we cannot tell what province in Thevenot's list is the same with Alahabâd. We are no less at a loss to determine what provinces, in Frazer's lists answer to those of Varad, or Varal, Bekar, and Halabâs, in the catalogue of Thevenot ; and

Province
Guzerât.

the rather since Frazer has given only simple lists of the provinces, without any account of them (A). For this reason also we are obliged, in our description of Hindûstan, to follow the division as found in other authors ; particularly Thevenot.

Guzerât
Province.

I. GUZERAT, formerly a kingdom, is a maritime province, and the most pleasant in all Hindûstân ; though none of the largest. It is rendered fertile by the Nar. laba, Tapti, and other rivers. The fields look green all the year round, on account of the corn and rice which cover them, as well as the various kinds of trees, which continually bear fruit. The most considerable part of Guzerât lies upon the sea-coast ; on which stand the towns of Surât, Baroch, Brodra, Kambaya, and Ahmed abâd ; which last is the capital.

THIS province fell into the hands of the Great Mogol Akber, about the year 1565, on the following occasion. About the year 1545, or 1546, Soltân Mahmûd, king of Guzerât, being near his death, intrusted the tuition and regency of his only son Soltân Modaffer to a great lord of his court. This nobleman, to support himself against the other great men of the kingdom, who were his enemies, at length called in Akbar, under pretence of protecting his pupil, though already of age, against his rebellious subjects. Akber, having defeated the malecontents, instead of being satisfied with one city, and its district, which was promised him, seized the whole kingdom, and made both the king and governor prisoners. Modaffer, after this, made his escape, with design to recover his kingdom ; but, having been defeated and made prisoner a second time, he, in despair, slew himself ^a.

THE inhabitants of Guzerât, who are Paragaus for the most part, continue their old trade of thieving and pirating ; plundering all whom they can overcome both by sea and land : nor can the Great Mogol, whose subjects they are, restrain them : for their country is secure from the marches of armies into it, being so soft and muddy, occasioned by the many inlets of the sea, which overflows the low grounds, that in many places there is no travelling but by little boats.

Kuchnâgghen.

THE first town next to Sindi is Kuchnâgghen ; which has some trade for cotton, corn, coarse cloath, and chonk ; a large kind of periwinkle-shell, which, in Bengâl and other parts of India, they saw into rings, or ornaments, to the arms of women.

^a THEVEN. Trav. Ind. part iii. p. 6.

(A) All the provinces of this Voy. to E. Ind. sect. 2. p. 362. vast empire are full of towns fol. edit. and villages, according to Ferry.

THE province and town of Kuchnágghen is governed by a queen, who is very formidable to the neighbouring states. They chose to be governed by the female sex; because, in their judgment, they are more tractable and gentle than men, who, intoxicated with power and honour, become obstinate in their opinions, and insolent in their behaviour. Province Guzerát.

THE next province to Kuchnágghen is Sangânia, governed also by a princess, for the same reason. It produces cotton and corn, like the rest of Guzerát; but, living wholly by piracy, admits of no trade, for fear of being civilized by example. Their chief sea-port is called Baët; and as they give protection to all criminals, such as commit offences deserving punishment repair thither, and become public robbers. Depending on their numbers, they board all the ships they can come at (B). Our author, Captain Hamilton, had several brushes with them. Before they engage, they drink Bang; an intoxicating liquor, made of a seed like that of hemp; which renders them quite furious. They wear long hair; and, when they let it loose, it is a sign they will give no quarter ^b. Sangania;

THEVENOT observes of those pirates, whom he calls Zingânes, that they keep with their barks on the bar of Sindi; and, when they see a merchant-vessel, get to windward. Then drawing pretty near, before they lay her on board, throw in a great many pots full of lime, reduced to a very fine powder; and, while the crew are blinded with the dust, leap into the bark, putting all to the sword: for they give no quarter till they are masters of the vessel. The only way therefore for the sailors and passengers to save themselves is to jump into the sea, and keep above water till the pirates are sure of their prize; after which they shed no more blood, but spare all who remain alive. Yet death from them perhaps would be a greater favour than life: for, to prevent their prisoners from escaping, they cut the great tendon of their legs a little above the heel, which disables them even to walk; and in that condition set them to keep their flocks. Our author adds, that the Great Mogol sends them presents every year, although

^b HAMILTON'S New Account of the E. Ind. c. 12. p. 131, & seqq.

(B) Our author gives two or three instances of their attacking English ships. In 1717, they attacked the Morning-star, in her way from Gomrân to Surât, with eight vessels; one of five hundred tuns, three others of between two and three hundred tuns, the rest galleys, with above 2000 men on board; but although the English ship had no more than seventeen fighting men, she disabled and got clear of them.

they

Province Guzerât. they are his subjects, to oblige them to forbear their piracies ; but, although they accept of his bounty, they still continue their robberies ^c.

Jigat port. THE next port to Baët is Jigat, standing on a low point of land, called Cape Jigat. The city makes a good appearance from the sea, and is the seat of a Fouzdar, or governor, for the Mogol : but has no trade. Yet Mangaroul, the next maritime town, admits of commerce ; chiefly for coarse callicoos and provisions. It is inhabited by Banyans ; so that deer, antelopes, and peacocks, are not afraid to enter into the very houses. Poremain, which follows on the shore, is a pretty large town. Its trade and inhabitants are of the same kind with the former : but both places are obliged to maintain Râspouts (or Râjipoûs), who are natives of Guzerât, to protect them from the insults of the Sangâniens.

Diu, or Div city.

DIU (C), which is the next port, and most southern land of Guzerât, is a small isle, three miles long, and two broad, belonging to the crown of Portugal. The city is pretty large, surrounded with a high stone wall, flanked with bastions, well furnished with cannon ; and a deep moat cut in a hard rock, to defend it on the land-side ; which is about one third part of the city. The other sides are fortified by the ocean, thick-set with dangerous rocks and high cliffs, which forbid any approaches that way ; and a rapid, deep river, which affords a good harbour on the north-east side. The harbour is secured by two castles (D) : one of them, which is large, can bring 100 great pieces of artillery to bear on its mouth, and obstruct the entrance of shipping. The other is but small, built on a rock in the middle of the river, and serves for a magazine of stores.

Situation and strength.

DIU is one of the best built cities, as well as best fortified, both by nature and art, that our author ever saw in the Indies. It is situated on an ascent, beginning from the great castle ; and as it hath five or six beautiful churches, which stand one above the other, facing the sea, the prospect from thence is extremely pleasant. The stately buildings of freestone and marble, which still remain, are evidences of its antient grandeur and opulence : but at present not above one fourth part of the city is inhabited. This fortress first baffled the power of the king of Guzerât (Bâdh) ; who, after granting them leave to build it, would

^c THEVENOT. Trav. Lev. part ii. p. 178.

(C) Diu, or rather Div, signifies an island in the Malabar language.

(D) Thevenot says it had three in his time.

have.

have expelled them again, when he saw that it drew all the Province trade from his other ports: and then that of the Turks, in Guzerât. 1538; who brought a great fleet to dispossess them: but, about 1670, the Arabs of Muskât, with a fleet of Trankis, ^{surprised} landed by night on the west end of the island; and, marching ^{by Arabs:} silently up to the town, at break of day, when the gates were opened, entered without resistance. The enemy slew all the Portugueses, who could not get quick enough into the castle; and for three days loaded their vessels with the rich plunder. They also mounted some cannon on one of the churches, and fired on the fort; but to little purpose. The governor could easily have made them remove farther off the castle, with his heavy artillery; but the priest forbade him, under pain of excommunication, to shoot a single bullet, for fear of hurting some holy image. However, that menace did not save the sacred trumpery; for the Arabs not only took away all the consecrated plate and cash, but did not leave a gold or silver image behind them: as for those of wood and stone they broke them to pieces. These latter indeed were soon repaired again; but our author found none there of either of those metals ^d.

At length, the Arabs growing secure and negligent, about ^{recovered} 4000 soldiers and slaves, on promise of freedom, made a sally, ^{again}. with such success, that they killed 1000 of the enemy, and drove the rest out of the city; which still feels the dismal effects of that surprise. At present there are not above 200 Portugueses in both the town and castle. The rest of its inhabitants are Banyans, to the number of about 40,000: but few of them are rich; because it is unsafe for monied strangers to dwell among the Portugueses, who, for all their losses in India, still retain their pride and insolence. The king of Portugal receives about 12,000 pounds yearly by poll-tax, and 6000 by the customs and land-tax: but was Diu in the hands of some industrious nation, it would be the best mart-town on the coast of India, on account of the neighbourhood of the Indians, both by the bay of Sindi and that of Kambaya.

ALL the country between Diu and Dand-point, which is Warrels about thirty leagues, admits of no traffick, being inhabited by pirates. free-booters, called Warrels; who often associate with the Sangâniâns, in their piracies and depredations. As soon as they get on board their prizes, they throw in showers of stones on the decks, in order to sink the crew, if they do not yield. They likewise cast in pots full of unquenched lime, well sifted; which breaking, there arises such a dust, that the defendants can scarce either breathe or see. At the same time they sling

^d HAMILTON, ubi sup. ch. 2. p. 335, & seqq.

Province into the ship lighted wicks of cotton, dipped in a certain oil;
Guzerât. which burns fiercely, and sets fire to the parts which it lights upon.

Coast dan- THESE Warrels dwell in small villages. The best of which, gerous. called Chance, stands about sixty miles to the east of Diu, three miles within the mouth of a river; which has a small island lying athwart it, two miles from the sea, furnished with good springs of fresh water, but no inhabitants. In 1716, the English went to burn that village, and their pirating vessels; but were unsuccessful in the attempt. Though people occupy all the coast from Dand-point to Goga, which lies about twelve leagues within the gulf of Kambaya and the coast between; those limits are very dangerous, being not only thick-set with rocks and sand-banks, but a rapid tide of six or eight miles an hour runs among them, in a chanel twenty fathom deep in some places; which causes anchoring to be dangerous also.

Goga. GOGA is a pretty large town, and has had some mud-wall fortifications; which still defend them from the insults of their neighbours the Kowltis; who inhabit the north-east side of Guzerât, and are as great thieves by land, as the former are by sea. Nor is there any getting at them to chastise them; for there are so many rivulets in their country (made by the sea and certain rivers), whose bottoms are soft and muddy, that neither men nor horses can penetrate into it. Besides, their towns are inclosed with such thick hedges of green bambús, which are not quickly burned; and the people so numerous, as well as valiant, that it would be a hard task to civilise them.

GOGA has some trade, and admits strangers to a free commerce. Its harbour is capable of receiving the largest ships, although they lie dry on soft mud at low-water; but the tides, rising four or five fathoms perpendicular, afford water enough at high-water. The place is governed by an officer from the Mogol, with about 200 men under his command; who are kept there to guard it.

Kam- KAMBAYA, or, as the natives call it, Kambawt, lies about baya city : twelve leagues from Goga, at the bottom of the gulf, or bay, of Kambaya, on a small river, made, as our author supposes, by the overflowings of the Indus (and from thence reckons it a branch of that great river). It is a large city, with high walls; and the capital of a kingdom, which bore the same name, when the Great Mogol Akber sent his son Jehân Ghîr with a great army, who conquered it*. This city lies about fifteen or sixteen leagues from Ahmed abad, and is as big again as Surât; but not near so populous. The walls are of brick, defended by towers. The streets are large, with gates at the end; and the houses high. The castle is large, but not handsome: the town swarms with monkeys, who throw at passengers from the house-tops. The tides are so swift in the north part of this gulf, that a horse at full speed cannot keep pace with the first waves. This, and the sea falling off from the city (E) a mile and a half, has much diminished the trade of the place ^f.

* HAMILTON, ubi supr. p. 140, & seqq.

Province
Guzerât.

KAMBAYA is still a place of good trade, though not half its trade inhabited; and contributes greatly to the wealth and grandeur of Surât, to which it is subordinate: and its vicinity to Ahmed abâd makes it share the advantages of that large city; for most of what it exports comes to Kambaya, and is carried by the Surât shipping all over India; except what is transported to Europe.

THE product and manufactures of this place are scarce inferior to any in the Indies. It abounds with grain and cattle, cotton and silk. The cornelian and agate-stones are found in its rivers, and no-where else in the world. Of the first they make rings, and stones for seals. They cut the agate into bowls, spoons, handles for swords and knives, snuff-boxes, buttons, and other curiosities. Our author has seen cabinets fourteen or fifteen inches long, and eight or nine deep, of one intire stone, excepting the lid, valued at thirty or forty pounds English. The people of Kambaya embroider the best of any in the Indies, and perhaps in the world: but they are much infested by their neighbours the Patâns, as well as the Râspûts and Koulâs; who have sometimes surprised and plundered the city. In 1716, they put a stop to trade; and, by their ambuscade, cut off 10,000 out of 20,000 men, sent against them by the governor of Surât ^g.

and manufactures.

THE next maritime city to Kambaya is Baroch; it stands on the east shore of the bay, on the side and at the foot of a high and steep hill, looking southward to the river Nerdâba. It is long and square, encompassed with stone-walls, eighteen feet high, flanked with round towers. The fortrefs stands

Baroch.

^f THEVENOT, part iii. p. 12. seqq.

^g HAMILTON, p. 144, &

(E) Baldæus, p. 1. says the Indus falls into the gulf of Kambaya; and Hamilton, vol. i. p. 131, that the Indus reaches Guzerât, an island, by a branch, which runs into the sea at the city of Kambaya: yet Thevenot, and other travellers, place no river there at all.

Province well, but is neglected : here the Basta's are made^h. These Guzerât. are famous all over India, the cotton of this country being the best in world. It depends on Surât, and was formerly a place of great trade ; but it suffered much in the wars, which, about 1660, Aureng zib had with his brothers. For, having held out obstinately against the forces of that prince, who lost many men for want of water and provisions, he put to the sword all found in arms ; and razed part of the walls, pronouncing a curse on him who should repair them : yet Sevajî's incursions obliged him to order them to be rebuilt ; and he called it Sûk abâd, or the dry city, although it still retains the old name. The English and Dutch had formerly factories here, but of late have withdrawn them.

Surât city. SURAT, or Surrât, is twenty Kos (or leagues) from Baroch, situate on the banks of the river Tâpti, or Tâpta ; and the present city is not much above ninety years standing : for, about 1660, the Tâpti being incommoded with sand-banks at Rannîer, the then mart-town on this river, the English removed two miles farther down, on the opposite side, near a castle ; which had been built many years before, to secure the trade from the insults of the Malabâr pirates. Soon after, others following their example, within a few years the place became a large town ; but without walls : and so continued till the Rajah Sevajî (in 1664) came and plundered all but the European factories ; which stood on their guard. After this, at the request of the inhabitants, Aureng zib inclosed with walls a space of ground, about four miles in compass, to build their city in ; but, the number of people increasing with the trade, several large suburbs were added for the convenience of mechanics. The wall was built of brick, about eight yards (F) high ; with round bastions, 200 paces asunder, each mounted with five or six cannonⁱ.

Inhabit- SURAT is very populous at all times ; and from December ants : to April so full of people, that both in the city and suburbs lodging can scarcely be had. It is inhabited by Mohammedans, Hindûs, and Parsîs. There are very rich people here. The English have settled here the greatest staple of their trade : the Dutch also have a factory in the place. The castle stands on the river to the south of the town, is square, and pretty large, with a wet ditch. The houses are flat, and pretty well built of brick : the streets large, and even ; but there is no

^h THEVENOT, p. 6, & seqq.

ⁱ HAMILTON, p. 146, & seq.

(F) Thevenot says, only nine feet high ; but as many thick.

considerable public building within the walls. Provisions here of all sorts are plenty ^{Province Guzerât.}

THIS city flourished in trade till the year 1686, when the English company disturbed its tranquillity, by an unjust war which they made on Surât; and which ended in three years, neither to their profit nor honour. In 1695, its trade was molested, by Captain Avery taking one of the Great Mogol's ships, with a booty of 325,000 l. and a young Mohammedan lady, on her return from Mekka; whom he kept: and since then the city has felt many convulsions in its commerce. In 1705, the neighbouring Rajah's, with an united force of 80,000 horse, plundered all the villages in the plain country, and then besieged Surât; but, having no artillery, they could do it no great harm; and, the river being open, they had every thing they wanted from Guzerât. These free-booters are composed of Warrels, Koultis, Râspûts, Putanniers (or Pâtans), and Grasias; but go under the general name of Gannims. The Grasias were formerly the landed men of this country; who, on their submission to Akber, articted to have the ground-rents paid them: but, as the Nababs often defraud them, they levy it themselves in the manner above-mentioned. While this rabble army lay before the place, the inhabitants built sconces about half a mile without the wall, and afterwards joined them by curtains: so that this new wall, which incloses the suburbs, extends about five miles from the bank of the river above the town, to that part which terminates below the town; and all the inclosure is well peopled.

THE inhabitants of Surât are computed to be 200,000; and among them are many very rich men, as well Mohammedans as Hindûs. Our author was acquainted with one of the former, named Abdol Gafour, who drove a trade equal to the whole English East India company. His only son dying, he left his estate to two grandsons: but the court had a sting at them, and got above a million sterling out of their fortune. The commerce of this city is very considerable; for the revenues, arising from the customs, land-rents, and poll-money, amount, one year with another, to 162,500 pounds ^{Rich merchant.}

THE port of Surât is Swalli; two leagues north of the bar, or entrance of the Tâpti. It is distant from the city four leagues and a half: and to go to it by land, you cross the river at the town. There is good anchoring here; but, because the customs have been often stolen, no ships have been suffered to put in there since the year 1660; excepting those of the English and Dutch, who have their magazines in the place. Since

* THEVE. p. 15, & seq.

† HANULT. p. 44. 47. & seqq.

Province
Guzerât.

that time, the vessels of all other nations come to an anchor at the bar of Surât, which is only a road, and that an incommodious one, by reason of the sand-banks; there not being water enough to carry vessels, though unloaded, over the bar, till the spring-tides: but small barks may get-up to the city at any time ^m.

THERE are in Guzerât about thirty-five cities, or considerable towns; among which may be reckoned several of the ports already mentioned; and all the rest are near the sea: but we shall only speak of two inland places. The first is Brodra; which lies between Baroch and Kambaya. It is a large modern city, with pretty good walls, and has above 200 towns and villages within its district; where store of lakka, or gum-lak, is found ⁿ. The second place is, abâd:

Ahmed

AHMED ABAD, or Ahmed's City, so called from a king of that name, was before denominated Guzerât. Shâh Jehân nicknamed it Gherd-abâd, or the Habitation of Dust; because it was much incommoded therewith. It was the seat of the Guzerât kings, as it is now of the Mogol governor. The city stands in a lovely plain, and is watered by the little river Sabremetti; which, though not deep, in time of rains overflows the plains prodigiously. The walls are built with stone and brick, flanked at certain distances with great round towers and battlements. It has twelve gates; and, including the suburbs, is about four miles and a half in length. It is distant from Surât eighty-six Kos; which make about forty-three French leagues. The streets are wide. The Meydân Shâh, or King's Square, is 700 paces long, and 400 broad, planted round with trees. On the west side is the castle, well walled with free-stone, and as spacious as a little city; but not very fair within: the Karawanféray is on the south of the square, and its chief ornament. Near the Meydân also is the king's palace; whose apartments are richly ornamented: and in the midst of the city the English factory. The place from an eminence appears like a wood, it is so full of gardens, stored with trees; among which, without the town, is the king's, very large, and full of agreeable walks. The Hindûs have here an hospital for sick birds, and another for sick beasts ^o. A late author says, that for magnitude and wealth this city is little inferior to the best in Europe; and that the revenue which it yields, is generally reckoned to be ten times as much as that of Surât ^p.

^m THEVENOT, p. 26, & seqq.
p. 8, & seqq.

ⁿ Ibid. p. 31.

^p HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 144, 149.

^o Ibid.

THE province of Agra is one of the largest in all Hindústán; and its capital, of the same name, the greatest city in the whole empire; distant from Surât about 210 leagues. It stands on the river Jemna, or Jemini, as some call it (named also Chun); which, rising in the mountains north of Dehli, becomes a very considerable river at Agra, and falls into the Ganges at Haidbâs. It was no more than a country-town, with a little castle of earth, when the Great Mogol Akber, pleased with the situation, enlarged it, and made it the seat of his empire, in 1566, calling it Akber abâd, or Akber's City. The present castle, built by him in place of the former, is the biggest in all the Indies. The walls are of stone and brick, terrassed in several places, and twenty cubits high. Between it and the river is a large space, left for drawing up troops, and other diversions, in the emperor's view. The palace is in the castle; containing three courts, set round with porticos and galleries, all painted and gilt; nay some pieces are plated over with gold. Under the galleries of the first court are the lodgings for the Imperial guards: those for the officers are in the second court; and the third contains the stately apartments of the emperor and his ladies.

THIS palace is accompanied with twenty-five or thirty other very large ones, all in a line; belonging to the princes and great lords of the court. On the same line are several lesser palaces, and other buildings; for all are desirous to enjoy the lovely prospect and convenience of the Jemna: which is the reason that the city is very long but not broad; and, excepting a few fair streets, all the rest are very narrow and without symmetry. Before the king's palace (of which more will be said hereafter), there is a very large square; besides which there are twelve others in the city. But the chief ornament, next the palaces, is the karawanfarays, above sixty in number; some of which have six large courts, with their porticos. There are at Agra above 800 public baths, and a great number of mosques, with very magnificent sepulchres. Among the latter is that of Akber; but especially another, erected by Shâh Jehân, in honour of his beloved queen Taje Máhl (otherwise called Núr Máhl), are extremely beautiful; and shew, that the Indians are not ignorant in architecture, although theirs differs much from the European.

AFTER all, Agra is very incommodious for the heats in summer-time. It is extremely crouded when the court is there; but at other times not over-populous: besides, the greater part being taken up by the palaces and gardens, it cannot contain so many inhabitants as some have reported. The generality of houses are low, and those of the inferior sort of people made only Provinces. of straw. The Dutch have a factory there, but the English are Dehli. withdrawn ².

Fetipûr. THE province of Agra hath above forty cities, or large towns, dependant on it; and, as they say, above 340 villages. Among the cities is Fetipûr, before called Sikari, about six leagues from Agra. Akber, having at the beginning of his reign rebuilt the walls, made it the seat of his empire. It was then a lovely palace; but, removing afterwards to Agra, it was quite abandoned, and is now much decayed: yet there is still a large square to be seen, adorned with fair buildings. The stately entrance of Akber's palace is still intire; and has adjoining to it one of the loveliest mosks in all the east, with a great reservatory near it; which supplied the whole city with water. Biâna and Skânder abâd are famous for indigo. This latter was formerly several leagues in length, having been the capital of a powerful Patan king; and in its neighbourhood are the ruins of ancient palaces and other buildings ¹.

Dehli province. THE province of Dehli lies to the north of Agra. The road betwixt the two capitals, and which reaches as far as Lahûr, is that famous alley, or walk, 150 leagues in length, which Jehân Ghîr planted with trees. Each half-league is marked with a kind of turret, and at every stage there are little farays, or karawânfarays, for lodging travellers. At that called Sheki Saray, six leagues from Agra, there is an antient pagod, one of the largest and fairest in the Indies; greatly frequented, before the Jemna, on which it stood, retired about half a league from it. The road, though tolerable, has many inconveniences: it is not only frequented by wild beasts, but by robbers, so dexterous at casting a noose about a man's neck, that they never fail, if within reach, to seize and strangle him. They gain their point likewise by means of handsome women; who, feigning great distress, and being taken up behind the unwary traveller, choak him with the snare ³.

City of Dehli. THE capital Dehli consists of three cities, built near one another. The first, now quite destroyed, is said, by the learned Indians, to have been the residence of king Porus, invaded by Alexander: they report also, that it had fifty-two gates. The second city is that which was taken by Humayûn. It was then beautified with several stately sepulchres of the Patan kings, and other monuments: but Shah Jehân demolished it to build Jehân abâd; which makes the third city, and joins the ruins of the second. It stands in an open plain country, on the side of the Jemna; which rises in this province. The fortrefs, which

Fortress.

² THEVENOT, p. 33, & seqq.

¹ Ibid. p. 39, & seq.

³ Ibid. p. 40.

is a mile and half in circuit, has good walls, with round towers, and ditches full of water, faced with stone. This citadel is surrounded with lovely gardens; and in it is the emperor's palace¹; of which more when we come to speak of the Great Mogol's court.

Provinces.
Azmîr.

DEHLI, or Jehân abâd, is encompassed with walls, excepting towards the river. They are of brick, flanked with round towers; but without a ditch, and terraced, behind four or five feet thick. The circuit of the walls may be about nine miles; but if you take into the city a very long suburb, thro' which the way lies to Lahâr, with what remains inhabited of old Dehli, which is likewise a very large suburb, besides three or four other small ones, the whole would make in a line about a league and half².

THE province of Azmîr (or Ajmîr), lies south-west of Azmîr Dehli, east of Sindi, west of Agra, south of Multân and Penjab, and north of Guzerât. It hath been divided into three provinces, of Bando, Jeselmîr, and Soret. The capital bears the same name with the province, and is about sixty-two leagues from Agra.

THE city Azmîr stands at the foot of a very high, and almost inaccessible mountain, which has at the top an exceeding strong castle; to ascend to it, one must go winding about for above a league. The city has stone-walls, and a good ditch. Azmîr is pretty large; but when the Great Mogol comes here, there is no stirring in it. The place is famous for the tomb of Khoja Mondî, a Mohammedan saint; to which they resort from all parts in pilgrimage. Great quantities of salt-petre are made in this city, whose chief trade consists in it³.

City of Azmîr.

THE province of Sind, or Sindi, by some called Tâtta, has Azmîr on the east; Multân to the north; a desert and the Indian sea to the south; and to the west Makrân, and Sejestân in Persia. It extends from north to south, on both sides of the Indus, called by the orientals Sindi, or Sind; from whence the province takes its name.

Sind, or Sindi.

THE chief city is called Tâtta, and the most southern town Diul, or Diul-sind, and heretofore Debil. Some orientals name the country of Sind the kingdom of Diul. It is a province of great traffick, especially at Tâtta, where the Indian merchants buy a great many curiosities made by the inhabitants; who are wonderfully ingenious in all kinds of arts. The Indus, towards the Tâtta, forms a great many little islands; which, being very fruitful and pleasant, render it one of the most com-

City of Tâtta.

¹ THEVENOT, p. 41, & seq.
Emp. part.iii. p. 5, & seq.

² BERNIER, Mem. Mog.

³ THEVENOT, p. 48, 54.

Provinces. modious cities of Hindûstân, notwithstanding it is exceeding Azmir. hot there. A great trade is likewise carried on at Lowri Bânder, three days journey from Tâtta, upon the sea-coast; where there is a better road for ships than in any other part of the Indies ^y.

Lowri, its port. A LATE traveller, who calls this port Larri Bundar, says it stands five or six leagues from the sea, on a branch of the Indus, capable to receive ships of 200 tons. This mart is no more than a village of 100 houses, built with crooked sticks and mud: but has a large stone fort, mounted with four cannon, to protect the merchandize, brought thither from the Ballowchis and Makhrâns of Persia, on the west; and the Jâms of Hindûstân to the east; who often rob the kasfilas, which pass between this port and Tâtta, although escorted by one or two hundred horse; the country being almost level, and overgrown with shrubs and bushes, fit to cover their ambuscades.

Tatta ci-tadel. TATTA is the emporium of the province, a very large and rich city: it is about three miles long, one and a half broad, and about forty miles from Larri Bânder. It has a large citadel at its west end, capable of lodging fifty thousand men and horses, with convenient stabling, and a palace for the Nabab, or viceroy. The city stands about two miles from the Indus, whence canals are cut to convey water to it. In 1699, no rain having fallen for three years, a plague ensued; which, in the town only, carried off above 80,000 manufacturers in silk and cotton ^z.

Famous for learning. TATTA is famous for learning in theology, philology, and politics; there being above 400 colleges in the city for training up youth in those studies. A Seyd, who was a professor in theology, told our author, that their histories mentioned Alexander and Perus, by the names of Shâh Hasânder (G) and Prorus. He added, that Hasânder, being a great magician, summoned above a million of wild geese, which swam his army over the Indus; and that the elephants of Prorus would never turn their heads towards the place where Hasânder was. The Portugueses had formerly a church at the east end of the town. The house is still standing; and in the vestry there remain some pictures of saints, and holy vestments; which they offered to sell to our author. They have plenty of black cattle, large

^y THEVENOT, p. 52, & seq. ^z HAMILT. p. 115, & seqq.

(G) In other parts, as Tanjoor, he is known by the name of Javan, or Greeks. See Lettr. Ediff. tom. xxvi. p. 230.
vans Rajah, the king of the Jaand good ; horses small, but hardy and swift. They hunt Provins. ces. with dogs, leopards, and a fierce creature, called a Shûgûs. Azmîr. It is as big as a fox, with ears like a hare, and the face of a cat. Being shewed the game, deer or antelopes, it springs Cattle and game. after them, leaps on their shoulders, and scratches their eyes out ^a.

THEY have but few coaches at Tâtta ; because the Euro-Indian peans, who only use them, seldom go thither : but they have chariots. chariots, which are exceeding neat, and convenient enough for travelling. They are flat and even at the bottom, having a border four inches broad, with pillars all round, commonly eight ; that is, one at each corner, and one on each side. Leather thongs are interwoven from pillar to pillar, to keep one from falling. Some, who will go to the charge, have ivory ballusters instead of pillars. The bottom is covered with a neat carpet, on which the party, who is carried through the town, sits after the eastern manner. Some cover it above with a slight canopy, to keep off the sun, when they go into the country. This machine hath no more than two wheels, no larger than the fore-wheels of our coaches. They do not advance beyond the sides of the chariot, have eight square spokes, and many times are not hooped with iron. Hackney-coaches to travel in are hired for twenty-five pence, or half a crown, per day : but are not so easy as our coaches, because not hung. The wheels of waggons, or carts for carrying goods, are made of one solid piece of timber : they are drawn by eight or ten oxen.

THE finest palankins in all the Indies are made at Tâtta. Palankins. It is a kind of coach with four feet, having on each side ballusters four or five inches high, and at each end a back-stay, like a child's cradle. This machine hangs on a bambû pole, five or six inches thick, arched in the middle, by means of two wooden frames nailed to the feet at each end, with rings at top, for fastening it to the pole by ropes. The whole is covered with a piece of callico, or red serge, if a woman be in it ; but velvet if, a lady : if it threatens rain, a waxed cloth is the covering. In the bottom are laid mats and cushions, to lie or sit on : some have their palankins covered with plates of silver, others only painted with flowers, or set round with gilt balls. They are commonly very dear, The bambû alone costs sometimes 100 crowns : but porters, of whom there are required two at each end, may be had for nine or ten shillings a month ; out of which they maintain themselves ^b.

^a HAMILT. p. 125, 128.

^b THEVENOT, p. 53, & seq.

Provinces. THE Indus at Tatta is about a mile broad, and measured Multân. six fathom deep from side to side. The stream is not very rapid, its motion not exceeding two miles and a half in an hour.
The Sindi, or Indus. It produces many kinds of fish, and among them the best carp the author ever tasted. The country is made fruitful by the overflowing of the Indus, in April, May, and June. It is navigable as high as Kashmir, for their vessels, called kaftis, which are of several sizes; the largest containing about 200 tons. They are flat-bottomed, with cabbins on each side, from stem to stern, which hang over about two feet, each furnished with a kitchen, and place of exoneration. These are for passengers; and the hold is made into separate apartments for traders. Our author never saw better conveniencies for going by water, in all his travels. They have one mast, and a square sail: but hawl the ship up the stream when the wind is against them. So that they are six or seven weeks in a voyage from Tatta to Lahûr; although they return in eighteen days, and sometimes in twelve. It would be difficult to find the mouth of the Sindi, were it not for the tomb of a Mohammedan saint, with a high tower over it, called Sindi Tower, and always kept white, to serve for a land-mark. The bar, going into the river, is narrow, and has not above two fathom and a half on spring-tides: but this is only a small branch of the Indus; which appellation is lost in this country, where it is called Divellî, or Seven Mouths: although it discharges its waters into the sea by many more.

Multân province, THE province of Multân, which includes that of Bukor, has to the south Sind, to the north Kâbul, with Persia to the west, and Lahûr to the east. It is watered by many rivers, which makes it fertile.

and city. THE city of Multân, which is by some ascribed to Sind, is but small for a capital; yet it is pretty well fortified, and of great importance as a frontier, since Kandahâr is in the hands of the Persians. It has many good cities under its jurisdiction, as Kozdâr, or Kordâr, Kandavil, Sandur, and others. Multân furnishes the best bows, and nimblest dancers, in all Hindûstân. Being not far from the Indus, it had formerly a very good trade: but as at present vessels cannot ascend so high up, because the river is spoiled in some places, and the mouth full of shelves, the traffick is much diminished. However the province yields abundance of cotton, sugar, opium, galls, brimstone, and camels. Multân is the chief resort of the Barbians, for sake of trading into Persia, by Gázna and Kandahâr. They are very jealous of their wives, who are fairer than the men, yet Still of a very brown complexion, and given to paint. The city is properly the country of the Kâtri (or Kutteri) : from thence, disperse themselves all over the Indies. two sects (or casts), have a famous pagod here, to which grimages are performed. The idol worshipped there, in red leather, has a black face, and two pearls in its eyes : but the Mohammedan governor takes the offerings which are made to it^d.

THE province of Kâbul, or Kâbulestân, is separated on the north from Tartary by Kâf Dâghi (that is, Mount Caucasus) ; Kashmîr lies to the east, Zâbulestân and Kandahâr to the west, and Multân to the south. The country, though watered by two of the rivers which fall into the Indus, yet, being very cold and mountainous, is not very fruitful : for all this, it is very rich, on account of its great trade with the rest of India, Persia, and the country of the Uzbeks ; who alone sell there yearly above 60,000 horses. It is situated so conveniently for traffick, that nothing is wanting there, and all things are very cheap.

THE city of Kâbul is very large, and has two strong castles, with a great many palaces ; as kings have resided there, and princes successively have had it for their portion.

THIS province is full of aromatic trees and drugs, which are very profitable ; and yields iron, which is useful for all uses. Mirabolans grow in the mountains, whence that fruit is called kâbuli by the orientals ; and from hence especially come the canes, of which they make halberts and lances. Kâbulestân is full of small cities, towns, and villages. As most of the inhabitants are heathens, there are a great many pagods there. At the full moon in February they celebrate the feast of Hûli, which lasts two days, in honour of Krushman (or Krishna) slaying a giant. This country supplies the Indies with physicians ; who are all Banjâns (or Baniyâns), and some of them very skilful e.

THE province of Kashmîr, or Kîshmîr, is bounded on the west by Kâbulestân, on the east by part of Tibet, on the south by Lahâr, and on the north by Tartary (G). It is surrounded intirely by mountains, of very difficult ascent, and crossed (only in two or three places) by very narrow passages. It is one of those countries called Turk Hind, that

^d THEVENOT, p. 55, & seqq.

^e Ibid. p. 57, & seq.

(G) Sharifoddin Ali, in his life of Timûr Bek, l. iv. p. 95. says Kashmîr is of an oval figure ; that it has on the north Badak-

Provinces. is, the India of the Turks, or the Turkey of India; as having Kashmîr. formerly belonged to the kings of Turkeştân.

extent; KASHMÎR is a very fair champain diversified by little hillocks, about thirty leagues in length, and ten or twelve in breadth (H). Their histories say, that it was once a great lake, till a holy man let out the waters, by a miraculous gap which he made in the mountain of Baramoule. The mountains which inclose this little kingdom consist of two ranges, the higher and the lower. The latter, which are next to the plain, are of a middle height, all green with trees or pasture; stored with all sorts of cattle and game, without any wild beasts. Above these mountains rise others, exceeding high, and always covered with snow.

springs and rivers. OUT of all these mountains issue innumerable springs and rivulets; which, at last, meeting, make a very fair river, as large as the Sein: and this river, having gently made the circuit of the country, and passed through the capital city, goes out of Kashmîr at Baramoule, between two steep rocks. After this, it receives many small rivers, from the mountains, and falls into the Indus towards Atok. The country, being so plentifully watered, looks like a great ever-green garden, intermixed with towns and villages. They have here all sorts of European fruit-trees, with many of their plants and flowers, besides those of the country.

The capital Sirenâker. THE capital, which bears the same name (I) (and is by some called Sirenâker), is without walls, two miles and a quarter long, to a mile and half broad; about two leagues from the mountains, and standing on a lake of sweet water, four or five miles in compass. It is made by the rivulets from the mountains, and falls, by a navigable canal, into the river, which passes through the city, where it is crossed by two wooden bridges. The houses are of wood, well built, and two or three stories high, with gardens. The lake is full of little isles, adorned with trees and shady walks. Beyond the

• BERNIER, ubi sup. part iv. p. 83, & seqq.

(H) The flat country in the middle is twenty leagues in breadth, from mountain to mountain. In the whole province there are 10,000 flourishing villages, full of fountains and green plains: but, according to the common opinion, there are no fewer than 100,000 in the plains and mountains.

Tim. Bek, l. iv. p. 95, & seq.

(I) In the time of Timur Bek, called Nâgaz, where the prince and his court resided. The river, though very rapid, comes from a single fountain. It had over it more than thirty bridges of boats, seven of them in the city. Tim. Bek, l. iv. p. 96.

lake,

lake, on the side of the hills, there is nothing but houses and gardens of pleasure, which make a charming prospect.

Provinces.
Kashmîr.

The finest of all those gardens is that of the king, called Shâh-limar. From the lake one enters it by a great canal, which is above 500 paces long, and runs, between two alleys of poplars, to a great cabinet in the middle of the garden; where begins another more magnificent canal, which runs to the end of the garden to another cabinet, with a row of water-spouts in the middle, at every fifteen feet. These cabinets, which are made like domes, in the midst of the canal, have each a gallery round it, and four gates; two facing the poplar alleys, with bridges to pass over to them; the two others look towards the canals. Each cabinet consists of a great chamber in the middle, and four lesser ones at each corner, all painted and gilded within. The gates are very rich, made of great stones, finer than porphyry^f.

Fine garden.

It is not without cause that the Mogols call Kashmîr the paradise of the Indies; and that Jehân Ghîr was so enamoured with it, as to say, he would sooner lose all the rest of his empire than this little province; whose dominion once extended over all the neighbouring mountains (including the Little Tibet, the state of Râjah Gamon, Kâshgar, and Serenâgher), as far as Great Tatory, and over all Hindûstân, as far as the island of Seylân, or Ceylon.

THE inhabitants of Kashmîr have the reputation of being very witty, much more intelligent and dexterous than the Indians, and as fit for poetry and the sciences as the Persians. They are besides very industrious: they make Paleki's (or Palankîns), and various kinds of moveables, which they varnish very curiously, and vend all over the Indies; but their most profitable manufacture are the stuffs called shales. These are an ell and half long to one broad, embroidered at the ends twelve inches deep. The Mogols and Indians, of both sexes, wear them in winter on their heads, passing them over their left shoulder, like a mantle. They make two sorts; one of the wool of the country, finer than the Spanish; the other of hair, finer than beaver, taken from the breast of a wild goat in Great Tibet. Of this sort some cost 150 crowns; the price of the other sort seldom exceeds fifty.

Inhabitants
very witty,

THE Kashmîrians look as well as any Europeans; having nothing of the Tatarian flat nose, and little eyes, like those of Kâshgar, and most of the people of Great Tibet. The women especially are very beautiful; and as fair as in any and handsome.

^f BERNIER, ubi sup. part iv. p. 85, & seqq.

Provinces. part of Europe ^g. This beauty of the females is confirmed by a famous Persian author ; who says, it has passed into a proverb among the Persian poets. There are three roads into the country ; that from Khorassân, in Persia, is so difficult, that the passengers are obliged to carry their goods on their backs, which the beasts are not able to do. The road of Indiâ is equally difficult. That of Tobbot, or Tibet, is easiest ^h. Akbar took this kingdom from Justaf Khân, its natural prince, after he had reduced his son Yakûb by force ⁱ.

Lahûr province. THE province of Lahûr lies to the south of Kashmîr, and north of Dehli. Moltân lies to the west, and to the east are high mountains, in many places inhabited by Râjahs ; part of whom are independent. This is one of the largest and most plentiful provinces of the Indies. It is rendered fertile by the rivers, especially five ; whence it takes the name of Panjâb ; that is, five rivers. Rice, corn, and fruits, abound here. It has pretty good wine, and the best sugars of all Hindûstân. All sorts of manufactures are found in the towns, which make it a rich country.

Lahûr city. THE capital city, called Lahûr, is 100 leagues from Dehli, and 150 from Agra, the whole road being a lovely alley between shady trees. Multân lies threescore and odd leagues distant. It is situated on the Râvi, one of the five rivers above-mentioned, which all fall into the Indus. This city, which is large, was very handsome when the kings kept their court in it. The castle, which still remains, is very strong ; nor has the royal palace within it yet lost its beauty : there are a great many pompous paintings on the walls, representing the actions of the Great Mogols. It was only a borough before the time of Humayûn ; who made a city of it, built the castle, and kept his court there. By this means it so increased, that, in a short time, it extended no less than three leagues in length. At present, there are streets above a league in length, full of ruinous palaces ; and the houses run daily to decay.

THERE are a great many pagods on the road from Lahûr to Dehli, especially towards the town of Tanassar ; where there is a convent of religious Hindûs, called Vartias ^k.

Ayud, or Awdin. THE province of Ayud, or Haûd, contains the most northern countries belonging to the Mogols, as Kakares, Bânkîsh, Nâgarkhut, Siba, and others. It is watered by rivers which fall into the Ganges ; so that, notwithstanding the mountains ibid. p. 60, & seq.

^g BERNIER, ubi supr. part iv. p. 90—97.

Bek. l. iv. p. 95.

^h Hist. Tim.

ⁱ THEV. ubi supr. p. 59.

^k THEV.

which are in it, it is exceeding fertile; and its trade with the countries to the north-east renders it very rich. There are many independent Rājahs in this province, and two pagods of great note, one at Nāgarkūt, which is by far most famous, because dedicated to the idol Mātta. The other at Kalamāk, which is venerated, because the Indians look on it as a miracle, that the water of the town should be very cold, and yet spring from a rock which continually belches out flames. This rock belongs to the mountain of *Balagāt*¹. This province is written Audih by Frazer, who makes the capital of the same name.

THE province of Varad, or Varal, resembles in every respect that of Ayud, as to soil, fertility, trade, and wealth. It contains the more north-eastern countries of Hindūstān; namely, Gor, Pitān, Kanduāna, and some others^m.

BEKAR comprises the provinces of Dowāb (K), Jesuāt, and Udeśseh. It is watered also by rivers which fall into the Ganges, like Ayud and Varad. It lies east of Dehli, and is the most eastern province of Hindūstān; which on that side is bounded by the mountains of Udeśseh. It is large, and very rich, containing several good cities; the principal of which are Sāmbal, Menapūr, Rājahpūr, Jebānak, and especially Bekāner, which is the capital, situate to the west of the Ganges. In this province, and the two above-mentioned, there are to be found some of all the casts and tribes of the Indians; which are said to be eighty-four in numberⁿ.

THE province of Halabās, formerly called Purep, comprehends those of Narvar and Mevāt, which have on the south Bengāl. The chief city bears the same name (L), and is situate on the Ganges, at the mouth of the river Jemini (or Jemna). For a long time it was one of the bulwarks of the kingdom of the Patans. Akber having taken it, after he had subdued Bengāl, caused a strong citadel to be built there; which stands on a tongue of land, inclosed with three walls, whereof the outmost is of very hard red stone. In this castle is a very antient obelisk, above sixty feet high, with many inscriptions on it; but the letters are so defaced that one cannot distinguish the characters.

¹ THEV. ibid. p. 62.

^m Ibid.

ⁿ Ibid. p. 63.

(K) De Lact de magni mogolis imperio, p. 11. says Do-ab signifies the country between the two rivers, as lying between the Ganges and Jemni, and seems to be the same called by others Sāmbal, or Sāmbel.
(L) Formerly called Praya; some write Praga.

Provinces.

Bengâl.

and city.

THE king's palace is a beautiful building; and underneath it there are places arched, where the pagods of the country are kept, which the people of the province ascribe to Adam and Eve; who, they believe, were created there, and whose religion they pretend to follow. This brings, at certain times, incredible numbers of people in pilgrimage from all parts of the Indies; who, before they approach the sacred place, purify themselves in the Ganges, and shave their heads as well as beards.

THERE are a great many considerable cities in this province; among which are Narvâl and Jehûd: but the people are so various and extravagant in point of religion, that one can hardly tell what to make of it. Halabâs is pestered with Fakirs, a kind of religious mendicants, who perform strange penances, and are great knaves; but not quite so bad as the Mohammedan Fakirs°.

Bengâl

province.

THE province of Ouleffer, which we call Bengâl, is named, by the Hindûs, Jaganat, from the pagod of Jaganat, which is there. It is inhabited mostly by Hindûs; who are as fantastical in their religion as those of Halabâs, and a hundred times more numerous than Mohammedans. They are, for the general, extremely voluptuous, have a piercing wit, and much given to stealing. The women themselves are bold and lascivious; using all sorts of arts to debauch young men, especially strangers, whom they easily trepan, because they are handsome, and go well-dressed. The people here live much at ease, because the country is so fruitful. One finds here above 20,000 Christians. This province was kept in far better order under the Pâtan kings, who reigned there before the Mohammedans and Mogols became masters of it; because there was then uniformity in religion. It has been found, that disorder was introduced with Mohammedism, and that diversity of religions hath caused corruption of manners°.

Fertility.

BENGAL is by some travellers esteemed more fertile than Egypt. It supplies many foreign countries with rice, sugar, and sweetmeats. For half-a-crown one may have twenty good pullets; also ducks and geese in proportion. Kid, mutton, and pork, are in great plenty. No country affords such store of calicoes and silks, saltpetre, lakka, opium, wax, and civet. The worst of all to strangers is the air.

BENGAL, taking it near a hundred leagues in length, on both sides of the Ganges, from Râjah-Muhl to the sea, is full of great canals, formerly cut out of that river, with vast • THEV. ibid. p. 66.

vol. ii. p. 17, & seqq.

° THEV. p. 67. HAMILT.

labour,

labour, and reaching far into the country, for the convenience of transporting commodities. These canals are on both sides lined with towns and villages; to which belong large fields, bearing rice, sugar-canes, corn, sesamum, small mulberry and other trees. These, joined to the vast number of great and small islands, made by those canals, give an incomparable beauty to the country¹.

BENGAL is full of castles and cities; as Philipâtan, Satigan, Patane, Kasan Bazâr, and Chatigan. As the Indians esteem the Ganges sacred, their chief pagods are built near it; among which the two chief are those of Jaganat and Banarûs. In short, here idolatry reigns triumphant. The chief towns on the west branch of the Ganges are, first, Hughli (or Ogûli), a place of great trade. The Dutch have a factory at Chinchura, which is contiguous to it, and another at Barnagur, twenty miles lower: a little below that, the English have a factory, called Fort William, at the town of Kalkutta; and about three miles below Hughli, at Char-nagur (or Chandernagor), the French have a factory.

KASSEM BAZAR, or Kasan Bazâr, is a large and rich town, about 100 miles above Hughli. Here the English and Dutch have factories. Twelve miles higher is Mâkshûd abâd, or Râjah Mâhl, formerly the greatest place for trade on the Ganges, before it removed to Kâssef Bazâr. Forty or fifty miles to the east of Râjah Mâhl is Mâldo, a large town, where the English and Dutch had factories. The next city is Pâtana, or Pâtna, where the prince of Bengâl, who is always of the royal blood, resides. About 100 miles farther up stands Banâres, Bannâres (M) (or Banârûs), which is celebrated for its sanctity, and being the university of the Indies.

ON the easternmost branch of the Ganges, which is largest, lies Dâkka, or Dâak, under the tropic of Cancer, the largest city in all Bengâl, and properly the capital. It is narrow; but extends four miles and half along the river. Most of the houses are only of canes covered with earth. The English and Dutch houses are more solid. As the tide comes up as high as Dâkka, it renders trade there very easy. Fifty leagues lower this branch of Ganges falls into the sea, 100 leagues distant from the western mouth, or branch, at Chittagong, called by the Portuguese Xatigâm (or Shatigâm), the last

¹ BERNIER, ubi supr. part iv. p. 149, & seqq.
VENOT, p. 68.

² THE-

(M) Called also Waranasi, Hindûs in the peninsula on this and Vâna Râjah; and, by the side Ganges, Kap, or Kâshi.

Provinces. town of Bengâl, and the Mogol's empire, eastward ; at present Mâlva. a very poor place^s.

Malva province. THE province of Mâlva lies to the west of Bengâl and Halabâs. It includes the countries of Râjah Rânas, Gwâliar, and Chitôr. This province is very fertile, and produces whatever is found in the rest. Ratîspôr is the capital, and place of greatest traffick. It is situated on a mountain. Traitors condemned to die are sent to the castle of this city ; from the top of which they are precipitated. Mândo is a fine city, seated at the foot of a hill, on the top of which stands the castle. The ruins of temples and places shew it to have been a large and sumptuous place. Chitôr is likewise a famous city, but almost ruined. It stands on a very high hill, which is plain at top, walled about at least ten miles. The remains of 100 pagods, many fair palaces, and above 100,000 houses, are still visible. There is but one ascent to it, cut in the rock, and secured with four gates. It was taken by Akber from Râjah Rânas^t. Row mentions, as the chief cities, Ujen, (or Eujin) the present capital, Nar, and Seringe.

Chitôr. KANDISH (or Khandeysh) lies to the south of Mâlva ; and they who reduced the number of provinces joined to it Berar (N), and what the Great Mogol possesses of Orixa. The whole taken together is of vast extent ; is full of populous towns and villages, and few countries in all the empire equal it for riches. It abounds with cotton, and manufactures of that produce^u. In the above-mentioned province of Berar (of which Row and Terry make Shâfûr, or Shâkpur, the capital) Herbert places the fortrefs of Rota, or Roughtâz, made impregnable both by nature and art^x. It is seated on a hill, the sides of which are perpendicular. There is only one way of going up (O) to the top, where there is a plain sowed with rice and corn, half a league in compass (P). He adds, that the castle is fortified with six bastions, and twenty-seven pieces of cannon, with three moats full of water, and replenished with good fish. The plain is watered by above Kandish province.

Fortrefs of Rotâs.

^s HAMILT. vol. ii. p. 19, & seqq. THEV. p. 68. ^t Ibid. p. 60. TERRY, p. 82. ^u THEV. p. 71. ^x HERB. Trav. Ind. p. 63.

(N) Which before belonged to Bengâl, according to Herbert, p. 63, of his Travels.

(O) Herbert says, the way is cut obliquely in the firm rock for three miles together.

(P) Herbert says, the plain at top is eight miles in diameter, and twenty-four in circumference ; abounding with water and necessaries : also that sixteen villages were inclosed within the castle-wall.

twenty springs; but all the rest of the mountain is a steep precipice, covered with over-grown woods. The Râjahs formerly used to live in this fort with 7 or 800 men: but the Great Mogol took it by the policy of Amîr Jemla, although before it was never forced by any king of India^y. Herbert, who was in India in the year 1636, says, it was then in the hands of the Great Mogol, and was taken by stratagem, as will be related hereafter, by Moheb Ali Khân in the reign of Akbar^z.

Provinces.
Kandîsh.

THE capital of Kandîsh is Brâmpûr, about eighty leagues from Surât. The governor is commonly a prince of the blood, of which Aureng Zîb affords an instance. It is a great city standing on such very uneven ground, that the low streets look like ditches, when viewed from the higher: and these inequalities occasion much fatigue. The houses are not handsome, being of earth; but, as they are covered with varnished tiles of divers colours, the roofs, seen through variety of green trees, make an agreeable prospect. The meydân is above 500 paces long and 350 wide: but the ugly huts where fruit and herbs are sold, of which it is full, makes it look unhandsome. Two karawânserays stand facing it; and from it you enter the castle; whose walls are six or seven fathom high, with battlements, and at intervals large round towers, jetting far out, above thirty paces diameter. The east front of it is washed by the Tâpti, which runs by the east side of the city; and in that part the walls are eight fathom high, with neat galleries at top. Whence the emperor, when at Brâmpûr, views the fighting of elephants, which is commonly in the midst of the river; where there is the figure of that animal in reddish stone, erected by Shâh Jehân, in memory of one which died fighting in his presence: for the palace is within the castle.

Brâmpûr
the capital.

THE water of the river being brackish, the inhabitants are supplied from a large tank, or bason, which is in the meydân. Beyond the Tâpti is a pretty large suburb. The trade of Brâmpûr equals that of any other city. Besides chints, there are white calicoes mixed with gold and silver; whereof the rich make veils, scarfs, handkerchiefs, and coverings. The same trade is driven at Orixa (or Orîsha), Berar, and other towns of this province^a.

Great
trade.

BESIDES the provinces already described, five more belong to the Mogol's empire; namely, Ballagât Proper, Baglana, ^y TAVERN. Trav. Ind. part ii. c. 13, p. 139.

ubi supr. ^a THEVEN. p. 71, & seq.

^z HERB.

The Pâtans.

Telenga, Viziapur, and Golkonda; the description of which will be given, when we come to treat of the hither peninsula of the Indies, wherein they are situated.

C H A P. III.

Inhabitants of Hindûstân.

Various nations.

HINDUSTAN is inhabited by several different kinds of people; as the Hindûs, the Pâtans, or Afghâns, the Baluchis, the Parsîs, and the Mogols, or Tatars; besides several foreigners, particularly Jews and Christians, of various sects. All, excepting the Hindûs, who are the antient inhabitants, have settled there by conquest, or accident; having been induced by commerce, or compelled by war, and persecution, to abandon their native countries.

The Hindûs.

THE Hindûs are the original occupants; and, though subject to the Mogol, still preserve the superiority in numbers; being at least a hundred to one (A) compared with all the rest.

The Parsîs.

THE Parsîs are the descendants of the antient Persians (B), who worshipped the fire. These, to avoid the persecutions or oppressions of the Mohammedans, on their first conquest of Persia, fled in great numbers by sea to India; where they settled, on the western peninsula, chiefly about Surât, and there they still remain.

The Pâtans.

THE Pâtans were those from whom the Mogols conquered Hindûstân (C). Authors are divided about their original. Some say, they came from Pâtna, or Pâtana, a province in Bengâl, beyond the Ganges^a. But it is more likely they are the descendants of those Mohammedans, Turks, Persians, and Arabs, who, about the year 1000, first became masters of Dehli and Multân, under Soltân Mahmûd Gâzni^b. These people are still very numerous throughout Hindûstân, chiefly in the north-west parts, towards Kâbul, Ghâzna, and Kandahâr; from whence, in all probability, they originally came. They still inhabit the same provinces of the Persian empire,

^a TERRY voya. East Ind. sect. vii. BERNIER memoirs, c. 2. p. 17. ^b See Hist. Turks, Moguls, &c. p. 754, & seqq.

(A) Some say many hundreds to one.

(B) Parsi signifies one belonging to Par, or Persia.

(C) Thevenot makes the Pâtan kings to have reigned in Hindûstân, before the Mohammedans and Mogols conquered it Trav. Ind. ch. 40 p. 68. Fraser says, the Pattans and Afghâns are the same people. Hist. of Nadir Shah, p. 7.

where

where they are chiefly known by the name of Afghâns (D). The Pâ- they have a great aversion to the Mogols, for having dispos-tans. fessed them of their territories; and, being high-spirited, still entertain hopes of recovering from them what they seized. The meanest of them frequently use this expression, let me never be king of Dehli if it be not so. These people are fierce and warlike. They now possess many of the mountain parts; where some have erected petty sovereignties, like the Râjahs ^c. They have, from time to time, given great uneasiness to the Mogols; and had no small share in the late revolution brought about in that empire by Nâdir Shâh.

THE Baluchi are another nation who possess several parts The Ba- of Hindûstân, to the west of the Sind, or Indus; particularly luchi. the province of Hajakhân ^d. But in Persia, where also they seem to have had their original, they are masters of a much greater dominion; for they are spread over all the large province of Makrân, and the neighbouring parts. They are a barbarous people, given to rapine: nor do they pay much obedience to either of the monarchs to whom they are reckoned as subjects.

THE Moguls, or Jagatays, are the present lords of Hin- The Mo- dûstân, where they reign over the rest, for the most part, gols. with an absolute sway. To these five nations we may add the Europeans who have settled there; particularly the Portugueses, Spaniards, English, Dutch, French, and Danes. The first established themselves along the coasts of both peninsulas, and in the islands, chiefly by force; but were afterwards dispossessed almost every-where by the Dutch. The Spaniards also made some conquests, as that of the Philippine islands: but the other three nations settled in the Indies by treaty with the inhabitants, or permission of their kings.

OF the several nations above-mentioned* the Hindûs and Several Parsîs are pagans: but excel all the rest in modest deportreligions. ment, and the practice of virtue. The Pâtans, Baluchi's, and Mogols are Mohammedans. The two first given to arms, and of a restless disposition, subject on slight occasions to revolt, and plunder their neighbours, without distinction.

^c BERNIER, ibid.
 fol. edit.

^d TERRY Voy. Ind. p. 387. sect. 7.

(D) Or, as others write, Agwân, Anguâns, according to their different way of pronouncing the word. Frazer, in his history of Nâdir Shâh, p. 7, says, the Patâns and Afghâns are the same. So do some of our old English travellers, such as Steel, and Crowther in Purchas. Pilgr. vol. i. p. 521.

Mogols,
or Jagatays.

However, the Pâtans and Mogols are pretty strict observers of their law, and the rules of justice, at least among themselves.

HAVING given our readers this general idea of the several nations inhabiting Hindûstân, we proceed to treat more particularly of three of them, viz. the Mogols, the Hindûs, and the Parsis.

I.

Of the Mogols, or Jagatays.

Their
shape :

THE natives of Hindûstân are like the Europeans as to stature : but generally very strait : for our author never saw or heard of any crooked or deformed person ; nay, nor any idiot, or natural fool, among them. Their complexion is of a deep tawny, or olive colour : their hair jet black, very harsh, but not curled. They like not people who are very white or fair ; because that is the colour of lepers, who are common in those parts.

MOST of the Mohammedans, except their priests and antient men, keep their chins constantly shaven : but let the hair on their upper lip grow very long ; and keep it of the natural colour, by means of black-lead combs. They likewise shave their heads all over, leaving only a lock on the crown, by which they expect to be drawn up to heaven by their prophet Mohammed. They wear, instead of hats or bonnets, a kind of turban, made with a piece of narrow callico, wound several times about the head^c.

Salutation.

THE inhabitants in general are very civil and courteous, as well to strangers as one another. They salute not by pulling off their head attire, but by bowing their head, or their body, laying the right hand on their breast, and uttering compliments as they pass. The meaner people salute their superiors in a very submissive or abject manner ; either by putting their right hand to the ground, and then laying it on their head, or else by falling on their knees, and then bowing their head to the earth. In their more familiar salutations, they take each other by the chin or beard (E), and cry Bâba, father, or Bij, brother. Their usual compliments at meeting are, God give health : I wish you the prayers of the poor, or that one good may arrive to you quick after another. Inferior people, whose dependance is on others, say, I eat your bread and salt ; as much as to say, I am your servant, and at your disposal.

^c TERRY Voy. Ind. p. 376, sect. 5.

(E) This is an antient custom : for so Joab saluted Amasa.

THE dress of the Hindûstâns is all the same, in great and small, rich and poor, differing only in the cost: for they never alter their fashions. Their coats to the waist fit close to their bodies, from whence they hang loose a little below their knees, the skirts sitting pretty full. These coats are fastened to their shoulders by slips of the same cloth, which is commonly white callico (F), and likewise to their waists, in the same manner, on both sides: besides, as they double over the breast, they are there also fastened, or made close, by such slips of cloth, thick set from the left armpit to the middle. The sleeves are long and tight, that they may ruffle from their elbows to their wrists. Under this out-coat they usually wear another slight one, of the same cloth, but shorter, in the nature of a vest: and this is all the cloathing generally worn on the upper part of their bodies. But some of the greater sort, in the cooler parts of the day, slip-on loose coats over the other, made of quilted silk or callico, or else of English scarlet cloth; for that is the colour they most affect. Under their coats they wear long breeches, like trowsers, which fall down to their ancles, and ruffle on the small of their legs: for their feet are always bare in their shoes; but as clean as their hands.

THE covering of their heads is made with a long piece of cloth, about half a yard broad, commonly white, and sometimes interwoven with threads of silk, gold, or silver, at least at one end, for ornament. This cloth, which they call a sash, winds round the head several times, and is a very great defence against the sun. However, as it must keep their heads hot, they endeavour to remedy that inconvenience by continual shaving. They have girdles of the same kind of sashes, which go twice at least about them, the ends hanging down before.

THE dress of the Mohammedan women differs but little from that of the men, wearing coats and breeches of the same fashion; only they bind their hair with long fillets, which hang down behind. They wear likewise on their heads mantles or vails of callico, which hang down over their other garments. They bore their ears not only in the flaps, but round the rims, in which they wear small pendants, made of thin and narrow pieces of gold or silver, brass or iron, according to the quality of the person. The lower

(F) Although the grandeess sometimes use silks, plain, or striped, of several colours, or slight silver or gold brocade; yet, for the general, they choose the pure white and fine callico lawn. The collars, and some other parts of their upper coats, being set-off with needle-work.

Mogols,
or Jaga-
tays.

part of their left nostril is also pierced, for putting in rings of those metals, at pleasure; the ends of their gold rings meeting in a pearl drilled for the purpose. As the women of prime quality never appear abroad, our author could not say in what manner they were adorned with jewels: but he observed, that some of the better sort, whom he had seen, wore great hollow rings of gold enamelled, silver, or brass, upon their wrists and the small of their legs, two or three on each limb; which make a tinkling when they move^f.

Their diet.

ALTHOUGH Hindûstân affords abundance of flesh and fowl, which are exceeding cheap, yet the Mohammedans, who are very temperate, do not feed much on them; and when they do, it is sparingly, and in conjunction with other diet. They dress no kind of meat in whole joints, and seldom their fowls whole; boiling, baking, and roasting, being parts of cookery quite unknown to them. They stew all their flesh, cut into slices or small pieces, putting to it onions, herbs, roots, green ginger, and other spices, with some butter; which makes a mess exceeding palatable. They sometimes with their other flesh mince that of fowls; which is like the Spanish oleo, but more delicious. But their common dish is rice; which they boil plump, without letting it break; seasoning it with ginger, pepper, and butter. In this form it is very good. Sometimes they make pillaw, by boiling pieces of flesh, venison, mutton, or fowls, in their rice, which they manage with art^g.

Bread.

THEY have several sorts of grain to make bread, especially wheat; which is more full and white than the English. The ordinary people use a coarser grain; which yet makes very good and hearty bread. They make it up like oaten cakes, and bake it on small round iron hearths (or plates); which they carry with them when they travel. Their butter, though soft, being cream beaten to a kind of thick oil, is very good. They have also plenty of cheese, made of milk taken from cows, sheep, goats, and buffalos; which last is very good.

Drink.

THE common drink of the inhabitants of Hindûstân is water; which is rendered far more pleasant and sweet than ours by the heat of the sun. Hence all strangers choose it as well as the natives, and find it agree better with their bodies than any other liquor. Sometimes they boil seeds in it, to give it a flavour; and it is observed to be colder after heating than it was before. They have, besides water, two sorts of wine in the Indies, one natural, the other distilled^h. What we call natural wine is the juice of a tree, and called Toddi. It is drawn from it by making incisions in the branches, which grow only towards the top, and hanging underneath pots, made of gourds, to receive the juice. This is done over-night, and early next morning the pot is taken away, and the vents stopped up. The liquor which distils from the tree is very clear, pleasant, and wholesome. If drank before noon it is then diuretic and inoffensive, only a little windy, like wine upon the must: but if kept till the heat of the day, it becomes unwholesome, not well relished, and very intoxicating: on which account the European sailors are very fond of it; and it is very cheap. Their distilled wine is drawn from sugar, and the spicy rind of a tree called Jagra. The Indians call it Raak (or Arak). Our author says it is very wholesome, if taken moderately (G); and that there was no great quantity made of it. Although they have excellent grapes, they make no wine, as being forbidden by the law of Mohammed. Those who are strict observers of their religion drink no wine at all, but use coffee (H). To supply the place of it likewise, they use Betel, or Pawne; which is the leaf of a shrub, like the ivy leaf, but more tender. They chew the same along with a hard nut shaped like a nutmeg, and a very little pure lime mixed with the leaves: of this composition, when chewed, they only let down the juice. They ascribe to it many rare qualities, particularly to strengthen the stomach, comfort the brain, preserve the teeth, and cure or prevent a tainted breath. This our author observes, in confirmation hereof, that, when chewed in a close room, the breath of the person using it fills the place with a very agreeable scentⁱ.

^f TERRY Voy. Ind. p. 409, & seqq. sect. 11.
406, sect. 10.

^g Ibid. p.

To give our readers the better idea of the diet, as well as Entertainment of eating, in use among the Mogols of Hindustân, we shall insert an account of the entertainment made by Asâf.

^h TERRY Voy. Ind. p. 358, 364. sect. 2. ⁱ Ibid. p. 361, 365. sect. 2.

(G) Bernier says, it affects the nerves, and breeds incurable disorders, if taken a little immoderately. Memoirs, part iii. p. 28.

(H) Mr. Terry observes of coffee (which in his time was little, if at all, known in England), that it was made of a black seed, boiled in water, which it turned almost of the same colour; but did not alter the taste of it much. He adds, that this liquor was more wholesome than palatable; being very good to help digestion, quicken the spirits, and cleanse the blood.

Mogols,
or Jaga-
tays.

Khân, in the reign of Jehân Ghîr, for Sir Thomas Rowe, the English ambassador. The feast was served up in a very spacious and beautiful tent, well perfumed; the floor of which was covered over with very rich and large carpets. These were covered again, in the places where the dinner was served, with other carpets of stitched leather, which were spread with fine white callico cloths. On these were ranged a great number of silver dishes, with gilt brims, most part of them no larger than plates. To this entertainment none of the ambassador's retinue were admitted, excepting his chaplain, Mr. Terry. The three sat cross-legged on the ground, as it were in a triangle, facing each other, Sir Thomas being placed at a good distance from the Khân, on his right hand. Each had his mess to himself. The ambassador's consisted of ten dishes more, and his chaplain's of ten less, than what the Khân had, which were sixty. All the dishes were set before them at once, and spaces left between, for the waiters to come and reach them to the parties one after another. So that our author tasted a little of each, and found them all well relished.

Kind of dishes.

As to the provision itself, the larger dishes were filled with rice, dressed as before described, and tinged with different colours. Many others were furnished with flesh of several kinds, pullets, and other sorts of fowls, all cut in little pieces. To these succeeded variety of jellies, and culices: flower of rice boiled, and then sweetened with sugarcandy and rose-water, to be eaten cold. Among the rest was a very delicious dish made of the flesh of pullets, stewed with rice-flower and almonds, pounded exceeding small; then, being beaten to pieces so fine that it could not be discerned, all was mixed together, and sweetened with rose-water and sugarcandy, and perfumed with ambergrise. The Portugueses call this Mangee real, food for a king. Other dishes consisted of cakes in several forms, made of the finest wheat-flower, mixed with almonds and sugarcandy: some of them perfumed, others not. Towards the end came potatoes, excellently well dressed; divers kinds of sallads, and the curious fruits of the country, some preserved, others fresh. To these succeeded roots candied, almonds blanched, raisins of the sun, prunellas, and other things, to make up the number of dishes appointed^k.

Marriage. THE Mohammedans in this country are married with much the same ceremonies as elsewhere: for after the Mullah, or priest, has done his office, which is in the evening, they go in procession through the principal streets of the city: the Mogols, man on horseback, with his relations and friends about him, or Jagatays, preceded by many lights, drums, and wind music; with some drolleries, to increase the merriment. The bride follows with her women friends, in covered coaches: and, having made their tour, return to the house of the married couple; where the company is entertained: although the Mohammedans are allowed to marry four wives, very few, and those only of the richer sort, take more than one, in the more western parts under their dominion: but our author tells us of a servant belonging to Sir Thomas Rowe, who had for wages no more than five shillings a moon, and yet had four wives.

^k TERRY Voy. Ind. p. 407, & seq. sect. 10.

THEY who have most wives and women are most jealous; so that they will not suffer either the brothers or fathers to speak to them, but in their presence: and custom has made it a high reflection for a wife to be seen by any man besides her husband (I). Adultery and fornication also are reckoned so criminal, that, rather than the offender shall escape punishment, their own brother will not scruple to take away their lives: for which barbarity they shall not be called to an account, but commended. Great men have eunuchs to wait on or guard their women. Common women are tolerated here: but they must be registered or licensed before they can have liberty to open a house. Some of the better sort of these prostitutes, at certain times, repair to court, to divert the Great Mogol, with singing their wanton songs, and playing on their timbrels¹.

THE women are exceeding happy in this part of the world, in having easy labour: for it is common to see them one day riding great with child, and the next day ride again, carrying the infants in their arms. The children of the poorer sort go naked for several years; only now-and-then their mothers cover them with a slight callico mantle. The eldest son by a lawful wife has a privilege above the rest, who call him budda, or their great brother^m.

THE Mohammedans wash the bodies of their dead; which they bury not in their mosks or churches, but in some open place out of the towns; digging the grave very deep and wide. Their mourning over the deceased is immoderate, and often

¹ TERRY Voy. Ind. p. 430, & sect. 17. ^m TERRY, Ibid. and THEVENOT, part iii. ch. 24, p. 47.

(I) Thevenot says, the Mohammedan women are very wanton, the Indian women very chaste. Trav. Ind. part iii. ch. 25, p. 47.

Mogols,
or Jagatays

Sepulchres.

renewed every year, especially by the women, in their houses, and at their graves, which they bedew with tears; frequently asking the party, as if living, Why would he die? since he had such loving wives, such loving friends, and other comforts in this life. The men of greatest quality often provide fair sepulchres for themselves and nearest friends. For this purpose they inclose, with a wall, a good piece of ground, near some tank, or spring of water, in order to make fountains: then they erect little mosks, and near them tombs; which are either round, square, hexagonal, or octagonal, with cupolas of stone over them. They are raised upon pillars, or else piers, with arches, and within is the body deposited. The workmanship is exceeding good. The rest of the ground is planted with fruit-trees and the choicest flowers.

THERE are likewise many handsome monuments erected in memory of such as they esteemed pîrs, or saints: in which are lamps continually burning; with votaries, who have salaries, to attend them. These sepulchres are daily resorted to by devout people: and certainly no places in the empire afford more delight than their burying-grounds; nor do they bestow so much cost on any other structures: witness the famous sepulchre at Sekandra, three miles from Agra, begun by Akber and finished by his successorⁿ; of which an account is given by travellers.

Languages.

THE common language of the empire, called the Hindûstân, has much affinity with the Persian and Arabik; but is more smooth, and easily pronounced; very significant and concise. The characters are also very different, and written from the left hand to the right, like the European. The Persian is spoken at court, and the Arabik is the learned language; although all the learning of the Mogols amounts to read and write: for they have no logic, nor rhetoric, but what is natural. However, the people themselves are men of very strong reason, and will speak off-hand on any subject exceeding well;

Learning.

so that, if there was literature among them, they might produce many excellent works: and as it is, they are said to compose witty poems, as well as histories of their own, and the neighbouring countries. For all this, they have not many books (K)

ⁿ TERRY, p. 431, & seqq. sect. 18.

(K) In this, no doubt, Terry was mistaken, for want of being able to read their books, or converse with the natives: at least, matters have altered since his time, as may appear by the catalogue of MSS. on various subjects, brought from India by Mr. Frazer, and inserted at the end of his account of Nâdir Shâh.

in use; among which may be reckoned that of Aristotle, Mogols, whom they call Aplis, and the physician Avicenna (L); both or Jagatays. in Arabik. Their chief science seems to be astrology; in which there are many pretenders: because the generality are infatuated with the belief of it, which is encouraged by the example of the court: for the Great Mogol has his astrologers about him; nor does he undertake any thing of the least moment without consulting them^p.

THE religion of the Mogols, Afghâns, and Pâtans, is the Their belief, Mohammedan, of the Sunni sect, such as the Turks are of, who hold Abubekr for the true successor of Mohammed, in opposition to the Shiya, who acknowledge Ali in that quality as the Persians do. These make the greater part of the emperor's court, and consequently must weaken his interest when at war with Persia: however, they appear outwardly to be of the same opinion with the rest of the grandees. When the kingdoms of Golkonda and Viziaûr were in being, the Shiya sect prevailed in the former, and in the territories of the latter the Sunni and the Shiya were mingled together^q. As to the number of Mohammedans, compared with the Pagans, there are at least an hundred, if not several hundreds, of the latter to one of the former^r.

WE need not here insert an account of the Mohammedan religion and way of worship, which do not differ from what they are in other countries, whereof an account hath been already given^s. We shall therefore confine ourselves to a few particulars, which may deserve to be taken notice of. One respects the great strictness and devotion of the Mohammedans in the practice of their religion: another is the temperance observed by far the greater part of them, as well as by the Hindûs, or Pagans, to such a degree, that they will rather die than eat, or drink, any thing which their law forbids (M); and what they do of either kind is merely to satisfy nature. For they hate gluttony, and look upon drunkenness as another madness; in so much, that they have only one word in their language, and practice.

^p TERRY, p. 412, sect. 12.

^q TAVERN. Trav. Ind. ch.

i. p. 159.

^r BERNIER Mem. part ii. p. 22.

^s See vol.

i. p. 1, & passim.

(L) A corruption of Ebn Sina. His name was Abu ali ebn Sina.

(M) Terry extols the people of Hindûstân (Voy. sect. 14.) for the observance of moral duties: and, according to Ovington, they are so peaceable and honest, that there had not been a criminal put to death for twenty years together; although, when he was there, in 1609, some European pirates were going up to court to be tried. Voy. to Surât, p. 230, & seq.

namely

Mogols,
or Jaga-
tays.

namely meft, for a drunkard and a madman. The Mohammedans are very charitable: some build inns in great cities and towns for lodging travellers; others make wells and tanks, a kind of reservoirs, or cisterns, for the public use: while some keep servants to attend on the most frequented roads, with water in great skins, carried by buffalos, to refresh passengers and their beasts, at free cost¹.

Monks.

AMONG the Mohammedans, as well as Pagans, there are many, who out of devotion (or under the pretence of it), voluntarily undergo very rigid penances, far exceeding all the Romanists boast of. Of these there are two sorts: the first called Dervishes, who spend their lives in solitude and contemplation, retiring to the tops of hills, shaded with trees; where they fix their habitation, from whence they never stir. They never cease crying out, God Almighty look upon me, I love not the world, but thee; and do all this for thy sake. After their retirement, they let their hair and nails grow to their full length, and will perish, sooner than go out of their cells, depending for relief on the charity of others, who send them clothing and victuals; but both must be of the coarser kind, and the latter only for their immediate sustenance, otherwise they will not accept of them. Some impose on themselves tasks of fasting, without any food, for so long a time, that their natural strength is almost quite spent for want of nourishment.

Fakirs, or mendi-cants:

The second sort of penitents (called Fakirs), wear nothing about them but what is sufficient to cover their nakedness; and, like mendicant friars in the Romish church, make a profession of begging for their subsistence. They commonly dwell in the out-skirts of towns; and, making little fires in the day, sleep at night in the warm ashes, with which they besmear their bodies. They sometimes take intoxicating drugs, which make them talk wildly: this draws the common people about them, who mistake such jargon for prophecy. Some, out of devotion, put iron fetters on their legs, so heavy, that they can scarce move with them; and then, covered with a blue mantle (which is the mourning colour), walk many miles, as fast as they can, barefoot, on the scorching ground, in pilgrimage to the tombs of their saints².

vastly numerous:

THEY reckon, that there are in the Indies no fewer than eight hundred thousand Fakirs, besides twelve hundred thousand idolatrous mendicants, or penitents (called Joghis); who, according to another author, are all vagabonds and lazy drones, imposing on the credulous multitude by a false zeal, Mogols, and abundance of idle words; which pass on them for oracles. or Jagatays. Of these Fakîrs there are several kinds: the almost naked sort, whom we have been speaking of, have no certain abode, and give themselves up to all manner of uncleanness. There are others, whose garments are of so many different pieces and colours, that one can hardly tell what they are made of. These reach half-way down the legs, and hide the rags which are underneath. They generally go in troops, and have their superior, known by his habit; which is commonly more abject, go in companies: and full of patches, than those of his gang. He draws after him a great iron chain, above two yards long: this he rattles all the while he says his prayers, which he does with a loud voice, and an affected gravity, which draws the veneration of the people; who in the interim prepare dinner for him on the spot, where he takes his stand; which is generally in some street, or other public place.

¹ TERRY, p. 417, sect. 14. and p. 429, sect. 16. ² TERRY, p. 427, & seq. sect. 16.

THERE he causes his disciples to spread carpets; and, deceive the people. sitting down, gives audience to the people: on the other hand, his disciples go about publishing through the country, that God reveals to him his most important secrets, and gives him power to relieve persons in affliction by his advice. The multitude, who swallow all this delusion, approach him with great devotion, as a holy man, pulling off their shoes, and prostrating themselves to kiss his feet. Then the Fakîr, to shew his humility, reaches out his hand to kiss, makes them sit down by him, and hears every-one apart. They boast of having a prophetic spirit; and, above all, to teach barren women a way how to procure children, and be beloved by whom they please. Some of these Fakîrs have more than 200 disciples, whom they assemble by the sound of a horn, or beat of drum. When they travel, they have their standard, lances, and other weapons; which they pitch in the ground near their master, when he repose in any place.

THE third sort of Fakîrs are they, who, being born of poor Another sort. parents, and desirous to understand the law, in order to become doctors, retire to the mosks; where they live on the alms which are given them. They employ all their time in reading the Korân; which they get by heart: and, if to this study they can but add the knowledge of some natural things, together with an exemplary life, they come to be chief of the mosks, and to the dignity of mullahs, and judges of the law. These Fakîrs marry; and some have three or four wives, thinking they do God great service, in begetting many children to be followers of his law, as they account the Korân *.

* TAVERN. ubi supr. ch. 2. p. 160.

The Hindûs.

Toleration.

ALL religions are tolerated in Hindûstân; which makes the tyrannical government more easy to be endured: and the people treat the clergy of any persuasion with much respect ^y.

II.

Of the Hindûs, or Hindows, as divided into tribes, or families.

Hindûs
tribes:

THE Hindûs are divided into four great tribes, or orders, of people; 1. The men of the law, or the priesthood; 2. The men of arms, to which belong their Râjahs, or kings; 3. The merchants, or men of traffick; 4. The commonalty; in which are included mechanics, husbandmen, and all inferior kinds of people.

THE first class is called by the Indians Brahmans, Brammans, or Bramins, as some authors write it. The names of the other tribes seem to differ in different parts of the country. Roger, who resided at Paliakât, in the kingdom of Karnâta, on the coast of Choromandel, calls the second order Settreas (N): Bernier, who got his information at Agra and Banâres, in the Mogol's empire, calls them Ketteris; and Thevenot, Katri. Lord, who conversed with the Baniyâns at Surât, with some little variation, Kutteris. The third order is named by Roger, Weynias; by others, Vanias, and Baneans, or Baniyans: Bernier calls it Besku; Lord, Shudderis; and by Thevenot, Soudr, and Kourmi. The fourth class is named Sowdras (O) by Roger; Sidra, by Bernier; Wise, by Lord; and Wens, by Thevenot ^z.

their
names.

THE disagreement found in the two last articles is not easy to be accounted for. Both Roger and Lord make the merchants, or Baniyans, the third order: but whereas the ^y TERRY, p. 475, § 30. ^z ROGER Mæures des Bram.

p. 2. BERNIER Mém. Mog. Emp. part iii. p. 145. LORD'S Account of Banian Relig. c. 9. THEVEN. part iii. ch. 38. p. 63.

(N) There seems to be some mistake, perhaps in the printing, of Settreas for Ketteras; tho' it is every-where printed so in that author.

(O) The Romish missionaries to Karnâta, and Madûra, name them, 1. Bramins, or the nobles; 2. Kebatris, or the Râjahs; 3. Sboutres, or the common people; and 4. Parias, or the basest sort of all. De Faria, with still less care, names the classes as existing in the coast of Malabar; 1. Brammans; 2. Chatrier, or Eshatri; 3. Bacstri, or Vaisker; 4. Chadra. See Lett. Ediff. tom. v. p. 18, & alibi. and Port. Asia, vol. ii. p. 391, 408.

first calls them Shudderis; the latter gives that name (for Sou- Hindûs dras is doubtless the same) to the fourth order; and although Brâm-Thevenot agrees with Lord, in terming the third order Soudr mans.
(which is the same with Shudderis), yet he agrees with Roger as to the signification, by making them the commonalty; and differs from them both, in placing the merchants last. As to the difference in the names, it seems to arise from hence, that those given by Roger and Bernier denote their profession, or some other mark of distinction belonging to the respective tribes; whereas the names made use of by Lord are derived from their great ancestors, like those of the two first, and taken immediately from the Shâster, one of the Hindûs sacred books; consequently of most authority in this matter.

THESE four principal classes of the Hindûs are subdivided into several subordinate classes; of which it will be necessary to give our readers some account.

1. Of the Brâmmans, or Brâmins.

THE Brâmmans derive their name from Brammon, the eldest Bramans son of Pourous, the first man (according to the Hindûs); or else name:
from Brema, or Bremaw (P), the first created being of the second age, to whom the law was delivered; and are divided into 82 sects, or families ².

THE Bramins themselves say, that there is no race or family of men more worthy, or agreeable in the eyes of God, than theirs; and all the other Hindû families allow the first place in dignity to be due to them. The Vedâm, or book of the law, which the Hindûs hold to be sent from God, had declared its esteem for this family, by ordering that a Bramin shall not be put to death for any crime he commits, how atrocious soever it may be. His punishment is to be the loss of his sight: persons sac-for it is reckoned one of the five great sins to kill a Bramin, cred.
not to be expiated by less than a twelve years pilgrimage:
during that time also the homicide is to beg alms, with the Bramin's skull in his hand, out of which he is to eat and drink what is given him. And when the time of twelve years is expired, he is then to bestow much in alms himself, and build a temple in honour of Eswâra (or Isburen); nay the Vedâm has made the person of a Brâmin so sacred, that if one of them

² LORD, ubi supr. ch. 10.

(P) The Brammans themselves say, they are descended from the latter.

Hindûs will go to war, and happens to be slain, that he who killed him must build the temple, in case he be able ^a. Besides these Râjahs. exprefs precepts of the Vedâm, or Wedâm, the Brâmins claim, and obtain, from the Hindûs, no small veneration, on account that this book was delivered to them, and that they are the keepers of it ^b.

Race of kings. IN some parts of India, as on the coast of Malabâr, Brammans are kings : they are in other countries frequently made governors of provinces, or cities, and are generally farmers under the Râjahs; and this probably gave rise to the account we meet with in the Shâster, of the race of Kutteris being destroyed, and kings supplied out of the Brâmmans; of which more in the next article.

THE tribe of Brâmmans is among the Hindûs, as the tribe of Levi among the Jews : but we shall consider them as priests, when we come to treat of the Hindû religion hereafter, in our account of the hither peninsula of India.

2. The Kuttereys, or Settreas.

Kutte-reys. THE Kuttereys, or Kutteris, had their name from Kutte-rey, the second son of Pourous : and, as dominion and government was given to him, therefore all kings and soldiers are of this tribe ^c; which properly consists of the nobility, named Râjah, who have a chief, or king, stiled Râjah of Râjahs, and the God of the Râjahs; which is to be understood of the king of Bisnâgar, or Narsinga, in Karnatika, or Karnata.

The nobles: IN former times, this family of nobles was divided only into two branches; the first named Sowri Wanjam, so called from the sun, which in the Samskortam, or learned language, is named Sowri; because they are the true nobility. The other branch is named Soma Wanjam, from the moon. But there are at present, besides these two, many other branches, who do no great honour to their order, as having intermarried with other families; for which reason the two first branches do not marry with them.

their office. THE office of nobles is to govern and defend the country against enemies : they are likewise to take care, that the Brâmins be not in want. However, a great many of them are poor themselves : and as they cannot trade, their families often increase to such a degree, that the income of their lands will not maintain them : hence it is, that their children, being left poor, are obliged, for a livelihood, to serve the

^a ROGER, ubi supr. p. 3. & seq.

38. p. 64.

^c LORD, ch. 11.

^b THEVEN. ubi supr. ch.

richer lords for soldiers^d; and these are they who are called Râ-japûts (and corruptly Râspûts); that is, children of the Râjahs. Hindûs Râjahs.

THE Hindûs of this tribe eat the flesh of all sorts of animals, excepting the cow.

THE Shâster tells us, that the ill-government of the kings and rulers, having been the source of all the disorders which occasioned the destruction of the world in the second age (or the second time), therefore God quite rooted out the whole tribe of the Kutteris; and that it might be renewed from a more holy stock, appointed that the line of the Râjahs should be restored from that of the Brâmmans: which was performed in the person of Râm, youngest son of Duserat, chief of the Brâmmans, who was preserved from destruction^e. But this holy line proved no better than the other: for they grew so wicked, that they brought the third destruction on the world^f: and in the fourth age, which is the present, it seems the Kutteris some-how sprung up again, since they now exist.

As this tribe of kings has suffered many changes in course of time, it may therefore be considered in three different states; its flourishing, declining, and present condition.

DURING their flourishing state, the Kuttereys were the ancient sovereigns and rulers in India; especially that part called Guzzerât, and were stiled Râjahs, which signifies kings. These Râjahs, whose dominions were large, or small, according to their forces, had about them chiefly four persons of eminence. The first was a Brâmmân; who, by soothsaying and augury, predicted the times most proper for the king to begin any enterprise, which was to be attended with success. The second was the Pârdon; who managed affairs of state, and dispatched all matters of judicature under the Râjah. The third was the Moldâr, or high chamberlain; who was commonly present, and conversed with the king. The fourth officer was the Disnakke, or general of his armies; who was sent upon all his military expeditions.

THE Râjahs (or rather Kuttereys) were then divided into thirty-six subordinate tribes, or noble families; as the Chawrah, the Solenkîs, the Vaggela, the Dodepuchas, the Paramars; and so forth.

TOUCHING the declining state of the Râjah tribe; their declining history relates, that a certain Râjah, named Rawisaldî, dying, his son Sideraysaldî, to honour his father's memory, erected a costly temple, and monument, at a place called Sîthepolalpûr; and, being desirous that it should last for ever, consulted his

^d ROGER, p. 5, & seq.

^e LORD'S Banian Relig. c. 14.

^f Ibid.

Hindûs
Râjahs.

Brâmman, named Madewnaugher, upon that subject: the Brâmman's answer was, that one Soltân Alao'ddin (Q), a Pâtan king of Dehli, should deface the same, and also gain some considerable conquest in Guzzerât. To prevent this misfortune, the Râjah sends both his Brâmman and Pârdon to Dehli, in order to purchase peace with the Soltân, by a sum of money. When they got thither, they could hear of no Alao'ddin (for the king was not of that name), but the son of a shepherd, a boy, whom they found feeding a kid. However, concluding him to be the person mentioned in the prediction, they acquaint him with the good fortune which was to betide him, and offer him the money to spare their master's monument. Alao'ddin resolutely answered, that, if it was the will of heaven that he should destroy the monument, he could not avoid executing its decrees; and refused the present, till his parents, who were very poor, persuaded him to accept it. Hereupon he gave them a written instrument, importing, that, although heaven had decreed that he should scatter some stones of that building, yet he would pick them out of its corners in such a manner as might fulfil the prediction, without breaking his promise to the Sideraysaldi.

ALAO'DDIN, with the money thus obtained, raised forces, and was so prosperous in arms, that he became king of Dehli: after which, he invaded Guzzerât, made great conquests from the Râjahs of that country, and fulfilled his engagement to Sideraysaldi, by sparing his monument. At length, being weary of the toil, he gave the government of his new acquisitions to Futter Khân, his cup-bearer; who, on the Soltân's return to Dehli, prosecuted the war in Guzzerât. The like did his Mohammedan successors; and thus was the power of the Râjahs in that province reduced very low.

their present state

FROM that period we may date their present state. Some of them yielded to the invaders: others, retiring to inaccessible places on the borders of the country, there fixed themselves, and remain to this day. From thence they make incursions into the neighbouring territories, rob the kâffilas on the high-roads; and sometimes advance to the skirts of the strongest, as well as most populous cities, attended with their resolute foldiers, called Râshpûts (or Râjahpûts), that is, sons of Râjahs. For, being of the Kutterey tribe, it is likely they are nobly descended; and the descendants of those who were

(Q) This must have been Massûd, surnamed Alao'ddin, king of Dehli; or his nephew Alao'ddin, who reigned about the year

1250; during whose reigns great conquests were made in the southern provinces of India by the Dehli kings.

over-

over-run when Guzzerât was conquered [§]. It was intirely The Shud- subdued in the time of the Great Mogol Akber, as other pro- deri tribe.
 vinces more northward, and to the east, had been before; and the rest by degrees since : yet still many of the Râjahs maintain an independency in the heart of the empire. There were towards the beginning of Aureng zâb's reign about one hundred dispersed over the whole ; of whom fifteen or sixteen were so rich, and powerful, that three of them only, viz.
Râna (whose ancestors were emperors of the Râjahs) Jesseying, in Hindû and Jessom Seyng, were sufficient to cope with him, did they Rân.
 but unite ; each having been able to bring into the field
 25,000 horse, better troops than the Mogol's : for they are all Râjahpûts, hereditary warriors, to whom the Râjahs allot land, on condition to be always ready, at their command, to appear on horse-back. They can endure much hardship, and want nothing to make good soldiers, but order and discipline.

THE Great Mogol is obliged to keep these, and several other Râjahs, in his service, for several reasons : first, because their militia is very good, and some of them very powerful ; 2. to bridle the other Râjahs by means of them ; 3. the better to sow differences among them ; which is often done to great effect ; 4. to employ them against his own rebellious governors, as well as foreign enemies, especially the Persians ; not daring to trust his omrâs, who are mostly of the same nation ^h.

3. The Shudderi, Weynjas, Vanias, or Baniyâns.

THE Shuddereys derive their descent from Shudderi, the The Shud- third son of Pourous, the first man ; and commerce having deri tribe.
 been the business appointed for him ; for this reason all the people belonging to his tribe follow merchandize, or are brokers for the merchants. They are called Baniyâns ; which, in the Brâmmans language, wherein their law is written, signifies an innocent and harmless people ; as they really are : for they cannot bear to see a fly, worm, or any other living thing, hurt ; and if they receive a blow, take it patiently, without returning it.

THE number of families, or branches, in the Shudderi, or Baniyân tribe, is equal to that of the Brâmmans families (R) ;

§ LORD'S Banian Relig. ch. 11.

^h BERNIER, vol. i. part

3. p. 20, 21, 27.

(R) Whose number is eighty- Baniyân casts, or sects, are recktwo : but Ovington says, the oned to be only twenty-four.

Weyz, or being in effect the self-same families: for they chuse to be under the discipline either of the Visalnagra-naughers, or Vulnagra-naughers; by whom they are directed in matters relating to religious worship: for their law having most resemblance to that of the Brâmmans (S), they more strictly follow their injunctions, than the two other tribes.

Form of bargaining.

THE form used by the Baniyâns in buying and selling is very singular, and different from that of other nations: for the broker, taking his Pamering from about his waist, spreads it on his knee; then both he and the seller putting their hands underneath, with the ends of his fingers he intimates the price, in pounds, shillings, and pence, which the chapman is willing to give; and then the seller, by the same method, acquaints him how much he expects to have. This form of making bargains is, they say, enjoined them by their law¹. By the same law they ought to deal justly, without either cheating, or taking too much profit. They live much after the same manner as the Brâmmans; eating nothing which has had life.

OF this tribe there are some named Komitis; and others Weapari; each party affirming, that they are the true Weinjas, or Baniyâns^k.

4. Of the Wives, or Sowdras.

Tribe of Weyz,

THE tribe of Wife (or Weyz) took its name from the fourth son of Pourous, who was the master of the mechanics, or handicrafts. The word Wife implies a person who is servile and instrumentary: doubtless, because they serve, and are helpful to those of the other tribes, or professions. These people, at present, are most commonly called Gentiles (or Gentews), and are divided into two sorts; the pure, and the impure, or unclean, called Visscrawn. This latter kind of Gentiles, of which are the husbandmen, or inferior sort of people, called Kowlîs (or Kûlis), take great liberty in their diet; eating animal food, either fish, or flesh. On the contrary, the purser Gentiles (who are the handicraftsmen) follow the rule of the Baniyâns, as to diet; abstaining both from flesh and wine, or using them but

¹ LORD, ubi supr. ch. 12.

^k ROGER, ubi supr. p. 7.

(S) This seems to refer to the eight commandments, given to the four tribes; whereof the first two relate more particularly to the Brâmmans, and the fifth and sixth to the Shaddereys; as will be observed when we come to treat of the religion of the Hindûs.

seldom.

seldom. However, as in religious worship they agree most Weyz, or with the Kuttereys, so they do likewise in the number of their Sowdra. families, or classes, which are thirty-six; according to the number of trades, or professions, to be found among them. With regard to their handicrafts, it is observable, that they employ as few tools as may be; and that their method of working is in every respect contrary to the *European*¹.

As, besides the mechanics and manufacturers, this tribe comprises the husbandmen, labourers, porters, and those destined to the most servile offices, these seem to be such as bear the name of Visserawn, before-mentioned.

THIS tribe is the most numerous of the four. The principal families are those of the Wellala and Ambria; besides which are others of note, as the Sitti; who are merchants. The Palli are poulterers, painters, and other trades. The Kay Kulle is an inconsiderable people: most of their women are whores; which, however, is no disgrace among them. The men are dancers, weavers, sowers, and soldiers, as some of almost all the other families are. But the most contemptible, or mean, of all is the Palla family: being regarded little more than the Perreas (or Parias), who are not reckoned among the tribes; and of whom we shall speak presently. These several families have each their peculiar customs, of which they are very jealous: so that if, in their entertainments, or marriages, those of one family do any thing more than is usual with them, or which is appropriated by another family, it proves matter of very great contest, and often sets a whole city in an uproar^m.

THE family of the Korrewás have no fixed places of dwelling; but wander about the country, with their wives and children (like our gypsies). They lodge in little huts, which they set up without the towns; and, when they remove, put them, with their few moveables, upon little asses, which they keep for the purpose. They live by making fans, or vans, for winnowing the rice; likewise covers for pots; and carry salt from the sea-side up the country, on their asses; which not being able to bear much at a time, they are exempt from all kinds of taxes, and never molested, on account of their poverty. The women of this family pretend to tell fortunes, and get more that way than any other.

5. Of the Perreas, or Parias.

THE Perreas (or Parias), before-mentioned, may be called a fifth tribe, distinct from the other four: and as they are as, or Parias:

¹ LORD, ubi sup. ch. 13.

^m ROGER, p. 8, & seqq.

Pareas tribe.

not thought worthy to be ranked among them, neither are they ever suffered to dwell among them: so that they live by themselves in the out-skirts of towns; and, in the country, build their houses apart from the villages; or rather have villages of their own, furnished with wells: for they dare not so much as fetch water from those which other families make use of; and, lest these latter should inadvertently go to one of theirs, they are obliged to scatter the bones of dead cattle about their wells, that they may be known ⁿ.

an abject
people:

THESE Perreas, in like manner, dare not in cities pass thro' the streets where the Brâmmans live; nor set a foot in the villages where they dwell. They are likewise forbidden to enter a temple, either of their god Wistnow, or Eswâra; because, being held to be impure, they would be thought to pollute it. They get their bread by sowing, digging, and building the walls of mud houses: most of those inhabited by the common people being raised by these Perreâs; who also do such kinds of dirty work, as other people do not care to meddle with. Nor is their diet much more cleanly; for they do not scruple to eat cows, horses, fowl, or other carrion, which die of themselves, and even stink.

two branches.

ONE would scarce imagine, that contentions for precedency should ever enter into the thoughts of a people, who have renounced all cleanliness, and, like swine, wallow in filth; and yet pride has divided the Perreâs into two classes. The first are simply called Perreâs, the other Seriperes. The employment of these latter is to go about selling leather, which they dress themselves; also to make bridles, and such kinds of things. Some of them likewise serve for soldiers. The Perreâs, who reckon themselves the better family, will not eat in the house of the Seriperes: but the Seriperes will readily eat with the Perreâs. For this reason they are obliged to pay them respect, by lifting their hands aloft, and standing upright before them. This a Seripere refusing to do at Paliakâtta, in 1640, the Perreâs seized him, and cut off his hair: which is the greatest affront, or mark of contempt, that can be offered to them.

Seriperes, or Halalchors:

THESE Seriperes, when they marry, cannot set up a pandâl, a kind of garland, before their doors, made with more than three flakes, or trees; should they exceed that number, it would be enough to put a whole city in motion. The Seriperes are likewise subject to some sort of slavery. For, when any person of credit, or authority, dies, in the families of the Kemits, Sittis, Palls, carriers, or goldsmiths, and the friends have a mind to be at the expence of some clothes to give the Sc- Hindû riperes, these latter must suffer their beards to be shaven; and, customs.

 when the corps is carried out of town to be burned, or inter-rred, they must do that office; for which each receives a fanum, or one piece and a half of silver, worth three fous and a half°. These are the same sort of people, who are called, at Surât, Halalchors (T); that is, in the Persian lan- soul feed- guage, eat-alls, or eat-ers at large; for the reasons above- ers.
 mentioned. Nothing can offend an Hindû more, than to be called an Halalchor: yet these poor people take all in good part; cringe and bow to all they pass, and go through their drudgery without noise, or concern P.

III.

Manners and Customs of the Hindûs.

HAVING given our readers some account of the Hindû Hindûs:
 tribes, and families, we proceed to speak of their manners and customs; in which, regard will be chiefly had to those of the two inferior tribes; the Shudderis, or merchants, commonly called Baniyâns; and the Wise, comprising the mechanics, husbandmen, and other lower classes of people.

THE Hindûs, in general, are extremely sober; and never their Cha- commit any excess, either in eating, or drinking: they even rafter:
 seem to be born with a natural aversion to all intoxicating liquors (U). They are very reserved, with regard to women; at least outwardly: so that they never commit an indecent action in public. They are extremely charitable to the poor (X).
 It is an inviolable law, that all relations must assist one another; and share the little, which they possess, with those who are in want. They are of a very mild disposition; so that nothing shocks them so much as anger, and a hasty temper^q.
 This is particularly remarkable in the Baniyâns; owing to the abhorrence which they have to shedding of blood; which,
 at the same time, renders them wholly unfit for being soldiers,

° ROGER, p. 14, & seqq. P OVINGTON's Voy. to Surât, p. 382, & seq. q LE LANE ap. Lett. Ediff. tom. 10. p. 11.

(T) Thevenot writes Halal- kour, and says, they are also called Der; that they are the gold-finders of the Indies; that is, cleanse all the public and private houses of office, sweep the streets and houses.

(X) Their charity extends to birds and beasts; for which they build hospitals. In a pagod at Surât, Thevenot saw a man distributing flower among ants, leaving a handful where-ever he found any. Trav. Ind. part iii.
 ch. 14. p. 26.

(U) More of their temperance spoken of in the article relating to the Mogols.

Hindû
customs.

and gives them an aversion to war. Hence also it is, that they are not inclined to inflict any corporal punishments; but have a perfect detestation of those which are capital ^r.

not easily offended:

As the Baniyân is formed of so very mild a temper, he is not easily offended. He will bear almost any thing, without emotion, excepting slippering; that is, a stroke with the sole of a slipper, after a person has taken it off his foot, and spit on it. This is dreaded above all affronts; and looked on to be no less ignominious, than spitting in the face, or throwing dirt, among us ^s.

greedy of gain.

THE Baniyâns are extremely covetous, and greedy of gain. Our author knew some, who, though reputed to be worth an hundred thousand pounds, would run from one end of Surât to the other, for the prospect of gaining six pence. Their thoughts being thus continually bent on increasing their wealth, they generally secure a comfortable subsistence; and some of them amass a prodigious treasure ^t. Their riches consist solely in cash, and jewels; which they keep as secretly as they can from the knowledge of the Mogol officers. This curbs them in their expences, and obliges them to great secrecy in their commerce; so that they pay and receive their money in the night ^u.

Kindness to animals.

INDIA is the only public theatre of justice and tenderness to brute animals: if a Baniyân happens to kill but a mite, or flea, the offence must be expiated by some considerable atonement. They condemn those of folly, as well as cruelty, who, for food, slay kids, lambs, chickens, or other young creatures; especially the calf, which is their darling animal, whose life they seldom fail to ransom ^x. Of this humanity to living things, the knavish Mohammedan Fakîrs often take advantage; threatening, in presence of a Baniyân, to kill some bird, or other creature, in order to extort money for its redemption. The Portugueses, and even the English, it seems, have practised this fraud upon those harmless Indians. Thus, the caterer of the factory at Surât buys a calf, as if for slaughter; but, in reality, to have it released by some Baniyân. Sometimes the young factors go out with a gun, pretending to shoot birds in the fields adjoining to the habitations of the Baniyâns; who immediately run, as for life; and with a rûpi, or two, bribe the fowler to desist, and not defile the ground with blood.

Hospitals
for cattle:

THEY are likewise at considerable expences annually, for supporting animals; as we are here for maintaining the poor.

^r Ovington's Voy. Surât, p. 257. 277.

^s Ibid. p. 357.

^t Ibid. p. 277, & seq.

^u Ibid. p. 317.

^x Ibid.

p. 296.

Within a mile of Surât, they have a large hospital for cows, Hindû horses, goats, dogs, and other diseased, lame, or decayed creatures. When an ox, for instance, is, through age and toil, become unfit for farther service, lest this should tempt the mercilefs owner to kill him for his flesh, the Baniyâns either beg, or buy him; and then place him in the hospital to be taken care of, till he dies a natural death. Once a year they prepare a fet banquet for all the flies which are in their houses, of sweet milk and sugar mixed, in large shallow dishes, set on the floor, or table, for the purpose. At other times, they walk with bags of rice under their arm, for two or three miles into the country, stopping at each ant-hill to leave a handful of that beloved grain. But the oddest fancy of all is their care for the preservation of fleas, bugs, and other vermin, which suck the blood of men: for in an hospital, near the former, built for their reception, a poor man is hired now-and-then to rest all night upon the hot, or bed, where the vermin are put; and, lest their stinging should force him to take his flight before morning, he is tied down to the place, and there lies for them to glut themselves with human gore ^{and even vermin:}.

THEIR affection for animals is such, that they even adorn snakes and rats: them; fastening, for instance, large rings of some metal about the legs of a favourite cow, or goat. They shew the same regard for trees ^{rats:}. This great fondness for animals is nourished by their doctrine of the metempsychosis: in consequence of which, the scrivân, or secretary to the English brokers, for a long time fed a large snake, which came into his house, with bread and milk, on a supposition, that the soul of his deceased father was lodged in it. He was no less indulgent to some rats, which he likewise lodged in his house, and grew as familiar as cats, on the belief that they harboured the souls of some departed relations ^{snakes and rats:}.

THE Hindûs, in general, are of a low and timorous spirit; timorous, excepting the Râjabpûts, who are the military tribe: but their but bon. other virtues make amends for that defect. The Baniyâns, who serve as factors, or brokers, whether to natives, or strangers, discharge their trust with great integrity: in like manner they of the fourth tribe, who hire themselves as servants, are so faithful, that, far from defrauding their masters on the road of a penny's-worth, they would die in defence both of them

^y OVINGTON'S Voy. to Surât, p. 298, & seqq.
p. 321.

^z Ibid. p. 287, & seq.

^z Ibid.

Hindû
customs.

and their goods, if attacked by robbers (Y). Nor are they less diligent than faithful, being continually within call; nor are ever absent without leave. Thus, for five shillings a lunar month (which is their constant wages, provisions being cheap) they serve, and maintain themselves, with as much care, as if they had ten times the wages ^b. These are better than the Mohammedan servants, who are more proud, and less to be depended on for their diligence, or honesty ^c.

Shaving.

THE Hindûs wear little beards, and shave them, as they do their heads, all over. Their frequent shaving makes excellent barbers. The people of this profession seldom keep shop; but go about with a chequered apron thrown over their shoulder, and a mirror in their hand. Their implements consist of a razor, not an inch long; a brass basin, as big as a coffee-dish; and a piece of hard soap, which they dip in the basin; and, with no more water than it takes up, rub about the lips and head: in shaving which, few outdo them, for either ease, or expedition. They have an iron tool also; one end serves to pick and clear the ears, the other to pare the nails; both which they do dexterously: and all for a goshik; which is much under a farthing.

Washing.

THE Hindûs often wash their bodies, and keep their feet as clean as their hands. The better sort anoint themselves daily with sweet oils; which give them an agreeable scent. The poor also anoint with cocoa-nut oil; but that being rank, and themselves, both men and women, accustomed to eat hing and garlick, they smell so strong, that it is very offensive at first to strangers, in passing through places of resort ^d.

Anointing.

How distinguished.

ALL the different tribes of Hindûs are distinguished, from one another, by the cut of their beards, or different painting of their bodies and foreheads, as well as winding of their turbâns. A Brammân paints himself on the forehead, with a Pythagorean Y between his eye-brows, descending to his nose; and gives to every tribe its peculiar mark ^e.

Shape:

THE male Indians are tall, and large-boned. Their colour varies according to the different parts they inhabit. The women are small, and for the most part plump; but short in respect

^b TERRY'S Voy. to Ind. sect. 8. p. 396.

^c THEV. Trav.

Ind. part iii. p. 72.

^d TERRY, p. 376, sect. 5. FRYER'S.

Trav. p. 194.

^e FRYER, ibid. p. 194.

(Y) Our author Terry, on this occasion, thinks an Indian merchant, travelling in England with a guard of soldiers, would run in imminent danger of being murdered by them, that they might plunder his goods.

of the men. They are neat, and well-shaped; they keep their Hindû breasts carefully bound up, which prevents their spreading. customs. They are quick in labour, and affectionate to their children; bearing them naked on their hips astraddle. They are cleanly, Women. as well in their cookery as their bodies; plucking up the hair by the roots in every part, excepting their heads; where they let it grow in tresses ^f.

THE garments, which the Indians wear, are generally Dress. made of white callico, fashioned into kabas, or out-coats, like our frocks, turning over the breast as far as the shoulders; and from thence tied with strings down to the middle, on the left side, to distinguish them from the Mohammedans, who tie them on the right side. As their breeches reach to their heels, they wear no stockings; nor have a name for them in their language ^g. All the garb of the women consists in a lungbi, or piece of callico tied loose over the shoulders, and tucked between their legs, in nature of short breeches: besides a short waistcoat, or ephod, to keep up their breasts.

To make amends for this plainness of dress, or rather want of clothing, in the females, they set themselves off with variety of trinkets. The rich adorn the tresses of their hair with gold, and jewels; the poor braid them with strings of jessamin-flowers; whereof they likewise make necklaces. The rich have their arms and feet adorned with gold and silver; the meaner sort with glass, brass, or tuttinague: besides rings at their noses, ears, fingers, and toes; which obliges them to go bare-footed, shoes being only allowed their midwives ^h. The women have generally the lobes of their ears bored when young; which become in time so large, by means of the things put into the holes to stretch them, as to hold rings as broad as saucers, with a chanel on the outer circumference, for the flesh to enter and support it ⁱ.

IN short, the main cost of the Hindûs, especially the Bani-yâns, is expended on their wives; whose greatest joy consists in gaiety of dress, and the above-mentioned ornaments; which the very women, who carry water about the streets, will not appear without. Widows, who survive their husbands, are the only females incapable of this happiness: for they are restrained from wearing jewels, as well as shaven, being distinguished from others by a red lungbi ^k.

THE women scruple no more than the men to do their occasions in the public streets, or highways: for which purpose, Odd custom.

^f TERRY, p. 197, & seq.

^g OVINGTON, ubi sup. p.

314.

^h FRYER, ubi sup. p. 197, & seq.

ⁱ TERRY,

sect. 19.

^k OVINGTON, p. 319, & seq.

Hindû
customs.

at sun-rise and sun-set, they go out in droves to some dead-wall, if in the city; and, in case any pass by in the interim, they turn their bare backsides on them, but hide their faces. When they have done their business, they wash the parts with the left hand, because they eat with the right. The men, who exonerate apart from the women, squat like them when they make water. The Mohammedans think hard of the Hindû females for this freedom; as they do of the English, when they see them saluted with a kiss, or walk with a man in a garden. Although their food is nothing but vegetables, concocted with fair water, yet they leave such a stink behind them, that it is but ill taking the air, either in the streets, or without their towns, near the rivers and ditches (Z). What is still more strange, the cows watch the usual times to go lick up their ordure: which they are very fond of. Although this custom may seem indecent to us, yet it cannot be said to be uncleanly: nor can the Hindûs be charged with either sluttishness, or sloth; for, besides their constant washings at their times of devotion, they never eat nor drink, before they have cleansed themselves, with water poured all over them from head to foot. Nor will they suffer any parts of their body to harbour nastiness, they using depilatories for breast, arm-pits, and groins; are always shaving their heads and beards, cutting their nails, washing their mouths, and rubbing their teeth, whereby they look like ivory¹.

Cleanliness and industry.

THE life of the Hindûs is a continued series of industry. These are they who till the ground, plant, sow, and breed the cattle: these are they who make and sell those curious manufactures, with the cloth and stuffs, which this part of the world affords^m.

Diet.

For their diet, part of the Hindûs, as those of the tribes of Kutteri and Wise (that is, of the soldiers and common people, including the mechanics and all downwards), eat animal food; those of the Bramans and Shudderi, or merchants, never touch any flesh-meat; feeding upon vegetables, milk-meats, fruits, and sweet-meats.

THERE are two sorts of food very common among the Hindûs; dye and kicheri. The first is sweet-milk turned thick,

¹ TERRY, p. 200.

^m Ibid. p. 19.

(Z) On the contrary, Ovington says, p. 316, that, although the streets of Swât are, in many places, overspread with the excrements both of men and beasts; yet the passengers are never molested with an unfavourable smell, because the strength of the vapours is diminished by the attenuation of the sun's heat.

mixed

mixed with boiled rice and sugar. This is very effectual to Hindû restrain the violence of fevers and fluxes, the prevailing arts. distempers of India. Kicheri is made of dol; that is, a small round pea and rice boiled together: and is very strengthening, although not very savory.

THE constant drink of the Baniyâns is rain-water; which, Drink. falling in the time of the mussowns (or monsoons), is preserved in tanks, and cisterns, for the whole year: for they seldom drink of well, or river-waterⁿ. Although they never touch strong liquors; yet they indulge themselves with tea and coffee. This last, when rightly prepared, carries a kind of yellow oil at top; which gives it an agreeable relish, but it requires much art to bring it to that perfection. Tea is universally drank; and, although such hot liquor may not seem proper for so hot an air, yet the Europeans themselves find it very conducive to health^o.

As the Hindûs never drink out of the same cup with a Way of Christian, or any person of a different tribe, nor will defile drinking. their lips with water which has been touched by a stranger; they have contrived to quench their thirst, like the antient Thracians, by holding the spouted vessel at a certain distance, and pouring it into their mouths, without either shutting them, or drawing their breath^p. By this means, a mixed company may drink out of the same cup, or phial; and some are so dexterous at it, as to lift a pretty large bowl above a span above their mouths, and pour in a torrent of water, without wetting themselves^q. However, for fear of the worst, they commonly carry with them jars of water, when they go abroad^r.

THEIR times of eating are about eight or nine in the morning, and at four or five in the afternoon: the heat of the day Times of is spent in rest and sleeping, either upon kots, or beds; or eating. bechanahs, which are thick quilts, spread the whole breadth of a room and length of a man, with bolsters at the head, where eight or nine may sleep together. They seldom take their repose without a wench in their arms; that is, a small pillow upon their stomach, to defend it from the ambient vapours: and seldom use any other covering, but their shirts and drawers; except it be a sheet, or slight callico, spread over them^s.

THE Indians are in many things of matchless ingenuity, and admirable imitators of whatever they copy. The Baniyân, by Mechanics strength of his brain only, will sum up his account with no ingenuity;

ⁿ Ovington, p. 310. ^o Ibid. p. 305, & seq. ^p Ibid. p. 295. ^q DE LA VALLE's Voy. Ind. p. 43. fol. Engl. ^r Ovington, ubi supr. ^s Ibid. p. 313, & seq.

Hindû arts.

great artists :

their tools and engines

every simple :

less exactness, and quicker dispatch, than the readiest arithmetician can with his pen. The silk-weavers will exactly imitate the nicest and most beautiful patterns, which are brought from Europe; and the very ship-carpenters at Surât will take the model of an English vessel, in all the curiosity of its building, and most artificial instances of workmanship about it, whether proper for the conveniency of burthen, or of quick sailing, as exactly as if they had been the first contrivers. The taylors here shape the cloaths for Europeans, of either sex, according to the mode which prevails (A); and fit up the towering head-dresses for the women with as much skill, as if they had been an Indian fashion, or themselves had been bred apprentices at the Royal Exchange. In some things, the artists of India out-do all the ingenuity of Europe; as in painting chites (commonly called chints); which in Europe cannot be paralleled, either in brightness, or duration, of the colours (B). The gold stripes likewise in their sooseys, and gold flowers in their at-lasses, are imitated with us, but not to perfection. Likewise the cornelian rings, with double chains of gold about them, meeting at several distances, where sparks of diamonds, rubies, or sapphires, are set for ornament, surpass the skill of any other nation to perform^t.

THIS is the account we have of the Hindû mechanics and manufacturers, from Surât; and, if we go to the extremity of the Indies eastward, we shall find it the same. The artificers of Bengâl, says a certain missionary, are surprisingly skilful. Their linen cloth is so fine, that pieces of a great breadth may be drawn through a ring. They will fine-draw a piece of torn muslin so curiously, that it is impossible to find the seam; and put together pieces of broken glass, or china, so artfully, that no eye can discover, that they were ever severed. Their goldsmiths are extremely curious in filagree works; and imitate, to great perfection, those of Europe; although their forge and other implements do not cost above a French crown. The weavers, with looms of no greater price, sitting in their own yards, or by the way-side, weave the fine linens, which are so much sought after in all parts of the world. A ^t OVIINGTON, p. 279, & 321.

(A) Terry says, they are very dexterous in making shoes and boots, cloths and linen, after the European fashion. Voy. to Ind. sect. v. p. 378.

(B) We know not how far this judgment may hold good at present; especially since the printing of linen hath been brought to such perfection in England.

hand-mill, which does not cost ten pence, is used for breaking the sugar-canes. A mason will lay the floor of the largest hall, with a kind of mortar composed of brick-dust and lime, in such a manner, that the whole shall appear as a single stone; much harder than sandy stone. Our author saw a kind of pent-house, forty feet long, eight broad, and four or five inches thick, raised in his presence, and fixed to the wall by one side, without any other support. Their chemists pulverise all kinds of metal with great ease; and make use of the first vessel they meet with, to extract quicksilver out of cinnabar, and for other mercurial preparations; which they do in the most simple manner ^{Hindû sciences.}

To the foregoing remarks, in praise of the Indian mechanics, let us add a few more from other authors. Terry assures us, that they are excellent painters, and copy any picture so exactly, that it will be difficult to distinguish it from the original: however, painting is not encouraged in the Mogol's country*. Bernier saw guns, and pieces of goldsmiths work, so well done, that he doubted if, in Europe, they could be executed better: but the workmen being despised, and ill-treated by the great men, few good ones are to be found†. They have the art of working in gold upon agate, crystal, and other brittle matters; which the European goldsmiths and lapidaries have not. They fit gold rings to the brims, or middle, of drinking vessels. This work, though very nice, is performed by poor people, and sometimes by little boys; who do it with skill and dispatch. What helps much to perfect the manufacturers and mechanics in their several professions, is, that among the Mohammedans, as well as Pagans, every one breeds his children up to his own trade and occupation; and not to any other‡.

GREAT praise, doubtless, is due to the industry and genius of the Indian mechanics: let us now take a view of learning; and see if the Brâmmans, who treat them with such contempt, have acquitted themselves as well, with regard to the sciences, the care of which they claim wholly to themselves§.

As poetry is generally the first science, which any nation cultivates, the Hindûs have not neglected it; and to this day abound with poets. But, we are told, the unity of action is not so strictly observed in their Purân, and other poems, as in Homer and Virgil; although that rule is followed in some. The Indian fables, which the Arabs and Persians have so often

* P. PAPIN. Lett. Ediff. tom. ix. p. 420, & seqq. † TERRY. p. 378. sect. v. ‡ BERNIER, part iii. p. 30, 35, & seq. § Ibid.

§ LA LANE ap. Lett. Ediff. tom. x. p. 400.

Hindû
sciences.

translated, are a collection of five small poems, perfectly regular, composed for the education of the princes of Pâtna (C). It is true, eloquence never was much in use among the Brâmmans, much less has the art of discoursing well on subjects been cultivated by them: but they have a great number of books, containing rules with relation to the purity, beauty, and ornaments, of diction; which makes a particular science by itself ^b.

History:

OF all parts of literature, history seems to be that which has been least regarded by the Hindûs, who are excessively fond of the marvellous; to which vicious taste, the Bramâns, for sake of interest, have conformed themselves. However, the princes, without doubt, have regular histories of their ancestors; especially in Hindûstân, where they are more powerful, and Râjahpûts by tribe (D). There are likewise in the north, books called Nâtak; which the Brâmmans affirm contain many antient histories, without any mixture of fable. There are likewise in their poems many precious remains of antiquity, relating to the antediluvian world, as well as the Assyrian and Macedonian empires: but they are to be acquired only at a vast expence, and by a perfect knowledge of the Samskret language ^c.

mathematics:

THE Brâmmans have cultivated almost all the parts of mathematics; nor is algebra unknown to them: but astronomy, or rather astrology, was always the principal object of their mathematical studies; because the superstition, as well of the grandees as the people, made it turn most to their profit. They have several treatises of astronomy: with regard to which, there is room to believe, that some learned Greek, as Pythagoras, travelling formerly into the Indies, learned the Brâmmans sciences; and, in return, left them his method of astronomy, with the Greek names of the planets, twelve signs, and other terms. This our author discovered at Dehli, and shewed to the astronomers, who are very numerous in the famous observatory, built lately in that capital by Râjah Jaesing; who may be stiled the restorer of the Indian astronomy.

philosophy.

THAT which rendered the name of gymnosophists most famous in antiquity, was their philosophy; which, by way of

^b P. PONS ap. Lett. Ediff. tom. xxvi. p. 228.
229, & seqq.

^c Ibid. p.

(C) Or the Pâtan princes, so often mentioned in the history of the Indies, who reigned in Hindûstân before the Mohammedans.

(D) This seems to imply that the Râjahs in the southern parts, or peninsula of India, are of the Brâmmans tribe.

excellence, they call śāstram, that is, science; which consists of logic, metaphysics, and a little physiology (E). The sole end, to which all the philosophic enquiries of the Brāhmins tend, is the Mukti, or deliverance of the soul from the captivity and miseries of this life, by a perfect felicity; which essentially is, either the deliverance of the soul, or its immediate effect ^d.

As the Greeks had several schools of philosophy, so among the antient Brāhmins there were six principal schools, or sects (F); named Niyāyam, Vedāntam, Sankiam, Mimamsa, Pāsanjalam, and Bhāṣīam. These are what are simply termed the sciences; each of which is distinguished from the rest by some peculiar sentiment on felicity, and the means of obtaining it ^e. The first of these schools is famous for logic, the second for metaphysics. With regard to the former, their rules for syllogism are exact, and differ chiefly from ours in this; that, according to the Brāhmins, a perfect syllogism ought to have four terms (G). The school of Niyāyam; that is, reason, or judgment, is most famous for this art, which, however, at present, is employed about infinite questions, more subtle than useful; and is, in short, a medley of trifles; such as was the logic of Europe about two centuries ago ^f.

BESIDES the six sects, there are several others; which, in matters of religion, are so many heresies. Amongst these, the most remarkable are the Agama-śāstram, and the Baudda-mattham. The followers of the Agamam would have no difference of conditions amongst men (H), nor legal ceremonies; and are accused of magic. The Bauddists, whose notion of the transmigration of souls is universally received, are accused of atheism; and admit of no principles of knowledge but our senses.

^d P. PONS ap. Lett. Ediff. p. 235.

^e Ibid. p. 239.

^f Ibid. p. 246.

(E) The Danish missionaries at Tranquebar say, that the Malabārs have their course of philosophical sciences, and treat them in as regular a manner as the schools in Europe. Propag. Gosp. in the East, part ii. p. 19.

(F) It is doubtless of these sects that Bernier speaks, part iii. p. 160, when he says, that among the Hindū philosophers, six have been very famous; who make so many different sects, which divide the Pendets, or doctors;

each pretending his doctrine to be better than that of the rest, and more conformable to their sacred books; which, they say, contain the grounds of their sciences, as well as religion.

(G) For instance; where there is smoke there is fire: there is smoke on that mountain; therefore there is fire there.

(H) Possibly this ought to be understood only with regard to the distinction of tribes among the Hindūs.

Hindû
sciences.

Baudda (I), (or Boudda) is the Fo-to among the Chineses; and the Bauddists, the sect of the Bonzas and Lamas; as the Agamists are the sect of the people of Mâha Sîn, or the grand Sîn; which comprehends all the kingdoms west of Persia^g. From the school of Niyâyam formerly issued the most famous adversaries of the Bauddists; who, by their instigation, underwent a most horrible massacre, in several kingdoms. Batta, one of the two, who distinguished themselves most in this dispute, to purify himself from so much blood, which he had been the cause of shedding, burned himself, with great solemnity, at Jagannat, on the coast of Orissha^h, commonly written Orixa.

First principles of things,

ALL these sects speak of the first principles of things; but very differently. Some say, that all is composed of bodies indivisible; not by their solidity and hardness, but their minuteness. Others say, all is made up of matter and form: but none of them explains himself clearly about the matter, much less about the form. Some hold, that all consists of four elements and a nothing: but do not explain themselves concerning mixtion and transmutation. And as for their nothing, which comes near to our privation, they admit many sorts, which they seem to understand no better than other things. According to some, light and darkness are the first principles; about which they utter a great deal of idle and confused stuff. Nor do those explain themselves better, who for the first principle admit privation, or rather privations; which they distinguish from nothing in a very uncouth manner. Lastly, some affirm, that all is composed of accidents; of which likewise they make odd and tedious enumerations (K). Touching these principles in general, they all agree that they are eternal: our production out of nothing not having come into their thoughtsⁱ.

from all eternity.

Morality.

WITH regard to morality, or moral philosophy, they have a very fine system, contained in many works of the Niti Shâstram, or Moral Science; which is usually comprised in sententious verses, like those of Cato. In this branch of philosophy, which is communicated by the Brâmmans to the other tribes, several authors among the Shoutres, and even the Pârias, have acquired a great reputation^k.

^g P. PONS, ubi supr. p. 239, & seqq.

^h Ibid. p. 246.

ⁱ BERNIER, part. iv. p. 163.

^k PONS, ubi supr. p. 234.

(I) By Bernier called Bauta; which, he says, is a seventh sect; whence proceed twelve others. but that the followers of this sect are not numerous, being hated and despised, as irreligious and atheistical people.

(K) We must suspend our judgment, till we see their books.

MANY of the Brâmmans study physic; of which they have Hindûs many little books: but they are rather collections of recipes sciences. than any thing else: the most antient and chief whereof are in verse. Their practice is very different from what, in our Physic. author Bernier's time, was observed in France: for they ground themselves on these principles, that one who is sick of a fever needs no great nourishment: that the main remedy in all kinds of sickness is abstinence: that there is nothing worse for a sick body than flesh-broth; nor which corrupts sooner in the stomach of a feverish patient: that no blood should ever be taken away, except in the greatest and most evident necessity; as when a delirium is apprehended, or some considerable part, as the chest, liver, or kidneys, is inflamed. This practice, which is attended with success in the Indies, is followed also by the Mohammedan physicians, especially as to meat broths^k.

A PHYSICIAN is not allowed to visit a patient in Bengâl, Physicians. unless he can point out his distemper, and discover the state of his constitution; which he does easily by feeling the pulse: a sure method (K), as our author has experienced. Most of them throw a drop of water into the patient's urine (L): if it spreads, they say he is very hot inwardly; but if it does not, it betokens want of heat^l.

FOR all this, the Hindûs understand nothing at all of anatomy. Anatomy. Nor is it to be wondered at, when they never open the body of man or beast; nor can bear the sight of such an operation. Yet they affirm, that there are 5000 veins in man, neither more nor less; as if they had actually counted them all.

TOUCHING astronomy, they have their tables, according Astronomy, to which they calculate eclipses, pretty nearly as exact as the Europeans: yet account for them very absurdly; affirm- or astro- logy. ing, that both the solar and lunar are occasioned by Rah, a black Deuta, or demon; who, seizing those luminaries, blackens them as it were with ink, and so darkens their light. They hold also, that the moon is above 50,000 leagues higher than the sun: that she is lucid of herself; and from her we receive a certain vital water, which, gathering in the brain, descends thence into all the members, and gives them their

^k BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 165.
426.

^l PAPIN, ubi supr. p.

(K) Perhaps they had this method from the Chineses, who have formed the doctrine of the pulse into a science.

(L) Ovington mentions this practice, p. 351, used by a Brâmmān at Surat.

Hindû
sciences.

respective functions. More than this, they believe, that the sun, moon, and all the stars, are Deutas: that it is night, when the sun is behind the imaginary mountain Someyra (M), and day, when he gets out from its shade. This mountain they say is in the middle of the earth, in form of an inverted cone, and many thousand miles high ^m.

Hindû superstition,

ON this occasion we cannot forbear to divert our readers with an account of the behaviour of the Hindûs, during the time of an eclipse, which happened at Dehli in the year 1666. Bernier, from the terrace of his house, which was situated on the side of the Jemna, saw both sides of the river, for near a league in length, covered with Hindûs; who stood in the water, up to the girdle, demurely looking unto the sky, watching when the eclipse should begin, in order to perform their ceremony. The little boys and girls were stark-naked; the men had only a scarf about their waist; and the married women, with young maidens of six or seven, were covered with a single cloth. Their Râjabs, or sovereign princes, bankers, jewellers, and other great merchants, who were mostly beyond the river, in tents, had set up kanates, or skreens, in the water, to wash themselves, with their wives, and not be seen by others.

about
eclipses.

THE moment the eclipse commenced, those idolaters raised a great cry, and all at once plunged themselves into the stream, for several times successively: then standing up again, with lifted eyes and hands, muttered their prayers with great devotion; and, from time to time, threw up water towards the sun, bowing their heads very low, and turning their arms and hands sometimes one way, sometimes another. All these ceremonies they continued to repeat till the end of the eclipse; and then every one retired, casting some pieces of silver a good way into the water, and giving alms to the Brâhmans, who failed not to attend. Our author took notice, that, at their going out of the water, they all took new cloaths, which were laid ready for them on the sand; and that many of the devouter sort left their old garments for the Brâhmans. It must be observed, that this eclipse was celebrated after the same manner not only in the Indus, Ganges, and all other rivers, but also in the reservatories of water, throughout the Indies ⁿ.

French panic.

HOWEVER, Eursépeans have no reason to laugh at this folly and superstition of the Hindûs: they were formerly as deeply immersed in it as they. And the same author, speaking of a solar eclipse, which happened but twelve years before in

^m BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 166, & seqq.

ⁿ Ibid. p. 105,

(M) Their best astronomers hold the sun to be in the center.

France,

France, tells us, that he was surpris'd at the childish credulity of the common people in France, who were seized with such a panic on the occasion, that some bought drugs against the eclipse; others retired to dark caves and chambers: while multitudes fled for shelter into the churches; believing that the last day was come; and that the eclipse would not only shake, but overturn the foundations of nature: in spite of any thing which the Cassendis, Robervals, and many other philosophers, had written to demonstrate, that the said eclipse was of the same nature with preceding eclipses, and would be attended with no worse effects than those had been.

In geography the Brâmmans are no better skilled than in astronomy. They hold the earth to be flat and triangular; and that it hath seven stories, all differing in beauty and perfection, as well as inhabitants; and that each is encompassed with its respective sea, one of milk, another of sugar, the third of butter, the fourth of wine, and so forth: that the mountain Someyra passing through the middle of these stories (which consist interchangeably of an earth and a sea), the first story begins at the foot thereof: that all these earths are inhabited by Deutas, lessening in perfection, till you come to the seventh, which is ours, peopled by men far less perfect than any of the Deutas: lastly, that this whole mass is sustained upon the heads of many elephants; which, when they stir, are the cause of earthquakes.

BERNIER, reflecting on these absurdities, makes this just observation, that if those famous sciences of the antient Brahmins of the Indies were such as above set forth, and which their being written in the Hanskrit language seems to prove, great numbers have been deceived in the high opinion which they have entertained of them. An air of mystery, in things of this nature, ought always to be considered as a cloak to conceal the absurdities or imperfections which lie underneath. In short, we are told, the Brâmmans affect this obscurity to such a degree, that, not content with having terms unknown to the vulgar, they have wrapped up the most common things in mysterious language.

THE city of Bernâres, or Waranâsi, called also Kâsi, or Benâres Kâshi, situated in Bengâl, in a rich country upon the river Ganges, is the general school, and, as it were, the Athens (N)

• BERNIER, ubi sup. p. 104.

† Ibid. p. 168, & seq.

† PONS, ubi sup. p. 227.

(N) They have universities of India; but that of Benâres, in several other parts of Hindûstân, as well as the peninsula or Kâshi, is acknowledged to be the principal.

Hindû marriages. of the gentry of the Indies. Here the Brâmmans, and religious, who addict themselves to study, assemble together. They have no colleges, nor classes, as in Europe; but the masters (more after the school of the antient Greeks) are dispersed over the town in their houses, and especially in the gardens of the suburbs, where the great merchants permit them to teach.

Studies. These masters have four, six, or seven disciples, and the most famous twelve or fifteen, who spend ten or a dozen years with them: for they are of a slow and lazy humour, to which the heat and diet of the country contributes much; nor have they the hopes of some good place to excite them to study. Their first study is the Hanskrit (rather Sanskrit, but more properly Samskrtam, or Samskroutam); that is, a pure language; which is quite different from the common Indian, and known only to the pendets, or doctors. As their beths (vedam), or sacred books, which are of great antiquity, are written in this language, they call it holy and divine. They have many other books in this tongue: of which our author saw a great hall quite full at Banares. Among them were several in philosophy and physic, both in verse and prose, with many poems.

Books. AFTER they have learned this language, which is very difficult (O), they commonly apply themselves to read the purân, which is the interpretation and sum of the beths; which are very large. After the purân, some study philosophy; wherein, says Bernier, they have made no great progress^r.

Hindû wedding. THE Hindûs never marry out of the tribe to which they belong. Thus a Brâmmán is married to the daughter of a Brâmmán: a merchant's son marries a merchant's daughter; and the son of a Kûli, who tills the ground, takes to wife the daughter of a Kûli. In like manner, the children are bred to the father's trade or business: so that although this is the way for them to become great proficient in every art, yet they have no opportunity of ever rising higher than they were at first. No man has more than one wife at a time: they marry at six or seven years of age, and bed by fifteen at farthest, often at thirteen. Their marriages are solemnized like the Mohammedan, with much company and noise: but with this difference; that the young people ride openly on horseback; bedecked with flowers fastened to their garments^s.

^r BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 158, & seqq.
Ind. sect. 19.

^s TERRY Voy.

(O) Bernier ascribes the difficulty of it to their having no grammar worth any thing: whereas the late missionaries say they have the most perfect grammars imaginable. See Lettres Edifiantes, tom. xxvi. p. 222.

As the Hindûs reckon marriage one of the most happy Hindû actions of a man's life, and to die unmarried one of the greatest marriages. misfortunes, they therefore marry their children about seven Form of years of age, that they may procure the one, and prevent the courtship. other^t. The match being made between the parents, messengers and presents are sent to those of the maiden, accompanied with drums and trumpets, as well as songs in praise of her accomplishments. In return for this, presents are sent back to the bridegroom, in token of their acceptance of the nuptial proffer. Then, on the day appointed by the Brâmmans for the ceremony^u, the bridegroom, attended by the sons of all the persons of the same trade in the town, some on horse-back, others in palankîns and coaches, dressed in a shewy manner, proceed through the chief streets, accompanied with music and gilded pageants. The bridegroom is distinguished from the rest by a crown on his head, richly decked with jewels.

NEXT day the bride takes her turn, attended by all the maidens of the same family, in the same pompous way; and, towards evening, returns home to be joined in wedlock^x, that being the time of performing the ceremony among the Hindûs^y. It begins by kindling a fire, and placing it between Marriage the parties to be married, to intimate the ardency which ought ceremony. to be in their affections: then both are inclosed with a silken string, to denote the insoluble bond of matrimony. After this, a cloth is put between them, to signify, that before marriage there ought to be no intimacy between them. This done, the Brâmmans pronounce a certain form of words, enjoining the man to allow the woman all things convenient for her, and charging the woman to be faithful to her husband; then pronouncing a blessing upon them, that they may be fruitful, the cloth is taken away, and the silken string unloosed; which puts an end to the ceremony. There is no dowry given, excepting the jewels which are worn on the bridal day: and to the feast none repair, but those who are of the same family^z.

IN marriage they have certain legal injunctions, by which Marriage the tribes are differenced: first, that no woman marry a se- rules. cond time, unless she be of the tribe of Wise (or Weyz), who are the handicraftsmen. Secondly, that second marriage is permitted to the men of all the tribes, excepting that of the Brâmmans. Thirdly, that all marry within their own tribe;

^t Oving. 322.^u Ibid. 328.^x Lord, 319.^y Oving. 32.^z Lord's Banian relig. ch. 9. See also Oving. p. 322, 328, & seqq.

Hindū marriages. Brāmmans with Brāmmans, Kutteris with Kutteris, and Shud-deris with Shudderis : but the Wifes are obliged to marry not only with those of their own tribe, but with persons of their own trade (P); as the son of a barber to the daughter of a barber, and so of the rest ^a.

Baptism. THE ceremony of baptism, or naming their children, is different among the Brāmmans from that used by the other tribes. The latter are only washed in water : after which, one of the relations, holding the point of a pen towards the child's forehead, prays, that God would write good things therein : then those present say amen, and give the infant its name (Q). Lastly, the *Brāmma*n makes a mark in his forehead with a red ointment, in token of admission into their church, and the ceremony is ended. The children of Brāmmans are not only washed with water, but anointed with oil : the priest, by way of consecration, saying, O Lord, we present unto thee this child, born of an holy tribe, anointed with oil, and cleansed with water. Then, having performed the former ceremonies, they all pray, that he may live a righteous observer of the law of the Brāmmans. After this they calculate the child's nativity, from the position of the twelve signs at the time of his birth ; which they conceal till the day of his marriage, reckoned one of the happiest in his life ; then publish the dangers past, and evils to come, as resulting from that scheme ^b.

Childbed. THE mother, till ten days after childbed, is touched by none but a dry nurse : nor is allowed to have a hand in dressing victuals till the forty days of purification be over. The cradles for children are hung in the air, to a beam or post, by strings tied to each end, and so swing to and fro by the slightest touch, with a much gentler motion than ours, which are placed on the ground ^c.

Last sickness. WHEN a person is past hopes of recovery, they enjoin him to invoke Narrawne, which is the name of God, importing mercy to sinners : then, as his spirits languish, they stretch out his hand, and, pouring water into it, pray to Kistnerup-pou, God of water, to present him pure to the Sovereign

^a LORD's Banian relig. ch. 9. p. 336, & seq.

^b LORD, ibid. ^c Oving.

(P) Ovington says, p. 283, that the different sects (or families) of Baniyāns refrain both from intermarrying and eating in common : but this seems to be a mistake.

(Q) Ovington, who, p. 335, says, this giving a name is performed ten days after the birth, describes the ceremony after another manner ; which shews it differs on certain occasions.

Being, with that offering of his hand. As soon as his life is Hindû departed, they wash his body, in token of his cleanness and funerals. purity^d.

If a Râjah dies, his subjects and dependants cut off their Mourning. beards, and shave their heads, as tokens of the deepest mourning; which is never shewn but for a prince, a parent, or some nearest relation.

ON the death of any friend the Baniyâns make costly feasts, for the two or three days following: then they observe the twelfth, twentieth, thirtieth, and fortieth, days after, besides one day every quarter till the annual solemnity returns^e.

THE generality of the Hindûs, instead of burying, burn Dead their dead. The corpse being carried to the side of some bodies, river, appropriated to such purpose, and laid on the ground, the Brâmman who officiates, pronounceth these words: O earth! we commend unto thee this our brother. Whilst he lived, thou hadst an interest in him. Of the earth he was made: by the blessing of the earth he was nourished; and now he is dead we surrender him up to thee. After this, combustible matter is put to the body, and kindled by help of sweet oil: then aromatic odours are strewed thereon, and the Brâmman saith, O fire! whilst he lived, thou hadst a claim in him, by whose natural heat he subsisted: we return therefore his body to thee, that thou mayst purge it. This done, the son of the deceased setteth a pot of water on the ground, with a pot of milk upon it; and, throwing a stone at the lower pot, breaks it to pieces, which brings the other down. This gives him an occasion to moralize thus: that as the stone, by its violent motion, caused both the vessels to shed their liquors; so did the assault made by sickness destroy his father's body, and bring it to dissolution, like milk and water spilt on the ground, never to be retrieved.

WHEN the corpse is consumed, they scatter the ashes in the commonly air, while the Brâmman repeats these words: O air! whilst burned. through thee he lived, he breathed: and now, having breathed his last, we yield him up to thee. Lastly, when the ashes are fallen into the water, the priest uttereth; O water! whilst he lived, thy moisture did sustain him: and, now his body is dispersed, take thy part in him. Thus they give to every element its own: for as they affirm every man's life to be continued by the four elements, so, they say, he ought to be divided among them at his death. This funeral solemnity being over, the Brâmman presents the son, or nearest akin, a register of the times when his ancestors died; and, at the

^d LORD, ubi supr. ch. 9.

^e OVIINGT. p. 340.

Hindû
funerals.

same time reads to him the law of mourners; importing, that for ten days he must neither chew betel, oil his head, nor put on clean cloaths. Also, that for a whole year, every month, on the day of his father's decease, he must make a feast, and pay a visit to the river which received his parent's ashes ^f.

Some broiled only.

ALTHOUGH burning in this manner is the common usage, yet it is not strictly followed by the Hindûs: for some do no more than broil the corpse, with a little straw, on the river-side, and then cast them from a steep rock into the water; as Bernier had often seen upon the Ganges. Some likewise, when they perceive a sick person near death, carry him to the side of a river, and first putting his feet into the water, afterwards let him slip down as high as his throat. When they think he is ready to expire, they sink him quite under water, and there leave him, after they have made a great clamour, and clapping with their hands. The same author was once present at this inhuman kind of burial. The reason for which, alleged by the learned, as well as vulgar, is, that the soul, leaving the body, may be washed from all the impurities she might have contracted during her abode in it ^g.

Burnt before dead.

IN like manner the body is burnt sometimes before it is quite dead, when they think it past recovery. A Baniyân, who was broker to the English at Surat, was thus hurried away to the burning-place as he was just expiring: but, being happily met by the English surgeon, who felt his pulse, and gave some hopes of recovery, some kinder friend among the rest dissuaded the company from proceeding; and, in a little time, he was restored to health ^h.

Widows
frequently

SINCE the time when the laws for burning the bodies of the dead were made, it hath become a fashion for widows to accompany the corpse of their husbands in the funeral flames. They who cohabited with the deceased (R), marry not a second time: but, as they are obliged to cut their hair, and spend the remainder of their lives as creatures quite neglected; some, as well to avoid this reproachful state, as out of love to their husbands, choose to burn themselves. For the general, there is no compulsion in the case; except, when some great Burn themselves.

^c LORD, ubi sup. ch. 9. seq.
^h OVIINGT. p. 341.

^g BERNIER, part iii. p. 129, &

(R) According to Ovington, p. 324, those who do not cohabit are doomed to this severe kind of restraint; nor must ever marry again, though widows at six or seven years of age. But this law does not extend to the tribe of mechanics, and others, as before remarked.

man

man dies, they oblige one or more of his wives to burn herself, to honour his funeral. Sometimes the wife engages of her own accord to bear her husband company at the pile. Sometimes he, loth to leave her behind (S), or for fear any other man should enjoy her after him, prevails on her to make him a promise to burn herself with his corpse, in case he dies before her. We are told also, that in those parts where the Râjahs, or Indian princes, have all the power, the Brâmmans, to keep up this antient but horrid custom, frequently constrain women, especially of their own tribe, to undergo this fiery trial. In like manner, we are told, that the Mohammedans, where-ever their dominion is established, have endeavoured to abolish this custom: on the other hand, we are informed, that some Mogol lords, for grandeur-sake, have imitated the Hindû fashion; and ordered at their deaths that some of their Hindû wives should burn themselves¹.

THE manner of performing that dreadful ceremony is this: on the day appointed for burning the corpse, the wife sets out, dressed with her best ornaments, as if going to her wedding, and attended by her friends. To declare her joy, she proceeds dancing; and sings songs in praise of the deceased, and expressing a desire to be with him in the next world. Being arrived at the place, where the funeral pile is erected, sometimes in a little hut, but generally in a square pit, about two feet deep, she renews her rejoicing, with the company, singing and dancing about the pit. At length, having taken leave of her relations, and disposed of her jewels amongst them (T), they pour oil over her head, and set fire to the wood, on the top of which the body is placed: then, taking a pot of oil in her hand, she throws herself at once into the flames; or else, taking a few turns more about the pit, on a sudden, leaps into it; the company at the same time throw in faggots and pots of oil, as much to dispatch her with the blows, as by the fierceness of the fire; while drums are beaten, trumpets sounded, and a noise is made to stifle the hideous

Manner of performing

this dreadful ceremony.

¹ See TERRY, sect. 19. Ovingt. p. 344, & DE LA VALLE, p. 136.

(S) Ovington says, p. 342, that sometimes the husband, unable to bear the loss of his beloved wife, burnt himself with her, in expectation of a future enjoyment of her.

(T) Ovington says, p. 343, that this burning was encouraged by the Bramins, who were always gainers thereby; as all the jewels the women put on were made their property: because they alone have power to touch the ashes, and rake for gold and silver.

shrieks,

Hindû
funerals.

shrieks, which are generally sent forth by the wretched victim. Sometimes the wife mounts the pile before it is kindled, and seats herself by her husband's corpse, holding his head in her lap, and thus heroically parts with her life^k.

Instances

BERNIER was often present when women burned themselves, with such resolution as was not to be described, more than the dreadful spectacle which that tragedy represented. One time he came to a place, where he saw four or five Brâmmans putting fire to the pile, whereon sat the woman by her husband's corpse; and five women, of a middle age, singing and dancing, hand-in-hand, about the pit, while a great croud of people looked on. Presently all was in a flame about the woman; who yet seemed not at all disturbed: but what still was more surprising, of a sudden, one of the dancers threw herself headlong into the fire, and then the rest, one after another, without any apparent fear. These were five slaves, who, having heard their mistress promise her husband in his sickness not to survive him, out of affection and pity, engaged to burn themselves with her.

female intrepidity.

OUR author saw another burnt at Surat, who was of a middle age, and tolerably handsome. It was not possible to express the undaunted cheerfulness which appeared in her countenance; the resolution with which she marched, washed herself, and spoke to the people; the unconcernedness with which she looked on those who came to see her tragedy, viewed her little cabin; and went into it, sat down upon the pile, and placed her husband's head in her lap; took the lighted torch in her hand, and set fire to the hut within, while many Brâmmans were busy in kindling the fuel about her.

Some are terrified,

BERNIER saw some indeed, who, on sight of the fire, discovered some apprehension, and would perhaps have gone back, had they been left to themselves; but it is often too late: for those demons the Brâmmans, who are there with their great sticks, astonish them; and, if they cannot hearten them up, even thrust them in. This he saw done to a young woman, who retreated five or six paces from the pile; and to another, who was much startled when she saw the flames take hold of her cloaths, those executioners thrusting her in with their long poles. On the other hand, he knew a handsome young woman who escaped out of their clutches, by falling into the hands of the Gadouts; who sometimes meet there in great numbers, when they know that the woman who is to be burnt is young and fair, hath no great kindred, nor much company with her. For the women who are afraid of the and escape.

^k LORD, ubi supr. p. 9.

pile, and fly from this kind of execution, knowing that they Parsis cannot be received again to live among the Gentiles, because ^{origin.} reputed infamous, are usually the prey of those Gadouts; who are also accounted infamous, and have nothing to lose. A Mogol durst neither rescue nor receive any, for fear of bringing himself into great trouble.

ONCE, at Lahûr, the same author saw a very pretty young Bram- creature, not over twelve years of age, who appeared rather mans dead than alive, when she came to the pile. She shook, and cruelty. wept bitterly. Mean time three or four Brâmmans, and an old hag, who held her under the arm, thrust her on, and made her sit down upon the wood: where, lest she should run away, they tied her hands and legs, and so burnt her alive. This piece of barbarity, among others, so enraged Bernier against the Brâmmans, that he could have strangled them, if he durst. But what they do in some other places of the Indies is still more cruel: for, instead of burning those women who are willing to die, upon the death of their husbands, they bury them alive in the ground, up to the very throat, and then two or three of them fall on at once and wring their necks about. Having thus choaked them, they cover them hastily with earth, and then march backwards and forwards over their heads, to dispatch them outright¹.

WE shall postpone our account of the religion of the Hindûs, till we come to treat of the peninsula on this side Ganges, where it appears in most lustre, and proceed to speak of the Parsîs.

IV.

Of the Parsîs.

THE Parsîs, which name implies a people come from They leave Pârs, or Persia, are a colony which retired from thence, Persia; soon after the Arabs had conquered that country, on the death of its last king Yezdeجرد, in the 31st year of the Hejrah, and of Christ 651. For not caring to renounce their religion, and to avoid the persecution which the Mohammedans raised against them on that account, a number of them embarked at Jask, or Jasques, in seven junks, as merchants; designing to trade to the Indies. Being safely arrived at Swalley, the port of Surât, the Parsîs on board five of the junks were hospitably received by the Râjah of Nunferri, on condition of paying tribute, and submitting to the government. Those of another junk were admitted, in like sort, by the Râjah who

¹ BERNIER, ubi sup. part i. p. 119, & seqq.

resided

Parsîs
customs.

resided at Bariyaw, near Surât : but, soon after, being overcome by another Râjah, with whom he was at war, the Parsîs, as his subjects, were all put to the sword. The seventh junk, passing northwards, met with the same kind of reception at Kambaya : and from one of these three places, those who are to be found in any other part of the Indies, have dispersed themselves.

settle in India.

IN this state they continued for a long time, applying themselves to husbandry ; and, with their religious books, lost the tradition of their original : till, at length, their name making them known to their brethren in Persia, these latter furnished them with copies of their law, and persons to instruct them in it^m. As these Parsîs then are the same, as to religion, with those who in Persia are called Gawrs, or Infidels, and Ateşhpereft, or Fire-worshippers, of whom an account hath been given elsewhere, we shall in this place only mention certain customs concerning this Indian colony.

Their
dress.

THE Parsîs go dressed like the other people of India ; only they suffer their beards to grow long. Their profession is chiefly agriculture, sowing, planting, and dressing of vines ; in short, all sorts of trees, particularly the palmito or toddy-tree. They are extremely industriousⁿ, and careful to train up their children in arts and labour. They are the principal weavers in all the country about Surât, where most of the silks and stuffs are made by their hands.

Their diet.

IT is customary with them to eat alone, and for every one to drink out of his own cup : nor will they drink in the same vessel after strangers. By this means they think to keep themselves more pure ; imagining, that if they eat or drink with others, they should contract some uncleanness. In these respects however they take more liberty than the Baniyâns ; nor are quite so abstemious. However, to avoid giving offence to either the Mohammedans or Hindûs, among whom they live, they forbear eating either pork or beef^o.

Cock esteemed.

THE cock is no less esteemed by them than the cow by the Hindûs ; for this reason, that their junks being surprised by a storm, in their passage to India, as above-mentioned, they despaired of ever reaching the shore, till, hearing a cock crow, their hopes revived ; and, discovering fire soon after, they by that signal reached land. This was still a more lucky omen, as fire is the principal object of their worship on earth, and which they keep continually burning in their Eggarîs,

^m LORD relig. Parsîs, ch. I, and TERRY voy. Ind. sect. 21.

ⁿ TERRY, sect. 21. Ovingt. p. 375.

^o TERRY, ibid.

Ovingt. ibid.

or temples^p. They say, it was first brought from heaven by Parsis their great law-giver Zertûst, or Zerdûst, the Zoroastres of the Greeks; and that it hath been preserved unextinguished ever since: for that it would be a sin unpardonable were their Darûs (U), or priests, to let it go out. Yet, in case it should go out, they are by their Zundevastâ, or book of the law, brought by Zertûst from heaven also, allowed to compose a fire of several mixtures, which they call their Antif-beherawn, or religious fire. The fire, however, kindled and fed with fuel in this manner, they consider as a part of God; who, they say, is of the same substance; and therefore are commanded to worship it. Lord says, the fire in their temple at Nunferri, near Surât, has been kindled in this manner^q; but does not mention the form in which it appears there. Herbert affirms, that it is not composed of common combustibles, as wood, straw, coals, or the like, nor blown by bellows, but is compounded of sparks flying from red-hot steel, and kindled either by lightening or a burning glass^r. This crude account seems to be taken from Lord's, which is not much more intelligible. Terry says, they keep fires continually burning in their temples, in lamps fed with oil, which are perpetually attended by their priests^s.

IN regard to this holy fire, the Parsis have a great veneration for that which they use in the necessary services of life; and look on it as a sin to spill water on the fire, or spit in it unawares, or nourish it with unclean fuel: so fearful they are, lest they should either defile it or put it out^t. So that, if their houses were on fire, they would sooner be persuaded to pour on oil, to increase, than water, to assuage, the flame. If a candle is once lighted, they would judge the breath of him more than pestilential, who durst attempt to blow it out: and a Parsi servant, who is commanded to bring a hot poker to warm any liquor, will desire to be excused from that office; alleging, that he dare not hasten the extinction of the heat by such violent means. In short, they must not, on any account, quench fire; but must leave it to go out gradually of itself^u.

THE Parsis have great veneration for marriage; and think it conducive to eternal happiness: for which reason, if a rich

^p Ovingt. p. 371. ^q Lord, ubi sup. ch. 8. ^r Herbert trav. Persia, p. 52. ^s Terry, sect. 21. ^t Lord, ubi sup. ^u Ovingt. p. 372.

(U) They are called also priest or archbishop, who is Harbûds; over whom is a high-called Distûr.

Parsis
customs.

man's son or daughter happens to die before wedlock, he hires some person to marry the deceased. The matrimonial ceremony is never performed in their churches, but at home. The parties, being met at midnight, are placed together on a bed, with each a Darû, or Herbûd, attending, with rice in his hands. Then the Darû, or priest, for the bridegroom, laying his fore-finger on the bride's forehead, asks, If she will have that man for her wedded husband? The bride's priest puts the same question to the bridegroom; and, the parties having answered in the affirmative, the priests join their hands, and scatter the rice over them; praying God, that they may be fruitful as the harvest, live in unity, and continue many years together. The ceremony being thus over, the parents of the woman give the dowry; for the man gives none: and the marriage-feast continues for eight days*.

The ceremony.

Corpse exposed to birds of prey.

THE manner of burying used among the Parsis is very singular, as it is described by Mr. Ovington, who had seen the ceremony. The noblest sepulchre which they think they can bestow on their deceased friends, is that of exposing them to be devoured by the fowls of the air. After the body has lain dead for some time, the Halachors, a kind of fordid Hindûs, carry it out upon a bier (X) into the open fields, near the place of burial, about a mile from Surât. There, having laid it down, some friend of the dead person hunts about in the neighbouring villages till he finds a dog, whom, with a cake, he intices, drawing as near the corpse as he can: for the nearer the cur approaches, the better hopes they have of the defunct's future happiness; and if he can be allured to take a bit out of the dead man's mouth, it is an infallible sign of his going to heaven: but in case the dog, not being hungry, or, loathing the object, refuses the morsel, they then consider their friend's state as truly miserable. This happened to be the case of the Parsi, whose corpse our author saw interred; for the sturdy cur could not by any means be induced to come near it.

Place of Sepulchre

WHEN the dog has finished his part of the ceremony, two Darûs, at a furlong's distance from the bier, stand up, and, with joined hands, loudly repeat a form of prayer; which, although they utter it with all the hurry imaginable, lasts for half an hour. All this while, a piece of white paper, fastened

* LORD, ubi supr.

(X). This bier, Lord says, touch wood; because it is a must be of iron: for that the law fuel to the fire, which they ac- forbids that the corpse should count holy.

to each ear across the face, hung down two or three inches below the chin; and, as soon as they finished their prayer, the bearers conveyed the corpse to the place of sepulture, which was round, inclosed with a wall, twelve feet high and one hundred in circumference. In the middle was a door of stone (Y), six feet from the ground, which was opened to admit the corpse. The ground with the (Z) walls is raised above four feet, and made shelving towards the center, where there is a sink for receiving the moisture, which continually drains from the carcases. The body being left here, the company betake themselves to a neighbouring rivulet, to wash; after which they return home: but, a day or two after, some of the nearest relations come hither again, to observe another prognostic of the defunct's state in the next world. For if they find that the vultures have first plucked out his right eye, they take it for an undoubted sign of his soul's felicity; if the left, they then conclude that his lot is miserable.

THE Parsis are very careful to preserve their hair, and whatever is cut off their heads or beards; that, once a year, those relics may be decently interred in their burying-place; which affords a horrid prospect, and is much more shocking than a field of slaughtered men. It contains a number of carcases of very different disagreeable colours and aspects. Some are seen there bleeding fresh; but so torn by the vultures, which croud upon the walls, that they may truly be called raw heads and bloody bones, with the eye-balls out, and all the flesh on the cheeks picked off. The muscular parts of the body are full of great holes, and the skin on every part is mangled with the beaks of those ravenous birds. Here was a leg, there an arm: here lay half, and there the quarter, of a man. In this place one body appeared picked as clean as a skeleton; and near it another with the skin of several putrified colours. Some looked as if they were turned to jelly; others were hardened like tanned leather, by the various operations of the sun and air. Nor is the stench less intolerable than the prospect terrible; being sufficient to strike any man dead, who was to endure it but a little while. Yet the vultures sit on the wall, enjoying those loathsome vapours: some were so gorged with human flesh, that they customs.

Parsis

horrible prospect.

Deadly

stench.

Y OVINGT. p. 376, & seqq.

(Y) Doubtless for the same reason that the bier was not of wood. within the wall. In Herbert's draught the ground or floor seems raised within a foot of the

(Z) Perhaps it should be top of the wall.

General
remarks.

seemed scarce able to take wing; and the feathers of others were much moulted away, by such kind of rank feeding^z.

V.

Particulars relating to the Hindûstâns in general.

Their exercises,

THE diversions used in Hindûstân are hawking and hunting; in which they employ leopards, as well as dogs. They likewise practise shooting, both with the bow and gun; and are excellent marksmen. Riding and managing their horses is also an exercise. For their domestic recreations they have pleasant gardens, accommodated with shady walks, and cooling tanks, or fountains; while variety of fruits and flowers regale both their smell and taste. In those tanks, which are small and round, they bathe themselves; and, in their garden-houses, which are very near, spend the heat of the day, sitting, or lying on carpets: where, if persons of quality, their servants give them air, and drive away the flies, with fans. This is commonly the place where they are attended by the barber; who shaves and rubs them all over; after which they usually go to sleep a while. The people here are fond of mountebanks (A), and jugglers; who are very dexterous in their professions. One of their methods to amuse the multitude, is to suffer themselves to be bitten by snakes, which they have in baskets for the purpose; and, when they are swelled considerably by the venom of the reptile, cure themselves by means of oils and powders; which they sell to the standers-by. Within-doors, they pass the time often in playing cards; which differ from ours, both as to the figures and greater variety of suits^a.

and diversions.

Musick.

THE Hindûstâns delight much in musick, and have many sorts of instruments; most of them blown: some few are strung. They have the use also of the timbrel; but their tunes were unpleasant to our author, favouring more of discord than harmony^b.

Diseases.
Fever.

THE common diseases found in Hindûstân are fluxes, hot fevers, and calentures; which seize the head and brain more than other parts. But they are free from agues, as well as ^z OVINGTON, p. 379, & seq.

sect. 9.

^b Ibid. sect. 12.

^a TERRY, Voy. Ind.

(A) Their tumblers far exceeded ours in suppleness and feats of agility. Thevenot relates some actions of a young Indian girl, which appear surprisingly difficult. Trav. Ind. part iii. cap. 45. p. 77.

those two torments, rather than diseases, the gout and stone (B), Their diseases. so common in Europe. However, they are sometimes visited with an inflammation, or extreme burning (C), or rather a grievous pestilence; which, on a sudden, sweeps away thousands, when it gets into populous cities. The bodies of those, pestilential. who are seized with it, are set on fire, as it were, all over at once: it kills the party in twenty hours at most; tho' many of the English died in twelve. Just before their death, broad black and blue spots appeared on their breasts; and their flesh was so hot with the violence of the distemper, that one could scarce bear to lay his hand on it. Great blisters, filled with a thick yellow watery substance, rose on the bodies of those who survived it; which, on their breaking, issuing out, did scald and corrode their skin. Almost all the English, who arrive in the Indies, are seized with some violent sickness; but if they escape, and live temperately, are very healthy afterwards.

IN these hot diseases, the natives, as our author could observe, made very little use of physicians, although there are many of them; unless it be to breathe a vein sometimes: after which they starve out the distemper, by fasting, or a very low diet^c.

AMONG other distempers is that called by the Portugueses The mortu- mordechin; which is a violent vomiting and looseness, caused dechin. most commonly by excess in eating; particularly of fish and flesh together. It has been cured by a red-hot iron clapped to the heel of the patient, till he feels the smart; but some die of it. Another distemper, which afflicts the Europeans, is the barbeers, or a deprivation of the use of their limbs; where- The bar- beers. by they are rendered unable to move either hand or foot. This arises sometimes from the neglect of guarding the limbs from the cold vapours of the night, and moisture of those nocturnal mists, which now-and-then are felt in those parts. The most effectual remedy for this, is to frequent the hot baths^d.

BESIDES the mortudchin (or mordechin) the sonipat, and Lethargy. pillhay, are most common in Bengál. The sonipat, or lethargy, ^c TERRY, sect. 13.

^d OVINGTON's Voy. Surât, p. 350.

(B) To these Bernier adds those distempers thither, as he aches of the kidneys and rheumatisms; which he attributes to the people's abstaining from wine, and great sobriety, joined to the constant evacuations by sweat; so that those, who bring

(C) Such as is spoken of, Deut. xxviii. 20.

Their diseases. is cured by putting chenopodium (D), pounded with vinegar, into the eyes. For the pillay, or obstruction of the spleen, the Joghîs (or Hindû penitents), whose specific remedy this is, make a small incision over the spleen; then, drawing a long needle between the skin and flesh, apply a piece of horn to the wound; from whence they draw out a viscous matter like corruption.

Cholic. THE common people use very simple remedies. To cure the cholic, arising from wind and phlegm, they give the party four spoonfuls of water, in which anise and a little ginger are boiled, till the water is half-consumed. They likewise pound a raw onion, with ginger, and apply them cold to the part where the pain is felt. A stoppage of urine is cured by drink-

Strangury. ing a spoonful of olive-oil, well mixed with an equal quantity of water. Our author has seen fevers cured, by giving the patient, before the fit comes on, three large pills, composed of ginger, black cummin, and long-pepper. Tertian agues are removed by administering three spoonfuls of tencrium-juice, or germander, mixed with a little salt and ginger, for three days together ^c.

Longevity. THE inhabitants of India not only live up to the greatest ages of the Europeans: but have more old people among them; which is owing to their temperance, both in eating and drinking^f. They are generally more healthy, but then not so full of vigour, as those who inhabit the cold climates; which feebleness and languor of body is a perpetual malady, very troublesome to all, in the great heats of summer; especially to Europeans, who are not inured to heat.

Computation of time. THE Hindûs begin their year with the first day of March; the Mohammedans, on the tenth; when, as their astrologers compute, the sun enters into Aries. Their year is divided into twelve months, or rather thirteen moons; and their time distinguished in a different manner from that used in Europe. They divide the day into four parts, and the night into the same number; which they call pores: each pore is again subdivided into eight parts; which they name grîs. These parts of time are measured according to the antient method, by water dropping out of one vessel into another (E); and when the vessel is emptied, a man, who attends, fills it again, and then strikes the number of the pores and grîs which have passed, with a hammer on a concave piece of metal, hanging

^c PAPIN ap. Lett. Ediff. tom. ix. p. 426. ^f TERRY, sect. 13.

(D) A plant of the Chenoput, or goose-foot, kind.

(E) A sort of clepsydra, or hour-glass.

by the brim on a wire : it has a deep sound, and may be Houses and heard very far. But these time-measurers are not common furniture.
among them ; neither have they the use of clocks, or sundials &c.

THE people of India are not infected with that plague of Buildings. building, as the Italians call it. The poor cannot afford to erect sumptuous piles, and the grandees do not care to do it :
partly, because, from the middle of September to the middle of April, they live in tents, removing from place to place, as often as they think fit, for change of air ; and partly, because they have no inheritances, but subsist wholly on pensions from the emperor ; whose favour is precarious. However, they have excellent materials for building ; as timber, bricks, stone, and marble of various kinds and colours ; with which their mosks and tombs are often raised.

OF the houses to be found in cities and towns, some may Houses :
be said to be handsome ; others well to pass, such as are inhabited by merchants ; and none very despicable. They are built low, not above two storeys, and many flat at top ; which flat roofs, being made thick, and laid over with a plaister, like that of Paris, keeps both the sun and rains from penetrating. The upper rooms, in the houses of two storeys, are often very large, and furnished on the sides with folding doors, to let in fresh air ; which is also introduced by the windows, always lying open, without glass, or any other shuttings, to keep it out. Neither have they any chimneys in their buildings ; because they never use fire, but to dress their their food, and that they do out of their houses, or tents, against form :
a wall, or a bank of earth, to avoid the heat. In many places, they plant tall spreading trees about their houses ; which are kept cool by their shade : so that in approaching some places, as Ahmed abad, in Guzerat, one seems to be entering a wood, rather than a city. Most of the houses there are of brick, and many with ridged roofs, covered with tiles : but the houses in their villages are generally very poor and mean. They are all contiguous ; for our author never saw one standing by itself.
The walls of some are of earth mixed with straw. They raise them immediately after the rainy season is over ; so that, having time to dry thoroughly, they stand firm afterwards, and suffer little by the weather. But, for the generality, the cottages in those country villages are miserably small and poor ; being raised at a very little charge, as sticks, rather than timber, are employed in building them ^b.

^a TERRY, sect. 13.^b Ibid. sect. 9.

Houses and furniture.

several sorts.

Middling houses :

the best sort :

MANY houses, even in Dehli itself, the capital of the empire, are not much better than these. There is in that city a great mixture of the good, passable, and mean. These last, of which there is a prodigious number, are made up only of mud and straw. They are inhabited by the common soldiers of the emperor's cavalry, and their servants, with the sutlers who follow the court and the army. These thatched houses make Dehli very subject to fires. In one year, while our author was there, above 40,000 were consumed, at two or three times that they took fire, when the winds happened to be stormy ; in which many horses and women were burnt. On account of these pitiful houses, Bernier looked upon this metropolis almost no otherwise than as many villages joined together ; and as a camp of an army, a little better and more commodiously placed than in the field. The houses of the second sort are inhabited by the Mansebdârs, or little Omrâs, the men of the law, many of the great merchants, and other private men. Yet there are but few of them all built of brick, or stone ; while no small number consist only of earth, and are covered with thatch. For all this, they are generally airy, and furnished with courts and gardens : the walls within are neatly plastered, and apartments provided with fine moveables.

As to the houses of the first class, where dwell the Omrâs, it must be observed, that in those hot countries, to entitle a house to the name of good and fair, it ought to be situated commodiously for receiving the air from all quarters, and principally from the north. It should have courts, gardens, trees, reservoirs, and little jets of water, in the halls, or at least at the entrance. It should be accommodated likewise with good cellars, and great flaps to keep the air in motion, during the time of reposing ; which is from twelve a clock till four or five, when the air under-ground begins to grow hot and stinking. In lieu of cellarage there should be little kas khanays, that is, little houses of straw, or rather of odoriferous roots ; which are very neatly made, and commonly placed in the midst of a grass-plat, near some reservoir (or tank), for sake of watering them easily. It is required also for the beauty of a house, that it be seated in the midst of some large parterre ; that it have four great divâns, or raised-ways, about six feet high, exposed to all winds. Lastly, a good house ought to have raised-terraces to sleep on in the night, on the same floor with some great chamber, for the conveniency of drawing in one's bedstead, in case of being surprised by storms of dust,

or

or rain; or forced by the day-break breezes, or piercing dew, Manufactures and trade.
to seek for shelter ^{how furnished.} ¹.

THESE are the qualifications for the exterior part of a polite habitation, and the inside must be furnished answerably to it. The whole floor must be covered with a cotton mattress, four inches thick, and that with a fine linen sheet during the summer, and with a piece of silk-tapestry in winter. In the most conspicuous part of the chamber, near the wall, there must be one or two cotton quilts, set about with fine silk embroidery, wrought with gold and silver; with fine flowered coverings over them, for the master of the house, or visitors of quality, to sit on. Every quilt must have its cross-board purfled with gold, to lean upon; and several other such boards must be set round the chamber along the walls, covered with velvet, or flowered sattin, for standers-by to lean on. The walls, five or six feet from the floor, must be almost wholly taken up with niches, or little windows, cut in an hundred different figures, very fine, and well proportioned among themselves, with some china vessels and flower-pots in them. Lastly, the ceiling must be painted and gilded; but without any figure of man, or animals; their religion not allowing it. Thus there are houses in Hindûstân, which are truly handsome, although they be not like those in Europe ^k.

THE manufactures of India are chiefly silks and callicoës; of which there is great variety. Of the former you find velvets, sattins, taffetas, both plain and striped. Of the latter, callicoës, white, dyed, and painted; which last are called chints, being often very rich and beautiful. They likewise make curious silk, or cotton, carpets, with a silver or gold ground; cabinets, standishes, boxes, and the like; which are nicely inlaid, or varnished ¹. Manufactures.

THE merchants of Hindûstân trade to several countries, according as the parts which they inhabit are situated. Those in the western parts of the empire send their commodities to Mekka, in the Red Sea; whither the merchants of Egypt and Habâsh, or Abissinia, repair to traffick. The goods exported are chiefly cotton and callicoës of several kinds. They are carried in ships called junks, some of fourteen or fifteen hundred tuns; built so large for the conveniency of pilgrims who go to Mekka. They are mounted with ordnance, but very sluggish, being broad and short like a lighter; so that, although the voyage is but short, they are a long time making Commerce.

¹ BERN. Mem. Mog. Emp. part iii. p. 13, & seqq. ^k Ibid. p. 17, & seqq. ¹ TERRY, sect. 3. 5. TAVERNIER, part iii. p. 126. THEVENOT, part iii. ch. 21.

Manufactures and trade.

it. One of these will carry 1700 passengers ; and, at her return, her cargo may be worth 200,000 pounds, most of it in gold and silver. Besides the commodities before-mentioned, Hindûstân affords diamonds, indigo, lak, musk, and many others ; with which foreign countries are supplied ^m.

Coin.

THE money current through the Mogol's empire are rupis of gold and silver. The latter is in value about half-a-crown English, and of the purest bullion ; all silver which comes into the country being refined to the highest perfection, before it is sent to the mint. The gold rupi is equal in value to fourteen rupis of silver. These pieces are divided into half and quarter pieces. Their copper money varies in value from time to time : of it there are three sorts ; the first worth about two pence, the second one penny, and the third six deniers. This last is called pesba, which may be changed into shell-money (or kôri) ; fifty or sixty of which make a pesba. There is other money ; as mahmûdi, half mahmûdi, and almonds : but it is current only in the province of Guzerât. Five mahmûdi make about a crown. They have also the copper pesba, twenty of which go to a mahmûdi ; and forty almonds for a pesba. As these almonds are extremely bitter, there is no danger, that the children should eat their money ⁿ.

Travelling.

THEY have several conveniencies for travelling in Hindûstân ; such as coaches and chariots, oxen, horses, mules, camels, and dromedaries ; on which the women ride astride like the men. Of these several voitures an account hath been already given occasionally. The roads are for the general very good in this country, and much frequented on the score of trade ; the karawâns consisting sometimes of 1000 oxen. But, besides wanting inns to lodge passengers, who find them for the general only in great towns, they are infested much with robbers ; who lurk in some woods, or desarts, not far distant from the highways, and often attack whole karawâns, if they be not strong enough. They commonly kill those they overcome, before they fall to plundering ; which obliges the merchants to hire soldiers, and go well armed ^o.

^m TERRY, sect. 5. ⁿ TAVERN. part ii. p. 2. ^o TER.
sect. 6. 8, & 9. THEVENOT, part iii. p. 53, 54. 73.

C H A P. IV.

Of the Great Mogol's Court, his Forces, Revenues, and Government.

S E C T. I.

Of his Court, Women, and Eunuchs.

THE fortress of Dehli, in which is the Mâhl, or Harâm, Court and the other royal apartments, is built round on the river: yet there is between the water and the walls a pretty large and long sandy space, where commonly elephants are exercised, and often the militia of the Omrâs and Râjahs is mustered, in the emperor's presence; who beholds them from the windows of one of his apartments. The walls are built partly of brick, and partly of a red sort of marble (or jasper), with round towers like those of the city: but these walls are much higher, stronger, and broader, so as to bear some field pieces, which are pointed towards the town; and, though sufficient to keep the Indians in awe, would make but small defence against European cannon. The fortress is encompassed on all sides: but, towards the river, with a fair ditch full of water and fish; and the ditch by a pretty large garden, at all times full of flowers, and green apricots; which, viewed at some distance, with the red walls, make a very agreeable prospect.

BETWEEN this garden and the city is a vast street, or rather place royal, to which the two principal gates of the fortress do answer; and to these two great gates, the two chief streets of the town. In this spacious place are set up the tents of the Râjahs, who are in the Great Mogol's pay, to keep there, each in his turn, their weekly guard; whereas the Omrâs and Mansebdârs do duty within the fortress. In the same place the king's horses are exercised, and others in his service viewed. Here also a kind of market is kept, and players, jugglers, and astrologers, resort to tell people their fortunes; sitting in the sun, and all covered with dust, on a piece of tapestry, with some old mathematical instruments, and a book of figures, lying before them.

THERE is nothing remarkable at the entrance of the fortress, except two great stone elephants, with the Râjah of Chitor on one, and his brother on the other. These are on

* BERNIER. Mem. Mog. Emp. part iii. p. 6, & seq.

Court and palace.

the sides of one of the gates : which having passed through, you find a long and broad street, divided by a canal of running water, and having on both sides a wall five or six feet high, and four broad ; and further-off some arches shut, which follow one another in form of gates. It is upon this long raised place, that the inferior officers of the court sit to dispatch their business, without being incommoded by the horses and people who pass beneath. There also the Mansebdârs keep guard at night. The water of the canal is brought from the river five or six leagues distant ; and, having divided itself through the whole mâhl, falls into the ditches ; which are thus supplied.

Fair streets.

If you enter by the other gate, you also find a long street, having its risings on the sides like the former ; but with shops upon them, instead of arches. This street is properly a bazâr, or exchange, very commodious in summer, and the rainy season ; as being covered above, arch-wise, with great openings by intervals to let in the light. Besides these two streets, there are many other lesser ones on each side ; which lead to the stately guard-rooms of the Omras, raised pretty high, with parterres and fountains before them. Here they keep watch for twenty-four hours, and are supplied with meat from the emperor's table. In divers places also, one meets with raised walks and tents ; which are the offices of so many officers. There are besides many great halls, called kar khânays, where embroiderers, painters, goldsmiths, silk-weavers, and other artificers of all kinds, repair daily to work ^b.

The am-
kas,

HAVING passed all these apartments, you come to the amkas, or place of audience ; which is a great square court with arches along the sides, separated by walls, with doors to pass from one to the other. Over the great gate, which is in the middle of one of the sides, there is a large raised-place, open towards the court, and called the nâgar khânay ; for there the hautboys and cymbals play at certain hours of the day and night : which noisy musick, though disagreeable at first to an European, has something in it that is very majestic and melodious, when heard at a distance. Having passed through this gate, you enter into another court : where, on the opposite side, stands a large and stately salon, or hall, open on three sides toward the court ; and supported by rows of pillars, which, as well as the ceiling, are painted and gilded. The back-wall of this salon joins the mâhl ; and has in the middle of it an opening, like a huge window, the bottom of which is seven or eight feet from the ground. It is here that the em-or audience-hall.

^b BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 31, & seqq.

peror appears seated on his throne, with his sons beside him, Court and and several eunuchs attending to fan him, to drive away the palace. flies with peacocks tails, and do other offices. From hence he beholds beneath him all the Omrâs, Râjahs, and ambassadors; and a little behind them the Mansebdârs, or lesser Omrâs, all standing upon a raised floor, inclosed with silver rails, with their eyes downwards, and their hands across their breasts. At a small distance from the rails, in the remaining part of the hall, and in the court, the people stand in crouds: for there, every day, about noon, the Great Mogol gives a general audience to his subjects of all degrees ^c.

THIS assembly lasts about an hour and half; during which Emperor's time that monarch is diverted with seeing his horses, elephants, assiduity and leopards, besides other sorts of wild beasts, and birds of the game, pass before him. Sometimes he reviews the cavalry of one or two Omrâs: at other times, he orders the young Omrâs, Mansebdârs, and Gûrzberdûrs, or mace-bearers, to try their strength and skill, with cutlasses, on embowelled carcases of sheep; by cutting through the body, and the four legs joined together, at one blow. They, who come thither to seek for justice, hold up their petitions; which the emperor observing, causes to be brought to him, and read: then, ordering the parties to approach, he examines them, and often causes justice to be executed on the spot. This is the more remarkable, because he is usually present once a week at the adalet khânay, to admini- or chamber of justice, attended by his two prime Khâdis, or ster justice. chief justices; and another time in the week spends two hours in private, hearing the complaints of the common people. All this is truly great and royal: the worst is the abject flattery one hears in the amkas, from even the principal Omrâs; who, at every word almost which drops from the emperor's lips, lift up their hands, and cry, karamat! karamat! wonder! wonder! This kind of flattery passeth even to the common people; who, in applying to a physician, or painter, load him with fulsome praises, preferring him to the greatest master of the profession ^d.

FROM the hall of audience, one enters into the court of The ghuzl the ghuzl khânch; that is, the hall to wash in; which is very khânch. spacious and handsome, being painted and gilded, and its door raised four or five feet high. There at night the emperor, seated in a chair, with his Omrâs standing round him, gives audience to his officers, receives their accounts, and examines

^c BERNIER, ubi sup. p. 36, & seqq.
& seqq.

^d Ibid. p. 40,

Court
queens.

the most important affairs of state. His majesty never fails to be at these two assemblies, unless hindered by sickness, or some extraordinary business. In this second also, the same things pass before him in review; except the cavalry, which could not be seen at night. But, in place thereof, all the Mansebdârs who are on guard, salute the emperor, the Kours marching at their head. These are silver figures of diverse animals, carried on the tops of poles of the same metal, which make a pompous shew.

The mâhl impenetrable.

No lord of the empire can enter farther than the ghuzl khâneh into the mâhl (A); and though Bernier was several times admitted to the apartment of a great lady, who was sick, to attend her as a physician, yet his head was always covered, so that he could see nothing, as he was led by eunuchs. From these he learned, in general, that in the mâhl there are very handsome apartments, more or less large and stately, according to the quality of the women who resided in them: that there is scarce a chamber, but has at its door plenty of running water: that it is full of parterres, pleasant walks, shady places, rivulets, fountains, cascades, grottos, and great caves, to retire from the heat of the day. There are likewise large terraces, raised very high, for sleeping in the cool air. In a word, you know not there what it is to be hot. They chiefly boast of a little tower facing the river; which they say is covered with plates of gold, like two others which are at Agra: all the inside is ornamented with gold and azure, as well as hung with costly pictures, and looking-glasses^e.

Classes of women.

If you will believe the editor of Manuchi, this physician had access into the most inner apartments; which he describes. According to him, the mâhl contains more than 2000 women, which may be divided into six orders, or classes. 1. The queens, or women of the first rank; 2. the concubines, or his women of the second rank; 3. the princes and princesses; 4. the ladies of the palace, who watch the conduct of the queens, and the governesses of the princes; 5. the musicians of the court; 6. the women slaves and eunuchs.

The queens.

WITH regard to the queens, or women of the first order, the Great Mogol has sometimes to the number of six; whom he marries according to ceremony. These usually are the daughters of Rajahs; though he sometimes raises to that dignity his favourite concubines, and even his female musicians and dancers, to whom on that occasion he gives new names. They are the sons only of these queens, who are looked on as legitimate, who bear the title of Soltân, and have a right of succeeding their father : but what our author says, that we never hear of the sons of concubines, or ever of more than four legitimate ones, is not fact.

^e BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 46, & seqq.

(A) Mâhl (or mâkal, as commonly written) signifies a place; women are kept; and answers to the Harâm, or Saray, of Persia and Turkey. But particularly that where the

THE women of the second rank are distinguished from those of the first in several respects. Their apartments are not so fine, nor their pensions so great. Their cloaths are not so rich, nor their female slaves so numerous. They are likewise at the expence of their own victuals ; the queens and princesses only being furnished out of the Imperial kitchen : and hence it is, that these latter are intituled Begüm ; that is, without care or trouble ^f.

THE princes and princesses of the blood are treated with the same magnificence as the queens. As soon as the Soltâns are born, they are assigned a pension ; which is always more considerable than that of the greatest Omrâs. This revenue is kept for the young prince in a particular treasury, and he is put in possession of it on the day of his marriage ; at which time also he quits the palace. When these Soltâns have attained the age of thirteen or fourteen years, they have separate palaces assigned them, and their court is scarce inferior to that of the emperor himself. He only, who is nominated to the succession, remains at court. All the rest are sent in quality of viceroys into the remotest provinces. The eldest son of Aureng Zib had for his maintenance twenty millions of rupîs ; which amount to about 1,500,000 l. English. While these princes remain in the palace under the eyes of the father, an eunuch has the care of their education. They are taught to read, and sometimes to write, both in Persian and Arabic : their bodies are inured to military exercises, and their minds formed to principles of justice ; being set to give their judgment upon the causes which daily happen, or on cases proposed for the purpose. Lastly, they are instructed in the Mohammedan religion, and the interests of the nation ; which it may be their fortune one day to govern.

As to the young Soltânas, their sisters, they are bred up with the greatest delicacy. Being the principal amusement of the emperor their father, all their study is to please him ; and by this means they often obtain more liberty than is becoming the condition of princesses : for his indulgence goes so far as ^f MANOUCHI Hist. Gen. Emp. Mog. par Carrou, p. 334. & seqq.

Court
princes.

their rich
dress :

to permit revelling ; which spreads afterwards through the palace. However, the women live in great harmony. There are but few disputes among them ; and, if any arise, they are soon suppressed by the governesses. The same dress is common to the queens, the ladies of the second rank, and the princesses of the blood. Their hair is made up in tresses, and perfumed, interlaced with pearls ; some strings of which hang down the forehead, having a rich jewel in the middle. Some are permitted to wear turbans, adorned with heron's feathers and jewels ; or else scarfs, in form of pyramids, and hanging behind down to the ground. About their necks they have collars of pearls, intermixed with jewels. Their habit is of silk, so fine, that the whole weighs not more than an ounce. They sleep in these gowns, which they never wear but one day. For the rest, they are loaded with precious stones. Two bands of diamonds, set with two rows of pearls in the middle, go round the neck of their robes, and cross over the stomach. Their ear-rings and bracelets are surprisngly splendid. Both their fingers and toes, which are uncovered, as they only wear sandals, are adorned with rich jewels. All the wives of the Great Mogol, as well as his daughters, wear on the right thumb a little mirror, set round with pearls, in which they are perpetually viewing themselves. But the ornament, which they most set-by, is a gold girdle, two inches broad, garnished with precious stones ; from whence hang narrow plates of the same metal, set with diamonds, and terminating at the points with bunches of pearls. What is most surprisng, each of these ladies has six or eight changes of such jewels. But this is no wonder, when one considers the immense riches of this court ; which has been gathering since the time of Bábr. It is incredible what expence is made in perfumes, which are burned both night and day in all the apartments &c.

their go-
vernesses.

THE ladies who are governesses to the young princesses, and spies upon the conduct of the queens, have indeed less share in the luxury and magnificence of the Harâm ; but then they have a great deal more in the government of the empire. It is by them that all intrigues are carried on ; that peace and war is made ; and that viceroyships and governments are obtained. These ladies, venerable for their age and wisdom, have each an office and name, correspondent to the employments and titles of the principal officers of the crown. One has the function of prime minister, another that of secretary of state, a third that of viceroy. Thus, she, who is stiled first minister, keeps a correspondence with the first minister, by means of eunuchs, who are continually carrying letters between them. It is by the intervention of the ladies of the palace, that matters, which were but slightly touched-on in the halls of audience, are instilled into the mind of the Great Mogol; so that they are, properly speaking, his privy-council. He learns from those, who bear the title of viceroys, all the news which come from the frontiers; whither they are permitted to send their couriers. From what has been said, it is easy to apprehend, that the chief care of all the great officers of the empire is to cultivate a good intelligence with each his lady of the palace, whose smallest displeasure may be the ruin of his fortune.

Court
women.

THE female musicians and dancers are divided into bands; each of which has its mistress to teach them to sing, play on the lute, and dance. She is likewise the governess of those young creatures, who are chosen indifferently from among the Mohammedans and Pagans. The pension of the intendants of the musick is equal to that of the ladies of the palace, for whom they provide new airs and fancies. In short, all the Great Mogol's wives and daughters have each her band of musick (B); from whom they chuse their confidants: but all these bands unite on certain feast days, either to sing hymns to the deity, or celebrate the praises of the emperor. Their chief merit is to invent diversions to please their respective mistresses, especially comic scenes; one of which, well acted before the emperor, has often gained the actress a place among the women of the first or second order ^b.

Singers
and dancers.

THE women slaves of the palace do all the servile work belonging to the Haram. They are divided into companies of ten or twelve, under the direction of a mistress. The emperor gives these names, as he does the other women; and distributes them among the rest at pleasure. He himself is served by none but women; and, what is not usual in other courts, is always guarded in the palace by a company of one hundred Tatar females, armed each with a bow, a poniard, and a simetar. Their conductress has the rank and pay of an Omrah of war. This guard is a necessary defence to the Great slaves.

Women

^b MANOUCHI, ubi supr. p. 341, & seqq.

(B) Bernier does not speak of any women singers, or dancers, who reside in the palace. He says, there were some of the better sort, who were sometimes admitted into the palace, to divert the emperors; but that Aureng Zib would never suffer them to stay a night there, as his father used to do. Tom. iii. p. 60, & seq.

Emperor's
forces.

Mogol against the fury and plots of so many rivals, which compose his court.

The eunuchs:

As to the eunuchs, who are very numerous in the inner apartments of the palace, some serve for porters: a very nice and slippery post, it being equally dangerous to guard the entrances of the palace, with too much or too little care. By too much rigour, they draw on themselves the aversion of the queens and princesses; while, by too much complaisance to them, they run a risque of losing their lives. Other eunuchs are the superintendants of the Harâm. He especially, who is called the Nâder, that is, Chief of the Harâm, is one of the principal officers of the crown. His business is to keep good order in the palace, which he effects by his severity. He regulates the expences of the emperor's women and daughters, is keeper of the imperial treasure, and grand master of the wardrobe. He is answerable for all the precious stones and jewels of the emperor: the providing of victuals, cloaths, linen, and perfumes; in short, the whole expence of the palace is trusted to his management. The inferior eunuchs have all their offices under him. Some take care of the essences and perfumed oils; others, of the stuffs; a third party, of the furniture.

their employments.

THE eunuchs, most in favour with the princesses, are they who make and distribute the liquors which are drank in the palace: for, by their means, the ladies sometimes come at wine, and other intoxicating liquors; which they are the fonder of, as they are forbidden. The eunuchs of the lowest class are employed solely to run of errands for the ladies of the court; and it is incredible what a number of them are seen running about the streets on their occasions. Thus, every thing which is done in the city is known in the palace; and none are better acquainted with the news and intrigues of the town than these ladies, who are so closely confined. The expences of the inner palace do not amount to less than fifteen millions of livres (C) every year¹.

S E C T. II.

The Forces and Armies of the Great Mogol.

Mogol
soldiers.

IT is commonly said in Europe, that the armies of the Great Mogol are more to be feared on account of the multitude, than valour, of their soldiers: but, in truth, they do not want courage, so much as the art of war, and skill to manage

¹ MANOUCHI, ubi supr. p. 343, & seqq.

(C) That is about 750,000 pounds English.

their arms. Although on this score they are much inferior to Emperor's European troops, yet the subjects of this empire surpass in va-forces.
 lour all the nations beyond the Indus. Military discipline, as well as the art of making war, are likewise better known to them than any of their neighbours; and it is owing to these advantages, that the predecessors of the present emperor so greatly extended the bounds of their dominions.

ALL the forces of this great empire may be reduced to three classes. The first is the army; which the Great Mogol keeps always in his capital, and which mount the guard every day before his palace. The second consists of the soldiers; who are distributed through the several provinces of the empire. The third class comprises the Indian auxiliaries; which the Râjahs, who are the emperor's vassals, are obliged to furnish.

THE army, which daily encamp at the gates of the palace, Army at Dehli. whether the court be at Dehli, or Agra, amount at least to 50,000 horse; without reckoning that infinite number of infantry, which both capitals are full of. So that when the emperor takes the field, those cities look like two desert camps; which a great army had abandoned. Every body follows the court; and, excepting the quarter of the Banîyâns, or traders, all the rest of the cities become unpeopled. A prodigious number of victuallers, link-men, slaves, and pedlars, follow the army, to serve them in the same respects that they do in the cities. For the rest, this militia of the guard is not all upon the same footing. The most considerable among the Mogol troops are those called the 4000 slaves, to denote their attachment to the person of the emperor. Their commander, named Deroga, is an officer of such consideration, that he is often entrusted with the command of armies. All the soldiers belonging to this troop are marked in the forehead, by way of distinction; and out of them are taken the Mansebdârs, or subaltern officers; who by degrees rise to be Omrâs (D) of war, a title answering to that of generals.

THE guards of the gold, silver, and iron mace, also com-
The
 pose three different companies; whose soldiers, marked dis-guards.
 tinguently in the forehead, are chosen for their valour, and have more or less pay, according to the metal with which their maces are covered. It is necessary for a person to serve, and

(D) According to Gemelli, sides such as are dispersed thro' the provinces. See Church. Col. Trav. vol. iv 1. 2. ch. 7. p. 235.

distinguish

Emperor's forces. distinguish himself in one of these troops, in order to arrive at the dignities of the state. As in the armies of the Great Mogol, not birth, but merit only gives precedence, the son of a principal Omrâ is often seen in the lowest posts of the militia : nor is there any nobility among the Mohammedans in India, excepting those who pass for the descendants of Mohammed^k.

Garrisons in cities. WHEN the court resides at either Dehli, or Agra, he keeps there in pay no fewer than 200,000 soldiers (E). But when the emperor is absent, there are commonly left in garrison 15,000 horse, and double the number of infantry. This proportion is observed in all the other provinces, which, though reckoned fifty-four, may be reduced to about twenty large ones ; whose garrisons are as follow. In Lahor, 12,000 horse : Azmîr, 6,000 : Guzerât, 10,000 : Mâlva, 7,000 : Pâtan, 7,000 : Moltân, 6,000 : Kâbûl has always 60,000 to defend it, as being a frontier against the Persians, Tatars, and Pâtans : Tâtta, 4,000 : Bâkar, 4,000 : Uresha, 4,000 : Kashmîr, 4,000 : Dekan, 8,000 : Bara, 7,000 : Brâmpor, 6,000 : Baglâna, 5,000 : Rajemâhl, 4,000 : Nânda, 6,000 : Bengâl, being another frontier province on the east-side, has 40,000 horse : Ugen (or Eujen) surrounded by the most powerful Rajahs, 15,000 : Visâpor was the theatre of war against Sevoji, when our author wrote ; therefore the garrison troops are not mentioned. Lastly, their number in Golkonda, which had been newly conquered, was 20,000.

Hindû troops. THE auxiliary troops, which the Rajahs, who are the Great Mogol's vassals, are obliged to furnish, still add to his forces ; although they are entertained more for grandeur than necessity, and to secure thereby the fidelity of those tributary princes. They reckon eighty-four of those Indian royalets, who still preserve a kind of sovereignty in their antient country. They have lands in property, which their children inherit : which is an advantage they have above the Omrâs, who have none, and yet treat them with much contempt. However, some of these pagan Rajahs still maintain a shadow of grandeur, even in the presence of the emperor himself ; especially three of them, whose territories are well-peopled, rich, and inaccessible^l.

^k MANOUCHI, ubi sup. p. 345, & seqq. 349, & seqq.

^l Ibid. p.

(E) Gemelli says, the Great Mogol has dispersed through his empire 30,000 horse, and 400,000 foot ; who have all great pay. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iv. l. 2. c. 6. p. 234.

THE first, who pretends to derive his original from Porus ^{Emperor's} (F), and is called the son of him who escaped from the deluge, is forces. sovereign of the kingdom of Sedussia, whose capital is Ujepur. All the princes of this great state bear the name of Râna; ^{commanded} which signifies the man with a good aspect. He keeps always ^{by} on foot 50,000 horse, and 200,000 foot. He is the only Indian prince, who retains the privilege of marching, covered with an umbrella; an honour reserved solely for the monarch of Hindûstân. The Râjah of Rator is sovereign of nine provinces, and equals him of Sedussia, both in riches and power. He who lived in the time of Manuchi was named Jakont Sing; that is, the master-lion. The third sovereign prince, whose territory is named Chagha, and his capital Amber, is able to bring into the field 40,000 horse. The prince, who reigned there in the time of Aureng Zib, was called Ja Sing; often mentioned in his wars.

BESIDES these principal Râjahs, there are thirty others, ^{their own} whose forces are not contemptible. Among the rest, four of ^{Râjahs} them have each in pay 25,000 horse. All these princes, when they join the emperor's forces, command their own troops; give the Râjahpûts the same pay which is given to the soldiers of the empire, and receive appointments themselves equal to those of the first Mohammedan general. Such numerous forces spread through the empire procure security to the frontiers, as well as peace in the heart of the state. The smallest country-town has at least two horsemen and four foot-soldiers to guard it, who are the spies of the court; which by that means is informed of all that passes throughout the empire.

THE emperor's stables are filled with horses and elephants. ^{Emperor's} The former, it is said, amount to 12,000; whereof, how- ^{horses:} ever, only twenty or thirty are set apart for the emperor's use; the rest being kept either for pomp-sake, or to bestow in presents: it being the custom with him to give a habit and a horse to all those, from whom he receives the slightest service. All these horses come from Persia, Arabia, and especially Tartary; for those bred in the Indies, besides being restive and apt to start, are sluggish and without vigour. For this reason above 100,000 are brought yearly from Bâlk, Bokhâra, and Kabûl; which, at their passage of the Indus, pay twenty-five per cent. to the Great Mogul: for whose service the best

(F) This must not be understood of king Porus, who lived in the time of Alexander; but of Porun, the first man, or Ad- am of the Indians, according to the Shâster, or explanation of their Vedâm.

Emperor's
forces.

are reserved, and the rest sold to those whose business it is to remount the cavalry. In these countries, where the forage is burned-up with the sun's heat, they feed the horses with paste. In the morning, they give them bread mixed-up with butter and sugar; in the evening, they have rice-milk, seasoned with pepper and aniseed ^m.

his elephants:

As to the elephants, the Great Mogol has 500; which are kept in great porches, built for the purpose. The harness of these animals are surprisingly magnificent. That especially, which the emperor rides on, has on its back a throne, glittering all over with gold and precious stones. The rest are covered with plates of gold and silver, housings embroidered with gold, and with gold tufts and fringes. The throne-elephant is called the captain of the elephants: for to them the emperor gives names, as well as to his horses; and is always attended with a great train, and a considerable number of officers. When-their equipage:

ever he walks abroad, he is preceded by drums and trumpets, and banners are carried before him. He is allowed three times the maintenance of other elephants; each of which has twenty-five rupees a day, and ten servants to attend him. Two, called Kornakas, are to exercise and govern him: two others put on the chains: two supply him with the wine and water which he drinks: two carry the lance before him, and clear the way: two more are employed to accustom him to artificial fire: the ninth litters him; and the business of the tenth is to drive away the flies, and throw water on his body to cool him. These elephants are trained to slaughter, by attacking lions and tigers. They are taught also to break open gates; the method of which has something in it that is very military.

his arsenal
and arms:

THERE are no public arsenals in the Indies, but every commander of a troop is obliged to furnish his soldiers with arms; among whom one sees a mixture of muskets, bows, swords, simeters, and lances, in the same corps: which disorder Aureng Zib in some measure rectified. As for the emperor's arsenal, nothing can be more magnificent. His javelins, bows, carquoises, and sabres, are ranged in order, all glittering with precious stones. Every Friday morning his majesty prays in the arsenal; where he intreats God, that, with his sabres, he may obtain victories, and make his enemies reverence the divine being.

hisartil-
lery.

THE Great Mogol's artillery are very numerous; and, for the most part, more antient than any to be found in

^m MANOUCHI, ubi supr. p. 352, & seqq.

Europe : it being certain (says our author) that cannon and Mogol's powder were known in the Indies long before the conquest of revenues, Timûr Bek. The tradition is, that the Chineses, who they say invented those instruments of death, were once masters of Dehli, and founded some pieces there. Each piece has its name, as well as the other arms. Formerly the cannoneers of the empire were Europeans ; but Aureng Zib ordered, that Mohammedans only should be employed in that service. At present no Franks are seen at court, excepting physicians or goldsmiths : the rest have left the country, where liberty of conscience is not as freely allowed, nor their service so much regarded, as heretofore ⁿ.

S E C T. III.

The Great Mogol's Revenues.

TO give our readers a just idea of the riches of this monarch, it will be necessary to consider, 1st. The fertility of Hindûstân. 2d. The wealth brought in by commerce from Europe, Africa, and the rest of Asia. 3d. The tributes which the emperor exacts of his subjects.

THE lands of Hindûstân produce abundance of grain, fruits, from the cotton, silk, cattle, diamonds, and other valuable commodities ; but then of those lands many large tracts are incapable of culture ; and the inhabitants of other parts neglect to till them. Besides, as the emperor is sole proprietor of those lands, in which the people have no share, no great care is taken to improve them. To remedy, in some measure, this inconvenience, Akber, who was the reformer of the finances of his empire, instead of paying the pensions of the viceroy and governors in money, as formerly, assigned them lands in their respective departments, to cultivate for their own advantage ; obliging them to pay for the rest of their province a certain sum, in proportion to the fertility of the soil. These governors, who are properly no more than the farmers of the empire, farm it again in their turn. But as the husbandmen have nothing for their labour but their subsistence, it is difficult, without force, to get the peasants to work. This occasions them to fly into the territories of the Rajahs, who treat them with a little more humanity : and thus the dominions of the Great Mogol become dispeopled insensibly, and remain uncultivated.

HOWEVER, the gold and silver, which commerce brings from com- into Hindûstân, effectually repairs this defect, and extremely merce.

ⁿ MANOUCHI, ubi sup. p. 356, & seqq.

Mogol's
revenues.

Vortex of silver:

yet money not plenty.

enriches the sovereign°. According to Bernier, all the silver of Mexico, and gold of Peru, after circulating for some time in Europe and Asia, passes at last into the Great Mogol's empire, never to go out any more. One part of that wealth is transported to Turkey, to pay for the merchandizes brought from thence. From Turkey the money passes into Persia, by way of Smyrna, for the silks of that country. From Persia it enters Hindûstân, by the commerce of Mokka, Bâb al Mandel, Bâsrah, and Bander Abbâsi (or Gomrûn). Besides, it passes immediately from Europe to the Indies; particularly by the trade of the Dutch and Portuguese. Almost all the silver which the first of them bring from Japan, goes into the dominions of the Great Mogol, in exchange for commodities. It is true, that Hindûstân, for all its fertility, is obliged for some things to other countries; as, to Japan for copper, to England for lead; to Seylân for cinnamon, nutmegs, and elephants; to Arabia, Persia, and Tartary, for horses. But commonly the traders are paid in merchandizes: so that the greater part of the gold and silver of the world finds a thousand ways into Hindûstân, and has none to come out again.

WHAT is most astonishing, continues our author, for all this prodigious influx of gold and silver into India, one meets with no more plenty of it there, in the hands of private people, than elsewhere. It is true, that much gold and silver is consumed there in the manufactures; and that the Indians bury a great deal of it, in a belief, that they may stand in need of it in the other world: but, after all, that which contributes most to the scarcity of money is the conduct of the emperors, who amass vast treasures, and reposit them in caverns under-ground, to prevent money being plenty; which they consider as pernicious. Thus all the treasure brought in by commerce falls at last into the coffers of the emperor^p. This being the case, no wonder this monarch should be immensely rich. In short, the whole revenue which he receives only from the produce of the provinces of his empire, farmed out, as aforesaid, amounts to no less than three hundred and eighty-seven millions one hundred and ninety-four thousand rupees (G).

BESIDES

° MANOUCHI, ubi supr. p. 364. & seqq.
mem. Mog. emp. vol. i. part 3. p. 1. & seqq.

^p BERNIER

(G) 287,194,000 rupees, at about 2,674.635 pounds from two shillings and sixpence each, Mr. Frojer's account. Hist. Nadir Shah, p. 35. Gemell censures Thevenot for reducing the Great

BESIDES these fixed revenues, the casual revenues of the Government. empire are another vast fund of wealth, being equal to, if not surpassing, the other. These arise from, 1. the annual poll-tax, which the Hindûs pay. 2. The duty of five per cent. on all commodities belonging to the Hindû merchants; from which Aureng Zib exempted the Mohammedan. 3. The duty laid on bleaching cloth. 4. The diamond mines; of which the most fair and perfect stones belong to him. 5. The vast customs from the ports of the Indian sea, and bay of Bengâl. 6. The estates and effects of his Mohammedan subjects in his pay; of which he is the heir. 7. The tributes received from the Râjahs. Taxes and mines.

GREAT part, however, of these casual revenues enter the Vast ex- emperor's treasury, only to pass out again among his subjects, pences. half of whom subsist by his bounty, or at least receive wages from him. Besides that vast number of officers and soldiers, who subsist solely on his pay, all the peasants who cultivate the lands only for the sovereign are maintained at his expence; and all the mechanics of the cities, who work for him, are paid out of the imperial treasury⁹.

S E C T. IV.

The Government and Police of the Great Mogol.

WE have but little to say concerning the kind of government and police which the Mogols have established in Officers of state. the Indies. Nothing is more simple than the means which set this great empire in motion. The affairs of state are all at court in the hands of three or four Omrâs, of the first rank, who manage them under the authority of the sovereign. The Itemâdo'ddowlet is the first minister; a post like that of grand vizîr in Turkey. But, as often a person of no experience, as a prince of the blood, or some favourite, is exalted to this dignity, the office is in effect vacant: in which case the burden of affairs falls upon the two secretaries of state.

⁹ MANOUCHI, ubi supr. p. 370, & seqq.

Great Mogol's revenue to thirty millions; and De Laet, for making it infinite: yet says, he was told it amounted to eighty kror of rupees, and every kror being ten millions, the whole comes to one hundred millions sterling. He adds, that the daily expence at court, to maintain the eunuchs, musicians, dancers, elephant, and other beasts, is not less than 50.000 rupees, or 6,250 pounds. See Church. collect. vol. iv. l. 2. c. 6. p. 234.

Government.

One collects the treasures of the empire; the other pays them out to the officers of the crown, the troops, and the husbandman. There is a third officer of the finances, whose business it is to get in the effects of those who die in the emperor's service; a gainful but hateful employment. There is no arriving at these eminent posts but by the way of arms. The ministers who govern the state, and the generals who conduct the troops, are equally taken from among the officers of the army. Such as want them to speak to the emperor, in their behalf, must never approach them without a present; which the Omrâs expect, not out of avarice, but as it is looked on to be a mark of respect.

Commanders and soldiers

THE command of the armies, when the emperor himself is not at the head of his troops, is often conferred on a prince of the blood: and, when no such prince is present, two generals are appointed by his majesty, one a Mohammedan Omrâ, the other an Indian Râjah, who command their respective troops: for the Râjapûts will obey none but a Râjah. It was the emperor Akber who regulated the state of his armies, and their pay. When a Mansebdâr's pension amounts to 50,000 rupees a year, he is accounted an Omrâ: who is out of it to maintain an elephant, and 250 horse, for the service; furnishing each with two horses. As the expence of each man is computed at ten rupees a day, the Omrâ's pay is not sufficient to maintain so large a company: but then the lands assigned those lords, to cultivate, produce much more than what will answer the expence of his cavalry^r.

how paid.

THE Omrâs do not all receive the same pay of 50,000 rupees, which is called azari: that of some amounts to two, three, four, and five times as much. In short, those of the first rank receive even to six azari; that is, three millions of rupees per annum: so that their train is magnificent, and the cavalry which they maintain equal our little armies. By this means the Omrâs have sometimes become formidable to the prince himself. There are usually six Omrâs who enjoy his great pension; the Itemâd 'oddawlet, the two secretaries of state, the viceroy of Kâbul, he of Bengâl, and the third of Ujen (or Eujen). The pay of the soldiers is at the discretion of the Omrâs who raise them. By the law, they are to be paid every day; but they put them off to once a month; and then oblige them often to take in part the old furniture of the Omrâ's palaces, and cast-off cloaths of their wives. It is by such oppressions as these that the first officers of the empire accumulate great treasures ; which, at their death, re- turn into the coffers of the sovereign. Govern- ment.

^r MANOUCHI, ubi supr. p. 373, & seqq.

NOTHING is more uniform than the exercise of justice in the Great Mogol's dominions. The viceroys, governors of provinces, as well as those of cities and towns, do, in their respective jurisdictions, just what the emperor himself does at Agrâ or Dehli. They alone administer justice, and give judgment with regard both to the effects and lives of the people. It is true, that in all cities a Kotwâl, and a Kâzi, have been established to determine certain matters : but then the parties are at liberty, whether they will bring their affairs before their tribunals or not : for every body has a right to have recourse immediately, either to the Great Mogol himself, in the place where-ever he resides, or to the viceroys, and governors, in their respective cities. Justice well administered.

THE Kotwâl discharges the function both of civil and criminal judge. The chief duty of this magistrate, as judge of the police, is to prevent drunkenness ; to punish all those who distil arrak, to suppress taverns, and, in general, all places of debauchery. As he is obliged to give the emperor an account of all dissensions in private families, as well as nocturnal assemblies ; he therefore has in all parts of the city a vast number of spies, whose business it is to sweep the houses every morning, and set the moveables in order. They at the same time pry into the secrets of the family, put questions to the slaves, and then make their report to the Kotwâl ; who, in quality of grand provost (or judge criminal) is answerable for all the robberies committed within his district : for this reason he has always soldiers in the country, and men disguised in the city, to keep things in good order. With regard to the Kâzi, his jurisdiction is confined to matters of religion, divorces, and the like. For the rest, neither of these two judges is permitted to pronounce sentence of death upon any person whomsoever, without making a report to the emperor ; who must confirm the sentence on three different days, before it can be put in execution. The same rule is observed in the province, where only the viceroys, or governors, can condemn to death. Police in cities.

THERE is no delay in administering justice in the Mogol's dominions. Without any of those formalities and rules which protract causes in our courts, every one opens his own case, or gets one of the Omrâs to do it for him. Immediately, the witnesses being called and examined, judgment is pronounced on the spot, almost always as equitable as it is speedy. It is not to be denied, that the bribery of judges, and subornation of witnesses, is to be found in Hindîstân as well as other Excellent form

^{1.} Soltân
Bâbr.

in law suits.

countries : but then both false witnesses and corrupt judges are punished there with death ; which is a great check upon both. Iniquitous judgments seem to be an universal disorder, which the length of proceedings is not likely to remedy. For the rest, this small number of judicial officers, who are never more than three in the great cities, as well as the small, have not so much business on their hands as the least of our judges in Europe ; who yet are so very numerous. Although the customs observed in this great empire may not all be free from exception, yet we have remarked a mixture of barbarity and uprightness ; which, taken altogether, renders the government of the Great Mogol not inferior to that of many other of the best nations*.

C H A P. V.

The History of the Descendants of Timûr Bek, who have reigned in Hindûstân, under the names of Jagatays and Mogols.

Historians
of India.

THE history of this branch of Timûr's family has been written by a great number of Asiatic historians ; of which as yet only a few extracts have been transmitted to us, by those skilled in the eastern languages. The best of these is that short history of the Moghol emperors, inserted by Mr. Frazer, by way of introduction, in his history of Nâdir Shâh. A piece very valuable in its kind, but too concise to give the reader a satisfactory information concerning the first princes who founded the empire ; or indeed of any who preceded the present monarch. It is true, we meet with some account of them all in the several travellers who have visited India, from time to time : but the memoirs, which, during their short residence, they have collected, chiefly from the report of Europeans residing in that part of the world ; are so imperfect and uncertain, and, for the most part, relate to such trivial matters, that they contribute very little to form a good history of the Hindûstân emperors.

Manouchi
centusured.

As for the general history of the Mogol empire from its foundation, by Catrou, the Jesuit, said to be composed from the Portuguese memoirs of Manouchi, a Venetian physician, written about the year 1695, and taken from the registers of the empire, it is a mere romance ; at least, with regard to the first Mogol monarchs : wherein the few hints, to be gathered from Texeira and D'Herbelot, are worked-up with the copious product of invention, to supply the deficiencies. Nor are the reigns of the latter monarchs free from fiction, altho' the travellers, such as Tavernier and Bernier, have afforded the author pretty large supplies of facts. Yet, as they carry their history no lower than the end of the reign of Shâh Jehân, Manouchi's memoirs, it seems, end there too; altho', when he left India, Aureng Zib had sat on the throne above thirty years. But the contriver of the history, whoever he was, was in the right not to run the risk too far of being detected, by entering upon a history so near his own time, since he had no good guides to conduct him, and might be reproached with imposture by many persons who had really been in India; where, in all probability, he never was. If there be any thing in the whole, which may be depended on, it seems to be the remarks relating to the court of the Great Mogol: in which, however, it is easy to perceive a great mixture of matters taken from the above-mentioned authors, if they be not his principal funds.

* MANOUCHI, ubi supr. p. 376, & seqq.

I.

The reign of Soltân Bâbr, surnamed Zehîro'ddîn Mohammed (A).

THIS prince, as hath been already observed^a, was the son of Omar, or Aumar, Sheykh, fourth son of Abusaïd Mirza, son of Mohammed, sixth son of Mirân Shâh, third son of Timûr Bek, or Tamerlan. He was born the 12th of February, 1483; and, by the death of his father, on the 8th of June, 1494, became sovereign of the country of Andekhân, or Andjân, in Mâzwara'nâbr, or Great Bukhâria: at which time he was eleven lunar years, seven months, and twenty-nine days old. On the death of Soltân Ahmed, son of Abusaïd Mirza, which happened in 899 of the Hejrah, he ascended the throne in Samarkant, the capital of all that region. But five years after, viz. in 904, Shaybeg Soltân, invading Great Bukhâria, with an army of Uzbeks, from beyond the river Sihûn, or Sir, drove him out of his kingdom, and took possession of it himself.

BÂBR, or Bâbor, being thus driven out, retired to Gâz-nen, or Gâzna; from whence he began his expeditions into Hindû-India. Thus some writers give an account^b: but, according

^a See before, vol. v. p. 408.
p. 38, and 163. art. Abusaïd Mirza, and Miran Shâh.

^b D'HERBEL. Bibl. orient.

(A) Soltân Bâbr assumed the title of Zehîro'ddîn, which signifies the supporter of religion; and the name of Mohammed, which signifies

1. Soltân
Bâbr.

ing to others, after his expulsion from Mawara'lnahr, he conquered Gosnavi (or Gazna), with the other provinces of Kâbul, Kandahâr, Biddukhsân, and the places dependant on them: after which he invaded Hindûstân five times. In the first four, he was unsuccessful; but in the fifth, on the 1st of May, 1526, he gave battle, near the village of Maltia, to Soltân Ibrâhîm Lawdi, who had with him 100,000 Afghâns (B), besides 1000 armed elephants. And, although he had scarcely 12,000 effective men in his army, yet he intirely defeated those numerous forces.

Great conquests
there.

ELATED with this great success, Bâbr, pursuing his good fortune, in a short time subdued all that empire, excepting the kingdoms of Dekkân, Guzerât, and Bengâl. Eleven months and five days after the above-mentioned battle, he came to an engagement with Râna Sânga, the most powerful of the Indian princes; and, although the army of the latter was incredibly numerous, as well as strengthened with many armed elephants, yet he at length obtained the victory.

His death.

BÂBR died on the 25th of December, 1530, in Charbâghi, near Agrâ, on the banks of the river Chun (C): from whence his body was carried to be interred at Kâbul; after he had lived forty-nine lunar years, four months, and one day. Of this time he reigned in all thirty-seven years, eight months, and two days; thirty-two years, ten months, and three days before the conquest of India; and four years, nine months, and twenty-nine days after the conquest. The best history of his actions are the commentaries written by himself, called Vakeat Bâbri; that is, Bâbr's Occurrences.

His good fortune.

THE Indians relate, that Bâbr, before his expeditions into India, to discover the condition which it was in, as to strength, entered that country, accompanied with thirty of his lords, in the disguise of pilgrims. But that, at Dchli, they were

c FRASER Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 6, & seqq.

signifies praised, is prefixed (or supposed to be so) to every Mussulman's name. Frazer.

(B) Afghans are the several tribes of Mohammedans who inhabit the northern parts of India; over the whole of which some of them are spread. They are known often by the name of Pattans, and are esteemed the best soldiers in the country. Frazer. — The Afghans are called by some authors Augans, Augwans, and Ougans. Some travellers, as Bernier and Therrenot, make the Patâns, or Pataus, natives of the country about Patna, to the east of the Ganges; and to have reigned in India before the Mohammedans conquered it.

(C) The Chun is often called Jumna. Frazer. — Jemna, and Jemini; written also Geminy.

discovered by Sekânder, the Potan (or Pâtan) king, and arrested: but, on Bâbr's taking an oath, not to attempt the conquest of Hindûstân, during either of their lives, Sekânder pardoned them. This story is painted at Labûr. The oath was inviolably kept: but, when both were dead, Homayûn, invading the country, dispossessed Ibrahim, and Shâh Selim, Sekânder's son, of their dominions^d.

2. Soltân
Hemayûn.

II.

The reign of Hemayûn.

BABR being dead, his son Hemayûn, by some called Homaiun, and Hemayon, surnamed Nefsîrô'ddîn (D) Mohammed, succeeded him. This prince was born in the castle of Kâbul, on the 4th of March, 1508; and, on the 26th of December, 1530, sat on the throne at Agrâ. In November, 1534, he set out to conquer Mâlva, and Guzerât, then possessed by Soltân Bahâdr (E); who prepared to meet him. The two armies met; and the Soltân, having been defeated, fled to Mandow; whither being pursued by the victor, he retired to Chanpanâr (F): from this place to Kambaët (or Kambaya), and from thence to Diu (or Dîv). Hemayûn followed him as far as Kambaët; where he stopped a while^e, with a design to attack Diu: but the Soltân having in the mean time made a peace with the Portugueses, and obtained their assistance, by granting them leave to build a fort there, Hemayûn, despairing to take the place, returned to his own dominions^f. However, this prince, the next year, entering Mâlva and Guzerât a second time, made an intire conquest of those provinces^g, excepting Diu, and a few other places.

HEMAYUN, encouraged by this success, in 1538, turned his arms against Bengâl; which he subdued: but, in 1540, being forsaken by his good fortune, he was driven out of his dominions by Shîr Khân, the Afghân, and obliged to fly into Persia; where he remained five years, five months, and fifteen days. The particulars of this transaction, with his reception by Shâh Tahmasp, son of Shâh Ismaël Sûfi, is related at large in several histories (G). At length (by the assistance conquers

Bengâl.

^d D'HERELOT Bibl. orient. p. 58, art. Bâbr; and De LAET de Imper. Mag. p. 166.
^e FRASER Hist. Nadir Shah, p. 6.
^f DE FARIA Asia Port.
^g FRASER, ibid.

(D) Nefsîrô'ddîn, or Nafsîrô'd-dîn, signifies the assister, or helper, of religion.

(E) Called Badur in the European histories,

(F) Called Champanel by De Faria y Sousa, in his Asia Portuguesa. According to whom it was Badur's capital.

(G) As Akber Namâ, Pâdsbâh Namâ,

z Soltân Hema-
yân.

assistance of that monarch) on the 1st of September, 1545, he took Kandahâr from Mirza Askeri, who governed it as deputy to Mirza Kamrân; and, on the 16th of November, 1545, took Kâbul from Mirza Kamran himself. Humayûn, pursuing his good fortune, in the spring, 1546, marched into Biddukhsân, and recovered that province from Mirza Soleymân, who had revolted, and usurped the government of it.

AFTER so many prosperous enterprises, Hemayûn for some time laid aside the toils of war, to take a little repose, and settle the reconquered provinces. At length, in December 1554, he began his march from Kâbul to Hindûstân; and, on the 22d of February, 1555, arrived at Lahûr; in May, he came to Serhend, and, on the 20th of June, encountered and defeated Sekânder Sowr, son-in-law to the usurper Shîr Khân. His first name was Ahmed, and he governed Panjâb, or Lahûr, under Selîm Khân: after whose death he assumed the government of that state, which extended from the river Send, or Indus, to the Ganges, and called himself Sekânder^h.

Shîr
Khân
attacks

THIS in brief is the history of the reign of Hemayûn, or Homayûn, as given by Mr. Frazer: the conciseness of which we shall supply from a curious fragment, communicated by De Laet (H); and beginning with that prince's first expedition into Bengâl, which was in 1558, as before remarked. Hamayon (or Hemayûn), departing from Agra with an army, entered that country; and, having defeated the Pâtan forces, soon conquered it, and changed the name to Senetabâd. But the fruits of his victory did not last long: for Ferried (I) Khân, who assumed the name of Shîr Khân, one of the Pâtan kings, departing from Naw with 65,000 troops; quickly recovered the province of Babar (K), with the castle of Râjah Rotas, and ^h FRASER, ibid. p. 9.

Namâ, Tebkat Akbar Shâhi, Tarikh-e Alam Aray, and Montekheb al-Twarikh Bedawni: they all five treat of the Mogol emperors, excepting the fourth, which contains the history of the Shâhs of Persia. Frazer.

(H) In his tract, De imperio Magni Mogolis, sive India vera, commentarius, inserted in the Reipublicæ, printed by Elzevir, 1631. This fragment, supposed by De Laet to be extracted from the historians of Hindûstân, was given to him by the famous Peter Vanden Broecke, who founded Batavia in Java. It agrees almost in every thing with Mr. Frazer's abstract; which serves to supply the date of actions, omitted in the fragment. Herbert, who has made use of it, passes but slightly over the reign of Hemayûn: nor are his extracts, relating to Akbar and Jehân Ghîr, made with due care.

(I) Perhaps Ferhad Khân.

(K) Perhaps rather Berar, in which the castle of Rotas is.

com-

compelled Hemayûn to fly hastily out of Bengâl into Pâtan. Shîr Khân followed him, and, overtaking him at Tzioka, obliged him to retreat back to Agrâ; where, having gathered his scattered troops, and augmented them with supplies from several provinces, he marched a second time towards the Ganges. As soon as Shîr Khân had notice of his coming, he set forward, sending before 20,000 horse, to prevent his passage of the river.

THE Mogols were there incamped; but, relying perhaps on their own strength, spent the night in revelling, and took no care to keep a guard. This being made known to Shîr Khân by his spies, he sent Ghâwas Khân, with 10,000 light horse; who, having but fifteen miles to ride, early in the morning, rushed upon the enemy, buried in sleep and wine, and made a great slaughter. Hemayûn, awakened with the cries and confusion which were in his camp, and seeing his soldiers already flying on every side, made haste and fled himself. When he came to the river, with only a few followers, he, by the assistance of a water-carrier, swam over to the other side. There he luckily found a horse, belonging to some soldier, who had been drowned in passing the stream, and, mounting him, escaped to Agrâ. All his elephants and horses, with a considerable treasure, fell into the hands of the Pâtans. The women likewise and daughters of him, as well as his Omrâs, became a prey to *Shîr Khân*¹.

THIS prince, having obtained so unexpected a victory, used it with the greatest moderation; neither offering any indemnity to the captive females himself, nor suffering his officers to commit any. To improve the opportunity to the utmost, and give the enemy no time to breathe, he immediately advances towards Agrâ; taking many cities in his way. Mean time Hemayûn, quite destitute of troops, taking with him Jemla Begûm, one of his wives, who was big with child, retired to Azmîr (or Ajmîr), and thence to the province of Shermel; where, in the castle of Ammer, she brought him a son, named afterwards Akber. Not thinking himself yet secure, he fled to Lahôr, where Mirza Kamrân, his half-brother, commanded. This prince, vexed to see his brother's want of courage, asked him leave to go fight the Pâtans, who were already arrived at Sherhind, since he was so afraid to face them. The king, beyond measure offended with his brother's speech, left Lahôr, and went towards Kashmîr, expecting shelter from one of his Omrâs, who governed there: but, that commander being lately dead, the inhabitants had

¹ DE LAET de Imp. Mag. Mogol, p. 172, & seqq.

2. Soitân
Hema-yûn.

taken different measures, and not only fortified the capital, but shut up the straits of the mountains called Kothel; so that there was no entering the country without great difficulty.

by his brothers ;

HEMAYUN, finding himself excluded there also, directed his course towards Kâbûl : but his brother Kamrân, having been obliged to quit Labûr (which Shîr Khân had now taken, as well as Multân) ; and, being greatly incensed against the king on that account, by great marches, got to Trinlebeg ; and thus cut off his retreat to Kâbûl. In this distress he applied to Mirza Askeri (L), who resided at Kandahâr, desiring that he might put his castle in a state of defence : but he would not so much as let him into it. Nor did he meet with more obedience from Khân Housseyn, governor of Tâtta : for the king having sent to desire leave to pass through his province, he returned for answer, that if his majesty intended for Persia, his best way was to go by Kandahâr. Accordingly he took that road, seeing himself deserted by all his people ; and, leaving his wife, and son, then but one year old, with his baggage, domestics, and harâm, in the town of Shanwan (M), entered Persia, and came to Sebisfgân, accompanied only by Beyrâm Khân ; who a little while before had joined him with a few choice soldiers ^k.

flies into
Persia ;

As soon as Askeri knew of his brother's flight, he seized on every thing which he had left behind, with his treasure, and confined his wife with her young son in the fortrefs. But Hemayûn received more friendly treatment from Shah Tâhmâsp (N) ; who, on the first news of his misfortune and flight, sent orders to the governor of Herât, to receive him with all imaginable honour, in case he should repair to that city. The governor accordingly, on the king's approach, went out, with the principal inhabitants, twelve miles to meet him ; furnished him with all necessaries while he staid at Herât, and wrote to the governors on the road to court, to receive him with honour in his passage. When Hemayûn drew near Kazbân, where the Shâh then resided, the Persian monarch sent his brother Mirza Bayrâm, accompanied by all the great lords, to receive, and introduce him to his presence.

narrow escape ;

TAHMASP, having embraced and comforted the refugee prince, ordered his brother Beyrâm to wait on him at table.

^k DE LAET de Imp. Magn. Mogol, p. 174, & seqq.

(L) In De Laet, Asfari.

(N) In De Laet, Thomas ; as-

(M) In the original, Tzan- towards Tamas.

whan.

The

The king, observing with what assiduity the prince performed that office, said, the Shâh did rightly, so to teach his brother to be obedient; for that he, who had heaped honours and riches on his brothers, found them the worst enemies in his distress. Bayrâm, enraged at this offensive speech, put his brother in mind, that, in the reign of Shâh Ismaël, Babr, the father of Hemayûn, was no more than a gardener; and so far incensed him, that he brought him to a resolution to make his guest away. This resolution had undoubtedly been executed, if Begûm Soltâna, the Shâh's sister, had not in pity to the exiled prince, by her eloquence, diverted her brother from his purpose: putting him in mind, that he was descended from Timûr, to whom their ancestors owed numberless favours, even their empire; and that therefore he could not, without ingratitude, desert the Mogol prince.

2. Soltân Hemayûn.

TAHMASP, moved by what his sister had urged, gave orders that Hemayûn should be furnished with troops, and all things necessary for his return to Hindûstân. At the same time he commanded Dein and Khân Tramma, Bahadr Khân, Khân Kûli Khân, Narenjin (a kinsman of Hassan Kûli Khân), Ismaël Kûli Khân Wattebel, and other great officers, to accompany him thither. Hemayûn immediately leaves Kazbîn, and, hastening to Kandahâr, surrounds it with his forces. On Askeri's refusing to deliver up the fortress, he ordered the walls to be battered: but when he beheld his son, then two years old (O), exposed on the walls, he gave over the attack; after which he, upon oath, granted his brother's life, and liberty to depart the place. Askeri went to his brother Kamrân, who then resided at Kâbûl: but the king following him, with very little trouble, took Kâbûl, and Kamrân in it. Then, having ordered his eyes to be put out, banished him to Mekka; where soon after he died¹.

returns to Kabûl;

IN the year of the Hejrah 960, and of Christ 1552 (P), Shîr Khân, or Tiekmeka (Q), king of the Pâtans, breathed his last in the castle of Gwaleor; leaving behind him a son, named Fer Khân, no more than twelve years old: but while the principal ministers prepared to set him in the throne, his uncle recovers Hindûstân;

¹ DE LAET de Imp. Magn. Mogol, p. 175, & seqq.

(O) This supposes Hemayûn to have been in Persia no more than one year; whereas he was there five years and half.

(P) De Laet puts 1550. De Faria, who gives the history of him, says, he was killed at Ka- hjar (or Gwalijâr), which he took from the Rajaputs, by the bursting of a cannon which he fired. Port. Asia, vol. i. ch. 9. p. 422.

(Q) Before he is called Ferriad Khân.

2. Soltân
Hema-
yân.

Adel Khân (R), blinded with a lust of reigning, made him away, and usurped the kingdom. The nobles, in detestation of this atrocious action, revolted in almost every province. Adel Khân, however, hoping to divert the storm, set out from Gwaleyâr, with a great army; and, with little or no difficulty, took Chilnâr (S), a large and wealthy city. The death of Shîr Khân, and the troubles which ensued thereon, soon reached the ears of Hemayûn, still residing at Kâbûl; who, judging this a proper juncture to recover his loss, immediately, with an army, enters India. There, none daring to resist him, all the towns and provinces submitted, till he came to Serhind, which was governed by Rekander Khân Affega (T), a faithful minister of the late king. This lord, with ten thousand horse, had the courage to take the field against the Mogols: but, being overpowered, after a sharp dispute, with one thousand only of his troops, fled to the mountains of Kangera.

enters
Dehli.

AFTER this victory, Hemayûn intrusted Beyrâm Khân Kânna with the education of his son Abdol Fetta Jelâlo'ddîn Moham-med; and withal, giving the whole command of the army to that lord, sent him in pursuit of Rekander, who had retired to Dehli. At the same time Allan Kulî, Semaran Khân, and Bahâdr Khân, were dispatched to recover the province of Do-ab (U), which lies between the rivers Ganges and Jamna, or Semena. Success attended both expeditions; for Rekander was slain, and that province reduced. Hereupon Hemayûn entered triumphantly into Dehli; where he laid the foundation of a magnificent palace: but he had scarce been settled in his capital three months, when, by an accident, he was snatched out of the world. For, descending the palace stairs, on hearing the cryer call to afternoon prayers, he sat down, leaning on his staff; and, having taken too large a dose of opium, fell asleep: when suddenly, the staff slipping, he pitched headlong down forty steps, and was so bruised with the fall, that he died in three days^m. The prince departed this life on the

His death.

^m DE LAET de Imp. Magn. Mogol, p. 178, & seqq.

(R) He is in the next reign called Abdol Khân.

(S) In the original, Tzbil-nar. The names are Dutch spelling, and inaccurate.

(T) Perhaps for Sekander Khân Affghân. If so, the Affghâns seem to differ from the Patâns, or to be a particular branch of them: or, instead of Afghân, it may be Afkan; which signifies an overthrower.

(U) Or Doav-ab; which, our author observes elsewhere, signifies Mesopotamia, or Interamnia, as lying between the Ganges and Jemni. It is called also Sanbal, or Sambel.

24th of January, 1556 (X), and was buried in a monument erected on the banks of the river Chun, or Jemni, at the age of forty-nine lunar years, four months, and ten days; of which he reigned twenty-five years, ten months, and five daysⁿ.

S E C T. III.

The reign of Akbar, or Akber, surnamed Jalâlo'ddîn Mohammed.

AKBAR, son of Hemayûn, was born in the fort of Amr-kowt, on the 12th of October, 1542; and, on the 12th of February, 1556, being then thirteen solar years and four months old, was proclaimed emperor, at Kalanôr, in the province of Lahûr. He was reckoned a great and good prince, and was very fortunate in war; having in his reign made several conquests, and reduced almost all India to his obedience. This in general is all which our author relates concerning this Mogol monarch; excepting, that, as he was fixed to no religion himself, so he persecuted none; and that, in 1582, he wrote to the king of Portugal, desiring to send him a translation of the scriptures into Arabic or Persian; and, at the same time, some learned person, to explain the Christian religion (Y)^o. It were to be wished, that, instead of Akbar's letter, Mr. Fraser had given some account of his actions from the authors to which he refers his readers (Z). For want of such a supply, we must have recourse again to Vanden Broecke's fragment, published by De Laët; which gives the best history of this and the following reign to be met with in any European author.

WHEN Abdol Khân heard, at Shilnari, where he had lain close all this while, of the sudden death of Hemayûn, he sent ⁿ FRASER, ubi supr. p. 10. Shâh, p. 10, & seqq.

^o FRASER's hist. of Nadir

(X) According to the Fragment of De Laet, Hemayûn died in the year of the Hejrah 962, or of Christ 1554; and not 1552, as that author puts it.

(Y) Of this affair an account is given at the end of this king's reign.

(Z) As the Akbar Nâma, Tebkhat Akbar Shâhi, and Montekhebt Tawarikh Bedaurni, three histories mentioned before. The first was composed by his secretary and wazir, named Abûlfazl, which signifies the father of excellence: the most learned and best writer then in the east. He was murdered by order of Soltân Selim, on suspicion that he had created a misunderstanding which subsisted between him and his father. He left several works unfinished, and had carried down that of the Mogol emperors, to the 38th year of the reign of Akbar; who, among others, greatly lamented his death. Fraser.

3. Soltân Akber. his chief general Kûli Khân Hemow, an Indian, of no great birth, but very valiant, with 100,000 horse, 500 elephants, and a great military chest, towards the city of Dehli, to make war on the Mogols. Mean time Akbar, who, with Beyrâm Khân, Khân Kânna, and the greater part of his army, went in pursuit of his father's enemies, in the mountains of Khoestân, as before mentioned, so soon as he received tidings of his death, marched to Kalanôr; and, being there proclaimed king by his governor, made what haste he could to Dehli. In the way he met Turdi Khân; who, venturing out of the city, to fight Hemow, was defeated, and fled. This commander was received by Akbar in a friendly manner; but, after treating him at a banquet, he was stabbed by a slave, set on by Beyrâm Khân. At this time Alla Kûli Khân and Bahâdr Khân were in Do-ab, or the interamnian province: but, being sent for, they were dispatched before to Panipatam, with an army, to stop the carrier of Hemow; who had already taken Dehli, while Akbar followed with rest of his forces^P.

The Pâtans overthrown. THE two generals, meeting Hemow at Tilleputli, between Panipatam and Dehli, immediately resolved to give him battle: but his soldiers mutinying for want of pay, forsook their leader, and dispersed. So that the Mogols took all their baggage, with the elephants; and Hemow himself, being shot in the eye with an arrow, fighting, was obliged to fly likewise. But, being overtaken by Kûli Khân Mâbrem, was brought to Akbar, now come up with the army; who, calling for a sword, smote off his head, and ordered it to be fixed on the gate of Dehli. After this, Alla Kûli Khân and Bahâdr Khân are sent back into the province of Do-ab, to pursue the remains of the Pâtans: who, collecting all their forces, are met at Sambel by those generals, and vanquished, with great slaughter. The routed enemy fled to Laknow; and, making a stand there, were again defeated. After this they received a still greater overthrow at Jounpûr, on the banks of the river Tsatja (A): so that all Hindûstân, between this river and the Ganges, was recovered in a short space of time.

Akbar entertained. MEAN while Akbar spent his time at Agra in hunting and other diversions: yet was inwardly grieved to see that his tutor Beyrâm Khân took the whole administration of affairs on himself, and had the army all at his devotion. This jealousy, it is likely, was in a good measure owing to the whispers of parasites, and chiefly to the insinuations of his nurse Maghem, ^{3. Soltân} who devised the following stratagem to free him from his governor's power. One day, not unknown to Beyrâm Khân, passing the Semmena (or Jemni), accompanied by a large retinue, under pretence of hunting, he proceeded to Koheb; from whence his nurse, who followed him by easy journies, conducted him to Dehli; where, for a long time, the kings of Hindûstân used to be inaugurated. There, the lords of the neighbouring provinces being called together, the prince was enthroned, and acknowledged king by the whole assembly. As soon as Beyrâm Khân heard this news, he, without delay, sent all the Omrâs and Mansebdârs who were about Agrâ to the king, with a letter, importing, that, as he had never made use of the power which Hemayûn had intrusted him with, but for the good of the state, and what he thought the benefit of him the prince, so, now he found that he was able to manage affairs by himself, he wished him all happiness and success; only desiring, that, as he was quite broken with age and ministerial fatigue, his majesty would give him leave to go to Mekka, there to spend the remainder of his days^a.

^P DE LAET India Vera. p. 180, & seqq.

(A) So Herbert writes. De Tziatfom; which is Chatfom, or Laet, variously, Thatjan, and Jatfom.

His request having been readily granted, the good old man Beyrâm left Agrâ with all his family, and took his way through Meuwat Khân (or Mevat) towards Guzerât; where he intended to embark: slain. but when he came to the town of Patang, he there received a mortal stab by one of his Pâtan slaves, whose father formerly the Khân had slain. Hereupon his domestics returned to Agrâ, with Mîrza Abdol Kakiem, son of the deceased lord, then but twelve years of age, whom Akbar caused to be educated according to his quality.

THE mud wall, with which the castle of Agra had been long before inclosed by the Pâtan kings, being in many places fallen to ruin, Akbar ordered it to be built with stone. Kassem Khân Mierbar, an excellent architect, who had the direction of this work, took his materials from Shikeri (now called Fettipûr) and assembled masons from all parts, that it might be finished as soon as possible.

MEAN time Zimet Pâta (B), a certain Râspût (or Râjah-Chitor pûts), having revolted from Râjah Râna, the most potent of all the Hindû princes, and seized the strong castle of Chitôr, which he was governor, with many other towns, made several incursions into the Mogol provinces. Hereupon Akbar, no way discouraged by the difficulty of the enterprize, march-

^a DE LAET India Vera, p. 181, & seq.

(B) Zimet is afterwards written Zimel.

3. Sultân
Akber.

ed with a great army, and besieged that fortress. After battering it for several months to no purpose, and receiving much damage from the defendants, he ordered the principal bulwark of the castle to be undermined; which being intirely blown up, made a wide breach for the besiegers to enter. Zimet Pâta, perceiving all to be lost, first set fire to a house wherein he had assembled his wives and children; and then, rushing desperately upon the enemy, perished himself, with all who were about him. In remembrance of this great victory, Akbar caused the statues of Zimet, and one of his chief commanders, mounted on elephants, to be placed on each side of the gate of his palace at Agrâ. This fortress formerly had been besieged by Alao'ddîn twelve years in vain.

Rebellions
suppressed.

HOWEVER, to allay his joy for this victory, he presently after received advice from Saffer Khân, and Rajah Bagwan-der, viceroy of Lahûr, that his brother Mirza Mehemmet Hâkem, with 30,000 horse, from Kâbûl, had invaded that province: but Akbar came upon him, at Sherhinda, so unexpectedly with his forces, that Mohammed fled, leaving his camp and followers at the mercy of the vanquisher. The Mogol monarch hereupon put all the advantageous posts in a better posture of defence, and gave the command of them to trusty officers: but while with this view he was surveying Panjâb, he received advice from his mother, at Agra, that Bahâdr Khân and Ali Kûli Khân Zemaen (who had been left at Laknawn against the Pâtans, as before related) had rebelled, spoiled all the neighbouring provinces, and threatened even Agrâ itself: but Akbar by swift marches arrived so suddenly at the river Jemni, that the revoltors, seized with fear, took to flight. The king's troops pursued them, and, after a great slaughter of their men, between Fettipûr and Karame-mekpûr, the chiefs themselves met their fate. Ali Kûli Khân was trodden to death under the horses feet, and Bahâdr Khân strangled on the spot by command of Akbar^t.

Akbar's
pilgrimage.

THIS rebellion being thus nipped in the bud, Khân Kânna and Munim Khân are sent to Jûnpûr (C), to govern that province, and watch the Pâtans, who were with Mirza So-leymán Lodi (or Lawdi), at Choutsfa, not far from that city. Mean while the king returned with the rest of his forces. Some time after, he resolves to make a pilgrimage, on bare-foot, to Azmîr (or Ajmîr) 150 kos, or 200 miles, distant, to visit the tomb of Haji Mondi, by that saint's intercession to obtain children. In this walk he ordered a stone to be placed at the end of every kos; and, in his return, at Shikeri, or Sikeri, eighteen miles short of Agrá, visits Sheykh Selím, to whom he relates the occasion of his pilgrimage. Hereupon the Sheykh foretels him, that he should have three sons, and that one of his concubines was then with child. For this reason Akbar called the first of them Selím (D), from the Sheykh: the other two were named Morád (E), and Dhaen, or Daniel. This prediction was so pleasing to Akbar, that he inclosed the town with a wall, and called it Fettipúr (F). He likewise erected a magnificent mosk, with a palace of great beauty; and had made it his capital, if the river had been wholsome: but the badness of the water obliged him to quit that situation; which presently fell to ruin.

^t DE LAET India Vera, p. 184, & seq.

(C) Herbert writes, Joorpore, and De Laet, Ziaupor.

DURING Akbar's abode at Fettipúr, advice arrived from Guzerât Khân Azem, that a rebellion was broken out in Guzerât, by Ibrâhîm Hosséyn (joined by Mírza Khân, Mírza Mohammed Hosséyn, and Jehân Khân), who had ravaged the country as far as Baroch, and was marching with his troops of thieves and Kális to attack Ahmed abad. Akbar, on this news, mounting dromedaries with his most trusty commanders and dependants, posts with incredible haste from Shikeri into Guzerât, riding 400 kos in seven days, and fixed his tents near that city. This unexpected arrival of Akbar so astonished the rebels, ignorant of his strength, that they immediately raised the siege and fled. Hereupon Khân Azem, and the other Mogol commanders, who had dispersed to different places for fear of the enemy, marched to meet the king; who, being by these reinforcements become pretty strong, sent Khân Goga, with 12,000 horse, to pursue the fugitives. This general coming up with them, a fierce battle ensued; till the Khân being slain, his troops began to give way. Akbar, provoked at this, rushed into the middle of the battle with such fury, that the enemy, unable to withstand the shock, took themselves to a shameful flight. Mírza Ibrâhîm and Mírza Khân were slain in the fight: but Mohammed Hosséyn, being taken prisoner, was beheaded. After this, the castle of Surât was reduced, without any difficulty, and the whole province of Guzerât subdued. To secure which, Akbar fortified Ahmed abad, and then returned to Hindjân.

* DE LAET, ubi supr. p. 187, & seqq. and HERBERT'S Travels, p. 61.

(D) Which signifies peaceful, safe, secure. The feminine, Selima, is a proper name for women. Frazer.

(E) Morád signifies wished for, desired. Frazer.

(F) Or Fatehpúr; that is, the place of victory; not the place of pleasure, as Herbert says.

3. Soltân
Akber.

Castle of Agra.

Sumptuous sepulchres.

-Bengâl
conquered.

Rotas castle
not prized.

THE same year the castle of Agrâ was finished : which magnificent edifice, built with stones of a vast size, was twelve years erecting, although sometimes 1,200 hands were employed about it ; and cost him 50,000 krors of taks, or two millions five hundred thousands rupees, of two shillings and three pence each. At the same time he expended in the walls and palace of Fettipûr one million and half of rupees. At Se-kânder, or Skânder, three kos, or five miles, from Agrâ, in the road to Labûr, he likewise began the sepulchres of his family (G). While these vast buildings were going forwards, Khân Kânnâ, and Monim Khân, who governed at Jaunpûr, prosecuted the war in Bengâl against Soleymân Kabherani ; who dying suddenly, his son Skânder succeeded. But, two years after, he was slain by conspirators, and Dourwet, son of Barat Khân, advanced in his room. As this was an indolent prince, and immoderately given to drinking, without minding either military or state affairs, Akbar judged this a proper season to subdue the Pâtans, and conquer Bengâl. Accordingly, marching thither (with an army of 50,000 horse and 600 elephants) he passed both the Ganges and Jotfa (H), and advanced towards Pâtan. Shâh Dourwet, on the news of his arrival, sent 12,000 horse to obstruct his passage, under the command of Râjah Bekan, who met the Mogols between Jotfa and Moheb ali pûr ; but after a brave attack, of three hours continuance, was obliged to retreat, while the enemy pursued them to the city of Pâtan, where Dourwet shut himself up. Akbar lay before the walls six months ; nor in all that time could bring the Pâtans to a battle ; but in the seventh month he takes the city by force. On this occasion a great number of Pâtans fell by the sword ; many commanders likewise, with their wives and children, were made prisoners ; a great deal of treasure also taken. Shâh Dourwet, at this time so drunk that he knew nothing of what had happened, was carried down the river in a boat by his domestics, the distance of three days journey. There, at length, detesting him for his slothful disposition, which had brought that calamity on them, they cut off his head, and sent it to Akbar ; who, having thus become master of all Bengâl, returned to Fettipûr.

WHILE he there oversaw his building going forward, he sent Rujian Khân and Zadsch Khân at the head of an army,

(G) Herbert says, that it was augmented by Jahân Ghîr ; and though scarce finished in his time, yet it had already consumed fourteen millions of rupees.

(H) Or Chotfa ; in De Laet, Tziotfa.

who

who in two months time took Rantipûr (I), a very strong castle (in Málva) from its Râjah. His next design was against the castle of Rotâs, in the province of Bahâr (K); reckoned the strongest, both by nature and art, in all Asia. After he had in vain thought of the means of reducing it, Moheb Ali Khân, an enterprising officer, obtained leave to try his skill, and, without imparting his intentions to any body, set out with some chosen troops. When he drew near the castle, he first, by making presents on all hands, cultivated a friendship with the Râjah; and then, pretending to be upon business in Bengâl, which required the greatest expedition, desired leave that his harâm, or women, might be lodged, for security, in the castle, till his return. The Râjah, not apprehending any fraud, too readily consents; and Moheb Ali Khân fills the 200 litters, which carried his women, with men, putting two in each. These being admitted into the castle, slew the guards at the principal gate; while Ali Khân, who followed them, entering the place, killed the Râjah, and seized the castle, with an immense treasure.

3. Soltân Akber.

AFTER this, the invincible castle of Jelûr, or Jalûr, is betrayed to Akbar by Jedney Khân, to his own brother's confusion. The news of these losses greatly alarming the Râjahs, each did his best to secure himself against an attack; and some, to prevent one, took the field. Among these was Rûp Mathi, a beautiful princess, at Sarangpûr; who, having assumed the name of Bahâdr (or valiant), entered the Mogol dominions, with her Pâtans, and began to ravage them: but being met in the midst of her career by Adam Khân, he with his troops assaulted her so furiously, that, after most of her people were slain, she was taken prisoner; but, to prevent farther disgrace, took poison and died.

ABOUT the same time the king's brother, Mîrza Moham-med Hakim, who commanded at Kâbûl, dying, Akbar sent Râjah Manzing, with 5000 horse, who reduced that kingdom into a province. The wives, children, and chief ministers, being sent to court, the king treated them with great respect; and put his two nephews (one ten and the other seven years old) into the hands of trusty persons to be educated. To the ladies he gave pensions; and to the commanders, troops, or governments.

* DE LAET, p. 190. HERBERT, p. 62.

(I) So named by Herbert; by De Laet, Rhan Tambor.

(K) Herbert says, the castle of Rotas, or Roughtaz, is in

Y 4

MEAN

Berar, a province of Bengâl. It lies on the west side of the Ganges. Rotâs is called Rodas by Tavernier.

3. Soltân Akber.

Rebellions
quashed.

MEAN while (L), Mozaffer Khân rebels in Guzerât, having first strangled Gotâbdas Mohammed Khân, the viceroy, and some other Omrâs. Hereupon, Âbdol Rakîm, son of Khân Kânnâ, and Beyrâm Khân (M), were sent with numerous forces against the enemy, accompanied by Norân Khân and Goufer Khân, sons of Gotâbdas : but, as soon as they arrived on the borders of the province, the army of Mozaffer, consisting of no more than 12,000 horse, was immediately put to flight, and himself taken : but, to prevent an ignominious death, he laid violent hands on himself. Âbdol Rakîm hereupon obtained the name of Khân Kânnâ, and the command of 5000 horse. These advantages did not however establish peace in Akbar's empire ; for Mazenow Khân, Gabiet Khân, Bama Khan, and Mohammed Masûm Khan, some of the Kâbul lords, began a new rebellion in Bengâl. Against them are sent Râjah Thormiel, Wazîr Khân, and Znebhar Khân, with a strong army ; who are twice or thrice defeated, and the general taken prisoner : but, at length, being vanquished, they were all slain in battle, excepting Masûm Khân, who fled ; and, by the troops he carried with him, enabled that rebel to attack the Mogol provinces more vigorously than ever. Znebhar Khân (late president of Kâbul) for this service was made viceroy of Bengâl, and Râjah Thormiel returned to Fettipûr.

Râjahs

compliant.

AT the same time Rajah Râmjend, lord of Bândo (a province adjoining to that of Agrâ, but abounding only with sand and stones), at the persuasion of Râjah Birmuel, went to wait on the king at Fettipûr ; and, never having given any umbrage to Akbar, was received with honour. His example was followed by the rest of the Râjahs, or petty kings : who in this manner began to win the Mogol monarch's friendship, and send him their daughters for concubines ; which laid the foundation of mutual peace and confederacy. At the same time, Akbar, making a progress towards the Ganges, and, being greatly delighted with the place, where the Ziotfa, Beak, and Jemni, meet in that river, ordered a castle to be built there with stone, by skillful architects ; which was five years in erecting, and cost one million two hundred thousand

(L) Herbert places this in the year 968 of the Hejrah, and 1568 of Christ : which of these years he accommodated to the other, we know not ; but the year of Christ 1560 answers to 968 of the Hejrah.

(L) Herbert calls him Âbdal Râjah, Bayram Khân's son. It should be rather Âbdol Rakîm, son of Byran Khân.

rupees, rupees^u. This place, before named Praya, he called El-abâs, or Halabâs^x. 3: Soltân Akber.

AKBAR, having thus subdued all his opponents, and being quite at ease, resolves to go to Lahûr, there to meet Abdollah Khân, son of Iskânder Khân (N), the Uzbek king of Mawara'nâhr, who was come into India to pay him a visit. Mean time, Mîrza Tzarof, having received many injuries from the Uzbeks, came from Badakhân to Fettîpûr, where the court had now continued fifteen years. With this, prince Akbar went to Lahûr, intending to proceed to Kâbul: but, calling to mind that the Ganges was still in the power of the Pâtans, he turned off towards Attek; from whence he sent Jehân Khân and Râjah Birmuel to make war on those people. But the Pâtans, who were subject to Jelâlia Afridi, and Turkoft Ji, seizing the passages of the mountains, made a great slaughter among the Mogol forces, killing Birmuel, and many other Om-râs; so that Chengan Goga, with difficulty, escaped. However, a more numerous army being sent against them, all those provinces, which belonged to Jelâlia and Turkoft, were entirely reduced. The Pâtans overthrown.

SOME time after this, news arrived that Mîrza Mozaffer Kanda-Hoffeyn and Mîrza Rûstan, sons of Mîrza Bayrâm who commanded at Kandahâr, being offended with Shâh Abbâs, son of Khodabandeh, on account of injuries done them, were determined to submit to Akbar: this prince, finding so fair an opportunity offered him of adding that fortress to his empire, sent Kabîk Khân, with 5000 horse; to whom the two brothers immediately delivered up the city, and repaired themselves to Lahûr; where they were kindly received. Akbar's ambition being increased by these successes, he sends Tzedder Khân and Hakîm Khân to Bokhâra, under pretence of condoling Abdallah Khân for the loss of his father Iskânder Khân; but in reality to pry into the state of Mawara'nâhr, which their master longed to unite to his empire. These ambassadors, or rather spies, after a whole year's stay in that country, returned laden with presents, and a full account of the strength of the cities, as well as forces, of the Uzbeks. Kandahâr betrayed.

AKBAR was well pleased with this information; but, before he undertook an expedition of such consequence, he Kashmîr invaded:

^u DE LAET, p. 193. HERBERT, p. 64.

^x DE LAET, p. 71.

(N) In De Laet we read Abdullah Ghan, son of Tsecander Ghan; afterwards Abdul Ghan, and Tfander Ghan: the Elziwer

copy being extremely incorrect, with regard to the proper and local names; which we cannot always rectify.

3. Soltán Akber. judged it proper to reduce Kashmír. To this end he sends Kassim Khán Merbar, and Mirza Ali Chili, with all his forces towards that country; charging them at the same time with letters to Yúsof Khán, the king thereof, wherein he promised not in the least to diminish his authority, provided he submitted, without obliging him to make use of hostilities. Yúsof Khán, upon the receipt of this summons, immediately repairs to Lahúr: but, as he left his son Yakúb behind, Akbar suspected his sincerity, and looked on it as no more than a precarious submission. Nor did he judge amiss; for as soon as Yusof's back was turned, those who had the administration of affairs, disapproving of that measure, prevailed on Yakúb not to bend so tamely to a foreign yoke. The young prince, following their advice, put his little kingdom in a posture of defence, and shut up all the passages into it. This vigorous resolution of the Kashmírians for some time embarrassed Akbar; who considered how difficult it would be to force the kotlen, or straits, of the mountain Bimber, by which only that country was to be entered. However, at length, he detached the above-mentioned generals, with an army of 30,000 horse, accompanied by some Omrás of Kashmír, to whom all the passages were known. As soon as Yakúb received advice of their coming, he sent several of his Omrás, with considerable forces, to defend those straits: but they, being corrupted by the bribes and promises of the Mogols, deserted their posts, and gave the enemy an easy admittance into the kingdom. Akbar's troops halted to the capital, Kashmír; which being unwall'd, they entered at the first attack, and took the young king prisoner; to whom and his father the victor allowed a yearly pension^y.

won by treachery.

Sindi conquered. AFTER this success, Akbar turned his arms against the kingdom of Sindi; whose prince Mirza Jehán was become odious for his tyranny. In this expedition he employed Khán Kánna (with 12,000 men); who, embarking his troops on the Rávi, sailed into the Indus, and thence to Tátta, capital of Sindi; which he besieged. The city held out six months: but, in the seventh, the tyrant, surrendering himself, is sent to court; where he is kindly received, and his kingdom reduced to the form of a province.

Dekán invaded: ABOUT this time, Nezám Sháh, king of Dekán (O), dying, Akbar became desirous to conquer that kingdom also. With this

^y DE LAET, p. 197. HERBERT, p. 66.

(O) Herbert says, he was succeeded by his son Malik Amber; but, according to Van Den Broeck, the founder of Batavia, who this intent he sends Khân Khânnâ from Lahûr, with twenty-two Omrâs and a great army, towards Brâmpûr. Here they were joined by the forces of Râjah Ali Khân, governor of that province; but staid there six months without action: for Jând Bibi, daughter of the late king, governed the kingdom at Amdanâgar with great prudence, and had an army under the conduct of Koja Shuhel, an eunuch, eminent for his courage and activity. This general, with 40,000 horse, including the troops of Viziapûr and Golkondâ, advanced to meet Khân Khânnâ; who, notwithstanding he had scarce 20,000 men with him, yet confiding in the valour of Râjah Ali Khân, Mirza Ked Gassem, descended from Zadet, and others, he ordered them to oppose the enemy with their troops; while he kept at a small distance with a body of 5000 men, in order to send relief from time to time. The battle continued all day and all night; during which time fortune seemed doubtful, and many were killed on both sides: among whom was Râjah Ali Khân. At length, towards morning, the Mogol troops began to give way; which Khân Khânnâ perceiving, he rushed with so much fury upon the fatigued enemy, that he presently obliged them to fly, after the general Koja Shuhel had been slain in the fight. Although this was a signal victory, yet the province of Dekân did not suffer much by it; for the queen took care, with fresh forces, to repel the attacks of the *Mogols*².

3. Soltân Akber.

without success.

HITHERTO every thing succeeded to Akbar's wishes; but, from this time, many misfortunes in his family troubled his reign. In the first place, his desire of conquering Dekân still continuing, he ordered his son Shâh Morâd, who commanded 7000 horse, with Zadok Khân and other Omrâs, to prosecute the war in that country. The prince, arriving at Brampûr with his forces, consumed six months in that city; where he gave himself up so entirely to drinking, that he fell desperately sick. On this news, Akbar sent Abdol Fâzl (P), president of the Divân, formerly Morâd's tutor, to reclaim him: but soon after his arrival the prince died (Q). On his death, many of the Omrâs and Mansebdârs, who accompanied

The war revived.

² DE LAET, p. 200. HERBERT, p. 67.

who was in Mâlek Amber's camp, in 1617, that lord was not Nezâm Shâh's son, but a foreigner, and general of the Dekân armies. By Dekân, or Dekkân, here is to be understood the provinces of Balagât, Baglâna, and Telengâna.

(P) It ought to be Abu'lFazl.

(Q) According to the historians made use of by Mr. Frazer, this happened in the year 1598.

3. Soltân Akber.

him, fled, without any apparent cause. Hereupon Abdol Fâzl took on him the command of the army, and ordered several of the fugitives, who were brought back; to be trodden to death by the elephants. Then sending Morâd's corps to Dehli, and distributing his treasure among the troops, he marched towards Kapûr, and encamped opposite to the enemy.

Barar and Kandish conquered.

THE same year, Akbar gave Dhaen Shâh, or Shah Daniel, the command of 7000 men, and sent him to Elabâs, accompanied by Koutel Mohammed Khân, his chancellor, and other Omrâs, to subdue the rebels, who were in the neighbourhood of that city. Mean time, Abdol Fâzl annexed the provinces of Barâr and Khândîsh to the Mogol empire. After which, he intreated Akbar to remove to Agrâ; alleging, that it would facilitate the conquest of Amdanâgar, Viziapûr, and Golkondâ. The king takes his advice; and leaving Lahûr, where he had resided twelve years, repairs to Agrâ, and there continues a whole year.

War with Râjah Rana:

IN the year of the Hejrah 1005, Akbar thought fit to send his son Shâh Selîm to make war on Râjah Râna Mardout, by far the most powerful of all the Râjahs of Hindústân; who had lately rebelled. The prince was accompanied by Shebher Khân, with 5000 horse; Shâh Kâli Khân Mâhrem, with 3000; Râjah Jaganat, with the same number: besides many other Mansebdârs; which formed a potent army^a.

Hejrah
1005.
A. D.
1596.

A. D.
1598.

and in Dekân:

IN 1007, the king himself departed from Agra, in order to prosecute the Dekân war: but when he had passed the river Nerabeda, the Râjah Bahâdr Shâh, not caring to trust him, put his castle of Hasser in a posture of defence, and furnished it with provisions. This fortress consists of three castles: the first called Kozanin; the second, Kommerghâr; and the third situated on a very high mountain, so that it may be seen at six kos distance. Akbar, judging it dangerous to leave such a place behind him, immediately laid siege to it; and, at length, after six months continual battery, Bahâdr Shâh, finding himself unable to hold out much longer, not only submitted himself on promise of liberty and effects, but, with his relations, entered into the Mogol service.

Shâh Selîm rebels.

HERE Abdol Fâzl met the king, and encouraged him by all means to go on with the war; alleging, that, if he could subdue Dekân, and defeat the kings of Viziapûr and Golkondâ, he would sufficiently exalt his name, and enlarge his empire. But while matters stood thus, news unexpectedly arrived, that Zebhar Khân Kambau, who had accompanied the prince Shâh Selîm, was dead at Azmîr; and that the prince, having feised his treasure, amounting to a krór, or ten millions of rupees, was marched with a numerous body of select troops to Agra, in order to dethrone his father. Hereupon Akbar, leaving his son Sháh Daniel with Abdol Fâzl, Khân Khamzied, Yússuf Khán, and several other Omrás, to proceed to Amdanâgar and Viziapûr, he departed for his capital. Sháh Selím had been there a while before : but, finding that he could not reduce the castle, left the place ; and, passing by the way of Reben and Annewâr, came to Elhabâs, twelve days journey distant. He had, however, gotten into his power several cities (R), in which he placed his own Omrás ; turning out his father's commanders ; to whom the greater part retired, leaving the rest, with all their effects, to Selím.

^a DE LAET, p. 202. HERBERT, p. 67.

As soon as Akbar arrived at Agrâ, he sent letters to his son ; setting before him the judgments threatened by God against disobedient children, and promising to restore him to his favour, in case he returned to his duty. But the rebellious prince, despising his father's admonition, continued to extend his power ; and, having subdued all the country as far as Hassipûr and Pâtan, sent to Rajah Mânzing, viceroy of Bengâl, to deliver up that province to him : but the Rajah rejected his motion. Mean time Daniel Shâh advanced with his army towards Amadnâgar, and came to Gandezîn. On this advice, Jând Bibi shut herself up, with all her father's commanders, in the castle of Amadnâgar, and prepared to undergo a siege. This castle is exceeding strong ; for it is built on an eminence, and surrounded with deep ditches, in which several springs discharge their waters. However, prince Daniel, surrounding the place with his troops, after battering it for above six months, at length took it. A great treasure fell into the victor's hands ; but the princess Jând Bibi had before made herself away by poison. After this Soltân Daniel, having given the command of the place to Koja Bik Mirza, went and reduced the provinces of Gandes and Berar (S) ; which done, he returned to Brampûr ; where ambassadors came to him with rich presents, and submissive letters, from the kings of Golkondâ and Viziapûr. The prince did nothing remarkable from this time forward ; but gave himself up intirely to drinking ^b.

^b DE LAET, p. 205, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 68.

(R) As Siapūr, Bahar, Kalpi, Laknow, Oude, Beraghe, Kersama, Melpūr, Kera, Gastanpūr, Ghanouts, and other places.

(S) These are the same with Khândish and Barâr, already said to have been subdued by this prince.

3. Soltân Akber.
Shâh Selim's infolence.

AT the same time, Shâh Selim sent Koja Jêhân to his father, pretending sorrow for having offended him. Hereupon Akbar writes to him, giving him hopes of pardon, in case he without delay came and asked it. Jêhân, after six months stay at Agrâ, returns, and so wrought on the rebel son, that he resolves to submit himself. Accordingly he sets forward, and on the road writes to acquaint his father with his coming : but, as he had now on foot an army of 70,000 select troops, he required not only that his commanders might keep what had been given to them, but also that they should not be considered as rebels. Neither of these two things Akbar would grant : upon which, the prince returned to Elabâs ; where he not only coined money in his own name, but, to provoke his father the more, sent some of it to him. Akbar, unable to bear such an affront, wrote an account of the whole affair to Abdol Fâzl ; who sent back for answer, that he would be with his majesty as soon as possible, and did not doubt but to manage things so as to bring the prince bound before him.

Abdol Fâzl slain.

ABDOL Fâzl upon this, taking leave of Daniel Shâh, with two or three hundred horse sets out for Agrâ. Mean time, Shâh Selim, who was acquainted with all which passed, calling to mind, that Fâzl always bore him an ill-will ; and therefore fearing that he would incense his father still more against him, judged it best to intercept him. To this end he sent to Râjah Bersing Bondela, who, at that time, resided in the province of Ofsîn ; desiring him to way-lay Fâzl between Sâr and Gwaliyâr, and send him his head ; promising, for that piece of service, to give him the command of 5000 horse. The Râjah consents ; and, with 1000 horse, and 3000 foot, encamps three or four kos from Gwaliyâr, placing spies in the neighbouring villages, to give him early notice of Fâzl's approach. When the Wazîr, ignorant of the snares laid for him, was passed Kollebâga, on the way to Sâr, Râjah Bersing rushes on him with his troops ; which were placed on both sides of the road. Hereupon began a fierce engagement ; in which Abdol Fazl and his followers behaved courageously : but, being oppressed with numbers, they were almost all slain. Fâzl himself (T), after having received twelve wounds, was taken, by the information of a captive slave, under a neighbouring tree, and had his head cut off.

Shâh Daniel dies.

THE head, being sent to the prince, transported him with joy : on the contrary, the king, when he heard of the death of that minister, whom he intirely loved, was extremely af-affected; and for three days did not appear in public. Nor did Akbar's sorrows end here: for not long after news arrived of the death of Shâh Daniel (U) at Brâmpûr, occasioned by excessive drinking; which affected him so much, that his life became a burthen to him. At length, recovering from his grief, he sent for Khân Khânnâ to court; and was so enraged at him, for not taking more care of his son, that for some time he would not admit him into his presence: but at length, by the persuasion of his Omrâs, he received him into favour; and, constituting him general in chief, sent him back to the army in Dekân^c.

(T) This is the famous Abu'l ma. mentioned in a note at the beginning of this reign.

AKBAR, who all this while retained his anger against his son Selîm, now resolved to turn his arms against him. He had already passed the river Semena (or Jemni) when, advice coming from court that his mother was fallen sick, he returned to Agrâ; two days after which she died, and was buried in the sepulchre of her son Hemayûn, at Dehli. As soon as these ceremonies were over, Akbar dispatched Mirafeddâr, who had been Selîm's tutor, with letters to that prince; wherein, after reproaching him severely for his rebellion, he put him in mind, that, as he was now his only son and heir, he was ready to receive him into favour, provided he came and humbled himself. Selîm, moved by his father's letters, and the persuasions of Mirafeddâr (X), set out with his son Soltân Perwîs from Elabâs, in the year 1013; and passing the Jemni with his army, the second day after, as it had been judged lucky by the astrologers, he arrived at the castle of Agrâ; where he was introduced to his father by Mortôsa Khân. When, according to the custom of the country, he fell down before the throne, his father, taking hold of his hand, carried him into the mâhl, or inner apartment, and, falling into a great rage, gave him several blows in the face (Y); at the same time upbraiding him with his wicked attempts. Then, changing his strain, he reflected on him for want of courage; who, having had 70,000 troops at his command, should yet so tamely come and submit himself, in that cringing manner. After this, he ordered him to be carried to an-

3. Soltân
Akber.

Selîm submits:

A. D.
1604.

received to favour.

^c DE LAET, p. 208, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 70, & seq.

(U) This happened in 1604, according to Frazer.

(X) Herbert calls him Myrad Zeda.

(Y) Herbert says, he struck him so hard and often on the mouth, that the prince, throwing himself on the ground, opened his breast, and offered at his father's command to kill himself.

other

3. Soltān
Akber.

other court of the palace, and confined. His Omrās likewise, excepting Rājah Batso, who had fled in time, were seized, and conducted to prison, loaded with irons. Selīm, who used to take opium every day, stunned with this unexpected usage, forbore taking opium for twenty-four hours : but next day, the king, going to see him, gave him some with his own hand. On the third, all the ladies of the māhl waited on Akbar, and intreated pardon for the prince ; which having obtained, he was sent to his own apartments. From thence he daily came, accompanied with a great train, to salute his father : but certain courtiers having infused a suspicion into the old king's mind, that Selīm intended him some mischief, he was ordered to come for the future attended only by four of his Omrās.

Akbar's
death :

AKBAR did not long survive this reconciliation : for, being incensed against Mirza Gaja (Z), son of Mirza Jehān, who governed Sinda and Tātta, on account of some insolent expression which dropped from him, he resolved to get rid of that lord by poison. To this end, he orders his physician to prepare two pills in the same form, and put poison in one of them ; resolving to give this to Gaja, and take the other himself : but, after holding the pills in his hand for some time, he happened to give to Mirza the sound pellet, and swallowed the infectious one himself. As soon as he discovered his error, he took remedies, although it was then too late. On occasion of this accident, Selīm paying him a visit, he put his own turbān upon the prince's head, and girt him with his father Hemayūn's sword : but ordered him not to act within the palace, nor visit him till he was recovered. However, Akbar died the twelfth day after he had taken the fatal pill^d, in the Year 1014 (A).

A. D.
1605.

ACCORDING to the Christian account, his death happened on the twelfth of October, 1605, at the age of sixty-three solar years and one day ; of which he had reigned forty-nine

^d DE LAET, p. 211, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 71.

(Z) Herbert calls him Mirza Geshā, and says the Mirza brought the pills himself ; and, being ordered to take one, took the best ; which Akbar, by mistaking the mark, believed to be the poison-pill, and so took the other without hesitation. Terry, sect. 28. relates the story as in the text.

(A) Herbert makes it 984 ; we presume, by subtracting 620 from 1604, the year of Christ ; mistaking the Mohammedan for solar years.

solar

solar years, eight months, and one day (B). His body was interred in the burying-place of Sekandra, near Agrâ (C).

AKBAR had three sons; Soltân Selîm, Soltân Morâd, and Soltân Daniel: of whom the two latter died before their father; one in 1598, the other in 1604, as hath been already remarked. He had likewise three daughters; Shâh Zâdeh Khânûm, that is, the royally born lady; Shahr Nissa Begum, or the sweetest of women princesses: and Arâm Bânû Begum, or the calm and peaceful princesses.

3. Soltân Akber.

his children.

BEFORE we pass to this monarch's successor, we shall take farther notice of an affair, which we have already mentioned in the beginning of Akbar's reign^f. It has been there observed, that, in 1582, Akbar wrote to the king of Portugal, desiring a translation of the scriptures into the Arabik or Persian; and withal, that he would send him some person of learning to explain the Christian religion. Our author, Frazer, is not sure whether that letter went farther than Goa; but supposes the sending of Geronimo Xavier, a relation of the famous St. Francis Xavier, was in consequence thereof. However, the journey of this missionary to the court of Akbar seems rather to have been the effect of another letter from that monarch thirteen years after; viz. in 1595, to Mathias De Albuquerque, the then Portuguese viceroy in the East Indies, for some priests to be sent to him. The persons pitched on for this mission were the before-mentioned Geronimo Xavier, then rector of the Jesuits college at Goa; Emanuel Pigueira, and Benedict Goes (D), two others of the same society.

Account of Xavier:

ON their arrival at Agra, they were very kindly received by the Great Mogol; who built them a church there, and granted them many privileges; which, after his death, were all confirmed by his successor.

his spurious gospel.

AT Akbar's command, Xavier wrote two books in the Persian language. The first, intituled the History of Jesus, collected for the most part out of the Romish legends, which he intended to substitute among the Mohammedans, instead of the gospel. The second was called, A Looking-glass shewing the Truth, and contains a defence of the doctrines of that gospel against the Mohammedans. Xavier, having learned the Persian, in order to obey the king's command, first wrote

^e FRASER's Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 18. ^f See before, p. 321.

(B) De Laet says, he reigned 60 years: Herbert, only 25; and that he lived 73.

(C) De Laet, and after him Herbert, writes Tzekander; which is three kos from Agra. The sepulchre was not then finished.

(D) He went from Agrâ, in 1603, to China; and was the first missionary who went thither by land.

3. Soltân
Akber.

his History of Jesus; which he presented in 1602: the Looking-glass was not published till a year or two after. When it first came abroad, it unluckily fell into the hands of a learned Persian nobleman, of Ispâhân in Persia, named Ahmed ebn Zeyn Alabo'ddîn; who immediately wrote an answer to it, which he calls The Brusher, or burnisher, of the Looking-glass; wherein he makes terrible work with the Jesuit, thro' the advantages which he gave him, by teaching the idolatry, superstitions, and errors, of the church of Rome, for the doctrines of Christ.

hurts Christianity.

WHEN this book (which is reckoned the most acute of any that has been written by the Mohammedans against the Christian religion) first appeared, it so alarmed the college de propaganda fide, at Rome, that they immediately ordered it to be answered by Bonaventura Malvasia, a Franciscan frier of Bononia; who published his Dilucidatio Speculi Verum Monstrantis, in 1628. But, this not being judged by the college to be a sufficient reply, they appointed Philip Guadagnol, another Franciscan frier, to write a second answer; which he composed under the title of Apologia pro Christiana Religione. This was published in Latin at Rome, in 1631; and, being better approved of than the former, by the college, the author was ordered to translate it into Arabik. This being performed in 1637, they sent it into the east, to be dispersed among the Mohammedans: but his performance, saith our author Docteur Prideaux, doth by no means answer the design, as abundance of his arguments are drawn from the authorities of popes and councils; which will never convince an infidel of the truth of the Christian religion.

C H A P. VI.

The Reign of Jehân Ghîr, surnamed Nuroddin Mohammed.

4. Soltân
Jehân
Ghîr.

AS soon as Akbar was dead, the principal Omrâs, who were about him, shut all the gates of the castle of Agra, and gave the keeping of them to their most trusty officers. This done, Mortâza Khân, Seyfê Khân, Kili Mohammed Khân, Râjah Ramdas, and Râjah Mansing, met together at the house of Khân Azem, to consult what was best to be done at this critical juncture. Khân Azem and Râjah Mansing were for placing Soltân Abosraw, son of Soltan Selîm, on the throne : but Rājah Ramdās, who had four or five thousand Rāspūts within call, opposed their motion ; and, seizing the treasury, would suffer nobody to meddle with the cash. Mean time, Soltān Selīm, being informed of his father's death, assembled his Omrās at his palace, and acquainted them with the designs of his adversaries : but, in the interim, Mortāza Khān, to whom the chief gate of the castle was intrusted, went out to the prince, and saluted him king. His example was followed by the Nabāb Sayel Khān, his son Kūli Mohammed Khān, and soon after by Khān Azem himself : but Rājah Manfing, passing out by the gate which faces the river, carried Soltān Khosraw with him in a boat to his own house.

§ See PRIDEAUX's Life of Mohammed, p. 155, & seqq.

SELIM, having now gained all the principal Omrās to his interest, went with them on foot, attending the corps of his father, and buried him in great pomp. Then, returning to the castle, they crowned him, and gave him the name of Mohammed Jehān Ghir (A). Three days after, Soltān Khosraw was taken out of the hands of Rājah Manfing and Khān Azem, and brought to court ; where his father seemed to be reconciled to him. Moreover, the coronation of Jehan Ghir being soon made known in foreign countries, ambassadors arrived from Persia, Tartary, Golkondā, Viziapūr, Dekān, and the neighbouring Rājahs, with magnificent gifts, to felicitate his accession to the throne.

AT this time the following provinces were subject to him ; Provinces Kandahār, Kābūl, Kashmīr, Ghaffanī and Benazad, Guzerāt, subject to Sindi, or Tātta, Gandhees (B), Brampūr, Barar, Bengāl, him. Orixa (or Orissa), Odē, Malow (or Malva), Agra, and Dehli ; out of which the annual tax, according to the register of Akbar, amounted to six arabs and ninety-eight krons of dams (C).

IN 1015, which was the first of Jehan Ghir, this king, Soltān jealous of his son Khosraw, asked Mirza Omra (D), his chief Khosraw fies :

(A) Or more fully, Nūro'ddīn Mohammed Jehān Ghir, that is, the light of religion, Mohammed the conqueror of world ; which titles, as Frazer observes, Selīm assumed himself on his ascending the throne, on the 21st of October, 1605 ; at what time he was aged about 30 solar years, having been born at Fattehpūr, on the 19th of August, 1569.

(B) Perhaps Khandish.

(C) A dam is the fortieth part of a rupee, which is two shillings and six-pence English : 100,000 rupees make one lak ; 100 laks, one kror ; and 100 krons, one arrib. Fras. Hist Nadir Shāh. p. 25, & seq.

(D) Mirza Omra is doubtless a mistake for Mirzō'l Omra, or Mir al Omra, that is, the prince of princes, the first and most honourable post at the Mogol's court. It is the same with Amir al Omra of the Arabs.

4. Soltân
Jehân
Ghir.

A. D.
1606.

besieges
Lahûr
castle :

minister, what was the proper course to be taken with him? The Mirza answered, to deprive him of sight. But, while the king delayed coming to a resolution, the prince, who had discovered what was in agitation against him, writes to his friend Hassan Bek (E), to hasten towards Agra with his choicest troops, and carry him off to Lahûr. Hassan Bek, whom Akbar before his death had sent to Kabûl to collect the revenue of that province, upon receipt of Khesraw's letter, immediately set forward with two or three thousand horse; and, being arrived at Akbarpûr, within twenty kos of Agra, the prince, with 500 young men, departed in the evening from the castle, the Kotwal Koja Mâlek Ali not daring to hinder him. In their way, they put out the lights everywhere, and plundered some shops; then getting into the fields, early in the morning arrived at Akbarpûr; from whence they hastened to Lahûr ^a.

As soon as the king was informed of his son's flight, he sent the Kotwal Koja in pursuit of him, with 300 horse: he was followed the same night by Mortâza Khân, with 1500 more; and the king himself, by the persuasion of Mirza Omra, set out in the morning after the rest, with the swiftest elephants, and several Omrâs. These four parties were not above ten kos one before the other. The prince plundered all the country people along the road, took the king's horses out of the stables, and whatever merchants he met with carried them with him: so that on the ninth day, when he arrived at Lahûr, he had gathered a tolerable army. But Ibrâhîm Khân, the Pâtan, whom the king had a little while before made governor of Lahûr, getting into the castle before the prince could come up, shut the gates against him.

THIS was an unlucky accident; but he met with another presently after, still more mortifying: for, hearing that Sayd Khân was encamped with his people, only three kos from the city, in his way to Bangbe, he sent to desire him to join his forces. Sayd Khân seemed to consent; but, when he came with the soldiers of the prince to the river Râvi, he deceived them, and brought the boat to the castle (F).

he retreats :

MEAN time, Jalâl'd'dîn Hassan came from the king, to offer the prince Kabul and Bangshâl, provided he could quit Lahûr. But Akhesraw demanded, that all the country of Serbina

^a DE LAET's Ind. Vera, p. 214. HERBERT, p. 72.

(E) Herbert calls him governor of Kabul. was taken, but by a bribe escaped to Hassan Bek.

(F) De Laet says, the prince should be yielded to him : and as he found this treaty was set on foot only to delay time, till the Imperial forces came up, so soon as he heard that the king had passed the river at Soltânpûr, and that Mortâza Khân was ready to cross the Nakhod, he breaks up from before Labûr castle, after a fortnight's siege ; and with 20,000 men turns back, determined to give his father battle. When he had proceeded about 30 kos, he came to a place, where Mortâza Khân, apprised of his march, had already posted himself, having with him scarce 300 men. Although it happened to be a very rainy and tempestuous day, yet the prince ordered his troops to attack the Khân's ; which they did, at first, by light skirmishes. In a little time they were quite surrounded, and Shâh Khelial, the commander, slain ; when Koja Mâlek arrived seasonably with the royal standard, and gave out aloud, that the king himself was at hand. This news so much animated the Imperial troops, and dispirited the prince's, that Abdol Râjah, his standard-bearer threw it on the ground, and fled. The rest of his forces were so confounded at this action, that, concluding Khosraw was slain, they took to flight also, and dispersed. Thus were they for the most part slain, or taken, with all their baggage, either by the country-people, or the troops of the king ; who, when he had joined Mortâza Khân, in memory of this great victory, called the place Fettîpûr^b (G).

and is defeated:

THE prince, accompanied by Hassan Beg, Khân Pâdishâh, and Abdol Râjah, hastened back to Labûr ; where leaving the Râjah, he, with Pâdishâh, crossed the Râvi, in order to get to the strong castle of Rantas. But, coming to pass the Chenâb, the watermen, by the direction of the sons of Kâssef Khân Nimek, who commanded the garrison there, when the boat was in the middle of the stream, jumped out ; and, swimming to the other side, left the prince and Hassan Beg in the power of their enemies. Being brought to the king, who by this time had passed the river Latir (H), he returned with them to Labûr ; where Abdol Râjah was drawn out of his concealment. To punish the rebels now in his power, he orders the peasants to fix without delay a long series of sharp stakes on each side of the road ; on which some were impaled, and others hung upon trees. This done, the taken prisoner.

^b DE LAET, ubi supr. p. 217, & seqq.. HERBERT, p. 73.

(G) Or Fattehpûr, that is, the place of victory. Herbert mistakes this for the city of Fettîpûr, which is but twelve kos from Agra ; whereas this place is but thirty kos south of Labûr.

(H) Herbert says, it is seven days journey from Rantas.

4. Soltân
Jehân
Ghîr.

king carries the captive prince with him towards the city; and, the more to mortify him, had him set on an elephant with Zemâna Bek (afterwards called Mohabet Khân) behind him, in order to shew him the criminals as they passed along, and tell him their names (I). When they arrived at Labur, he was given in custody to the same lord; and Hassan Bek Pâdishâh, being sewed up in a raw hide, was left to die in horrible torment. Afterwards his head was cut off, and sent to Agra, to be fixed on the castle gate.

A new
conspiracy.

THIS rebellion being thus quashed, Jehân Ghîr for some time took the pleasure of hunting; and, when he had staid four months at Labur, set out to visit Kâbul. Soltân Khosraw still remained confined, the Omrâs and Mansebdârs, by turns, guarding him. One day, as Mirza Fetulla, son of Hâker Mirza Sharîf, son of the Etimado'ddawlet, Mirza Murôddîn, nephew of the great Affos Khân, Mirza Jâffer Bek, and several other Omrâs, were upon that duty, they conspired among themselves to slay the king in passing the Kâbul mountains, and set Khosraw upon the throne: but a proper opportunity not offering, Jehân Ghîr got safe to that city.

Shîr Afghân
slain.

MEAN time, the Etimado'ddawlet, who was great treasurer, is accused by Ottem chend, one of his Indian slaves, of having converted fifty millions of rupees to his own use, and is committed to the custody of Dianet Khân. Moreover, in the year 1018, the king received advice, that Shîr Afkân Khân (K), son-in-law of the imprisoned treasurer, had slain Kotho'ddîn Mohammed Khân Goga, viceroy of Bengâl, at Râjah Mâhl. Sheykh Ghiatho'ddîn, the brother, and Kizwer Khân, the son of the viceroy, revenged his death, and sent Shîr Afkân's head to Agra (L). They likewise imprisoned his brother Gommer, with his son and mother: also his wife Mehîr Mejam, daughter of the Etimado'ddawlet; whom they treated in a very ignominious manner.

A. D.
1609.

(I) According to Terry, sect. 28, there were 800 thus impaled; and the king himself shewed them to the prince, who told his father, that he ought to have spared them, and served him so; adding, that he had no pleasure in life after beholding the execution of so many brave men.

(K) Shîr Afkân signifies the lion-exercitator. It is written in the copy of De Laet, Affen; elsewhere, Affegan. He is afterwards said to have been a Turk. Frazer says, of a Turkmân family, which came from Persia. He was esteemed the bravest man in the army.

(L) Frazer says, p. 21, that, for sake of his exquisitely beautiful wife, Jehân Ghîr sent Shîr Afkân, with some troops, to command a place in Bengâl, and afterwards sent another with a greater force, to cut him off.

THIS murder greatly aggravated Jehân Ghîr's resentment against this last-mentioned lord : but what soon after happened completed his ruin. For just as the king was ready to return to Lahûr, Keja Veîz comes, and both by word of mouth, and in writing, accuses the above-mentioned lords, and several others, of a plot against his majesty's life. Jehân Ghîr, highly enraged at this treason, ordered all the conspirators, with the Etimâd'oddawlet, to be brought before him bound. This being done, he commanded their heads to be cut off, and their bodies fixed upon the battlements ; only the Etimâd'oddawlet, at the request of his keeper, was pardoned, on promise of paying eleven lak (M) of rupees for his life ; but led back to prison in the most disgraceful manner. After this, the king left Kâbul, and returned to Lahûr ; where, by the counsel of Mîrza Omra, and other lords, he ordered Soltân Khosraw to be deprived of sight, with the juice of ack leaves ; which yet did not so effectually blind him (N), but that he could see a little with one eye.

4. SoltânJehân Ghîr.

The plot discovered.

AT the same time, Jehân Ghîr vented his anger against Khân Azem, father-in-law of the prince, on account of this latter. After confiscating all his effects, he ordered him to be brought before him, cloathed in a disgraceful manner, and all the Omrâs to spit on his beard. Then he sent him loaded with chains to the castle of Gwâliyâr, where he was imprisoned : but at the end of two years he was, by the intercession of some ladies of the Harâm, restored to favour and his places at court. The same year (O) Mîrza Omra was rendered Conspirators punished.

(M) That is 132,550 pounds sterling ; reckoning the lak at 12,500 pounds. Herbert says, he paid 200,000.

(N) Terry, sect. 28. says, his eyes were sealed up, by something put before them, which was not to be taken off for three years ; at the end of which, the seal was removed, that he might freely enjoy the light, though not his liberty. He doubtless seemed to have his sight perfectly, to this author ; who often saw him following the king in his progresses ; particularly once, when he stopped to talk to Sir Thomas Roe. Terry says, he had a very lovely presence, and fine carriage. Sir Thomas himself only says, that his person was comely, his countenance chearful, and his beard grown down to his girdle. He was attended with no great guard ; and his questions shewed ignorance of all that was done at court. Roe's Journal. Church's Coll. & Trav. vol. i. p. 718.

(O) That is, in 1609. Herbert says, that this year the Jesuits, with Jehân Ghîr's consent, baptised three of his brother's sons, by the names of Philippo, Carlo, and Henrico ; with another grandson of Akbar, whom they called Don Ebnâd.

4. Soltân
Jehân
Ghîr.

dered incapable of business, by losing the use of one side, after the fit of an apoplexy; and Salâm Khân, who acted the part of Fauzdar (P) at Agra, or rather that of captain of the robbers in the neighbouring country, was made governor of Bengâl, in the room of Kothboddîn Khân, slain as above-mentioned^c.

MehrMeja, or Nûr Mâhl:

THE king, having gotten his fill of hunting, and intending to return to Agra, gave permission to the Etimâdo'ddawlet, and his keeper Dianet Khân, with all his family, to repair to that city, in order to collect his fine of rupees, and soon after came thither himself. From thence he wrote to Salâm Khân, to send him with all speed the family of Shîr Affegân; namely, his widow Meher Meja, and his brother. Salâm obeys the order, and the parties set forward. When they had entered the province of Bahâr, a Darwish, reported to have foretold many things, accosts Meher Meja on the road; and, looking her in the face, predicts her favour with the king, and future splendor. As soon as they arrived at Agra, the brother and son of Shîr Affeghân were given in charge to the Omràs: but Meher Meja and her young daughter were introduced to Rokkia Soltân Begum, the king's mother; who, embracing her with the greatest affection, could scarce ever after bear her to be out of her sight.

brought to
court:

SOON after, the queen mother happening to carry Meher Meja into the mâhl, or women's apartment, the king came in; and, putting aside her veil, looks in her face. A few days after this, on the feast of the new year (called by the Mohammedans Nova Rosa) (Q), the king being very merry among his ladies, Meher Meja brought her daughter, but six years old, before the king; who, deeply enamoured with the mother, said with a smile, Henceforward, I will be father to 1610.

Hejrah

^c DE LAET, p. 220, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 74, & seq.

He said, that the king was prevailed on to suffer this, by the persuasion of his son Soltân Khôim and his friend, in order to make his way the easier to the throne.

(P) It ought, no doubt, to have been Fojhdâr, an officer who has command of a body of horse, and is entrusted with the care of the suburbs and out-parts. Fraser.

(Q) This does not mean the new rose, although the English comes nearer the true word than the Latin; but Newrûz, or Nawrûz, which, in the Persian, signifies the new day, or, if you will, new year's day. The names throughout the original are so corrupted, or disfigured, by the Dutch spelling, we cannot warrant many of them to be right, as we have reduced them to the English idiom.

this child. The lady answered, that she was an unhappy widow, unworthy to be numbered among his majesty's wives; and only desired he would have pity on her daughter, and do something for her. After this, Jehân Ghîr became so doatingly fond of Meher Meja, that every evening he went by water to the Etimâdo'ddawlet's house, and did not return to his palace till early in the morning. He had loved her when a virgin, in his father Akbar's life-time; but, as she had been espoused to Shîr Afkân, his father would not give her to him for a wife: for all this, he still retained an affection for her.

4. *Soltân
Jehân
Ghîr.*

AFTER he had thus for forty nights made his court to her, he orders Koja Abdol Hassan to go and demand her of the Etimâdo'ddawlet; for that he was determined to marry her, and give her the precedence of all his other wives. Abdol Hassan, going about to remonstrate how dishonourable it would be to his majesty, to marry the daughter of an infamous person, Jehân Ghîr bade him angrily begone, and obey his commands. The Etimâdo'ddawlet received the royal message, and, having declared himself unworthy of the honour designed him, gives his consent; after which, a fortunate day being fixed, the king married her, and changed her name to that Nûr Jehân Begum (R). In short, he loved her to such excess, that he not only preferred her to all his other wives, and gave her father the command of 5000 horse, but also conferred honours and places at court on all her relations.

marries
Jehân
Ghîr.

IN the year 1020 of the Hejrah, and sixth of his reign, he sent the Nabâb Mortâza Khân, with his youngest son Soltân Shehriâr (S), with absolute command, into Guzerât; Khân Jehân, with several Omrâs, to Brampûr; the province of Khor was given to Khân Khânna; and Mohabet Khân was sent with an army to make war upon Râjah Râna. The same year arrived Zeynel Bek, ambassador from Shâh Abbâs, king of Persia, with a magnificent equipage, and very rich presents. He was received with great honour, and sent back with presents suitable to the occasion. In Bengâl, the territory of Râjah Kots is reduced into a province by Salau Khân (T); and Murfa Khân, son of Hissâ Khân, with many other lords, brought into subjection to Jehân Ghîr. As for Mohabet Khân, sent against Râjah Rana (U), after taking some towns from Râjah Mardout, he was recalled to court; and Abdol Khân, with other Omrâs, sent to command the army in his room.

Preferments at court.
A. D.
1611.

(R) In De Laet, Nourziam Begum. It signifies the lady, who is the light of the world.

(S) Shehriâr, or Shehr riyar, that is, the friend of the city. In De Laet it is written Tzerriar.

(T) Before called Tzalam, or Salam Khân.

(U) Herbert calls him Rana, or Rubanna of Mindow.

WHEN

4. Sôltân
Jehân Ghir.

War against Râna :

WHEN Abdol Khân arrived at Sissimâr, he was met by an army of Râspûts; whom Râna had sent to oppose him: but he fell on them with such vigour, that, being quickly routed, they fled to Oudepûr. That province being thus subdued, the wives and children of the Indian inhabitants were carried into slavery. From thence he marched with his army to Sacwend, where the ancestors of Râna formerly had their palace: for it was a place so strongly fenced, being surrounded with impenetrable woods and delarts, that the kings of Dekli never durst attempt it. But Abdol Khân, commanding his pioneers to cut down the trees, and open passages through the rocks, by degrees cleared the way to Sacwend. When Râna saw this, he left two or three thousand Râspûts, with a great deal of provision, in the castle; then, taking with him his domestics and women, withdrew into the woods and mountains.

His country
reduced.

MEAN time Abdol Khân sits down before the castle, and, making a wall with the trees which had been cut down, attacked the place with such vigour, that at length he took it, after all the garrison had been slain. As soon as he had taken possession, he ordered all the pagods, or Hindû temples, to be destroyed, which had stood for above one thousand years; and, in their room, a stately Masjid to be erected. At the same time, he pursued Râna so closely, that, after obliging him several times to shift his quarter, he at length forced him to leave his provinces at the mercy of his enemies. Jehân Ghir, highly pleased with Abdol Khân's proceedings, sends him next into Guzerât, to command there; with particular orders to pursue the Bielgrats and Kowlis, who infested the ways, and robbed the karawans, and either reduce them to obedience, or quire extirpate them. In his march, many Rajahs and their subjects met him, with presents, and voluntarily submitted; excepting Rajah Eder and Lach Kowli, who, trusting in the ruggedness of their country, refused to come in^d.

Successes in Guzerât.

ABDOL KHÂN, resolved to humble them, as soon as he had gotten to Abmad abad, marched at the head of 500 select men, with so much speed, that he arrived at the castle of Eder, seventy kos distant, before the garrison knew any thing of his coming. However the Rajah ventured out to meet him with his followers: but, by a smart conflict of some hours continuance, was so roughly handled, that he was compelled to fly, accompanied by only four or five of his soldiers; leaving his castles and treasures to be possessed by the victor.

^d DE LAET, p. 224, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 75, & seqq.

Not long after, Abdel Khân, being informed, that Lael Kowli ^{4. Soltân} had robbed a karawân of all its merchandises, moved towards ^{Jehân} him with an army : the Kowli, far from retreating, met him ^{Ghir.} with two or three thousand horse, and ten or twelve thousand foot. But, after a bloody engagement, the victory fell to Abdel Khân ; and Lael himself having been slain in the battle, his head was cut off, and set over the gate of Ahmed abad.

MEAN time, Khân Jehân, who was sent against Mâlek ^{Mâlek} Amber, king of Dekân, finding he made no progress, chiefly ^{Amber} through the discord among the commanders, sent to desire ^{attacked.} Jehân Ghir to command the army. The king hereupon sent Soltân Parweis, accompanied by Rajah Ramdas ; who, being arrived at Brampûr with his forces, wrote to Adel Khân, and Kothb Mâlek (X), to know why the accustomed tribute was not paid : and, being answered, that it had been ready a considerable while, he sent a person to receive it. As soon as he had secured the money, he dispatches Khân Jehân, Rajah Mansing, and Rajah Ramdas, with a strong army, into Ballagât, against Mâlek Amber ; who, with his forces, daily encountered them. After this, Jehân Ghir sent Khân Azem, with three or four thousand soldiers more, to Brampûr, and removed himself to Azmîr. Mean time advice arrived, that Rajah Râna had appeared in the field again, and recovered Oudenpûr, Pormândel, and other neighbouring places. Here- ^{Râna sub-} upon, the king sent against him his son Soltân Kourm, with a ^{mits.} potent army. The prince, advancing to Oudenpûr, sent out troops on all sides ; whereby Râna was hemmed in so straitly, that he intreated Kourm to mediate his pardon with the king ; and, at the Soltân's demand, sent his son Karen, as a pledge of his fidelity, with rich presents, valued at 100,000 rupees. With these he repaired to Azmîr, and made peace for Râna with his father, who kept Karen about him, and gave him the above-mentioned places.

KHAN Azem, being arrived at Brampûr with his forces, ^{Dekân in-} sent to Khân Khanna, who resided in the kingdom of Khûr, ^{vaded.} to join him. After which, it was resolved in a council of war, that the Rajahs Abdel Hassan, Mansing, and Ramdas, with several Omrâs, should march before towards Ballagât, while Khân Khanna and Khân Jehân followed with the rest of the troops. Mâlek Amber, on the news of their march, set out to meet them, with 50,000 forces ; 20,000 of his own, 20,000 brought by Adel Khân, and 10,000 by Kothb

(X) Rather Adel Shâh and the kings themselves ; that of Kothb Shâh ; the first, king of Khân being given them by the Viziapûr, the other of Golkondî : Mogols, by way of contempt. for Shâh was the title used by Mâlek.

4. Soltân
Jehân
Ghîr.

Mâlek. Hereupon Jehân Ghîr ordered Abdol Khân, who then commanded in Guzerât, to set out in haste with all his troops for Dekân. By this time, the Mogol army was advanced as far as Kerki, the regal seat of Dekân, but not inclosed with walls, yet within five or six kos of Dawlet abad, a very strong fortress. Mâlek Amber, being determined to fight them, sent Fossen to defeat Abdol Khân before he could join the other forces : but when he drew near, and found those forces to amount to no fewer than 100,000 horse, he became astonished, and fled with only a few followers; leaving in the camp Molhena Mohammed Lâri, and the Wakil of Adel Khân, who, with 20,000 men, were come to assist him.

Notable
stratagem.

WHEN therefore the king of Dekân saw, that he was no match for the Mogols, he had recourse to stratagem. He ordered counterfeit letters to be written, giving an account, that Jehân Ghîr was dead; and contrived, by unknown messengers, to convey them to the hands of Râjah Mansing, Râjah Ramdas, and Khân Khânna. The Omrâs, giving credit to these letters, immediately break up their camp, and in great haste return to Brâmpûr. Abdol Khân, deceived by the same artifice, distributes his forces into garrisons, and marches back to Guzerât. Mâlek Amber, being thus delivered from his enemies, quickly recovered the places which they had taken from him, and fortified them with new works. When Jehân Ghîr heard how his generals had been duped, he was greatly incensed at their easy credulity; which he severely chastised in his letters to them. When he got to Mândow, he sent Mchabet Khân to command in Brâmpûr, and the province of Barar; who was so fortunate, as, in a short while, to reduce the whole country a second time as far as Kerki. After Jehân Ghîr had resided for one year and five months at Mândow, he proceeded to Guzerât; from whence, being come to Ahmed abad, he sent Abdol Khân to govern the province of Kalpi and Khûr. Then, having diverted himself another year with hunting, returns to Agra.

Commo-
tions in Bengal:

AT this time, Shâh Bek, governor of Kandahâr, being superannuated, the king recalls him, and places Bahâdr Khân, the Uzbek, in his room. He likewise dispatched Sejad Khân to Salâm Khân, viceroy of Bengal, that he might place him in the government of Odia: but Osman Khân, the Pâtan, who for many years had been master of the country lying between that city and Dauk (or Daka) came in the mean time, with a great army, and besieged the latter. Upon this advice, Salâm Khân moved towards him with his forces, sending before Sejad Khân, Mirza Effagher, and other Omrâs; while he followed

lowed about fifteen kos behind with the rest of his troops to support them. The two armies meeting, Effagher and Mirîk Jehân Ghîr gave the enemy so furious an onset, that they obliged them to fall back : but Ozmân sending a fierce elephant among them, they, in their turn, were obliged to give way, and Effagher was slain. Sejad Khân also himself, to avoid that furious animal, threw himself off the elephant which he rode on, and broke his leg in such a manner, that his people had much ado to carry him out of the battle. Hereupon the Mogols began to fly on every side : and had been utterly overthrown, had not an unexpected accident restored the fight. For a soldier, who lay wounded on the ground, happening to hit Ozmân in the eye with a knobbed stick, as he rode by on his elephant, that Pâtan soon after died of the wound ; which so terrified his soldiers, that they immediately fled. Salân Khân, being informed by a courier of the victory, arrived two days after on the field of battle ; and, finding Sejad Khân dead of his wound, set himself in pursuit of the enemy. By forced marches, he at length overtook the brother, widow, and children of Ozmân Khân, whom he seized, with the elephants, and all the treasure of the deceased ; which, at his return to Dank, the capital of Bengâl, he sent to Jehân Ghîr^e. luckily quashed.

IN the year . . . that monarch removed from Agra to La-Province bûr. Mean time, Abdol Khân, who had been sent to govern subdued. the provinces of Khûr and Kalpi, intirely subdued them : for he brought in subjection, or destroyed, all the Râjahs and others, who had rebelled, and never would obey the former governors. He likewise made captives their wives and children ; amounting, it is said, to so great a number, that, being sent to Irân (or Persia at large), the sale of them amounted to eleven lak (Y). Lastly, to humble the natives effectually, he razed all their fortified places to the ground.

JEHÂN Ghîr about this time, resolving to send an am- Embassy to bassador to Shâh Abbâs, pitched on Khân Azem, a man of Persia : prudence and high birth, to execute that commission. That he might appear at the Persian court with greater lustre, he was intrusted with magnificent presents for the king. These consisted of agate vessels, all sorts of cotton and woollen cloths, made in Hindûstân, intermixed with gold and silver ; daggers and swords, adorned with gold and precious stones, with other curiosities of great value ; amounting in the whole to ^e DE LAET, p. 229, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 75. & seq.

(Y) That is lak of rupees ; lak. amount to 137,500 pounds which, at 12,000 pounds to a sterling.

4. Soltân
Jehân
Ghîr.

seventy thousand rupees. He likewise ordered sixty thousand more to be paid out of his own treasury for defraying the expences of the Khân's journey, and the train of noblemen, who accompanied him. In his letters to the Shah, he bestowed great commendations on the ambassador; styling him not only his friend, but brother.

honourably
received.

WHEN he arrived with his retinue at Serâd, Hassan Bek, governor of that city, met him; and, with great honour, conducted him thither. Likewise, on his approach to Spâhân (or Ispâhân), the Shah sent Konstalik Khân, with several other lords, to compliment, and usher him into his capital. When he was introduced to the king, his majesty rose up, and walking a few steps to meet him, took him by the hand, and placed him by him on the throne. Thenceforward banquets were made, and shews exhibited daily for his entertainment. At length, after two years stay, Khân Azem was dismissed with magnificent presents, both for his master and himself. Among those for Jehân Ghîr, besides great quantities of silk, and cloth of gold and silver, were 500 Persian horses, twenty he and fifty she mules, with 150 dromedaries of both sexes, all very beautiful in their kind. Shah Abbâs, at the same time, desired the ambassador to speak to his king, to restore Kandahâr, which had been betrayed to his father Akbar; or else, to take an equivalent elsewhere in lieu of that province.

Affairs of
Bengâl.

KHAN Azem returned to Lahûr, at such time as Jehân Ghîr went for the first time to Kashmîr; and Soltân Khosraw, who till then had been in custody of Assaf Khân, was delivered into the hands of Khân Jehân; Mohabet Khân likewise was made viceroy of Kâbul and Banghes (Z). Salam Khân having deceased in Bengâl, the king made his brother Sheykh Kâssef lieutenant of that province. Kherram Khân, son of the late governor, hearing of his uncle's coming, who ever hated him, leaves Daâk, with all his father's effects, in order to repair to Agra: but Kâssef, meeting him at Râjah Mâhl, took from him some elephants and other goods. Of this Kherram Khân complained to the king, who was so incensed at Kâssef for the same, that, at the year's end, he recalled him; and, in his room, appointed Ibrâhîm Khân, a relation of Nûr Jehân, with the command besides of 5000 horse. As soon as Kâssef had received notice of his disgrace, he in haste, with his family and all his effects, departed from Daâk: but Ibrâhîm, meeting him at Râjah Kom, demands restitution of what he had taken from his nephew. Kherram, (Z) Rather Bang'îr, or Benghîr, a city about thirty miles north of Delhî.

instead

instead of the goods, returned ill-language; which, at length, produced blows: but, finding himself the weaker party, he killed several of his women, that he might fly the faster; and, leaving all his effects behind, escaped with a few domestics; while Ibrâhim was, with great submission, received as governor by all the inferior Omrasⁿ.

AFTER this, Jehân Ghîr sends an army against the Mû-khans, who had committed hostilities; and Ibrâhim joining them with his forces, fell upon the rebels; of whom he made a great slaughter, and took many captives, with considerable spoils. These actions rendered Ibrâhim so much in favour with the king, that, besides sending him horses, a sword, and a dagger, he conferred on him the name of Firâz Jehân Khân. The same year he sent Mortâza Khân to besiege Kangra, a castle, so strongly fortified by nature and art, that the kings of Dehli never could take it from the Hindûs: for it is surrounded by steep mountains and deep ditches; nor is there any getting to it, but through a wood fifty kos in breadth, and a very narrow path between the rocks. The Khân, nothing dismayed with these difficulties, commanded the trees to be cut down before him: and, although he advanced scarce half a kos each day, yet he persisted in the work, till at length, after eight months labour, he arrived before the castle. He immediately ordered a wall to be built round it, and battered the place so furiously, that in a short time it seemed in a fair way of being taken; when his death put an end to the expedition.

IN 1028, Jehân Ghîr made a second progress to Kashmîr; but quickly returned to Lahûr; when, by the persuasion of Nûr Jehan and her brother Afîs Khân, Soltân Khosraw was taken out of the custody of Khân Jehân, and delivered into the hands of his brother Soltân Khûrm. This prince was now greatly in favour with his father; who gave him the command of 40,000 horse, and sent him to the war in Dekân, accompanied by Koja Abdol Haffan, and other experienced generals. The ground of this expedition was, that the kings of Viziapûr and Golkonda had for several years forborne to pay the tribute; and Mâleh Amber had surprised the provinces of Khândîsh and Barâr: so that Khân Khânnâ was in a manner besieged by an army of Râspûts. Mean time Abdol Izîz Khân was appointed governor of Kandahâr, in the room of Babâir Khân Uzbek, who was sent against Kangra, before mentioned; and the command of Aultân given to Khân Jehân: that of Kalpi to Abdol Khân,

4. *Soltân
Jehân
Ghîr.*

The Mûkhans suppressed.

*Soltân Khosraw removed.
A. D.
1618.*

ⁿ DE LART. p. 251. & seqq. HERBERT. p. 77. & seqq.

4. Soltân
Jehân
Ghîr.

War of Dekân.
A. D.
1619.

and the government of Bondela to Râjah Lala Bertsing. Lastly, Soltân Parweïs was nominated to that of Pâtan.

IN 1029, Râjah Râna dying, Jehân Ghîr sent Karen from court, to succeed his father in his territories: and at the same time ordered his brother Râjah Rihem, to assist Soltân Khûrm with 2 or 3000 Râspûts. This prince, who now assumed the name of Shâh Jehân, at length arrived at Brampûr, with his whole army; from whence he detached before Abdol Khân, Lala Bertzing, and Koja Abdol Hassân, with several other Omrâs, to make war on Mâlek Amber, Ziadû Râjah; and Mirza Makkey was sent to invade Golkonda. At the same time Mohammed Talhi was dispatched to Viziapûr, with letters for Adel Khân; in which he gave them notice, that, unless the tribute was forthwith paid, he would enter their dominions, and drive them out. In the interim Abdol Khân, with his forces, passed through Ballaçât, followed by the prince, at the distance of ten or twelve kos, with the rest of the army.

Kerki
taken.

AT length they are opposed by the troops of Mâlek Amber; with whom they had several battles, in which they had always the victory; and then advancing to Kerki took it a second time: where, to be revenged on Mâlek Amber, they demolished his palace, and carried away a vast booty. Thus the province of Khândîsh and Barâr, with all the places about Amdanâgar, again fell into the hands of the Mogols.

A. D.
1620.

IN 1030, the king, returning to Agra, spent his time much in hunting, and the gardens of Soltân Parweïs, beyond the river. The same year died the Itemâdo'ddawlet, prime wazîr to Jehân Ghîr; who bestowed all his effects on his daughter Nûr Jehân, and his post on Koja Abdol Hassân.

Soltân
Khosraw
murdered,

SHAH Jehân, who resided at Brampûr, began to contrive how to make away with his brother Khosraw (whom he had in custody) without suspicion: and, having imparted his mind to Khân Khâna, and other Omrâs he confided in, rode out a hunting. Reza (A), his slave, whom he had engaged to commit this murder, going in the night with his assistants to the prince's apartment, knocked at the door, pretending he brought him vests and letters from his father, with orders to his brother Shâh Jehân to set him at liberty. As Khosraw, who suspected his errand, refused to admit him, the ruffian forced the door off the hinges; and, throwing the prince on the ground, with the help of the rest, strangled him. Then, laying his dead body on the bed, went out, and shut the door again.

¹ DE LAET, p. 239, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 78, & seqq.

[A] Herbert calls him Râjah Bawdor.

NEXT morning his wife, who was daughter of Khân Azem, going into the chamber, and, finding her husband dead, filled the house with lamentations. Every one was grieved for the prince's unexpected death; but nobody suspected that he was murdered. As soon as Shâh Jehân returned to the city, he wrote his father an account of his brother's death; and, the better to conceal his crime, got all the Omrâs and Mansebdârs to sign the letter: after which he had the corpse interred in a garden without the city. But the Nabâb Nûro'ddîn Kowli, happening to be there at that time, sent a detail of the whole matter to Jehân Ghîr. The king mightily bewailed his son's death, and wrote very sharply to the Omrâs; demanding, Why they failed to let him know, whether his son died a natural or violent death? He likewise commanded the body to be taken up again, and sent to him, that it might be buried at Elabâs, in his mother's tomb. Then sending for Khân Azem, the deceased prince's father-in-law, he comforted him, and committed to his care the education of his nephew Soltân Bolaki (B); on whom he conferred the command of ten thousand horse.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.
by his brother's order.

S E C T. II.

From the Rebellion of Soltân Khurm to the recalling Mohabet Khân to court.

MEAN time Abdol Khân, departing from Shâh Jehân Kanda without leave, retires to his government of Kalpi; but the king resented this liberty, and ordered him to return to the army. While affairs were in this confusion, a courier arrives from Azof Khan, governor of Khandahâr, with advice that Shâh Abbâs, king of Persia, was advancing to besiege that fortress, and to desire immediate succours. Khân Jehân, who commanded at Multân, was accordingly ordered to set out, with what forces he had, upon that service; but while he delayed to obey his orders, the Persians came and besieged the place; which they attacked continually both day and night. Jehân Ghîr, anxious to relieve Khandahâr, by advice of his council, sent for Abdol Khân; who now, with the prince's leave, was gone back to his government. The Khân no sooner received the king's orders than he set forward, with 5000 chosen horse and 100 elephants. Jehân Ghîr was so well pleased with this instance of that lord's zeal for his service,

(B) Herbert writes, Bullokhi, also called Daur Bukh; that is, or Blekhi. Fraser says, he was God's gift.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

taken by Shâh Abbâs.

that, on his arrival at Lahûr, he gave his grand-daughter (C) in marriage to his son Mirza Khân.

THE siege of Kandahâr had now continued six months, when Shâh Abbâs came in person, with a great army, against that fortress : of which the news arriving at court, Jehân Ghîr, on reflection that he could not send relief in time, wrote the Shâh word, that he would deliver up the city to him of his own accord ; and sent Azof Khân orders for that purpose : but this lord, suspecting the letters to be counterfeit, held out the place, till the principal bulwark being blown up, he was obliged to surrender. Shâh Abbâs, having appointed Ali Kuli Khân for his governor, marched back to Isfahân ; while Azof Khân and Abdol Khân returned to Lahûr.

Soltân
Khurm
advances

BEFORE this Jehân Ghîr, had sent Azof, or Affof Khân, brother to Nûr Jehân Begum, to Agra, to bring the treasures from the castle of that city to Lahûr. But Ethabar Khân, governor of Agra, and Ethamat Khân, keeper of the treasure, both eunuchs, first refused to deliver it ; and when they had consented, still raised many objections against it. Mean time Affof Khân sent letters privately to Shâh Jehân, in which he gave him an account of his journey to fetch away the treasure ; advising him to come and seize it between Agra and Dehli. The prince had long since coveted his father's throne ; and for this end had married the daughter of Affof Khân ; who, with his brothers, and other Khorassân lords, governed almost every thing at court. He had likewise, with the same view, so attached his Omras to his interest, by gifts and pensions, that they did not scruple to swear obedience to him, in opposition to their rightful sovereign.

to seize the treasury :

BESIDES these supports, Shâh Jehân had received, from the indulgence of his father, several large and wealthy provinces ; as all the country between Mandow and Brâmpûr, Ganderfi, Oudepûr, Barâr, Amdanâgar, all Guzerât, extending from Brâmpûr to Surât, and from thence to Ahmed abâd, its metropolis. In all which provinces, and the cities belonging to them, he, by his own authority, appointed governors, to serve his ambitious design, as before-mentioned : and, lastly, to remove his chief obstacle, he made away with his elder brother, by the advice of Rajah Bikkermanfid (†) ; who was thought to have the gift of foretelling what was to come. So that nothing farther seemed wanting to compass his ends, than to join his father's treasures to those which had been gathering, for five or six years, out of the provinces subject to him.

(C) The daughter of his son Dahen, or rather Dhan Shâh ; that is, Daniel Shâh.

(†) Called also Bikher manjia.

HAVING therefore received the above-mentioned message from his father-in-law, he, without delay, assembled all his Omrâs, with Râjah Bikkermanfid, who governed Guzerât, and other commanders; and, in 1031, set out from Brampûr, with an army of 70,000 horse, under pretence of going towards Mandow to hunt. He made such great expedition, marching twenty or thirty kos a day, that he arrived at Azmîr with all his forces, before Ethabar Khân knew any thing of his coming; and on the fifteenth day got to Fettipûr. As soon as Ethabar Khân heard this news, he carried back the treasures, which he had gotten ready to deliver to Affof Khân, into the castle of Agra; and, by couriers, immediately gave the king notice of the prince's coming, and design. Hereupon Jehân Ghîr, without delay, set out from Lahûr to that other capital. Mean time the prince detached Râjah Bikkermanfid, his chief general, Beyrâm Bîk, Rostom Khân, Tsoffalia Deria Khân, Wazîr Khân, and Mohammed Takki, with an army, to take the castle of Agra. But Ethaber Khân, faithful to his king, had already fortified it, prepared his warlike engines, and walled up all the gates^k.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.
besieges
Agra;
A. D.
1621.

BEYRAM BIK, who first entered the city, posted himself in the house of Mîrza Abdollatr, son of Khân Azem, from whence he went to attack the castle-gate: but he was bravely repulsed by the garrison, under the conduct of Râjah Baderois. Next came Râjah Bikkermanfid, who, taking up his quarters in the house of Affof Khân, sent to search those of Nûro'ddîn Kûli, Laskar Khân, and other lords, who defended the castle. In the house of the first they found ten lak; in that of the second lord, sixteen; and several more in Affof Khân's. Having thus, in three days time, gathered fifty or sixty lak out of the houses of several Omrâs, they returned to the prince at Fettipûr, without doing any other damage to the citizens.

WHEN Shâh Jehân found himself balked in his design of seizing his father's treasures, and having no hopes of taking the castle in a short space of time, he resolved to meet his father, and give him battle. For this end he distributed money among his soldiers; and, having reviewed his forces, departed from Fettipûr the twenty-fifth day after his arrival there. The king began his march with only a few troops: however, he had sent for Mohabet Khân from Kâbul, and Khân Jehân from Multân. Soltân Parweïs also was on the road from Pâtan, with succours, designing directly for Agra. Shâh Jehân, with his army, comes on the third day to Fern

^k D^r LAET, p. 243, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 80, & seqq.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

abâd, within ten kos of Dehli; three kos from which the king was encamped: so that the two armies were no more than seven kos asunder. Next day the prince sent Râjah Bikkermanfid, with other commanders, to attack his father's army; who sent against them Abdol Khân, Mahobet Khân, Affef Khân, Râjah Bertzing, and other Omrâs, with forces divided into three bodies: but some of these lords, having given their faith to the prince, deserted Jehân Ghîr; whom they had even determined, if practicable, to deliver into his son's power.

yet gains
the victory.

THE forces of the king were commanded by Shehriar, his youngest son, and Mahobet Khân; those of the prince by Bikkermanfid. When the two armies were drawn out ready for battle, Jehân Ghîr sends Zaberdast Khân, with a sword, bow, and arrows, to Abdol Khân, conjuring him to do his best to defeat his rebellious son: but that lord, advancing with fifty horse nearer the enemy's front than he imagined, was attacked and cut off. Mean time, the battle growing hot, and many other Omrâs being slain, Bikkermanfid broke his way through the king's troops to his very tent, and takes him prisoner: but before he could secure his prize, he was killed by one of the guards, with the stroke of a mace on the poll; which accident so astonished the rest of the Omrâs, that they immediately drew-off, with their forces, to three kos distance, and left the victory to the king's troops.

Khurm
submits.

AFTER this Khân Khânnâ persuaded the prince to give over the war; and, retiring to the mountains of Mevat, endeavour by all methods to regain his father's favour. Which advice the prince follows. On the other side, Soltân Parweïs meeting Jehân Ghîr at Balzol, the whole harâm was sent to Agra, and Ethabar Khân ordered to open the gates of the castle again. The king hereupon wrote to acquaint Shâh Jehân, that provided he came to him to Azmîr, and swear not to attempt any thing against his person for the future, he would not only pardon, and take him into favour, but would also confer on him great honours and riches. The prince on receipt of these letters immediately set forward with Khân Khânnâ, Abdol Khân, Beyrâm Bik, and other Omrâs, who all arrived at Azmîr, and were well received.

Guzerât
taken by

AFTER the death of Râjah Bikkermanfid, Shâh Jehân conferred the government of Guzerât on Abdol Khân; who, continuing with the prince, sent his eunuch Bassadar Khân to command in his absence. When he arrived at Amed abâd, he thrust out the Nabâb, Shaffi Khân, the king's chancellor; who, enraged at this affront, went to Kanksi. From thence he wrote to Nâzar Khân, governor of Pâtan, and Babon Khân, who resided at Kapperbeniz, giving them an account of what had had passed. As he knew that Soltân Bolaki, and his grand-^{4. Khân} father Azem Khân, were on the road with an army to recover Guzerât, and command over it for the king, they blamed Jehân Ghîr.

Guzerât, and command over it for the king, they blamed him for suffering himself to be so easily thrust out; and ordering him to meet them at Kapperbenîz, it was resolved to march to Ahmed abâd: therefore, setting forward in the evening, they early next morning arrived before the walls of that city; and, having divided their forces (D) into three bodies, each attacked a gate, which with their elephants they broke open; and, thus entering the place, seized Baffader Khân, and other lords, who had deserted to the prince.

As Shâh Jehân, then at Mandow, was greatly concerned at this news, Abdol Khân made light of it; saying, that they who had taken Ahmed abâd were only three merchants, and would easily be obliged to quit their conquest. But it happened otherwise; for when he, accompanied with several other Khâns, and 70,000 horse, was come to Wasset (E), he found Shaffi Khân prepared to receive him, though not expected. This lord finding the king's army, under Soltân Bolaki and Khân Azem, was at a great distance, and, being short of money, stripped the throne, which Shâh Jehân had caused to be made at Ahmed abâd, of its gold and jewels; and therewith, in nine days time, procured out of the neighbouring places 19,000 horse, 500 musketeers, 28 elephants, and 22 *Omrâs*¹.

WITH these forces he encamped without the city, at Kanki, Khurm^{genera} from whence he removed to Affempûr; where, being informed of Abdol Khân's coming, he posted himself with his army at Bowben talaw, six kos from Ahmed abâd. Abdol Khân, on this advice, leaving Anamogherri, advances to Neriâd, and thence to Momod Abâd (F), but six kos from the enemy, whom he despised, too much confiding in his own strength. Here, discovering by an intercepted letter, that Matza-hayb Khân intended in the battle to go over to the king's troops, he had him arrested, with his son Koja Soltân, and confiscated their effects. Next morning he moved towards Kanisa: but, when he understood how strong the royal army was, and knowing that some of his commanders were not to be trusted, he turned off towards Baroch, with design to attack Shaffi Khân.

¹ DE LAET, p. 248, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 82, & seqq.

(D) Herbert says, they had 1,400,000 rupis to pay the soldiers: but Herbert says, it was 1000 horse and 5 elephants.

(E) Beyond (or to the south of) Brodra, which is five days march from Mandow. He had

(F) Perhaps Mabmûd Abâd.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

in the rear. However, his design being discovered by the watchful enemy, he resolves to give them battle without delay. To this end, next morning, he divides his forces into three bodies, and gives the right wing to Hamed Khân and Zali Beg; the left to Zardi Khân, Mashûd Beg, and Mohammed Kûli, reserving to himself the main body.

attempts to recover it;

In this order the whole camp advanced by Jetelpûr to Fettabâgh; where Shaffi Khân being already arrived with his forces, Nakar Khân, with his five sons, and two sons-in-law, Kara Mohammed Khân and Shâh Mohammed Khân, with 3000 horse, began the fight, and made a great slaughter of Abdol Khân's troops. Shaffi Khân, having at the same time chosen a more commodious ground, so galled the enemy with his cannon, that one of the chief elephants, being wounded, turned about, and made great disorder among their ranks. Abdol Khân was not wanting all this while to encourage his soldiers; and, having in some measure restored the battle, challenges Nahar Khân to a single combat. The brave old man did not fail to meet him; but, having been wounded by his adversary in the head with a lance, his men came in to his assistance. Hereupon began a fierce conflict, in which one of his sons-in-law was killed, and three of his sons wounded. Nahar Khân finding the enemy too strong for him, began to fly: but Delawer Khân called him back, and renewed the fight.

but is defeated.

Said Khân and Sid Yakûb in the mean time attacked Sali Beg, who had advanced before with 1000 horse, with so much bravery that all his soldiers dispersed; yet, with only four more, he still fought gallantly, till, being at length thrown from his elephant, Said Khân ran him through. Ahmed Khân also, who ventured to assail Rajah Hallen and Abdol Rahmân, had his head cut off; which with that of Sali Beg was sent to Shaffi Khân. The death of these great officers so astonished the whole army of the enemy, that they immediately fled on all sides, excepting Zaitfi Khân, governor of Brodra, who, with 400 horse and three elephants, still stood his ground in the rear; but, on Shaffi Khân's advancing towards him, he surrendered. His son Mohammedan Kûli Khân, much offended at his father's cowardice, with forty horse and one elephant, fled to Abdol Khân: who, being informed of those misfortunes, thought it best to fly likewise towards Brodra; whither he arrived with only a few followers, great numbers of his troops having been cut-off in their way by the people (G) of the country. From thence he went to Surât,

(G) These are the Kowlis, according to Herbert.

where,

where, having staid eight days, he returned with a few troops to Brâmpûr.

MEAN time Jehân Ghîr, who remained at Fettipûr, detached his son Soltân Parweîs, with Mohabet Khân, Rajah Lala Bertzing, and the whole army of Râspûts, to pursue his rebellious son, and, if possible, take him alive. At the same time Mîrza Khân, son of Abdol Khân, is sent loaden with chains to the castle of Agra; while Abdol Ajes Khân, who had by the contrivance of Abdol Khân been put into the power of Shah Jehân, makes his escape, and returns to the king. As soon as this prince knew that the royal army was advancing, he removed from Azmîr to Mandow, and assembled all his forces, in order to try his fortune in battle. When the two armies were now within five or six kos of each other, the vanguards began the fight, and soon after ensued a general engagement: but Rostan Khân and Berkendas Khân deserting to the king's forces, Shah Jehân was overthrown. Hereupon he fled, fighting by the way; and, passing the Nerebeda, or Nardaba, arrived at Brâmpûr.

MEAN while Beyrâm Bek and Darab Khân being left at the river, to hinder the passage of the king's forces, Khân Khânna persuades Shah Jehân to send him to his brother Soltân Parweîs; in order that he might intercede for them with his father; nor could Abdol Khân divert the prince from entering into this measure, or induce him to suspect Khân Khânna's fidelity. The Khân having crossed the river, and arrived at the Soltân's camp, advises him to pass the Nardaba with what rafts or boats he could procure in haste; assuring him, that his brother had but few forces, and that Beyrâm Bek, already gained, would not hinder him. Soltân Parweîs, without delay, crosses the river, as he had been counselled, and sends Beyrâm Khân to inform Shah Jehân, that Khân Khânna had made his peace with his brother: but Abdol Khân counselled the prince to beware of Khân Khânna's treachery; assuring him, that his design was to seize him unawares, and deliver him into his brother's hands, since 20,000 horse had already passed the Nardaba. He therefore advised, that, instead of minding what Beyrâm Bek said, both he and Darab Khân should be put in irons, and the prince himself retire as fast as he could to Rehen Kera ^m.

SHAH Jehân, approving this counsel, had those two lords The Uz bound on an elephant, and fled towards Kerki, to Malek Am- beks re- ber; who appoints him a residence in Nafsîr Trom; from pussid, whence he sent his fatigued elephants to the castle of Dolt abâd, in order to recruit. Mean time, Soltân Parweîs being

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

Khurm
ctherthrown;

flies to Malek
Amber.

^m DE LAET, p. 254, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 86, & seqq.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

arrived at Brâmpûr, without any opposition, sent an account of his success to Jehân Ghîr, who received the news with the utmost joy: but his joy was soon allayed with the news, that Ihens Tous, the Uzbek, with 30,000 horse, was on his march towards Kabûl, in order to conquer that province. As soon as Khânna Zaed Khân, son of Mohabet Khân, governor of the province of Banghiz (H), heard of this Tatar invasion, he in all haste repaired to Kabûl, and fortified it. Then, being informed by his scouts that Ihen Tous was advanced within fifteen kos of that city, he marched out to meet him with 20,000 horse; and giving the Uzbek battle, obliged him to fly, after he had made a great slaughter among his troops. Zaed Khân, making use of his victory, pursued the enemy, for forty kos, to the borders of Uzbek. Then attacking the city of Gassani (+), he took it, and returned to Kabûl with a rich booty, many elephants, and several thousand captives: for which victory he was rewarded by the king with the command of 5000 horse and other gifts.

Khurm
enters
Bengâl,

AFTER this, Jehân Ghîr made another progress to Kashmir, for the sake of hunting: which opportunity of his long absence Shâh Jehân thinking proper to lay hold of, with 4000 horse and 300 elephants, marched by the way of Golkonda and Orisba, through the desarts, into Bengâl. At this unexpected coming Kamet Bek Khân, the governor, married to Ibrâhim's sister, was so terrified, that he fled; leaving the prince in possession of his treasure, and every thing else which belonged to him. Hereupon several Mansebdârs revolted to Shâh Jehân; who thence marched into Pâtan; which Moklidis Khân, the governor, shamefully deserting, fled to Roslam Kandahâri, governor of Elhabâs; who, for his cowardice, imprisoned him, and seized all his effects.

and sub-
dues part.

Mean time Shâh Jehân, having crossed the Ganges, entered Bengâl, and came to Kerin: but Ibrâhim Khân, governor of Daak (or Daka) meeting him at Râjab Mâhl with 5 or 6000 horse, attacked him so furiously, that he was on the point of flying; and had been utterly defeated, if Abdul Khân, who lay in ambuscade, had not seasonably advanced to his assistance. For the king's forces were so dismayed at this unexpected reinforcement, and being at the same time greatly dissatisfied at the avarice of their commander, who withheld their pay, that they turned their backs, leaving the covetous Ibrâhim Khân, with 500 men, to shift for themselves. After a brave resistance he and his soldiers were all slain. Then the prince, seizing his treasure, sent Darab Khân to Daak, to

(H) A city to the north of Kâbul.

(+) Perhaps Gâza, or Ghâz-na.

bring away the rest of Ibrâhîm's riches, with his wives and children. He had orders also to reduce all Bengâl, while Shâh Jehân marched to Patân, where Râjah Jehân Usîm joined him with 5000 horse and 20,000 foot.

4. Khân Jehân Ghîr.

As soon as Soltân Parweîs was informed of these proceedings, leaving Râjah Rostan Khân to command in his absence at Brâmpûr; he set out, accompanied by Mohabet Khân, Khân Alem, and other Omrâs, who with the rest of the Râspût forces (I), marched with all expedition towards Elabâs; and, when he was entered into the province of Lala Bertzing, this prince met him with a present of two or three lak of rupees, and joined him with all his troops. Mean time the king, having received advice in the city of Kashmîr of Ibrâhîm Khân's death, forthwith sent orders to Khân Jehân, who resided at Mûltân, to march with his forces to assist Soltân Parweîs: but he, coming to Fettipûr, loitered there six months, without carrying any succours to that prince. On the other side, Rustam Kandahâri fortified Elabâs, while Shâh Jehân sent troops against the castle of Rantas, which Sid Monbark surrendered to him; as did the castle of Sinnar, commanded by Hafis Baki, after enduring several assaults. About the same time Wâzîr Khân marching to Benâres, extorted tribute from the inhabitants; and Abdol Khân coming to Jaunpûr, did the like there, after obliging Jehân Ghîr Kûli Khân, the governor, to retire to Elabâs.

SHAH Jehân, being informed that his brother Soltân Parweîs and Mohabet Khân were advancing against him, and had already passed the river Kalpi, sent Râjah Rhîm, Beyrâm Bîk, and Abdol Khân, to besiege Elabâs; the suburbs of which they destroyed. Rustan Khân, incensed at this provocation, sallied out with his troops: but, many of them being cut off, he was forced to retreat back to the castle, which he afterwards defended bravely against the rebels. In the interim, discord arose between Abdol Khân and Râjah Rhîm; who soon after, repassing the Ganges, retired to Banâres, on the approach of Soltân Parweîs and his forces; which first arrived at Bakkeri, and then at Munikhpûr. While they were on the road between Kalpi and the province of Râjah Bertzing, Mia Fehîm attempted by force to rescue his lord Khân Khânna, who, on suspicion, had been confined by Mohabet Khân; but was by the keepers, after some slaughter of them, slain, with several of his associates. Hereupon all the effects of Khân Khânna were confiscated, his wives and children sent in custody to Agra; and himself, laden with chains, more closely imprisoned.

(I) Herbert says, he had with him 50,000 horse.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

and defeats

his brother ;

At length, the prince arriving at Elabâs, was joyfully received by Rustan Khân ⁿ.

MOHABET Khan, eager for battle, with the Râjahs Ziffing, Jand, and Bertzing, passed the Ganges with the greater part of the troops, in order to meet Shâh Jehân : who having raised considerable forces in Pâtan, was come to Fonek, about ten kos from Banâres ; where the two armies, parted only by the river, cannonaded each other. Mean time Beyrâm Bîk, advancing towards Elabâs with near 4000 horse, was met by Mohammed Shâma (K), at the head of the vanguard of Soltân Parweîs, on the bank of the river Shawezi (L) ; and, being slain in fight, had his head cut off. All this while the prince's army suffered much from Shâh Jehân's cannon, and could not pass the river : but, at length, being conducted over at a convenient ford, they encamped opposite to the rebels ; who did not long delay coming to a battle. For Râjah Rhîm, a most gallant foldier, advancing forward with his troops, gave the charge ; and with his war elephants so disordered the king's forces, that they were obliged to give way. And, had this brave commander been supported by Abdol Khân and Derra Khân, they must have been overthrown : but those two generals, out of malice, would not stir to his assistance ; which, giving the Soltân's troops an opportunity to rally, they returned to the charge with such fury, that they wounded most of the Râjah's elephants, and restored the battle. On this occasion Soltân Parweîs exposed himself to danger (M) at the head of his troops, fighting on his elephant. The prince's example gave such courage to his men that they fought like lions ; so that, at length, Râjah Rhîm being slain, Derra Khân was put to flight. Shâh Jehân endeavoured to restore the battle ; but in vain : upon which he was by Abdol Khân prevailed on, though much against his will, to quit the field, with 3 or 4000 horse. The troops of Râjah Bertzing, having taken possession of his camp, the foldiers plundered it of all the gold and silver ; of which they found a great quantity : but the elephants, horses, and other spoils, were reserved for the king's use.

ⁿ DE LAET, p. 260. HERBERT, p. 88, & seqq.

(K) In De Laet, Ziamâ. Herbert calls him Shawma.

(L) In De Laet, Ziauzia. In Herbert, Shawezi.

(M) Herbert says, the battle lasted very hot for five hours : that Khurm (or Shâh Jehân) was hurt in the arm, and Par- weîs wounded in the side by Derra Khân ; and that, but for the goodness of his armour, he had been killed. He also ascribes the success to the resolution and activity of Mohabet Khân.

SHAH Jehân, after this defeat, fled with such haste, that in thirty-six days he reached the castle of Rantas; where he had placed Râjah Gholam, one of the murderers of his brother Soltân Khosraw. Here leaving all his harâm, excepting Affof Khân's daughter, he, on the third day, fled towards Pâtan; most of his followers dispersing themselves. Mean time Soltân Parweis and Mohabet Khân followed him close, at the distance of forty or fifty kos. Being arrived at Pâtna, he wrote to Darab Khân, whom he had made governor of Bengâl, to meet him at Râjah Máhl. On the other hand, the Soltân, Mohabet Khân, and his father Khân Khanna invited that lord to join the king's forces. Shâh Jehân, after a short stay at that place, thinking Dârâb Khân had deserted his party, posted on to Medenpûr, and thence to Ouja (N). When the king's forces arrived at Medenpûr, and found Shâh Jehân had fled, Bakker Khân and other Omrâs were sent to pursue him (with 8000 horse), while Soltân Parweis passed on to Râjah Máhl; from whence he wrote into all the provinces, to seize Dârâb Khân, and bring him to the camp. These letters hastened the death not only of that Khân's children, who were with Shâh Jehân, but of their father also: for Mohabet Khân sending to him his son, and kinsman, son of Shâh Nabar Khân, gave secret order to Mîr Khân, who was their conductor, to put them all to death; which he did when they least expected it, and brought their heads to the prince. Mohabet Khân, the more to afflict Khân Khanna, had them shewn to him, and then sent them to the king.

IN the year 1033, Jehân Ghîr sent for Khân Zaw Khân, and fles to son of Mohabet Khân, governor of Kâbul, and conferred on him the command of 5000 horse, with the government of Bengâl. At the same time Mâlek Amber (king of Dekân), marching with an army of 50,000 men, to drive the Mogols out of his borders, was met by Lasker Khân, Mirza Manucher, and Ibrâhîm Hosselyn, with 15,000 horse: but he defeated them with great slaughter; and, having taken them prisoners, with all their camp and treasure, confined them in the castle of Dolt abâd. Mean time Shâh Jehân, being hotly pursued by Bakker Khân, left Ouja, and, with 3000 horse and 300 elephants, fled to the borders of Golkondâ, where Mâlek Amber furnished him with money and all other necessities; after which he granted him refuge within his kingdom.

(N) Called in De Laet, p. 73, Odce; and, by Herbert, Oudee, Oujea, and Odjea; an ancient city, once the seat of the Pâtan kings, but now almost ruined. Not far from it are seen the ruins of the castle and palace of Rânikand, whom the Indians, says Herbert, hold to be the supreme God.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

Besieges
Brampûr;

WHEN he had continued here for three months, he set out with Abdol Khân, Derriah Khân, Mohammed Takkik, and Râkât Khân, whom Mâlek Amber had joined with 10,000 horse, and marched towards Brâmpûr. This city had been newly walled and fortified by Râjah Rostang, made governor by Soltân Parweïs; who, on the enemy's approach, sallied out with his forces; but, after a sharp conflict, was obliged to return. Hereupon Abdol Khân and Derriah Khân assaulted the walls, which were defended bravely almost the whole night by the citizens. However, in the interim, Takkik, forcing his way in through a breach, takes the castle: but the other two generals, vexed to see that the son of a merchant should accomplish what they had in vain attempted, refrained giving him assistance: so that the fortress was not only recovered by Rostan Khân and Arset Khân, but the brave Takkik, after receiving a wound in the eye, was taken prisoner, and all his soldiers slain.

retires
again.

THE king, or Nûr Jehân Begum, at the same time sent Mirza Areb Destoa Khân to bring Khân Khânna up to Lahûr. Being thus taken out of the hands of Mohabet, much against the will of the latter, as soon as he arrived at court, he complained heavily against his late keeper, for having not only destroyed his children, but also disgracefully imprisoned himself, who had in so critical a juncture deserted the prince, and confiscated most of his effects. Mean while, Soltân Parweïs, having left Pâtan, with Mohabet Khân, Khân Alem, Râjah Bertzing, and the whole army of Râspûts, made what haste he could to Brâmpûr; which Shâh Jehân hearing of, he raised the siege; and, thinking it was in vain to attempt any thing farther, sent his brother the keys of the castles Hassér (O) and Rantas, and retired again to Mâlek Amber°.

Mohabet
Khân recalled.

AFTER this, a misunderstanding arising between Soltân Parweïs and Mohabet Khân, on account of Khân Khânna's accusations, the prince, swayed by bad counsel, wrote to desire the king to call that Khân to court. On the other side, the king, persuaded by the advice of his wife Nûr Jehân, and her brother Ajfos Khân, as well as of Khân Khânna, and other enemies of Mohabet Khân, commanded him to repair to him without delay: and, on his making excuses, sent Mirza Areb Destoa Khân to fetch him to Lahûr. Hereupon Mohabet Khân, obeying the • DE LAET, p. 265, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 91, & seqq.

(O) Five kos from Brâmpûr, fortified castle in the province in the way to Agra. It is the strongest and in all respects best of Khândîsh.

king's

king's command, although much against his will, departed from Brâmpûr, and came to his castle of Ratampûr (P), seventy kos distant from Agra. At the same time the king made Khân Jehân governor of Ahmed abad in his room; and, soon after, that lord joined prince Parweïs. While these things were doing, Shâh Jehân, to soothe his father, sent him 100 of his best elephants, with his two sons, under the conduct of Koja Jehân; who arrived safely at Agra; where they staid for some time. At this juncture Kâssëm Khân, being turned out of his government of Agra, which he had long enjoyed, the king conferred it on Mozaffer Khân, who was then at Lahûr: which disgrace his wife Mowissâ Begum, sister of Nûr Jehân Begum, so highly resented, that, to restore him, she contrived a means which will be related presently.

At the same time that Soltân Khofraw was delivered to the custody of his younger brother, Soltân Khurm, or Shâh Jehân, the two sons of his brother Dhân Shâh (who died of drinking at Brâmpûr) named Shâh Etimor and Shâh Housseyn (Q), were also put into his hands. These, when young, he delivered to the Jesuits, to be baptized, and bred in the Christian faith. Not that he favoured the Christian religion (R), but that he might render them odious to the Mohammedans while boys; and, with the same levity, draw them back from Christianity (S) at pleasure. After these young princes had been a long time in Shâh Jehân's power, they made their escape. Shâh Etimor, when his uncle was defeated at Elabâs, fled to Soltân Parweïs; and, when he was obliged to retreat from before Brâmpûr, Shâh Housseyn took the opportunity to get away to Rajah Rostan. From thence they repaired to their grandfather; who received them with great honour and affec-

4. *Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.*

*Soltân
Khof-raw's sons.*

(P) Herbert writes, Rantampûr.

(Q) Their names were Teyomars and Hosbang.

(R) Other authors relate, that when the young princes were grown up, after being under Corfi the Jesuit's tuition, who kept a school, for some years, they desired him to provide them with Portuguese wives; in which he not gratifying them, they delivered up their crosses, and other tokens of conversion, to the Jesuits: saying, on being asked, that the king had commanded them. Whence the Jesuits concluded, that the whole affair was only an artifice to get a woman for the king's use. Roe's journal, Church. collect. Trav. vol. i. p. 731, Terry's voya. to India, sect. 30. — This happened before the year 1616, as appears from Sir Thomas Roe's letters on the occasion.

(S) Herbert says, that, not daring to provoke the people farther, by shedding their blood, he took this method to render them incapable of possessing the throne.

tion,

4. *Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.*

tion, giving in marriage to the eldest his daughter Bhar Banû Begum.

S E C T. III.

From Jehân Ghîr's Imprisonment by Mohabet Khân to his Death.

Abdol Khân deserts Kurm.

MEAN while Mohabet Khân, who remained with his Râspûts (T) at Rantipûr, was by the king's mandate ordered to deliver up his castle and province to Nûr Jehân Begum, and his governor Bakker Khân, and remove into Bengâl, to command there as his viceroy. As this order was death to a man impatient of injuries, he wrote back to the king, that if he was falsely accused of great crimes by the betrayers of the kingdom, his reputation required, that above all things he should acquit himself before his majesty. About the same time an account was brought, that Abdol Khân, in a belief that, on Shâh Jehân's raising the siege of Brâmpûr, his affairs were become desperate, had deserted him; and, induced by the hopes of pardon given him by Khân Jehân, had returned to the king's party, and was honourably received by Soltân Parweïs.

*Mohabet Khân attacked:
A. D.
1625.*

IN 1035, Mohabet Khân set out from Rantipûr, with 5000 Râspûts, towards Labûr; hoping to meet the king at Kâbul, whither he was making a progress. But Nûr Jehân Begum and Affos Khân, being informed of his design, persuaded Jehân Ghîr, who had now passed the Chunâb (U), to command him to leave his men behind, and sending his elephants before, to repair to court only with his domestics. Mohabet Khân, who knew that this was a snare laid for his destruction, sent his son-in-law before with the elephants, and wrote back to Jehân Ghîr, that he was sensibly grieved his majesty should distrust his old slave: that he was ready to deliver his wives and children as pledges of his fidelity; but could not suffer himself, on any account, to be brought into the king's presence. As soon as his son-in-law arrived at court, he was first clothed in an ignominious habit, and then bastonaded on the soles of his feet; after which he was mounted bare-headed on an elephant, and carried through the camp by way written Tziunab in De Laet. The Chun is the same with the river Jemena, or Jemni, as before remarked.

(T) Mohabet Khân must have been a Râjah, or Hindû prince; otherwise he could not have commanded Râjabpûts.

(U) That is, the river Chun;

of derision. The wekkîl, or vakkîl, also of the Khân was ^{4. Khân} lashed with whips. ^{Jehân Ghîr}

MEAN time Mohabet Khân arrived with his little army at the river Behad (or Behat), where he received a new order from the king, that he should repair to him, accompanied by no more than 100 of his retinue; that he should make all the haste he could, and leave his troops to follow him: but the hatred of the queen and Affof Khân, of Eradet Khân, Fedi Khân, Koja Abdol Hassan, and other great lords of the Khorasân faction, so far had influenced the mind of Jehân Ghîr, that Mohabet could obtain no justice at his sovereign's hands. In the interim, to hasten his destruction, which they were bent upon, they took the opportunity, while the king was asleep in his tent, to cross the river with a great army, in which were 50,000 horse, and fall on the forces of Mohabet Khân, consisting of no more than 5000 Râspûts (X). But, such was the valour of the leader, and fidelity of his soldiers, that, without any difficulty, they put to flight the king's troops; whereof above 2000 were slain, and many drowned in the river: among whom were some men of great note, as Koja-Shawâr Khân, Abdol Sâmek, and Abdol Gâllek. ^{his signal victory:}

MOHABET KHAN, making use of his victory, crossed ^{seizes Je-} the river with so much speed, that he seized the king yet ^{hân Ghîr} sleeping in his tent; and, having killed such of the guards as resisted, put him on an elephant and carried him to his own tent. Guards were set on the tent of the queen. Soltân Balokhi, Soltân Shehriar, and the sons of Dhân Shân, were also taken prisoners. Affof Khân and Fedi Khân escaped by flight. Eradet Khân, and Mohandas, the Diwân of Affof Khân, were taken. All the king's treasure and wealth of the Omrâs was plundered by the Râspûts, while the camp was filled with nothing but confusion and noise. Zâdok Khân, who had fallen-out with his brother Affof before the battle, took part with Mohabet Khân, and had the government of Lahûr committed to his trust. In short, the face of affairs was of a sudden wonderfully changed: for the queen Nûr Jehân Begum, who but a little before was worshipped like a goddess, became now neglected, and deprived of her attendants. Affof Khân, with his son Abontaleh, viceroy of Lahûr, and the son of Mîr Mira, who had fled toward Attek, were brought horse. The same author relates several particulars of this affair, which we presume he learned in India.

(X) Herbert says, Mohabet Khân had 20,000 Râspûts; and that he marched in quest of the army of Nûr Mâhl (called also Nûr Jehân), consisting of 50,000

4. *Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.*

*and all his
court.*

back by the son (Y) of Mohabet Khân, and Rûro'ddîn Kâli Khân, with 2000 Hâddis and Râspûts, to the Khân; who was already, with the captive king, at that city. There they were loaded with irons, and from hence were all carried to Kâbul: where Eradet Khân and Mulâna Mohammed were fo severely as well as ignominiously treated, that the latter expired under his troubles P.

It has been observed above, that Monnîza Begum, wife of Kassém Khân, who was highly offended at her husband's being removed from the government of Agra, repaired forthwith to Labûr, to the queen her sister, and from thence to Kâbul. But, when she saw that her sister had lost her power (Z), and Mohabet Khân swayed every thing, she applied herself to him; and, as she was an old acquaintance of his, easily got her husband restored. Mozaffer Khân, who had enjoyed it no more than three days, being thus turned out again, he was ordered to bring the two sons of Shâh Jehân, with Koja Jehân (their governor) to the king. This he readily performed; whereupon those young princes, with Soltân Bolakhi, were, by Mohabet Khân, committed to the custody of a certain Râspût.

*Khurm
defeated in Bengâl.*

WHILE these things were transacting on one side, Shâh Jehân, who had hitherto kept close in Dekân, now appears again, and, with fresh forces, accompanied by the son of Râjah Rhîm, marches through the province of Râjah Râna, towards Azmîr. This news gave some uneasiness to the king's troops, especially, because many Râjahs of the Râspûts deserted to him: and it was reported, that the prince himself was hastening to Agra. But the son of Râjah Rhîm, whom he chiefly confided in, dying suddenly at Azmîr, and the Râspûts by degrees leaving him, he quitted the design of going to Agra, and turned towards Tâtta; which, at the earnest persuasion of Derri Khân, he besieged. But Sharîf Mâlek, who governed there for the king, sallying out with his forces, obliged them to withdraw. However, they soon returned to attack the city a second time: but the Sharîf, making another sally, fell on the enemy with so much fury, that Derri Khân was slain, and Shâh Jehân forced to fly to Bâkker.

P DE LAET, p. 270, & seqq. HERBERT, p. 94, & seqq.

(Y) Herbert calls him Mirza Bireaver; and says, he was the Khân's third son.

condemned to lose her head by Mohabet Khân and his council; but that, at the king's request, she was pardoned.

(Z) Herbert says, she was

AT the same time Mâlek Amber, king of Dekân, sends the 4. Khân captive Omrâs, Leskar Khân, Mîrza Manucher, and Ibrâhîm Jehân.
Hossèyn, to Soltân Parwaîs, at Brampûr; and twenty-six Ghîr. lak of rupees safely arrived at Agra, from Zeyd Khân, son of Mohabet Khân, governor of Bengâl. The king, who now Forces returned from Kâbul to Lahûr, by the persuasions of the raised se- queen, gave permission to his guards to fall upon the cretly Râspûts belonging to Mohabet Khân, and sell those whom they took prisoners, to the people of Kâbul. After this the king's party consulted among themselves in what manner to destroy Moha- bet Khân, before his friends Khân Alem and Râjah Rastang should come to his assistance. At this consultation it was agreed, that Ouriar Khân, governor of Bassower and Dessowa, should, with all expedition, raise 5000 horse, and attack Mohabet Khân at Attek. Koja Shera was to furnish 5000 more: while the queen, squandering the treasure, to make friends and procure foldiers, at length assembled a considerable army: but still her brother Affos Khân, and the sons of Shâh Jehân, remained in Mohabet Khân's custody. As for Fedi Khân, who fled from the battle into Rukestân, or the deserts of Tombel, after he had continued there a while with Râjah Gomanow (Z), he repaired to Râjah Bertzing, and then requested letters of safe conduct from Soltân Parwaîs; who readily granted them.

AFTER the king had crossed the river Attek, at the place by the
 where the late bloody battle was fought, he desired Mohabet queen.
Khân to set Affos Khân at liberty; promising, on that condition, to build a mosk in the same place: but the Khân did not think fit to grant his request; however, he consented, that Affos Khân should be treated with less rigour than he had been. When they came to the river Rheed (A), the queen's forces began to appear on every side; and Soltân Shehriyâr, who had married the queen's daughter, in 1029 (B), was sent before to Lahûr, to secure the principal lords there. In his way he forced out of the hands of the Râspûts Soltân Bolakhi, with the two sons of Dhân Khân; and being arrived at that city, fortified the castle, after turning out all the Râspûts. Mean time the king proceeded on his way, hunting, to the river Rheed (or Behed); where Ousber Khân joined the queen with 5000 men: so that her army was now 20,000 strong.

ALTHOUGH Mohabet Khân was advised by his friends to Jehân be on his guard: yet, trusting in his troops, he despised the Ghîr

(Z) Perhaps the Râjah Gam- bert; or Bebat, as others. escapes.
 mon of others. (B) That is, we presume, by

(A) Rather Behed, as Her- her first husband Afkan Khân.

MON. HIST. VOL. VI. R h danger.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghir.

danger. However, during his absence, the king sent for Mirza Rostam Khân, and told him, he judged that to be a proper time for him to make his escape. The queen, having been of the same opinion, Jehân Ghîr went a hunting, as usual, the next day : on which signal his Omrâs hastened towards him from all parts, with their forces ; which now amounted to 30,000 horse. Although Mohabet Khân was not in a condition to fight the king's forces, yet he durst venture to go to him into the court of justice (C) : but, when he saw the king look cold upon him, he went again with his people, and removed his camp half a kos from Jehân Ghîr's. The same evening Balant Khân brought a threatening message from the king, commanding him to set at liberty Affof Khân, and the other Omrâs : but Mohabet Khân, still confiding in his soldiers, refused to obey. However, upon second thoughts, he afterwards sent to desire of the king, that he might first cross the river Behed ; promising then to send those lords to his camp. The queen was against granting the condition required ; earnestly pressing to have them taken out of his hands by force : but Jehân Ghîr thought the other the most prudent course.

Mohabet
Khân retires.

MOHABET KHAN, finding the face of things intirely changed, and being in fear not only of losing his life, but of an ignominious punishment, sends for Affof Khân, and told him, that although it was now in his power to take away his life, yet he willingly spared him. He added, that he did not believe he would ever forget so great a benefit, or make any attempt against the life of a person who had preserved his. Then having taken an oath to that purpose from Affof Khân, he took off his chains with his own hands, put on him a royal vest, and, presenting him with several excellent horses, sent him to the king. He promised moreover, that as soon as he had passed the river Aziknaw, that he would dismiss his son and Mîr Mira, with the brother-in-law of Koja Abdol Hassan : which he accordingly performed. The king was exceedingly pleased at Affof Khân's return : on the contrary, the queen, his sister, asked him in a rage, how he came to be so very hasty, and not to wait, till she, with an armed force, came and rescued him out of the hands of his adversary ? Affof Khân pleaded the fear of his life, which at length pacified her. He likewise acknowledged to the king, that he thought himself under a perpetual obligation to Mohabet Khân for the favour he had received ; and that he had promised never to do him any hurt^a.

^a DE LAET, p. 276. HERBERT. p. 98.

(C) Herbert says, into the leshkar, or camp.

JEHANGHIR being returned to Lahûr, the queen, who still burnt with revenge, left nothing unattempted to destroy Mohabet Khân. With this intent she dispatched Ahmed Khân (cousin-german to Ibrahim Khân) with Zaffer Khân, Nûro'ddin Kâli, and other Omrâs, with 10,000 horse; who intercepted the treasure of twenty-six laks of rupees, sent by Said Khân from Bengâl to his father Mohabet Khân, and brought it to her. It was convoyed from Agra by 500 Râshpûts; who, being arrived at Cheban Chabad, a walled town, for some time held out against the king's forces; of whom they slew no small number: but at length the besiegers, making a furious assault, took the place, and killed many of the defenders; the rest fled, and left the money in the hands of their adversaries. The queen, not content with this advantage, by large gifts, and larger promises, prevailed on Khân Khâna, though much against his will, being now broken with age, to command an army against Mohabet Khân; whose troubles were increased by the desertion of his younger son Mirza Beyrewer. This lord being sent with 3000 horse to Nornon, in order to make war upon Rajah Settersing, turned off to Banger, with design to seize his father's treasures, which were lodged in the castle of Rantipûr: but was prevented by the care of Mozaib Khân, who commanded there in his father's behalf.

MEAN time news arrived at Lahûr from Brâmpûr of the death of Soltân Parweïs; which greatly surprised the king: for this son, who never disobeyed his commands, was solely beloved by him, and brought up in expectation of the crown. Being thus deprived of his only hope, he saw himself reduced to great straits. For Shâh Jehân, then in open rebellion against him, had brought many calamities on his kingdom; and Soltân Shahriyar was judged unfit to reign for want of conduct. Nor was the death of this prince less afflicting to Mohabet Khân, on account of the friendship which had subsisted between them. The Khân therefore, who was now deserted by his followers, looking upon his affairs to be in a very bad condition, bent his course towards Jalor, and retired to the castle of Firmol, possessed by the Rajah of that name. As to his son Mirza Beyrewer, he was taken in his way to Rantipûr by Rajah Rottang, who resided at Bondi, and imprisoned by him.

SHAH Jehân, who hitherto had hovered about Tâtta, with 1000 horse and 40 elephants, passing through Tesol, Khobag-berén, and Aklisserén, at length arrived at Nasser Tormet, in the kingdom of Dekân; where he was kindly received by the

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.
The queen's hatred.

Dekân
invaded.

4. Khan
Jehân
Ghîr.

son of Mâlek Amber (C), lately deceased, and furnished with new forces. Mean time, Khân Khânnâ had raised troops to go in pursuit of Mohabet Khân; but, when all things were ready for his march, he was seized by death in the city of Dehli, and was there buried. At the same juncture, Yakont Khân, chief of the Omrâs at Dekân, for fear of the new king, with whom, when a prince, he had been always at variance, fled to Khân Jehân, governor of Brâmpûr. The Khân, encouraged by the desertion of this lord, as well as provoked by the Dekân king, who molested the frontiers of the Mogols; leaves the widow and son of Soltân Parweis, under the care of Laskar Khân, and with 40,000 horse, and 40 elephants, marching towards Dekân, arrives at Ballagât. There, by intercepted letters of Koja Hîfari to Abdol Khân, he discovered, that the latter intended to desert to the king of Dekân: hereupon he confiscated his effects, and sent him in chains to Brâmpûr.

The Mogols defeated.

AFTER this Khân Jehân pursued his march; and, being animated by the retreat of the Dekânees, penetrates into the heart of the kingdom; where he destroyed many towns, which had never before felt the rage of war. But, at length, the enemy, recovering their spirits, hemmed in his army in such a manner, that great numbers of them perished; partly by famine, and partly by the sword: so that he was compelled to make peace on very dishonourable conditions, and deliver up to the king of Dekân several towns of Hindûstân, in order to obtain liberty of returning safe to the place of his residence.

Uzbek ambassador.

THE same year, Jehân Ghîr, by flattering letters, recalled from Bengâl, Khânnâ Said Khân (son of Mohabet Khân), and in his room appointed Mogreb Khân, to whom he gave the command of 5000 horse: but this lord being drowned, by the overturning of a boat, in less than six months, Fayda Khân, another commander of 5000 horse, was appointed to succeed him. At this juncture there arrived at Lahûr, Sîd Berka, ambassador from the king of Manauwer (D), having in his retinue Kadi Abdolrahîm, brother of Kadi Kalawn: who were both held in such great honour on account of their sanctity, that the people of Manauwer (Mawara'n'nâhr) and Bekhâra, Samarhand, and Balk, revered them almost to adoration, and they were far more rich than the king himself. There were sent to meet him Koja Abdol Hassan, and all the

(C) Herbert calls him Mirza Mawara'n'nâhr, called at present Ala'uddin. Great Bukhâria.

(D) A mistake, doubtless, for other Omrâs of the court, excepting Ajfof Khân, who with great magnificence brought them to the king. Rich presents were mutually made on this occasion. The queen first sent Abdol Rahîm a gold bason, and drinking-cup, studded with jewels, valued at a lak of rupees. On the other hand the Kadi presented the king and queen with 500 beautiful dromedaries, 1000 fine horses, carpets, porcelain, and other things of great worth. Sîd Borka likewise brought, as a present from his king to Jehân Ghîr, 2000 horses, 1000 dromedaries, and other gifts, of greater price than had ever been offered at court during this reign.

THE queen, still resolved to be revenged, if possible, on Mohabet Khân, detached Amîr Nûr'oddîn Kâli, Ahmed Bik Khân, and other Omrâs, with 15000 horse, in pursuit of them. But Ajfof Khân, either on account of the benefit received from him, or believing that the destruction of so great a commander would prove of bad consequence to the kingdom, persuaded Amîr to make slow marches : by which means Mohabet Khân, getting time to escape, fled first to Jessmîr, and from thence to Râjah Râna. However, his son Khânnâ Seîd Khân was kindly received at court by the king, and carried with him to Kashmîr : for all this, when Jehân Ghîr was informed, that the Khân had taken shelter with Râna, he wrote to the Râjah, commanding him to send his adversary out of his territories. Râjah Râna at first paid no regard to the king's order : but when he found that Jehân Ghîr renewed his command, accompanied with threats, he writes to Shâh Jehân, who then resided at Ghinîr (a castle between Dekân and Oudegherad, on the borders of Nizâm Shâh's dominions), watching for an opportunity to take the field again, and in his letter recommends to him Mohabet Khân, suggesting, " of how great importance that lord would be to him in his then situation; he therefore advised him to forget those hostilities, which, by his father's command, he had committed against him; and send for a man who had received so many injuries from the queen. As to his fidelity, he assured the prince, it needed not be doubted, and that he himself would be his security." Shâh Jehân hesitated for some time, till at length Mohabet Khân himself wrote to him, and offered his service. The prince hereupon invites him to come; after which, having taken an oath to be true to him, he, with 500 Râspûts, repaired to Ghinîr, accompanied by Wazîr Khân, who carried with him 1000 new-raised horse; for Deyria Khân and other Omrâs had deserted Shâh Jehân's party.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

joins Sol-tân Khurm.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

Jehân
Ghîr dies:
Hej. 1037

his character :

acts of cruelty :

MEAN time, the king, falling sick at Kashmîr, departed, in order to return to Labûr by easy journeys ; but, his illness increasing, he died at Bimber (E), in the year 1627. This is the account of De Laet and Herbert : but according to the eastern authors, made use of by Mr. Frazer, the name of the place, where he departed this life, was Chirgarbisti. This happened on the 27th of October, when he was aged 58 solar years, one month, and twenty-nine days ; whereof he had reigned twenty-two years and six days : the last eight of which he had been afflicted with an asthma.

JEHAN Ghîr was a weak prince, and too much overruled by the beautiful Nûr Jehân, or Nûr Mâhl, which made the last ten years of his reign very uneasy to him, and unfortunate to the empire. She had been wife to Shîr Afkan, Khân of a Turkmân family ; who came from Persia to Hindûstân in very indifferent circumstances. As she was exquisitely beautiful, of great wit, and an elegant poetess, Jehân Ghîr was doatingly fond of her. The Omrâs, who knew her mean original, were resolved to oppose all her schemes : but she persuaded the emperor to break through all rules, in order to advance her father, brother, and other relations, to the highest employments^s.

JEHAN Ghîr was reckoned of a gentle disposition (F) ; yet, whether owing to ill advice, wine, or some share of fault in his nature, he often gave very cruel orders. Happening to catch an eunuch kissing one of his women, whom he had given over to converse with, he sentenced the lady to be put into the earth, with only her head left above ground, exposed to the burning rays of the sun ; and the eunuch to be cut in pieces before her face. She lived in this dreadful torment twenty-four hours, and till near noon the next day, lamenting her head so long as she could speak. Although he would often debauch with wine (G) himself, yet he would punish others severely, who were guilty of that vice. Some-

^s FRASER'S Hist. Nadir Shâh. p. 20, & seq.

(E) A town at the foot of the mountains of Kashmîr, towards Hindûstân. Bernier.

(F) Roe says, he had a cheerful countenance, and was proud by custom, not by nature ; for that at night he was very affable, and full of easy conversation. Church. Collect. vol. i.

P. 730.

(G) One time Sir Thomas Roe had audience when he was in liquor ; he spoke very kindly : but, being very drunk, fell at last to weeping, and into divers passions ; yet kept him till midnight. Roe's Journ. Church's Collect. Trav. vol. i. p. 719.

times he would command persons to be whipped most unmercifully for trifles ; as he did one of his eunuchs for breaking a china cup, which he was ordered to take care of, and then sent him to China to buy another. At other times, in his capricious humours, he would condemn men to slavery, to have their limbs cut off, or to be put to death, without any just cause.

ON the other hand, he daily relieved many poor people, and behaved with great marks of duty to his mother ; whose palanki he would often help to carry on his shoulders. He often visited the cells of religious men, whom he esteemed sacred, and would speak with great reverence of Christ (H) : but his parentage, poverty, and crucifixion, did so confound his thoughts, that he knew not what to think of them. Our author, who was at the court of this prince in 1618, tells us, that, a few years before, a juggler of Bengâl, a country famous, he says, for wizards and witches, brought an ape to shew the king, who was fond of novelties ; and, being told this animal could do several very strange things, sent for a company of boys, and gave a ring privately to one of them to see if the ape could find it ; which he did, by going to the boy who had it.

AFTER Jehân Ghîr had made some other trials, in which the ape performed his part with equal success, it came into his head to order the names of twelve prophets, or law-givers (I), to be written on scrolls of paper, and put all together in a bag, to see if the creature could draw out the name of the true prophet ; this done, the ape put in his paw, and pulled out the name of Christ. The experiment being made a second time, with new papers ; and the ape drawing out the name of Christ, as before, Mohabet Khân said it was some imposture of the Christians, although none were then present, and desired, that he might make a third trial : his request being granted, he put in no more than eleven of those names, and reserved that of Christ in his hand. The ape hereupon was ordered to put in his paw again ; which he did, and drew it forth empty two or three times successively.

(H) Roe says, he was bred up without any religion, was never circumcised, and in short an atheist. that he made a religion of his own out of all others ; and went farther than his father Akbar, in assuming to be a greater prophet than Mohammed.

(I) As Mohammed and Ali for the Musulmans ; Brama, Brammon, Ram, and Permissar, for the Hindûs, or Indians ; Zerdûst for the Parsîs ; Moses for the Jews, and Christ for the Christians ; with three others, whose names did not come to our author's knowledge.

4. Khân
Jehân
Ghîr.

The king demanding a reason for this, was answered, that haply the thing which he looked for was not there. The animal was then bid to search for it; when drawing out the eleven scrolls, one after the other, he, in a seeming indignation, tore them; after which, running up to Mohabet Khân, he caught that lord by the hand, in which the name of Christ was concealed: and the scroll being thereupon delivered to him, he opened and held it up before the king, without renting it, as he had done the others. Upon this, Jehân Ghîr kept the animal, calling it the divining ape, and gave the owner a pension on the occasion. This relation our author had from persons, who, though strangers to one another, as well as of different religions, yet all agreed in the several circumstances of it.

Jesuit's
impostor :

A LITTLE before the year 1616, the Jesuits house at Agra having been burned, among others, it was pretended by one of them, named Francisco Corfi, who resided there, that his wooden cross, set on a pole near the side of his house, was not consumed. Upon this, he carried the cross to court, and reported the wonder to the king. Prince Khûrm, who was present, and no favourer of the Christians, deriding the Jesuit, said it was one of his fabulous miracles; and proposed to put it to the trial, by throwing the cross into the fire, with this condition, that if it did not burn, he, the king, and all the persons present, would turn Christians: but, in case it did, that the Jesuit should be burned with it. Corfi, not caring to put the matter to such a precarious issue, alleged, "that such an experiment would be to tempt God: "that possibly the Deity never designed the persons present "the infinite favour to make them Christians; or, if he "did, the time of manifesting it might not be come: that, "as in this case, God might not shew a farther miracle (or "grant that which was required) his religion might suffer "prejudice (K) thereby for ever after."

and pretended conversions.

OUR author observes, that, although the Jesuits had liberty in those days to make converts in the Mogol's empire, and sent advice into Europe of mighty doings that way; yet that, in reality, they had baptised but a very few, and those only such as became profelytes to relieve their necessities¹.

¹ TERRY's Voy. to Ind, sect. 25, & 30. ROE ap. Churchil's Collect. Trav. vol. i. p. 731, & seqq.

(K) A very good reason, but it must be presumed God would not to the advantage of his religion; which, if from God, secure from harm.

JEHAN Ghîr had three sons and two daughters (L); 5. Khân Shâh Jehân.
 1. Soltâna Nissa Begum, or the lady-queen of women, born in 1586; 2. Soltân Khosro (or Khosraw), born in 1587; he died in 1622, and was father to Soltân Davr Bukhsh, or Bolaki. These two children were by the daughter of Râjah Ravandas, who poisoned herself in 1601; because the emperor did not take as much notice of her son, as he did of Soltân Khûrm. 3. Soltân Parvez (Parvêis, or Parweys), that is, the victorious; he was born in 1589; his mother was the daughter of Khojah Hassan. 4. Bahâr Banû Begum, or the lady blooming princess, by the daughter of Râjah Kessoudas Rattor, in 1590. 5. Soltân Khûrm, or the joyful prince, by the daughter of Râjah Qudsung, in 1692; who afterwards succeeded his father, and took the name of Shâh Jehân.
 Jehan Ghir's children.

JEHAN Ghîr had also Soltân Jehân Dâr, or the possessor of the world; and Soltân Shehriyâr, that is, the friend of the city; twins by a concubine, born in 1605. As this last was married to the daughter of Nûr Jehân, by her first husband Shîr Afkân Khân, she endeavoured to secure the empire to him^u; but without success, as we shall see presently.

C H A P. VII.

The Reign of Shâh Jehân.

S E C T. I.

From his ascending the Throne, to the civil War among his Sons.

AS soon as the breath was out of Jehân Ghîr's body, Nûr Soltân Jehân, the widow-queen, sent her son-in-law Shehriar Bolaki before towards Labûr, in order to ascend the throne, and did her utmost endeavours to gain the army to her party: but Assof Khân, joined by Keja Abdol Hassan, Eradet Khân, and other Omrâs, opposed his sister's design, and confined her. At the same time, to prevent tumults arising on account of ^u FRASER, ubi sup. p. 21.

(L) Terry, sect. 28. says he had five sons and one daughter, whose names and their significations he mistakes: 1. Soltân Kûbsurrû, the prince with the good face, to express his beauty: 2. Soltân Perum, or prince of the Pleiades; for Parveis: 3. Soltân Karûm, or prince of bounty: 4. Soltân Shabar, or the prince of fame: 5. Soltân Tâkt, or the prince of the throne, as born on his father's ascending the throne. This must be Soltân Jehân Dâr.

5. Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

the interregnum, they, to blind the people, placed the crown on the head of the young Soltân Bolakhi (A); who suffered this ceremony to be performed much against his will. In the interim, letters were dispatched in haste to Shâh Jehân, in which they assigned reasons for what they had done, and intreated him to come with all expedition, and assume the throne. After which, they took measures for bringing to order Soltân Shahriyâr; who, without the queen's assistance, could do nothing himself.

Shahriar usurps the throne.

THE prince, though 600 Indian miles distant, received these letters in six days time; upon the reception of which, being encouraged by Mohabet Khân, he set out with 7000 horse; and, by the way of Surât and Kambaya, arrived at Ahmed abâd; where Saffi Khân, the prince's enemy, was governor: but, as he then lay sick in bed, Naarha Khân, and the other Omrâs, immediately deserted to Shâh Jehân. Mean while, Affof Khân, with king Bolakhi, proceeded to Labûr; and Shahriyâr, who had usurped the kingdom, being deprived of the queen's help, in a few days, distributed the treasures, both of the king and the Omrâs, amounting to ninety lak of rupees, among the foldiers, in order to secure them to his interest. But all this did not avail: for, on the approach of Affof Khân, with an army, Shîr Kôja and Amîr Bîk, his principal generals, whom he had sent before with 20,000 horse, basely deserted him. Upon this he fled to Labûr, and fortified that city: but Affof Khân coming up with a greater force, the castle was taken, and Shahriyâr, falling into the hands of the king's troops, was deprived of sight by means of poison.

Khurm
destroys
both.

MEAN time, Shâh Jehân proceeded on his journey; and, being joined by all the Râjahs, governors of provinces, and generals, his forces increased at length to 30,000. In the kingdom of Nagor, the most potent Râjah Kessing came to him of his own accord; as did Khân Azem, near Azmîr: and not far from Agra he was met by the Râjah Jessing, Mansing, and Zitterzing, with several great lords. These happy omens seemed to secure the crown to him without dispute: but still despairing to possess the kingdom in peace long, as

(A) Herbert says, this was done at Dehli; that prince being then thirteen years of age. According to Frazer, Shâh Jehân being then at a great distance, and the three young princes, his sons, Dara Shikowb, Soltan Sujah, and Aureng Zib, in the hands of Nûr Jehân; Afsof Khân and Eradet Khân, to disconcert her scheme, and protract the time till Shâh Jehân arrived, proclaimed Soltan Dawr Bukhs, or Bolaki.

Shahriyâr,

Shahriyâr, Bolakhi, and his uncle's sons (B) were alive, he sent Râjah Bahâdr (C) to Lahûr, with a cruel order to put those princes secretly to death. In eight days he got to that city by post; and the unhappy victims being delivered up to him by Affef Khân, he strangled them all by night, and buried them in a garden near the deceased king (D). Shâh Jehân being arrived at Agra, he repaired to a palace which he had built in a delightful place on the side of the Jemna; where he remained till the lucky day was come, on which he was to enter the castle, and sit in the royal throne; at which time he was saluted by the grandees by the name of Soltân Shahâbo'd-dîn Mohammed (E), and crowned with great magnificence.

FIFTY days after the coronation, came Affef Khân, with the dowager queen and her daughters; likewise all the rest of the late king's women, together with Sadok Khân, Eradet Khân, and Mîr Gomley, and delivers the royal treasures to Shâh Jehân; who, on the other hand, confers on Affef Khân the whole authority under himself, and loaded him with honours. But, while the king imagined he had surmounted all difficulties, and had firmly established his throne by the death of the innocent princes, new troubles arose in several parts of the realm; which made him very uneasy. For the Uzbeks broke into the province of Kâbul, with numerous forces. Sheuf Almûk endeavoured to keep the kingdom of Tâtta for himself: Râjah Youk, taking up arms, had the boldness to infest all Hindûstân, and the road leading to Brâmphûr, with his robberies: lastly, two counterfeit Bolakhis gave him no small vexation. So that the new king was obliged to assemble all his forces, augment them considerably, and sent bodies of troops into various parts of his dominions. In this state things continued till the end of the year 1628 ^b.

^b DE LAET's India Vera, p. 288, & seq. HERBERT's Voy. p. 106, & seq.

(B) These were the three sons of Soltan Daniel (brother to Jehân Ghîr) named Gurstasp, Teyomars (perhaps rather Keyomars) and Hoyshang (or Hûshang). Fraiser.

(C) Herbert calls him Bandor.

(D) Herbert says, he was interred at Sekander, three kos from Agra. Tavernier relates these matters differently.

(E) Shahâbo'ddîn signifies the bright star of religion, as Shâh Jehân imports king of the world. He was born on Wednesday, the fifth of January, 1592, and sat on the throne in Agrâ, the first of February, 1628, being then 36 solar years and 28 days old: Fraiser's Hist. of Nadir Shâh, p. 24.

5. Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

Peace restored.

The Por-tugueses attacked.

Hughli taken from them.

ALTHOUGH the empire of Hindûstân was in the most flourishing condition that ever it had been, when Shâh Jehân ascended the throne; yet, by the distractions which ensued, it might have become a prey to its neighbours, in case it had been attacked. But Persia, on the west, was at that time governed by a weak, indolent prince. The Uzbek Tatars, to the north, were too much divided among themselves, to give the Mogols any disturbance: nor had they any thing to fear from the Indian princes, on the east; who, besides being separated by vast mountains and deserts, had neither power enough, nor genius, for war. It was this situation of the bordering kingdoms, which secured Shâh Jehân against invasions from without, and gave him an opportunity to suppress the troubles, which threatened his dominions from within.

As soon as the affairs of his empire were returned to a settled state, he resolved to make war against the Portugueses, who, before his reign, had been very formidable in the Indies; but of late were become contemptible, by the losses they had received from the growing powers of the English and Dutch. His chief motive to this war was the Portugueses refusing to assist him (F) in the time of his rebellion against his father; which gave him such a hatred to Christianity, whereto he was no friend before, that he made a vow to root it out. This prince, after the loss of a battle, being retired to a fortified place, some leagues from Daka, Michael Rodriguez, who commanded the Portuguese troops at Ougli (or Hugli), made a visit to the Soltan, and endeavoured to comfort him under his affliction. Hereupon Shâh Jehân requested his assistance, with soldiers and artillery; promising, that if ever he ascended the throne, he would reward the services received from his nation. Rodriguez, instead of granting him the aid demanded, had the boldness to tell him, "that he should be ashamed to serve a rebel: and that to take up arms against his father, was taking up arms against God himself." The Portuguese commander did what was still more provoking; for he joined the party of Soltân Parweis; and the victories, which this prince obtained over his brother, were in no small degree owing to the Portuguese infantry, who fought under his orders.

It is said, that the Soltana Tâje Mâhl (G), wife of Shâh Je-

(F) Bernier says, the reason was their conniving at the Portuguese pirates of Kakan, and buying his subjects from them for slaves. Tom. ii. p. 125.

(G) Manouchi, or his editor, writes Tâje Mahal. He likewise calls this monarch, corruptly, Shâh Jabam; writes Châm, or Kham, for Khân, and the like.

bân,

bân, helped much to incense him against the Christians in general, ^{5. Khan} and the Portugueses in particular. She not only inherited her ^{Shâh Je-} aversion to Christianity from her aunt Nûr Jêhân, but was ^{hân.} greatly exasperated against the Portugueses, for having given a retreat to two of her daughters, who had been converted by the missionaries to the Romish faith. The emperor, pushed on by the hatred of his queen, and his former oath, ordered Kassem Khân to lay siege to Ougli. That general, being arrived before the place, threatened to raze it to the ground, unless Rodriguez would pay him the sum which he demanded. The Portuguese commander, being in no condition to hold out against all the forces of the empire, which were sent against him, submitted at last to the Mogol general's demand, tho' much against his will; and, could he have foreseen what was to happen, would doubtless never have complied with the proposal: for Kassem Khân had no sooner received the money, than, instead of drawing off, he laid close siege to the town (H), and battered it furiously with his artillery; which is the principal force used in taking places in Hindûstân. The Portugueses made but an indifferent defence, and when they saw a breach opened in their walls, the fear of an assault obliged them to surrender at discretion. About five or six hundred of them were sent to Agra; among whom were some Jesuits and Augustine friars.

OUR author takes it for granted, that this disaster was a Their pro- judgment of heaven on the colony of Ougli for the sins of the flagate be- Portugueses. Unluckily for them, the Ganges, which is haviour. scarce ever dry, had at that juncture so little water, that the barks which they had on the river, and might have secured their retreat, could not get out of port. Being arrived at Agra, several of them turned Mohammedans to preserve their lives; while others suffered death rather than renounce their faith (I). Not one of them had been left alive, if Tâje Mâhl had not deceased before their arrival at that capital: for she

(H) Bernier owns, that the Mogol got from them all the money he could; but that the reason why Ougli was besieged, was the Portugueses being indifferently obstinate, in refusing what was demanded of them: but he does not mention what that demand was. Tom. ii. p. 125.

(I) Bernier mentions nothing of these martyrdoms. He says, the handsome women were shut up in the harâm; and that the old women and others were distributed among the Omrâs: that the young lads were circumcised, and made pages; while most of the men renounced their faith, through the terror of threats, to be thrown to elephants, or the allurements of promises. Tom. ii. p. 125, & seq.

5. Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

had made a vow, that they should all be cut to pieces. Nobody lamented her loss but Shâh Jehân himself; who owed the throne to her artifices and credit. In return for that benefit, he built her a sepulchre; which nothing in the Indies can equal for magnificence. The missionaries, after many fruitless attempts to make them renounce their religion (K), were released and sent to Goa, through the intercession of an Armenian and a Venetian; who were in great favour with Shâh Jehân c.

Jehan
Abad
built.

AKBAR had removed the court from Dehli to Agra, and Jehân Ghîr from Agra to Lahûr: but Shâh Jehân brought it back again from Lahûr to Dehli (L), and restored this antient capital to its first lustre; building at a vast expence a new city, which he called Shâh Jehân Abâd, or the city of Shâh Jehân, and to which the old one serves as a suburb. His principal care was employed about making two gardens in his palace; in which incredible sums were expended (M): and in this delicious place it was, that he forgot the warlike inclinations which possessed him in his youth, to give himself up intirely to pleasure; which had its continual round in musick and dancing, plays and entertainments. No person had a greater share in his graces, than a poet, who invented new feasts and diversions; for the emperor and his harâm delighted most in buffoon farces. Sometimes he pleased his eyes with the cruel sight of gladiators, who fought before him; and certain days of the week were set apart for the chace.

Shâh Je-
han's debauchery:

BUT Shâh Jehân's principal pleasure was that of women; which he carried to a much greater height than any of his predecessors. Not content with a multitude of queens, concubines, and slaves; which are the three different classes of c MENOUCHI's Hist. Gen. Emp. Mog. par Catrou, p. 214, & seqq. BERNIER's Mem. Emp. Mog. part ii. p. 125.

(K) Bernier reckons the friers among those who renounced their faith; saying, indeed, that some of them persisted in it: and that the missionaries of Agrâ, who still remained in their houses, found means to get them conveyed away. Tom. ii. p. 126.

(L) This was on the 29th of March, 1647, being the 20th of his reign. Frazer's Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 24. So little do we find in European authors relating to this prince, either before or after this remove, for ten years more; that is, till the time of the rebellion of his sons.

(M) The castle and palace which he built at Dehli, or Shâh Jehân abâd, with the gardens and other conveniencies on the banks of the river Chun (or Jemna) cost above 50 laks of rupees, or 625,000 pounds. Frazer, ubi supr. p. 25.

women in the harâm, he took away the wives of the principal officers of his court. Those of Jaffer Khân and Khalîl Khân gave great scandal to the whole empire. They went every day to the palace, contrary to the custom of the ladies in that country, one of them in the morning, the other in the afternoon; which gave occasion to the Fakîrs, who always croud the entrance of the palace, to make the severest reflections. Shâh Jehân's love for women made him lavish in his expences upon them, and magnificent in his apartments. It is reported, that he presented Khalîl Khân's lady with a pair of slippers, whose value was scarce to be estimated. From thence afterwards he took occasion to pass a jest on her husband in a public assembly; but it is said that jest cost him dear, and caused Khalîl to desert afterwards to Aureng Zib.

5. Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

THE famous gallery, which has been talked of so much in Europe for its immense riches, had its rise from the same vein of gallantry. This magnificent apartment was said to have been designed for a female dancer, sprung from the dregs of the people, and of no extraordinary accomplishments. But, however addicted to pleasure, Shâh Jehân never neglected to administer justice, with an exactness and care surpassing all his predecessors. He was, as it were, the Solomon of the Mogols; and they relate decisions of his, pronounced with so much wisdom, that the memory of them will never be lost in the Indies. He never pardoned corrupt judges, and took more than ordinary care to clear his dominions of robbers. Before his reign, the roads were so infested with them, that trade was greatly interrupted. The method which he took to deliver the empire from that plague, was to make the officers of justice responsible for all the robberies which were committed within their respective districts. Thus the warehouse of the Dutch, at Surât, having been broken open in the night, he obliged the governor to pay them the full value of the goods, which they had lost.

and excellent goverment.

THE justice which Shâh Jehân rendered to his people, A gallant somewhat lessened the contempt in which voluptuous indo- Omrâ.
lent princes are usually held. However, they sometimes lost their respect for him. An Omrâ of his army having presumed to sit in his presence, contrary to the custom of the empire, the king deprived him of his employments. Next day the disgraced officer appeared in the hall of audience with the same confidence as he had done the day before. Then sitting down in Shâh Jehân's presence, "Now, my lord," says he, "since I am no longer in your pay, I may use that freedom which belongs to every man who is independent." The emperor, far from being offended at the liberty which the Omrâ took.

5. Khân
Shân Je-
hân.

took, praised his resolution ; and, restoring him to his posts, augmented his appointments. As this facility in the emperor to pardon often occasioned the courtiers to speak to him with too much freedom, so his faults at length drew on him the contempt of the people, and caused his own sons to rebel against him.

Presumptuous Râ-jab.

THERE is a remarkable instance of want of respect to him, in one of the Râjah, or Indian princes, who, with their troops, mount the guard before the palace, every week in their turn. This Râjah, named Amarfin, having neglected to be upon duty on the day he was to serve, at length, by the persuasion of his friends, repaired to his post. Hereupon one of the secretaries of state reproached him, in the emperor's presence, for making slight of the service : which the Râjah taking as a great affront, he drew his poniard, and stabbed the minister to the heart, so near to Shâh Jehân, that his cloaths were stained with the blood. As so great a piece of insolence could not go unpunished, Amarfin was pierced with a thousand wounds : but his Râjapûts, with impunity, revenged their master's death, by putting to the sword all the people, whom they met-with about the palace and in the city ^d.

Villainy of astrologers :

THE weakness of the government gave occasion to other Râjahs to act at pleasure. Champet, one of the most daring and powerful among them, refused to pay the tribute. As an example of this kind would prove, if followed, of the most dangerous consequence, it was advised by the astrologers, without whose opinion nothing is done at court, that Shah Jehân himself should take the field against the rebel ; and, the more strongly to oblige him to pursue their counsel, declared, that, during such a month, the residence at Dahli would prove fatal to the person who there held the first rank. The credulous emperor, to avoid this prediction, departed from the city with an army, and left the Kutwâl governor in his absence. Sadul Khan, who commanded the Mogol troops under his majesty, marched towards the territories of Champet ; who advanced to meet the enemy. The general, whom the emperor's presence had rendered somewhat fearful, perceiving the Râjah advantageously posted, judged it better to dislodge him by fraud, than attempt it by force. Pursuant to this resolution, he, by a messenger, not only promised him pardon for his offence, but also to augment his governments, provided he would retire out of the territories of his sovereign. Champet, confiding in the general's word, retired accordingly : but had no sooner quitted his post, than he found the Mogols

to give promissions.

^d MENOUCHI, ubi supra p. 218, & seqq.

at his heels ; and he must inevitably have been cut to pieces, with all his forces, if the impenetrable forests and craggy mountains had not protected him from the perfidy of the emperor. Shâh Jehân returned to Dehli, covered with shame, for having violated his faith, without gaining his point against the Râjah ; who, as soon as the enemy had turned their backs, took the field anew, and pillaged the lands of the empire without opposition. However, he was pleased to think, that the expedition had preserved his life : for he found the Kut-wâl dead, whom he had left in his stead ; the astrologers, to verify their prediction, having procured his physician to poison him ; and by this piece of villainy established themselves more than ever in the favour of Shâh Jehân.

WHEN this prince grew old, his passions changed with his age, and avarice succeeded to prodigality, which surpassed all his other vices : for as soon as his officers, both civil and military, were grown rich by oppressing the people, he stripped them of their ill-gotten wealth, and enriched himself by the spoil. The better to secure the immense treasures, which he had hoarded up, he caused two large subterraneous vaults, supported by marble pillars, to be made under his palace ; in one of which he kept his gold, and in the other his silver. Likewise, to prevent those precious metals from being carried away, he had them formed into huge wedges, of a bulk unfit to serve in commerce. Shâh Jehân spent great part of the day in these caverns, to feed his eyes with the sight of that prodigious heap of riches, under pretence of the cool which the place afforded. His covetousness became so great, that, to save the expence of maintaining his sons at court, suitable to their dignity, he gave them (N) governments to live on, without any appointments, but what they could draw from the people : and thus ran into the same error in politics, which had given so much inquietude to Jehân Ghîr : who, by bestowing distant provinces on his children, during his lifetime, put it in their power to rebel against him ; and altho' Shâh Jehân's own conduct had verified this truth, yet avarice hindered him from taking warning by his father's indiscretion^c.

* MENOUCHI, ubi sup. p. 227, & seqq.

(N) So Menouchi ; but Bernier says, he did this against his judgment ; fearing, as they were all grown up, married, and making parties to secure the crown, that if he kept them still at court, they would cut one another's throats before his eyes.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

his children.

DaraShe-kowh.

Soltân
Sûjah.

Aureng
Zib.

SHAH Jehân never had more than twelve children (O) by all his wives : for the Mogols make no scruple to prevent profligickness in their women. Of these only four sons and two daughters grew to the estate of men and women. In regard all the intrigues of the court, and civil wars, which troubled the reign of this monarch, concern those princes and princesses, as the true sources from whence they sprung, it will be proper to give our readers some account of each.

THE eldest son was named Dara Shekowh, that is, in pomp like Darius. This prince was gallant in conversation, witty in repartees, exceeding civil and liberal; but had so good an opinion of himself, that he thought nobody capable to give him counsel, and those, who offered to advise him, were sure to be treated with injurious language. He was besides easily fired, and in his passion would threaten and affront the greatest Omrâs. It is true, all passed over like a flash of lightning : but those insults generally leave stings behind, which are never to be drawn out. He pretended in private to favour every kind of religion, in order to gain the professors to his interest ; particularly that of the Indians, to several of whose Brâmmans he gave considerable pensions ; which proved fatal to him in the end.

SOLTÂN Sujâh, the second son, was much of his brother Dara's humour ; but more reserved in his conduct, and dexterous in managing his affairs. He made friends under-hand by means of presents ; which he heaped on the principal Omrâs and Râjahs : but too much indulged his pleasures with women, among whom he spent whole days and nights in feasting ; which cooled the affection of many towards him. As the Persians, or their children, had the greatest power at the Mogol's court, and held the most important places, he, to gain them to his party, declared himself of the Shiyâh sect.

AURENG Zib had not the gallantry and surprising presence of Dara ; for he appeared serious and melancholy : but was more judicious, and understood the world much better. To take off any suspicion of his aiming at the throne, he for a long time made profession to be a Fakîr, a kind of religious mendicant ; yet all this while he was making a party at court, but with such art and secrecy, that it could hardly be perceived. He had the address also to gain the affections and esteem of Shâh Jehân, who could not conceal it, and judged him capable of reigning. This gave no small jealousy to Dara,

(O) Meneuchi says but seven ; because only seven were living when the wars began.

who

who could not forbear saying sometimes ; Of all my brothers, I fear none but this Namazi, that is, this bigot, this great braying man. 5 Khân Shâh Jehân.

MORAD Bukhsh, or Bokhsh, that is, the giver of desires, or wishes, was the youngest and least judicious of the four brothers. He cared for nothing but mirth and pastime ; to drink, hunt, and shoot : yet he had some good qualities. He was very civil and liberal. He despised cabals ; glorying in it, that he kept nothing secret ; and boasting openly, that he trusted in nothing but his arm and his sword. In short, he was very brave ; and, had this bravery been accompanied with some share of conduct, he would have ascended the throne ^f.

Morad
Bukhsh.

THE name of Shâh Jehân's two daughters were Jehân Ara Begûm, and Royshn Rây Begûm. Jehân Ara Begûm, or the princess ornament of the world, is the same who is called, by Bernier, and other European authors, Begûm Saheb. She was very beautiful, as well as a great wit ; and so passionately beloved by her father, that it was rumoured he was intimate with her ; and pleaded in excuse a decision of the Mohammedan doctors, that a man might eat of the fruit of the tree, which he had planted. But if this had been so, it is not likely that he would suffer a musician of the palace to be her favourite, wink at their meetings, and load him with benefits. However that be, her father placed great confidence in her, gave her charge to watch over his safety, and was swayed by her in the most weighty affairs. As she had great pensions, and received large presents from all quarters, so she was of a generous disposition. This princess always espoused the interest of her brother Dara ; which inclination to serve him was kept up by a promise which he had made, to marry her as soon as ever he came to the crown.

BUT neither this promise, nor her gallant within the palace, could restrain her inclinations from rambling abroad. It is said, that, having found means to introduce a handsome young man, of no great quality, into her apartment ; yet, as it was very difficult to conceal this from so many watchful and jealous eyes, the matter came to the ears of Shâh Jehân ; who resolved to surprise her, under pretence of a visit. The princess, seeing her father come so unexpectedly, had no more time than to hide the unfortunate gallant in one of the great caldrons made to bathe in. The emperor, who suspected it, after entertaining her for a pretty while, as he used her gallantry.

^f FRASER'S Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 28, & seqq. BERNIER, ubi supr. part. 1. p. 10, & seq.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

to do, at length began to find fault with her dishabille, and told her she ought to bathe oftener. At the same time, he, with a countenance somewhat stern, ordered a fire to be made under the caldron; nor would leave the place till the eunuch had brought him word that the unhappy lover was dispatched.

Another
instance.

SOME time after she took other measures, and chose for her steward Nâzer Khân, a young Persian lord, one of the handsomest and most accomplished Omrâs in the whole court, of which he was the darling; insomuch, that Shâh Heft Khân, Aureng Zib's uncle, proposed marrying him to the princess: but Shah Jehân took that proposal very ill; and soon after, being informed of the intrigues carried on between that nobleman and his daughter, resolved to get rid of Nâzer Khân. This resolution he put in execution a few days after, by means of betel (P), which he gave him, by way of doing him honour. The young lord, little imagining that he had taken poison, left the assembly very jocund: but the drug was so strong, that he died in his paleki, before he reached his own house.

Royshan rây Begum.

ROYSHAN RAY, or Rushn rây Begum; that is, the princess of an enlightened mind; called by our writers, Ravcherre-ra, and Roshenara Begum (Q); tho' she was not so beautiful and witty as Begum Saheb; yet she was handsome enough, as well as lively, and hated pleasure no more than her sister. As she was strongly attached to the interest of Aureng Zib, she was of course an enemy to Dara, and Begum Saheb. This was the reason that she had no great riches, nor any considerable share in the affairs of state. However, as she was in the harâm, and wanted no spies, she could not but discover many important matters; of which she gave intelligence to her favourite brother^f.

^f BERNIER, ubi sup. part I. p. 20. & seqq. MENOUCI, p. 230.

(P) A regale given at visits to chew.

(Q) Bernier writes Ravchenera, if there be not some mistake in the printing, and Ménouchi Roxanara, the x being used for the English sh. She was indeed the fifth of Shâh Jehân's children, but not younger than Aureng Zib, as Ménouchi makes her. This author speaks also of a third, and youngest daughter, at the time of the rebellion, called Mer-nisa Begum. This seems to be the same with Hûro'l Nissa Begum, or the princess most angelic of women: but she was the eldest of all Shâh Jehân's children, and died some years before.

SHAH Jehân, having determined, as before observed, to remove his sons at a distance from court, and one another, sent Soltân Sujâh viceroy into Bengâl; Aureng Zib into Dehân; and Morâd Bukhsb to Guzerât; giving to Dara the kingdoms of Kâbul and Multân. This last, being the eldest, and designed for the throne, stirred not from court; where he was permitted by his father to issue out orders, and sit on a sort of throne, a little lower than his; so that it seemed as if there were two kings in the realm. For all this great indulgence shewed to Dara, and the extraordinary submission paid by that prince, yet Shâh Jehân still harboured some diffidence; fearing, above all things, the Morjel: and as he thought Aureng Zib more fit for reigning, it was said that he always held a secret correspondence with him^e.

Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.
Princes provided for.

AN account has been elsewhere given^b of the attempt made by Aureng Zib to surprise the king of Golkonda, by means of his general Amîr Jemla, who, to avoid the king's displeasure, had revolted from him; and of the peace, which was at last concluded between the two states; supposed to have been brought about by the intrigues of Dara, and Begum Saheb; from the apprehension, that, if Aureng Zib should conquer Golkonda, he would become too powerful. Pursuant to this peace, Amîr Jemla withdrew, with all his family, his effects, troops and artillery, marching with the prince towards Dekân. In the way they took Bider (or Bedder) one of the strongest fortresses in all Viziapûr; and, on their arrival at Dawlet abâd, contracted so intimate a friendship, that they could not live a day without seeing one another twice. This union began to give a new face to affairs in all those parts of India; and laid the first foundations of the sovereignty of Aureng Zib.

Amîr
Jemla

AMIR JEMLA, who had the art to get himself called often to court, always went with rich presents; and still urged Shah Jehân to make war against the kings of Golkonda, Viziapûr, and the Portugueses. To allure him the more effectually to take his advice, he presented him with that great diamond found in the Golkonda mines; which is esteemed matchless. The emperor, whether dazzled with the precious stones, or to have an army in the field, to be a check, as some thought, on Dara, listened to the counsel: for he observed this prince active to make himself potent, and to have ill-treated several of the prime Omrâs, because they did not approve of his measures; particularly the Wazîr Sads'lah Khân, whom he caused to be poisoned, to the great affliction of Shah Jehân, who passionfoments a war;

^e BERNIER, p. 29, & seq. ^b See hereafter, book x. ch. 4, sect. 2.

5 Khân
Shah Je-
hân.

ately loved him, and considered as the greatest statesman the Indies had ever produced. This Wazîr being very powerful, Dara saw that he was in a condition to be arbitrator of the empire, in case his father should decease. Besides, being an Indian, some envious of his greatness, insinuated to the prince, that he entertained numerous troops of Pâtans, in divers places, with a design to make himself, or his son, king; at least to expel the Moguls, and restore the Pâtans.

invades
Dekân.

DARA did all he could to hinder the sending an army to Dekân, as he saw it was to give strength to Aureng Zib: but when he found he could not prevail, he at length consented, on condition that his brother should remain at Darw-lat Abâd; and Amîr Jemla, prosecuting the war by himself, should leave his family at court, as a pledge of his fidelity; which condition, at length, that general agreed to, on the emperor's promising, in a little time, to send to him his wife and children. Accordingly he set forward from Agra, with a very gallant army; and entering Viziapûr, without stopping, besieged a strong place, called *Kaliân*ⁱ.

S E C T. II.

Account of the Civil Wars, till Shâh Jehân's Deposition.

Shâh Je-
hân falls sick.

THE affairs of Hindûstân were in this situation, when Shâh Jehân fell dangerously ill (A). This prince, who, though past seventy years of age, was much addicted to venereal pleasures, took so strong a potion to invigorate nature, that it brought on a suppression of urine, which had like to have killed him. All the empire was soon alarmed at this news; and all the princes were quickly in motion, raising troops in their several governments, and writing letters to make friends. Some of these falling into the hands of Dara, he shewed them to the king, in order to incense him against his brothers: but Shâh Jehân, more afraid of the accuser than the accused, only took care to guard against them; and, 'tis said, even wrote to Aureng Zib; which Dara hearing of, resented with menaces.

ⁱ BERNIER, p. 42, & seqq.

(A) According to the Indian authors, as reported by Fraser, p. 29. So'tân Dara Shikoweb, endeavouring to possess himself of the empire, confined his father, Shâh Jehân, towards the end of the year 1656; which probably was in the time of his sickness: but then he could not be above 64 or 65 at most.

MEAN time Shâh Jehân lingering under his distemper, it was reported that he was dead ; which threw the court into great disorder, and caused the shops in Agra to be shut up for several days. On this advice, his sons no longer concealed their designs, but made open preparations for war, each in his own defence: well knowing that they had nothing for it, but the throne or death ; and that whoever should be conqueror, would rid himself of all the rest, as their father had before done of his brothers.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

The princes
arm.

SOLTÂN Sujâh, who had amassed great treasures in Ben-Sujâh gâl, by ruining some Râjahs, and drawing great sums from others, first took the field, with a puissant army ; and, in confidence that all the Persian Omras were in his interest, boldly marched towards Agra ; giving out by the way, that Dara had poisoned his father, and he was resolved to revenge his death. Shah Jehân, by Dara's advice, wrote to inform the prince that he was better, and to forbid him to advance : but Sujâh, assured by his friends at court that the king's sickness was mortal, ceased not to continue his march ; pretending he knew his father was dead, and that, if alive, he was desirous to kiss his feet.

takes the field.

AURENG ZIB, at the same time, takes the field (B) in Aureng Dekân ; and altho' forbidden likewise to proceed, returns the same Answer as Sujâh had done. But his forces being small, and his treasury low, he made use of two artifices to put himself in a condition to march. First, he writes to his brother, Morâd Bukhsb, in Guzerât, a dissembling letter, importing, that as Dara was a Kâfr, or idolater, Sujâh a Rafezi, or heretick, and himself a Fakîr, there was none who could pretend to the succession, but he, Morâd : that therefore, if he would promise only to let him live quietly in some corner of his dominions, when he should come to the empire, there to spend his days in devotion, he would forthwith join him with his troops, and help him to gain the throne : that, in the mean time, he had sent him 100,000 rupees (C) ; and advised him to come, with all speed, to seize on the castle of Surât, where the treasure of the country was lodged. Morâd Bukhsb, who was neither very rich, nor powerful, was overjoyed at this proposal : and having, by

Aureng
Zib's policy ;

(B) As soon as Aureng Zib had notice that Dara had confined his father, he began to make preparations for war, in favour, as he gave out, of Morâd Bukhsb ; to whom he wrote from Aureng abâd, in Dekân, to join him at Eugene (or Eujin), the capital of Mâlva. Frazer. Hist. Nadir Shâh. p. 29.

(C) Or 50,000 l. a rupee being about half an English crown.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

the credit of his brother's letter, soon raised money and men, sent 3000, under the command of Shâh Abbâs, a valiant eunuch, to besiege Surât.

~~~~~
gains
Amîr
Jemla ;

AURENG ZIB's second contrivance was to draw in Amîr Jemla, who was still before Kaliân, to join in his measures. With this view, he sends his eldest son, Soltân Mahmûd, who had married the king of Golkonda's daughter, to persuade the Amîr to repair to Dawlet abad: but Jemla, suspecting his errand, told him that he was assured Shâh Jehân was alive; and that, besides, all his family being in the power of Dara, he could by no means assist Aureng Zib. This prince, not discouraged by the first repulse, sent his second son, Soltân Mauzm, who backed his father's letter with so much dexterity, that the Amîr, no longer able to resist, pushed the siege of Kaliân vigorously; and, forcing the garrison to surrender, with the choicest of his troops set out for Dawlet abad. As soon as he arrived, Aureng Zib, complimenting him with the title of Baba, and Bâba ji, Father, and Lord Father, intreated him not to fail him, at this critical juncture, with his forces and money. To remove the objection about the danger of his family, he proposed putting him under a sham arrest, and confining him in the castle, that Dara might think the Amîr had no hand in the plot<sup>a</sup>.

sets forward ;

AMIR JEMLA having consented to this stratagem, he was formally arrested, and confined in a chamber. His army, alarmed at the detention of their general, ran to his rescue: but, as the whole was counterfeited, they were soon appeased; and, by distributing money, back'd with great promises, in case of success, the troops both of the Amîr, and of Shâh Jehân, were induced to list under the banner of Aureng Zib. This done, the prince marched (D) towards Surât, where Morâd Bukhsh had met with greater resistance than he expected: but hearing in his march, that the governor had surrendered the place, he sent to congratulate his brother on the occasion; acquainted him with the affair of Amîr Jemla; and desired him to haste to join his army, which was advancing to Agra, by way of Brâmpûr.

joined by Morâd ;

AFTER all, Morâd Bukhsh neither found so much treasure as he expected at Surât, nor had much reason to boast of taking the place: which, tho' defended with no regular forti-

<sup>a</sup> BERNIER, p. 49, & seqq.

(D) Aureng Zib set out from Auring abad the 4th of Feb. 1658, with 25,000 horse, having sent his son Soltân Mobammed (Berniers's Mahmûd) before him, on the 24th of January.

fications,

fications, opposed his forces for above a month; and would never have been reduced by him, but for the Dutch, who cast the besieged into such a consternation, by blowing up part of the wall with a mine, that they immediately surrendered (E). However, this success, being wholly ascribed to the valour of Morâd Bukhsh, by the people of those countries, greatly promoted his affairs (F). Yet the eunuch Shâh Abbâs, a man of good sense, as well as courage, advised him not to confide too much in the specious promises of Aureng Zîb, nor be too hasty to join him; but rather to fortify Surât, which was a very good post, and see what turn things were likely to take, before he proceeded any further. But that prince, blinded with an excessive ambition to reign, and having neither much forces nor treasure, was prevailed on, by his brother's continual letters, and protestations of sincerity, to haste to the place of rendezvous, where he was received with all outward demonstrations of joy and affection.

THE two armies, being thus joined, set forward together; march to- and, during the whole march, Aureng Zîb treated his bro- wards ther with the utmost respect; never addressing him, either in Agra. public or private, but with the title of Hazeret, that is, King, and Majesty. This behaviour took-off all suspicion from Morâd Bukhsh, who never reflected on the late expedition against Golkenda; and that he, who discovered so much eagerness to conquer a powerful kingdom, was not of a temper to live and die a Fakîr. The news of this conjunction of the two brothers alarmed not only Dara, but Shah Jehân himself, who knew the subtil genius of the one, and courage of the other. It was to no purpose to write to them to turn back, and that he was in a way of recovery. They answered, as Soltân Sujâh had done before, on the same occasion; and said the letters were counterfeited by their brother Dara <sup>b</sup>.

WHILE Shâh Jehân is in the greatest anxiety, to see his Sujâh de- children going to destroy one another, without having it in feated

<sup>b</sup> BERNIER, ibid. p. 62, & seqq.

(E) On the 29th of December, 1659, the mine threw down part of the wall; yet the city held out still for above 40 days. Tavernier. Trav. Ind. l. 2. c. 2. p. 109.

(F) When Morâd, who was then at Ahmed abâd, squeezing money out of the people, heard that Surât was taken, he got a throne, and was proclaimed king there of all Hindûstân, coined money, and appointed governors of cities. Tavern. Trav. Ind. l. 2. c. 2. p. 109.

his

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

by Soleymân Shekowh.

his power to prevent it, preparations are made by Dara, to oppose the two armies, which were in full march, on different sides, to Agra. As that of Soltân Sujâh was most advanced, the first care was to detach troops to oppose him. The command of these was given to Soleymân Shekowh, eldest son of Dara, a prince about twenty-five years of age, handsome, and of good parts, generous, and beloved of all, especially his grandfather, who considered him as his successor, rather than Dara. Yet as Shâh Jehân was desirous that matters should be accommodated, rather than come to extremity, he gave the young prince, for his companion, an antient Râjah, named Jesselyn, with secret orders not to fight, if it was possible to avoid it; and to advise Sujâh to retire. but this prince, fearing lest Aureng Zib should get possession of the capital before him, and his nephew being urged, by a desire of signalizing himself, there was no possibility of restraining the two armies, which, as soon as they came in fight, towards Elabâs, began to cannonade each other. The first onset was very sharp and obstinate on both sides: but at length Soleymân Shekowh pressed Sujâh with such vigour, that he put his troops into disorder; and at length obliged him to fly. So that if Jesselyn, and the Pâtan Delil Khân, who followed the Râjahs measures, had seconded the prince, 'twas thought the whole army would have been overthrown, and Sujâh himself in danger of being taken: but Jesselyn conforming himself to the emperor's orders, the Soltân had time to retreat, leaving behind some of his artillery. As this defeat gave great reputation to Soleymân Shekowh, it lessened that of Soltân Sujâh, and exceedingly cooled the inclinations of the Persians towards him.

Soleymân turns back. PRINCE Soleymân, who had received advice, that his undies, Aureng Zib, and Morâd Bukhsb, were advancing towards Agra; well knowing that his father Dara had no great stock of prudence, but many secret enemies, after he had pursued Soltân Sujâh for a few days, turned back, with a resolution to make what haste he could to the capital. This certainly was the wisest course which could be taken; and could he have gotten thither time enough, in all probability Aureng Zib would never have ventured a battle against such very unequal forces as he must then have had to deal with. But Dara's bad fortune would not permit things to happen conformably to the wishes of the prince, his son.

Aureng Zib ad- vances;

MEAN time, Aureng Zib having, to the great surprize of the court, crossed the river of Brâmpûr, and all the difficult passages between the mountains, some troops were sent in haste

haste to the river Eujenes (G), under the command of Kâssef 5 Khân Khân, a renowned general, but not much inclined to Dara; Shâh Je- and Jessom seyn (H), a potent Râjah, not inferior to Jessseyn, hân.
 and married to the daughter of that Râjah Râna, who was so puissant in the time of Akber. Before their departure, Shâh Jeshân gave them the same orders as he had done to Jessseyn, when he sent him with Soleymân Shekowh against Soltân Sujâb; nor did they fail in their march to send several times to Aureng Zib, and Morâd Bukhsb, to persuade them to turn back, altho' to no purpose: for the princes detaining the messengers, advanced the faster; and appeared, with their forces, on a rising ground, not far from the river, much sooner than was expected.

As the Eujenes was then fordable, it being the time of comes to the great heats, and the army of the confederate princes Eujin; much fatigued with the march, Aureng Zib play'd upon the enemy with his cannon, to prevent their passing the river; which if they had done, they might easily have routed the tired troops: but they were content, according to their orders, to remain by the river-side, and hinder the other from crossing it. This, however, they could not do; for Aureng Zib, after he had let his army rest for two or three days, commanded them to pass the river, under cover of all his artillery, which began to play. Kâssef Khân, and the Râjah, did not fail to answer them with theirs. The combat was obstinately maintained at first by the extraordinary valour of Jessom seyn; for Kâssef Khân, tho' a famous warrior, gave no great proof of his courage on this occasion. Nay, some accused him of treachery, in having ordered the powder and ball to be buried by night in the sand; for after two or three discharges, there was no more to be found <sup>c</sup>.

FOR all this, the confederate army was much embarrassed defeats the by rocks in the middle of the river, and the high banks enemy.

<sup>c</sup> BERNIER, p. 73, & seqq.

(G) Rather Eujin, on which stands the city of that name, the capital of the province of Malwa. It may be pronounced Ujin, Oujin, Aujin.

(H) Fraser lays the two brothers at Eugene defeated Kâssef
Khân, and the Mâha Râjah
Jessseyn sung. Mâha Râjah signifies the great prince, in the Sanskerrit, or Brâhman language; a title given by the Mogols to the Râjahs of Mar- war, of the Rattar family. The capital of their country is Juhd- pûr, 176 kofs (or 264 miles) distant from Dehli. The Rajapûts of Marwar are reckoned the best soldiers in India. Fraser.

Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 30.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

Magnanimous women.

Dara enraged.

on the other side ; but at length Morâd Bukhsh cast himself into the stream, with so much resolution and force, that there was no resisting him. He passed over, and with him a good part of the army, which made Kâssim Khân to give back ; and put Jessim seyn in great danger of his person : for presently he found the whole body of the enemy upon him ; and but for the extraordinary bravery of his Râjapûts, who were almost all killed about him, he must have been a dead man. Out of 8000, or more, not above five or six hundred remained ; insomuch, that he durst not return to Agra, after so great a loss. On the other hand, his wife refused to admit him, after his defeat and flight. When she heard he was near the castle, notwithstanding the brave resistance he had made, instead of sending an officer to console him, she ordered the gates to be shut, and not to suffer this infamous man to enter ; adding, “ that he was not her husband ; “ and that she would never see him : that the son-in-law of “ the great Râna could not have had so low a soul ; but would “ have imitated the virtue of the illustrious house into which “ he was ingrafted : in a word, would either have van- “ quished or died.” A moment after, she commanded a pile of wood to be laid, that she might burn herself ; saying, “ that they had abused her ; and that Jessim seyn must “ needs be dead.” Then returning to her first temper of mind, she fell into a passion, and broke out into a thousand reproaches against him. She continued in the transports for eight or nine days, without being able to resolve to see her husband : till, at last, her mother brought her, in some degree, to herself ; assuring her, that as soon as the Râjah had a little refreshed himself, he would raise another army, to fight Aureng Zib, and repair his honour at any rate.

WHEN Dara was informed of what had happened at Eugenes, he fell into such a rage against Kâssim Khân, that had he been present, it is thought he would have cut off his head. He was likewise so transported against Amir Jemla, whom he considered as the principal cause of the misfortune ; that had not Shâh Jehân pacified him, by representing the improbability of the case, it is thought he would have killed his son Mohammed Amir Khân, or sent his wife and daughter to the market-place of prostituted women. Mean time, the victory swelled the hopes of the two confederate princes to no small degree ; and Aureng Zib, still more to animate his soldiers, bragged openly, that he had 30,000 Mogols at his devotion, in Dara's army ; and the sequel shewed, that there was some foundation for what he said. The army rested for a few days on the banks of that sweet river ; river; during which time Aureng Zib wrote to all his friends, and tried to get intelligence from the court. After this he marched on towards Agra, but slowly, that he might have time to take proper measures at this juncture<sup>d</sup>.

5 Khân Sháh Jehân.

SHAH Jehân, perceiving the resolution of the two princes, would fain have prevented the last decisive battle, for which he saw Dara was preparing; but knew not how to compass it. As he was in this son's power, he was obliged to commit to him all the forces of the empire, and command all officers to obey him. His army consisted of little less than 100,000 horse, and 20,000 foot, with 4000 pieces of cannon (I); besides an incredible number of servants, victuallers, and other followers of camps, who are often put by historians among the number of combatants. Altho' this army was very brave, and strong enough to cut in pieces two or three of such as Aureng Zib had with him, consisting at most of 35,000 or 40,000 men, tired with long marches; yet scarce any body prefaged well for Dara, as they knew the chief Omrás had no affection for him; and that the troops, which he could most confide in, were with his son Soleymán Shekówh.

His great army.

FOR this reason, his friends, and Sháh Jehân himself, advised him not to hazard a battle, at least till his son arrived with his troops. What was still more prudent, the emperor offered, infirm as he was, to be carried into the field, to interpose his authority for accommodating matters. This, doubtless, was a very good expedient: for the two princes would never have dared to fight against their father; and if they had, they must have smarted for it: since all the Omrás, as well as soldiers, however averse to Dara, had a great affection for the emperor, and would have fought resolutely in his defence. But Dara was deaf to all proposals of that nature: as he had the king, the treasure, and, in short, all the power then in his own hands, he was resolved not to give it up, or share it with his brothers (one already defeated, and the other two, in his opinion, not far from ruin) as he must have done in case of an accommodation.

Slights advised.

RESOLVING likewise to have all the glory of this preconcerted victory to himself, he ordered the army immediately to take the field, without waiting for his son. When he went to take leave of his father, the emperor embraced and blessed

The armies meet.

<sup>d</sup> BERNIER, p. 85, & seqq.

(I) 'Tis in the original fourscore thousand; perhaps it ought to be but 400.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

him; but bid him, if he lost the battle, take heed of ever coming into his presence. This made no impression on Dara, who, taking horse, seized the passage of the river Tehembel*, about twenty miles from Agra; where he fortified himself, and expected his enemy: but the subtil Fakîr, who knew by his spies that the passage there was very difficult; instead of attempting it, prevails on Champet, a rebellious Rajâh, mentioned before, to let him pass thro' his territories, to a place where the river was very shallow. Then breaking up his camp in the dark, only leaving some tents to amuse Dara, he marched, night and day, thro' the woods and hills, conducted by the Râjah himself, with such expedition, that he was on the other side of the Tehembel before Dara knew any thing of the matter. This obliged Dara to quit all his fortifications, to follow his enemies; who advanced, with great diligence, to gain the river Jemna, there to post themselves securely, and expected their brother: in effect, they encamped at Samongher, now called Fateh abad, or, the place of victory, five miles short of Agra. Shortly after, Dara arrived, and pitched his tents nigh the bank of the same river, between the capital and the army of his competitors. During the three or four days which were spent without action, Shâh Jehân wrote several times to acquaint Dara that Soleymân Shekowh was near at hand; and advised him to wait his coming: but that prince answered, that, before three days were past, he would bring Aureng Zib, and Morâd Bukhsb, bound hand and foot, to the foot of the throne<sup>c</sup>.

Order of battle.

IMMEDIATELY after this, he began to draw up his forces in order of battle. He caused all his cannon to be placed in the front, and chained together, to shut the passage to the cavalry. Behind the artillery he ranged light camels, carrying each a small piece, the size of a double musket, with a man behind to manage it; and behind the camels stood the greater part of the musketeers. The rest of the army (consisting of several nations, armed with bows and arrows, swords and half-pikes) were divided into three bodies. The right wing was committed to Khalîlo'llah Khân, with 30,000 Mogols, under the great Bakhsis (K), or master of the horse,

<sup>c</sup> BERNIER, p. 95, & seqq.

(K) This post was given him in place of Danghend Khân; who not being well affected by Dara, because staunch to Shâh Jehân, resign'd. He was afterwards our author Bernier's Aga.

* Rather perhaps Tehembel; in English characters, Chembel.

with

with 30,000 Mogols under his command: the left wing was given to Rustam Khân Dakni, a very renowned commander, in conjunction with the Rajâhs Shatrefal and Ramseyn Rowtla. On the other side, Aureng Zib, and Morâd Bukhsb, ranged their forces in much the same order; only in the midst of the troops of some Omrâs certain field-pieces were concealed, according to the method of Amîr Jemla, and with no bad effect. There were likewise in both armies men placed here and there with Bans, a kind of grenado, fastened to a stick, which may be cast a great way thro' the cavalry; whose explosion terrifies the horses, and even kills sometimes. All this cavalry wheel about very easily, and draw their arrows surprisngly quick (L); one archer being able to shoot six, before a musketteer can discharge his piece twice. They likewise keep very close in troops, under their respective officers, especially when going to fight hand to hand. However, our author does not think that this way of drawing up an army is to be compared with the European manner, when well executed.

THE signal being given, the artillery began to play, and the arrows to fly thro' the air, when a sudden storm of rain interrupted the combat. As soon as the tempest was over, the cannon began to roar afresh; and then it was that Dara appeared: who, mounted on a proud elephant of Seylân, commanded the engagement to be general; and advanced himself, in the center of the cavalry, directly towards the enemy's artillery. The confederate forces gave him a very warm reception, killed a great number of men about his person, and put into disorder not only the main body, which he commanded, but also the other bodies of horse which followed him. But as he still kept his ground, without giving back, and made signs with his hands for his troops to advance, the disorder soon ceased, and they began to move forward again: yet they could not reach the enemy, without receiving another volley; which caused a greater disorder than the first. However, the prince still persisting in his resolution, and encouraging his soldiers to stand the brunt, they rallied again; and pressing vigorously forward, without loss of time, forced the enemy's artillery, broke the chains, and, entering their camp, routed their camels and infantry.

IN short, Dara overthrew every thing which he met with Aureng on that side, and opened a passage for the horse, which Zib's distress.

(L) However, our author says those arrows do but little execution, more of them being lost in the air, or broken on the ground, than hit. p. 113.

followed

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

followed him: then it was that the enemy's cavalry facing him, a fierce combat began on both sides, first with arrows, and then with swords. But at length Dara pushed his way with so much vigour, that the enemy, no longer able to withstand him, turned their backs, and fled. Aureng Zib, who was not far from them, seeing this great disorder in his troops, without being able to remedy it, caused the main body of his best cavalry to advance, to try if he could make head against his victorious brother: but it was not long before this body also was forced to retreat, in great confusion, in spite of all which Aureng Zib could say or do to hinder it. On this occasion the resolution of the prince was seen: for altho' he saw that almost his whole army was in a flying posture, and Dara, notwithstanding the roughness of the ground, seemed ready to rush in upon him, when he had scarce 1000 (M) men standing; yet, for all this, he lost no courage, but called to his captains, saying, Courage, my old friends, God is ! What hope is there in flying ? God is ! And, to shew he was determined not to stir from the place where he was, ordered chains to be fastened to the feet of his elephant; which would certainly have been done, but that they all declared their resolution to live and die with him<sup>f</sup>.

Dara successful.

MEAN time Dara, tho' still at a good distance, endeavoured to advance upon Aureng Zib, in order to encounter him; as the only means to assure him of the victory. But while he was retarded in his march, as well by the difficulty of the way, which was full of holes, as the resistance he met with from those disordered squadrons of the enemy's horse, which covered all the high and low grounds through which he was to pass, he perceived that his left wing was in great disorder. At the same time he was informed, that Rustam Khân, and Shatrofale Rajâh, were killed; that indeed Ramsayn Rowthi had forced his way thro' the enemy, but, having advanced too far, was now hemmed in by them, and in great danger. Dara, on these bad tidings, changed his design of making towards his brother, that he might go succour his left wing; and this it was which saved Aureng Zib from inevitable ruin.

Morâd
Bekkh:
b army.

When Dara got up with his recoiling troops, he renewed the battle, and, at last, routed those of the enemy; yet not <sup>f</sup> BERNIER, p. 107, & seqq.

(M) Our author was told by some, that there was not half the number.

so totally, but that there still remained something which re-<sup>5</sup> Khân sisted and stopped him. Mean time, Ramseyn Rowtlé pushed Shah Je- on so vigorously, that he wounded Morâd Bukhsh; and came nân.
so near, that he began to cut the girdles of his elephant, in order to make him fall down. But the undaunted prince, all wounded as he was (N), and pressed by the Râjapûts, who were round about him, knew so well to take his time; that altho', besides defending himself, he was to cover with his shield a son scarce eight years old, sitting by his side, yet he sent an arrow shot so luckily at Ramseyn Rowtlé, that it made him fall dead to the ground.

DARA soon heard the sad news of this accident: but, Khân's as at the same time, he understood also that Morâd Bukhsh treachery.
was in imminent danger, from the Râjapûts, who fought with fury to revenge their master's death; he resolved to rush thro' the opposing squadrons, and put an end to the battle on that side, by overpowering with numbers the half-spent prince.
But here again his bad fortune interposed, and hindered him to make sure of the victory: for Khalil'ollah Khân, who commanded the right wing (which was able alone to have defeated the whole army of Aureng Zib), to revenge an affront given him by Dara (O), not only stood idle all the while of the battle, under pretence that he had orders not to fight, excepting in the last extremity; but at the time when he saw Dara turning to fall on Morâd Bukhsh, with a few men, rode hastily up towards the former; and cried out, "God save " your majesty, you have obtained a victory—come down
" from your elephant, and take horse; what remains more
" to be done, than to pursue these runaways?"

DARA, blinded by these flattering words, as if the ad- Dara vice had been true and sincere, descended from his elephant, over- and took horse. But I know not, saith our author, whether thrown, there passed one quarter of an hour before he perceived the Khân's treachery. As soon as the army, who always had their eyes on the prince, beheld him no more on his elephant, they imagined he had been slain by some secret enemy about his person; which surmise seized them with such a panic, that, to escape the hands of Aureng Zib, they all disband and fly.
A sudden and strange revolution! Aureng Zib, by holding out firm for one quarter of an hour, upon his elephant, be-holds the crown of Hindustân upon his head; and Dara, for having come down a little too soon, sees himself hurled from

(N) Tavernier says he was shot in his body with five arrows.

(O) It is said by others, to have been given by Shah Jahan himself. See before, p 381.

5 Khân the throne. Thus fortune takes pleasure, adds Bernier, to Shâh Je- make the gain or loss of a battle, and the decision of a great hân. empire, depend upon nothing &.

~~~~~
by an over-fight. AURENG ZIB, encouraged by this wonderful success, did not fail to improve it by all the art and courage which he was master of. Khalîl'ollah Khân is presently with him, offering his service, and troops. The crafty Fakir receives him with joy: but, to keep up appearances, carries him to Morâd Bukhsî, whom, at the same time, he extols for his valour, ascribing to him all the honour of the victory; and, stiling him king, pays him the submission of a subject. Mean while, he labours night and day for himself, writing letters continually, to gain the Omrâs; by which means, and the interest of Shâh Hesht Khân, his uncle, the subtlest pen in Hindûstân, and an old enemy to Dara, for an affront received, his affairs were much advanced.

Flier to Agra. IN the interim Dara hastes to Agra; and tho' Shâh Jeshân was dissatisfied with his conduct, yet he sent an eunuch to tell him, "that he was troubled for his misfortune; that his " affairs were not yet desperate, since there was a good army
 " with his son Soleyman; that he should go to Dehli, where " he should find money, horses, and elephants; and that " he knew how to chastise Aureng Zib." Dara was then so dismayed and sunk with his misfortune, that he had not power to speak to the eunuch, or courage to depute any one to his father: but after sending several times to his sister, Begum Sahib, went away at midnight, taking with him his wife, daughters, and grandson, Sepe-shekowh, attended by no more than three or four hundred persons.

Soleyman
Shekowh WHILE Dara was on his way to Dehli, Aureng Zib left nothing undone to improve the advantages he had already gained. As he knew that his brother could yet place some hopes in the victorious army of Soleyman Shekowh, he wrote letters upon letters to Rajah Jessern, and Delîl Khân, the chief generals of that young prince, to assure them that Dara was quite undone; that his whole army had submitted to him; that he had sent orders every-where to seize him; that Shah Jeshân could never recover; in short, that if they understood their own interest, they would become his friends, and, seizing on Soleyman Shekowh, bring him to the camp.
Jessern was much perplexed how to act on this occasion.
 He feared to lay hands on a royal person, which was always attended with mischief; besides, he knew that prince Soley- man would rather die, than suffer himself to be taken in that manner. Therefore, after consulting with Delil Khân, he went to the prince's tent, who had sent for him, on the news of his father's defeat; and shewing him Aureng Zib's letters, told him that he ought not to trust in Delil Khân, Dawd Khân, or the rest of the army; and therefore had best retire to the mountains of Serenâgher, there to remain with the Râjah of that country, till he saw how things went.

THE young prince, perceiving by this discourse of Jes-fies also, *sey*n, that he had no more reason to trust in him than the rest, immediately departed, with a good number of Man-sebdârs, and others, who were his friends, leaving the army in a great surprize. The Râjah, not content with distressing him in this manner, was so mean as to send some troops, under-hand, to fall on his baggage: who besides took an elephat laden with rupis of gold (P), which caused many of his followers to abandon him; and this desertion induced the people of the country to attack his men, for sake of plunder. However, at length he arrived with his wife and children at Serenâgher, whose Râjah (Q) received him with great honour; and promised to assist him with the utmost of his power. Let us now return to see what is doing at Agra^b.

THREE or four days after the battle of Semongher, the victorious princes advanced to a little garden near the gate of the capital, a small league from the fortress; whither Aureng Zib sent an eunuch to salute the Shâh Jehân, with protestations of affection and submission. He likewise expressed sorrow for what had passed; but laid all the blame on the ambition, and evil designs, of Dara. Shâh Jehân, no less a dissembler than his son, whose secret passion for reigning was known to him, yet declared to the eunuch, "that he was well satisfied with Aureng Zib's proceedings, and pleased at his success." But, instead of causing himself to be carried thro' the town, and assembling all his Omrâs, which might still have been done, he goes about to outwit Aureng Zib, him who was his master in craft; and attempting to draw him into a snare, is taken himself. With this view

^b BERNIER, ibid. p. 139, & seqq.

(P) According to Tavernier, Soleymân went with the Râjah Rowp into the territories of this latter, to levy men, carrying with him five millions of rupis (or 625,000*l.*), which the Râjah seized; and then the prince fled to the kingdom of Sirenâgher. Râjah Rowp seems to be *Jessey*n.

(Q) Tavernier calls him Nakti Râna.

5 Khân
Shâh Jê-
hân.

he sent an eunuch also to this son, to let him know " that he was sensible of the ill conduct, and incapacity, of Dara; " that he passionately wished to embrace him, Aureng Zib, " for whom he had always a particular affection; and there- " fore desired he would come and see him, to advise what " was proper to be done at the present juncture."

seizes the capital;

AURENG ZIB knew very well that his father was not to be trusted on this occasion; especially as Begum Sâheb, his enemy, as well as sister, was continually about him: and it was reported, that several of those lusty Tartarian women, who serve in the harâm, were armed, to set upon him as soon as he should enter. But altho' he was resolved not to hazard a visit to Shâh Jêhân, yet he spread a rumour that he intended to go see him the next day. Instead of performing his promise, which he put off from time to time, he made it his business to sound the chief Omrâs; which he did to so good purpose, that at length, having concerted the proper measures, he sent Soltân Mahmûd, his eldest son, to the fortress, under pretence of waiting on Shâh Jêhân, in his name: but that daring prince was no sooner entered, than he fell upon the guards at the gate; whilst a great number of men, who were ready at hand, rushed in with fury, and made themselves masters of the wall.

imprisons
his father

SHAH Jêhân, astonished to find himself fallen into the trap, which he had prepared for his son, sent to Soltân Mahmûd, promising, on the Korân, to make him king, in case he would serve him on this occasion. And certainly, if Mahmûd had laid hold of the offer, and Shâh Jêhân taken the field, nobody doubted that all his great Omrâs would have followed him; and that Aureng Zib, if he had dared to fight against his father, would have been abandoned by all the world; nay, possibly, by Morâd Bukhsb himself (R). However that be, Soltân Mahmûd, whether fearing to be detained, or to play tricks with his father, would never hearken to any thing, nor enter into the apartment of Shâh Jêhân; answering, " that he had no orders to wait on him: " but was commanded to bring his father the keys of all " the gates of the fortress; that so he might with safety " come and kiss his majesty's feet."

in the pa-lacc.

SHAH Jêhân was near two days before he could resolve to deliver up the keys: but finding that all his people, who were upon guard at the little gate, disbanded by degrees,

(R) Perhaps this is carrying the supposition a good deal too far; since Shâh Jêhân, for many years, waged war against his father; and even sought to meet him with his forces.

and

and that all his power was gone, he surrendered them (S) ; ^{5 Khân} with an order to tell Aureng Zib, “ that he should come ^{Shâh Je-} forthwith, if he was wise, for that he had most import- ^{hân.} ant matters to say to him.” But Aureng Zib was too cunning to commit so gross a mistake : instead of that, he made his eunuch, Etbar Khân, governor of the fortress ; who presently shut up Shâh Jehân, together with Begum Sâheb, and all his women ; causing divers gates to be walled up, so that the emperor might not be able either to write, or speak, to any-body, without permission.

MEAN time, Aureng Zib wrote to his father a short letter, ^{and r pre-} which he shewed to every-body before he sealed it. Where ^{tence} he told him, “ that, for all the great protestations of affection, which he had made to him, and contempt expressed for Dara, yet he knew, from good hands, that he had sent him two elephants, laden with rupsis of gold, to renew the war ; that therefore, in reality, it was not he, but Dara, who had imprisoned him, and was the cause of all his misfortunes ; that if it had not been for Dara, he would have waited on him the first day of his arrival, and paid him all the dutiful respect which he could have looked for from a son ; that for the rest, he begged pardon for what had happened, and desired his majesty would have a little patience ; promising, that as soon as he had disabled Dara from executing his evil designs, he would come himself, and open the gates to him ¹.”

CONCERNING the supply of money mentioned in the letter, our author had been told by some, that Shâh Jehân sent ^{of assisting} Dara. it to Dara, the same night on which he left Agra ; that it was discovered to Aureng Zib by his sister, Rawshnara (or Râshn ray) Begum, who had also imparted to him the plot for setting on him with the Tartarian women ; and that this prince had intercepted some letters of Shâh Jehân to Dara. On the contrary, others affirmed there was no such thing ; and that the letter was contrived only, in some measure, to justify his proceedings against his father. However that was, as soon as Shâh Jehân was shut up, almost all the Omrâs ^{The Omrâs} were in a manner necessitated to go and make their court to ^{join him.} the two confederate princes. 'Tis certain, not one of them had the courage or gratitude to make the least attempt in

¹ BERNIER, p. 140, & seqq.

(S) Tavernier says, he, at first who opposed him ; but not one enraged, attempted to escape, of his servants offered to help and killed some of the guards, him.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

behalf of their king, who had raised them from the dust, and even slavery itself, to advance them to riches and honour : excepting some few, as Danishmend Khân, and others, who joined with neither side, all the rest declared for Aureng Zib. Necessity, as we have said, drove them to this : for they having no lands to subsist of themselves, but only pensions, which the Great Mogol can take away at pleasure ; so that they may be ruined in an instant, without having credit to borrow one farthing.

Resolves to seize

AURENG ZIB having thus made himself sure of Shâh Jehân, and all the Omras, took what sums of money he thought fit out of the treasury : then leaving his uncle, Shâh Hesh Khân, to govern the city in his absence, went away, with Merâd Bukhsh, to pursue Dara. The day on which the army was to march out of Agra, the friends of this last prince, especially his eunuch, Shâh Abbâs, who knew that excessive cringing is usually a sign of imposture, counselled him, that since he was acknowledged as king by every body, and even Aureng Zib himself, he should let his brother go in pursuit of Dara, and stay with his troops about Agra and Dehli. If he had followed this advice, 'tis certain he must have greatly embarrassed Aureng Zib (if not intirely frustrated his designs) ; but confiding entirely in his fair promises, backed by oaths on the Korân, he never would suffer the least suspicion to enter his breast.

Morâd
Bukhsh

WHEN they arrived at Matûra, three or four days journey from Agra, Morad's friends endeavoured again to persuade him to be on his guard ; assuring him, that some mischief was upon the anvil ; that they had notice of it from several quarters ; and desired that he would forbear going to visit his brother, only for that one day. But the prince was deaf to all precautions (T) ! and, as if urged, rather than dissuaded, by the advice of his friends, went that very night to see Aureng Zib, and even stayed to sup with him. As soon as he was come, his brother, who expected him, and had already laid the plot with Mir Khân, and three or four more of his most intimate commanders, was profuse of his compliments and submissive behaviour, so far as gently to wipe the sweat and dust off his face with a handkerchief.

(T) According to Tavernier, Morad Bukhsh perceiving his error in trusting his brother too much, sent to him for half of the treasure which he had seized, that he might retire to Guzerât : but was still deluded by fair promises ; and went, at his invitation, to the entertainment, although he believed it would be the last day of his life.

MEAN time the table is served : they sup, and then, as usual, fall into conversation. At length there is brought a huge bottle of Shirâz wine (U), with some of Kâbûl, for a debauch. At the sight of which, Aureng Zib, who affected to appear very regular and exact in observing the law of Mohammed, riseth from table; and having respectfully intreated his brother to be merry with the officers present, withdrew, as if to repose himself a little. Morâd Bukhsh, who loved a glass of wine very well, plied it so heartily, that at length he grew drunk, and fell asleep. As this was the thing which they all looked for, some of his servants, who were in waiting, were ordered to withdraw, under pretence of letting their master take his rest without noise. When they were gone, his sabre and poniard were taken from him; after which, it was not long before Aureng Zib came himself, and awaked him, by hitting him roughly with his foot^k.

at an entertainment.

WHEN the prince began to open his eyes a little, his treacherous brother throws off the mask, with this surprising reprimand : “ What means all this, saith he; what a shameful and odious thing it is, that a king, as you are, should have so little share of discretion, as thus to make himself drunk ! what will the world say both of you and me ? ” Take this infamous man, this drunkard, continued the hypocrite, tie him hand and foot, and throw him into that room, there to sleep out his wine.” This order was no sooner given, than it was executed : for five or six persons immediately seized him, and, without regarding his complaints and outcries, fettered his hands and feet. However, this affair could not be managed so secretly, but that some of his people, who were about the palace, came to have tidings of it; and, making a tumult, would have entered forcibly, had not Allah Kûli, one of his chief officers, and master of his artillery, who had been gained before-hand, threatened, and made them draw back.

Manner of it.

WITHOUT delay, emissaries were sent through the whole army, to calm this first commotion; which otherwise might have proved dangerous. These men made the soldiery believe, “ that what had happened was nothing like what had been reported : that the whole matter was, Morâd Bukhsh had gotten very drunk; and having in that condition railed at every body, and even Aureng Zib himself, it was thought necessary, for fear he should do any mischief, to keep Pacifies the troops.

^k BERNIER, p. 153, & seqq.

(U) Shirâz, capital of Pârs, or proper Persia, famous for excellent wine, of great strength.

5 Klôn
Shâh Je-
hân.

“ him apart : but that the next day they should see him “ abroad, after he had slept off the fumes of the wine.” Mean time the presents walked about all night among the chief officers of the army : their pay was immediately augmented ; and they had great promises made them. In short, as there was scarce any one who had not for a long time before expected some such event, it was no great wonder to find almost every thing quiet the next morning : so that the night following this poor unhappy prince was shut-up in a little close house, such as used to be placed on the back of elephants to carry women in ; and, without any stir or noise, conducted to Salmajer, a little old fortress at Dehli, situated in the middle of the river.

pursues
Dara ;

AFTER all had been thus pacified, excepting the eunuch Shah Abbâs, who gave a good deal of trouble, Aureng Zib received the whole army of his brother into his service, and went after Dara ; who marched apace towards Labûr, with an intent to fortify himself in that city, and draw thither all his friends. But Aureng Zib followed him so briskly, that he was forced to retreat from thence to Multân ; which he also abandoned for the same reason. His insatiable enemy pursuing him, though in the great heats, with so much eagerness, that he often advanced almost alone two or three leagues before his army, drank bad water, and slept under a tree, with his head resting on his shield, like a common foldier. It is thought, that if Dara, at his departure from Labûr, had cast himself into the kingdom of Kâbul, as he was advised, he would there have found above 10,000 warriors, designed for a guard against the Aughâns (or Affghâns), the Persians, and the Uzbeks ; and that the governor Mohabet Khân, one of the most potent Omrâs, as well as the most antient, in all Hind. stân, who never had been a friend to Aureng Zib, would probably have embraced his party with all that militia. Besides, being then, as it were, at the gate of Persia, and the country of the Uzbeks, he might have drawn assistance from both those regions, as Humayûn had formerly done. But Dara, instead of following that good advice, went towards Sindi, and entered the fortress of Tâtta Bâkar, that strong and famous place seated in the midst of the Indus.

returns to
Agra :

AURENG ZIB, glad to find that his brother had taken this route, rather than that of Kâbul, was content to send after him 7 or 8000 men under Mir Bâba, his foster-brother, and run back himself for Agra : as well for fear lest, in his absence, some of the Rajâs should attempt to free Shâh Jehân from his confinement, as that Soleyman Sherkowh, or Soltân Sujâb, should approach too near that capital.

IN his way to Lahûr he had a great escape: for being, according to custom, advanced some miles before his army, of a sudden, he beheld the Râjah Jesséyn coming against him, accompanied with 4 or 5000 of his Râjapûts; and, knowing him to be zealous for Shâh Jehân's interest, was sufficiently surprised, as he now had it in his power to strike a master stroke, and, by seizing the rebel son, draw the father out of prison. Nor is it known whether this Râjah had not some such design; for he had marched with such extraordinary speed, that Aureng Zib thought him still at Dehli. But what may not resolution and presence of mind effect? The prince, without any alteration in his countenance, marches directly towards the Râjah; and, as far off as he could see him, makes signs with his hands for him to approach; and calls to him aloud, flattering him with the title of Râjah-ji and Bâba-ji, Lord Râjah and Lord Father. When Jesséyn was come to him; "I expected you, said he, with great impatience: the work is done: Dara is lost: he is all alone. I have sent Mîr Bâba after him, from whom he cannot escape." Then, taking off his necklace of pearls, he put it about the neck of the Râjah; and, the sooner to get rid of him handsomely (for he wished him far enough); "Go, said he, with all the expedition you can to Lahûr, and wait till I come: for my army is somewhat tired; and I fear that otherwise something sinister may happen there. I make you governor of the place, and put all things into your hands. For the rest, I am extremely obliged to you for what you have done with Soleymân Shekowh.—Where have you left Delîl Khân? I shall find my revenge of him—Make all possible dispatch—Salâmed Bâshbed. Farewell¹."

DARA, being arrived at Tâtta Bâkar, strengthened the place with a good garrison of Pâtans and Sayeds. He had for cannoneers several Franghis, as Portugueses, English, French, and Germans, who had followed him on the great promises he had given them, in case his affairs prospered. He staid there only two or three days: then, leaving a dexterous eunuch for governor, with the greater part of his treasure, which he had still plenty of, he marched away with 2 or 3000 men only, descending the Indus towards Sindi; from whence, crossing the territories of the Râjah of Kâche (X), he arrived at Ahmed abâd, capital of Guzerât. The governor

¹ BERNIER, p. 160, & seqq.

(X) Tavernier calls him the Râjah of Kach-nagara. Kuch-naggen, as Hamilton names it, is a province and town in Guzerat, towards the Indus.

5 Khân
Shah Je-
hân.

Shâh Navâz Khân, father-in-law to Aureng Zib, whether surprised, or for want of courage, though he had a strong garrison, instead of opposing Dara, thought best to temporize, and received him honourably. In short, he managed him afterwards with so much dexterity, that this indiscrete prince trusted himself to his power, and communicated to him his designs. He even shewed Shâh Navâz the letters which he received from Jessm Seyn, and other friends, who were preparing to come to him: although every body told him, and his correspondents warned him by letters, that his competitor's father-in-law would betray him.

Aureng
Zib
marches to Kajowh,

HOWEVER, Aureng Zib was greatly surprised when he heard that Dara was in Ahmed abâd, where he knew the discontented party, which was very numerous, would resort to him, as well as his friends. On the other hand, he saw it was not safe for him to follow his brother into the countries of Jessmyn, Jessm Seyn, and other Râjahs; lest, by removing too far from Agra and Shâh Jehân, Soltân Sujâh, who had already passed the Ganges at Elabâs, with a strong army, should advance on that side; or, at least, Soleymân Shekowh should descend from the hills with the Râjah of Serenâgher. In this perplexity he at length concluded it best to leave Dara for a time, and march against his brother Sujâh. This Soltân was come to encamp at a village called Kajowh (Y), on the side of a great talâb, or reservoir of water; and Aureng Zib posted himself by a small torrent, a mile and a half short of him. Being impatient to end this war, he, at break of day, went and attacked Sujâh with an effort scarce to be imagined. Amîr Jemla likewise, who arrived on the day of battle from Dekân, fearing Dara no longer, because his family was more in safety, did on this occasion also employ all his vigour, courage, and dexterity. But, as Soltân Sujâh was very well fortified in his post, and had a fine train of artillery, advantageously placed, it was not possible for Aureng Zib to force his camp, and drive him from those waters: on the contrary, he was repulsed himself several times, which threw him into great perplexity.

against
Soltân
Sujâh :

SOLTÂN Sujâh, in defending himself only in his post, without coming out into the plain, acted very prudently: for he knew that Aureng Zib could not stay long where he then was; and that the hot season would oblige him to turn back to the torrent, for the convenience of water; in which case he resolved to fall upon his rear. Aureng Zib also foresaw the same thing ; and that was what made him so pressing in the affair. But behold a more troublesome accident happened : for, at this very juncture, he received advice that Rājah Jessom-Seyn, who in appearance was in his interest, had fallen upon his rear, and plundered his baggage, with the treasure which was left behind at the torrent. This news astonished him much ; and the more when he saw that it had thrown his army into disorder. Yet he loses not his judgment for all this : and being aware, that to turn back was to hazard all, he resolves, as in the battle with Dara, to bear up the best he could, and at all events stand his ground ^m.

(Y) According to Frazer, the battle of Kejow, near Agra, was against Dara; who, after his defeat, fled towards Lahûr.

MEAN time the disorder increased among his troops ; which Sujāh observing, presseth him vigorously. He who led Aureng Zib's elephant being killed with an arrow, he guides the animal himself, as well as he can, till another could be found to supply the leader's place. Arrows rain upon him ; and he returns many himself : but at length his elephant begins to be frightened, and to go back. Behold him now in great extremity, and brought to such a desperate pass, that one foot is out of the seat, as if he meant to cast himself to the ground. And no man knows, what in that distress he might not have done, if Amīr Jemla, who was not far off, and like a great man as he was, doing actions beyond imagination, had not called to him, with his hand raised up, Dekān kow ? Dekān kow ? Where is Dekān ? Where is Dekān ? (Z) This seems to have been the greatest extremity to which Aureng Zib could well be reduced. It now seemed as if fortune had quite abandoned him, and that there was no possibility for him to escape. But his good luck is still superior to all difficulties : Soltān Sujāh must be routed ; and Aureng Zib be king of Hindūstān.

FOR one of Soltān Sujāh's chief captains, named Allah Verdi Khān, seeing the whole army of Aureng Zib in confusion, runs towards the Soltān, and begs that he would stay no longer in so great danger upon his elephant ; saying, in the words of Khalilullah Khān to Dara, on the same occasion, " Come down, in the name of God ; mount on horseback : " God has made you sovereign of the Indies : let us pursue those runaways : let not Aureng Zib escape us ! " Some said this officer had been gained : others, that it was not

^m BERNIER Mem. Emp. Mog. part i. p. 170. & seqq.

(Z) This seems to have been Dekān, on occasion of some exploit or exploits done in that country.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

through treachery, but mere flattery, that he acted. However that be, Soltan Sujâh, not more considerate than Dara, commits the same fault; and, like him, suffers by it. For he was no sooner come down from his elephant, than his army, not seeing him, was struck with terror, believing some treason had been acted, and that he was either taken or slain. Hereupon they disbanded, without more ado; and the defeat was so great, that the Soltân had difficulty enough to save himself.

Confusion
at Agra.

JESSOM SEYN, on this unexpected turn of fortune, perceiving it not safe for him to tarry there, marched off with all diligence, with the spoil he had gotten, to Agra, thence to pass on to his own country. Mean time news had reached the capital, that Aureng Zib had not only lost the battle, but that Soltân Sujâh was bringing both him and Amir Jemla prisoners to the city. So that Shâh Hest Khân, the governor, and uncle to Aureng Zib, seeing Jessom Seyn, whose treachery he had heard of, at the gates, and, despairing of his life, laid hold of a cup of poison, and had actually drank it, if his women had not hindered him. In short, the certainty of this defeat was so firmly believed for two whole days, that if Jessom Seyn had laid hold of the opportunity, and acted vigorously, he might have delivered Shah Jehân out of prison. Instead of that, he thought of nothing but to get off himself, with all the speed he could: yet Aureng Zib was so much afraid he would attempt something in his father's behalf, that, after a short pursuit of the vanquished army, he turned back with all his forces for Agra; where he staid a good while to settle his affairs.

Sujâh reinforced.

IN the interim he received intelligence, that Soltân Sujâh, who had lost but few men in the late route, for want of further pursuit, had raised great forces in the lands of the Râjahs, on both sides of the Ganges, on the credit of his being rich, as well as very liberal; and had fortified himself in Elahâs, that important passage of the river, which with its fortress is the first entrance into Bengâl. On this occasion he meditated with himself what he had to do. He considered that he had about him two persons, Soltân Mahmûd, his eldest son, and Amir Jemla; both very capable indeed to serve him, but therefore liable to grow too assuming, as he found the first already began to be, for having seized on the fortress of Agra: and he had no reason to expect otherwise of the Amir; who, besides the merit of his great services, courage, and riches, passed for the first mover of affairs, and the ablest man in all the Indies, as well in civil as military matters. These things would certainly have perplexed an ordinary genius, but but Aureng Zib found a way to get rid of them in so handsome a manner, that neither of them found any cause to complain.ⁿ

THE course he took was to send them both against Soltán Sujáh, with a puissant army; letting the Amír know, that, as an earnest of his acknowledgements, he conferred the government of Bengál on him, and his son, for their lives: and that, as soon as he should defeat his brother Sujáh, he would make him Míro'l Omrá, or prince of the Omrás; which is the most honourable place in all Hindústán. To Soltán Mahmúd, his son, he only said these few words: "Remember that thou art the eldest of my children; that it is for thyself thou goest forth to fight: and that thou hast done much, but yet nothing, if thou overcomest not Sujáh, who is our greatest and most powerful enemy." In this manner he dismissed them both, with rich vests, horses, and elephants, gallantly harnessed, after he had obliged them to leave, as pledges of their fidelity, Mohammed Amír Khán, only son of Amír Jemla, under pretence of education; and Soltán Mahmúd's wife, daughter to the king of Golkondá, on a suggestion that her following the camp would be very inconvenient.

SOLTAN Sujáh, who always feared that the Rájahs of the Lower Bengál, whom he had ill treated, would be raised against him, and dreaded nothing more than to have to do with Amír Jemla, no sooner heard of his march, than, apprehending that the passage to Bengál would be obstructed, he raised his camp at Elabás, and went down the Ganges to Benâres and Patna. From thence he proceeded to Mojer, a small town, seated on that river, and commonly called the key of Bengál; being a kind of streight between the mountains and the woods. There he fortified himself, causing a trench to be dug (A) from the river to the mountains, there to attend Amír Jemla, and dispute the passage with him. But he was strangely surpris'd when he was informed, that the troops which slowly descended along the Ganges, were only to amuse him: for that the Amír himself and Soltán Mahmúd were advancing apace through the mountains, whose Rájahs they had gained, with all the flower of the army, towards Rájah Máhl, in order to intercept him.

ON this advice Sujáh quitted his fortifications at Mojer, and made such haste, that, although he was obliged to follow the ⁿ BERNIER, ibid. p. 178, & seqq.

(A) Bernier saw this trench in his passage that way some years after.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

windings which the river makes to the left, he arrived at Râjah Máhl, and had time to fortify himself there also, before the Amîr arrived : because the latter, having heard this news, quitted his former route, and bent his course towards the left hand and the Ganges, there to wait for his troops, which were marching, with the body of the artillery and the baggage, along the river. As soon as they were come, he proceeded to attack Soltân Sujâh ; who defended himself very well for five or six days : but observing, that the Amîr's cannon, which played incessantly, ruined all his works, made only of sandy earth and faggots : finding likewise, that without them he could make no great resistance in that place, and that the rainy season was begun, he retired by favour of the night, leaving behind two large pieces of cannon. As Amîr Jemla put off the pursuit till next morning, for fear of some ambush in the dark, very luckily for Sujâh, at day-break, there began to fall rain, which continued for more than three days : so that Jemla found himself not only hindered from pursuing the enemy, but obliged to continue at Rajah Máhl all winter ; the excessive rains in that country rendering the roads so troublesome in July, August, September, and October, that the armies cannot possibly march °.

Soltân
Mahmûd
revolts.

By this means Soltân Sujâh gained time not only to retire to whatever place he thought fit, and fortify himself, but likewise to procure out of the Lower Bengál a good many pieces of artillery, as well as some companies of Portugueses, who had retired thither (B) on account of the plenty of provisions : for he courted the missionaries who were in that province, promising to build churches for, and enrich them, all. Mean time Soltân Mahmûd, for the reasons above-mentioned, grew very imperious ; and not only pretended to an absolute command of the army, requiring Amir Jemla to follow his orders, but, from time to time, also let fall insolent expressions with reference to his father, as if he was obliged to him for the crown. He likewise threw out words of contempt and even threats against the Amîr, which caused a great coldness between them : till at length Mahmûd, understanding that his father was much dissatisfied with his conduct, and fearing Amir Jemla had orders to seize his person, he went away, accompanied with a very small number of followers, to Soltân Sujâh ; to whom he made great promises, and swore fidelity.

° BERNIER, ibid. p. 137, & seqq.

(B) There were then 8 or 9000 families of them, either native Portugueses or Mestizes.

FOR all this, his uncle Sujâh, who feared the snares of Aureng Zib and Amîr Jemla, could not trust him; but always had an eye upon his actions, and never gave him any considerable command: which so disgusted the prince, that, some months after, he left Soltân Sujâh, and returned to the Amîr; who received him well enough, assuring him, that he would write in his behalf to Aureng Zib, and do his utmost to heal the breach. Our author had it from many hands, that the escape of Soltân Mahmûd was an artifice of Aureng Zib, who did not matter hazarding his son, to try to destroy his brother Sujâh; and besides, was pleased to think, that whatever was the event, he should have a specious pretence to imprison him. However that be, he afterwards shewed himself much dissatisfied with Mahmûd; and wrote him a severe letter, in which he enjoined him to return to Dehli, but at the same time took care that he should not come so far: for he had no sooner crossed the Ganges, than he met with troops, which stopped him; and, putting him into a small chair (as Morâd Bukhsb had been served) carried him to Gwaliyâr; where at length he died in his confinement.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

Sent to Gwaliyâr.

AURENG ZIB having by this means freed himself from no small perplexity, at the same time let his second son Soltân Mauzm know, that “the affair of reigning was so delicate a thing, that kings ought to be jealous even of their own shadows:” adding, “that if he did not behave discretely, the like disaster might happen to him, as had befallen his elder brother: in short, that he ought to think Aureng Zib was not a man who would suffer the same injury to be done to him which Shâh Jehân did to his father Jehân Ghîr; and which he had lately seen done also to Shâh Jehân.” This warning Aureng Zib thought proper to give, though there seemed to have been no occasion for it; since, as our author observes, no slave could be more tractable than Soltân Mauzm: neither did Aureng Zib himself ever appear more careless of greatness, or more given to devotion, than he. However, he adds, that many thought he only dissembled his ambition, as his father had done before him ^P.

Soltân
Mauzm
warned.

HERE we think proper to close the reign of Shâh Jehân; during whose time the empire flourished exceedingly, comprehending no fewer than twenty-three provinces; five of which, Bâlkh, Kandahâr, Biddukhsân, Tellengana, and Baglâna, were added by him. The revenues arising from them all amounted to 27,500,000 pounds; and the number of his

State of the empire.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

Remarkable passage.

forces, as paid out of those revenues, was, in 1647, full 911,400, horse and foot¹.

THE kings of India, by an antient and barbarous custom, are heirs of the effects belonging to those who die in their service. On this occasion two things happened in Shâh Jehân's reign worth relating. The first is of Neyknâm Khân, one of the most antient Omrâs of the court, who had, in the space of forty or fifty years service in considerable offices, amassed great store of wealth. When this lord found himself near death, reflecting on that unreasonable custom, which often reduces both the widow and her children to beggary, he secretly distributed all his treasures among indigent knights and poor widows. After this he filled his trunks with old shoes, rags, bones, and other rubbish; then locked and sealed them, telling every body that they were goods belonging to the king. Upon his death, the trunks were brought before Shâh Jehân, when he was in the assembly; and, by his command, opened before all the Omrâs: but when he saw what was in them, he was so provoked, that he rose in great fury and went away.

Another.

THE second passage is this. The son of a rich Baniyân, or Hindû merchant, who died in the king's service, being very extravagant, and his mother refusing to supply him with money, he, by the persuasion of others, complained to Shâh Jehân; and was so silly as to discover the value of his father's effects, amounting to 200,000 rupis (or 25,000 pounds). The king, who coveted this treasure, sent for the widow, and commanded her in the open assembly to send him 100,000 rupis, and let her son have 50,000; giving orders at the same time to put her away. The old woman, though no less surprised at this command, than vexed to be so hastily thrust out without liberty of speaking, yet lost not her judgment; but, with a loud voice, declared, that she had something of moment to impart to the king. Hereupon, being brought in again, she said; "God save your majesty! I am sensible " that my son has some right to demand of me the goods of " his father, as being of the same flesh and blood with us,
" and therefore our heir; but I would gladly know, in " what manner your majesty stands related to my deceased
" husband, so as to intitle you to his effects." Shâh Jehân, who could not forbear laughing at this home piece of raillery, ordered her to be dismissed, without demanding any thing from her.

¹ FRASER'S Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 26.
supr. part ii. p. 93.

² DERNIER, ubi

SHAH Jehân had by two of his wives seven sons and five daughters: all of whom, excepting one of the females, were by the empress Mehd Alia, daughter of Afsef Khân; whose first name was Ardumond Bânu Begum, or the noble princess.

HUR al nissa Begum, or the most angelic of women; born in 1612. She died before her father was deposed.

JEHÂN Ara Begum, or the princess ornament of the world; born in 1614.

SOLTAN Dara Shekowh (C), or the Soltân in pomp like Darius; born in 1615.

SOLTAN Sujâh (D), or the valiant Soltân; born 1617.

ROYSHN Ray Begum, the princess of an enlightened mind; born 1617.

SOLTAN Aureng Zib (E), the ornament of the throne; born 1618.

SOLTAN Amyad Bukhsb, or the giver of hopes; born 1620; died before the revolution.

SURIA Bânu Begum, the shining princess; born 1622; died before the revolution.

SOLTAN Morâd Bukhsb (F), the giver of desires, or wishes; born 1624.

SOLTAN Lowtf-allah, the favour of God; born 1627; died before his father's deposition.

SOLTAN Dowlet Afza, increase of fortune; born 1628; died before the revolution.

By a daughter of Mazuffer Hosseyn Mîrza, grandson to Shâh Ismael, king of Persia, Shâh Jehân had a daughter, named Parhîz Bânu Begum, or the abstinent princess; born in 1611. She died young.

FRASER, ubi supr. p. 26, & seqq.

(C) He had two sons, Soleymân Shekowh, august, or in pomp-like, and Soleymân Sepeh Shekowh, of military pomp, like Soleymân.

(D) This prince had two sons; Zeyno'ddîn Mohammedi, the ornament of religion; and Bullind Akhter, of high stars, or great fortune.

(E) Aureng Zib's sons will be mentioned at the end of his reign.

(F) Morâd Bukhsb had one son, Fezd, or Yezd Bukhsb; that is, God's gift.

6 Klân
Aureng
Zib.

C H A P. VIII.

~ The Reign of Mohio'ddîn Aureng Zib, sixth Emperor.

S E C T. 1.

From his Advancement to the End of the Civil Wars.

Agras
king.

A. D.
1658.

Dara deserted at Ajmir;

WHILE matters were transacted in Bengâl, as before related, Aureng Zib kept moving to and fro about Agra. At length, having sent Morâd Bukhs also to Gwaliyâr, he went to Dehli, and there assumed the regal power (A), giving orders in all affairs relating to the state. But his thoughts were chiefly employed on contriving how to lay hold of Dara, and get him out of Guzerât; which at length his good fortune effected. Jessom seyn having, as hath been said, retired to his own country, and made the best of what he had taken in the battle of Kajowh, raised a strong army, wrote to Dara to haste to Agra as soon as he could, and promised to join him with his forces. Dara, who had also by this time set on foot a considerable number of troops, though for the most part new-raised ones, leaves Ahmed abâd, and marches with great speed to Azmîr, seven or eight days journey from Agra; in hopes many of his old friends would not fail to come in to him, when they saw him approaching the capital, in conjunction with that Râjah. But Jessom seyn having in the interim been dissuaded from his purpose by Jessseyn, who, in his letters, after laying before him the inconveniences and dangers which were likely to attend his enterprize, told him; that if he would leave Dara to himself, Aureng Zib would bestow on him the government of Guzerât; which, being near his own lands, made him perfectly secure against any surprize. In short, this Râjah acted his part so well, that Jessom seyn returned home, whilst Aureng Zib approached with his

(A) According to Frazer, p. 30, presently after the battle of Kajowh, Aureng Zib entered the castle of Agra; and, on the 20th of July 1658, sat on the throne, and was proclaimed emperor, in the town of Eazabâd (or Azabâd), two measured kos and half from Dehli; having first confined his brother Morâd Bukhs, notwithstanding he had sworn by the Korân to be true to him. After this he sent his father from Dehli, to be confined at Agra, 44 kos distant. However, his reign does not commence till a year after, as will be observed in its place.

whole

whole army to Azmîr, and encamped in sight of Dara's ^{6 Khân} troops. ^{Aureng}

THIS unhappy prince, thus abandoned and frustrated of his hopes, considers, that it was impossible to return back safe to Ahmed abâd, which was a march of five-and-thirty days, through the lands of Râjah's friends of the two before-mentioned, and in the height of summer, when water would fail him, he resolved to give battle at all risks; though the match was very unequal, and Shâh Navaz Khân, who was along with him, betrayed all his secrets to his competitor. The fight began between nine and ten in the morning, in which Dara's artillery were loud enough, but, it was said, carried nothing but powder. It is needless to recite the particulars of this battle, which was rather a rout than an engagement: for the attack was scarcely begun, when Jesseyn appeared near Dara, and sent him word to fly instantly, unless he had a mind to be taken: so that the prince, quite surprised, was forced to run away with such precipitation, that he had not time to put up his baggage, or get off with more than his wife and family. Nor could he possibly have escaped, if that Râjah had endeavoured to prevent him: but he always preserved a respect to the royal family; or rather he was too politic to venture laying hands on a prince of the blood^a.

Zib.

defeated,
and flies.

WE must not omit, that Shâh Navaz Khân was punished ^{Shâh Na-} for his perfidiousness, being killed in the fight: some say by ^{vaz Khân} Dara himself; others, more probably, by some of Aureng ^{slain.} Zib's army, for fear he should discover the letters which they had written to that prince. However that be, the unhappy Dara was forced, in the hottest time of summer, accompanied only by 2000 men, and without tents, to cross those countries of the Râjahs, extending almost from Azmîr to Ahmed abâd. In his march he was harrassed by the Kowîs, who are the country people, and the greatest robbers. These followed him night and day, rifling and killing his soldiers: so that if any man stay'd but 200 paces behind the rest, he was stripped naked, and murdered on the least resistance. For all this Dara made shift to get near Ahmed abâd: but when he expected to enter, the governor, whom he had left in the castle, having been wrought on by letters from Aureng Zib, denied him entrance.

THREE days before this, our author Bernier met the un- ^{Dara's} happy prince; who, having no physician with him, obliged ^{great} him to follow in his train, and one night did him the favour ^{distress.}

^a BERNIER's mem. emp. Mogol, part i. p. 200, & seqq.

6. Khân
Aureng
Zib.

to make him come into the Karavan Serrak, where he was, for fear the Kowlis should murder him. When the ladies heard the answer of the governor of Ahmed abad, they broke out into lamentations enough to pierce the hardest heart. All was in the utmost confusion. Soon after Dara came forth, half dead; now speaking to one, then to another, even of the meanest foldiers; whom he found all astonished, and ready to abandon him. He was obliged to march away that instant, departing with tears in his eyes, accompanied by 500 horse at most, and two elephants, said to be laden with money. As he had not authority enough to procure the author any beast of carriage, he was obliged to leave his physician behind.

Aureng
Zib
baffled.

AFTER innumerable hardships, in passing the deserts, and the loss of most of those who followed him, besides several of his women, he reached the Râjah of Kacheh; who at first received very kindly, and promised to assist him with all his forces, provided he would give his daughter in marriage to his son: but Jessyn having soon brought off this Râjah also, Dara, apprehending his person in danger, sets out from thence for Tatta Bakar. Mean time the war continued in Bengâl: which being under the conduct of an experienced general, and at a great distance, did not disquiet Aureng Zib so much as the neighbourhood of Soleymân Shekrowh; who continually alarmed him with rumours, as if he was coming down with the Râjah from the mountains, which are no more than eight days journey from Agra. To draw this thorn out of his foot, Aureng Zib employs the Râjah Jessyn to ply him of Serenâgher with letters; promising great things if he would deliver up the young prince, and threatening war in case he refused. The Râjah answers, that he would rather lose his estate than be guilty of so unworthy an action. Hereupon Aureng Zib marches to the foot of the mountains (B), and attempts to widen the passage, by cutting the rocks: while the Râjah laughs at his vain efforts to ascend inaccessible hills, where stones would be sufficient to repel the forces of four Hindûstâns; so that he was constrained to return as he came^b.

WHEN

^b BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 206, & seqq.

(B) Frazer says, that on the Sunday, 2d of January 1659, Aureng Zib set out for Bengâl; where, at a place called Kuura, he defeated his brother Sujah, and obliged him to fly. But Bernier mentions no expedition of Aureng Zib to Bengâl, or any where else, excepting this, during the remainder of the war; which

WHEN Dara arrived within two or three days journey of Tatta Bakar, he received news that Mir Bâba had, after a long leaguer, reduced the place to the last extremity; a pound of rice and meat being sold for more than a crown. Yet the brave governor still held out, and extremely incommoded the enemy by frequent sallies; deriding the attempts of the general, as well as the threats and promises of Aureng Zib. On the news of Dara's approach he redoubled his endeavours, and by sending spies into the enemy's camp, to spread reports of the prince's being at hand with considerable forces, so terrified them; that, had he advanced even with that handful of men, the army would have disbanded, and part gone over to him: but, believing it impossible to raise the siege with so few soldiers as accompanied him, he was for passing the Indus, and getting into Persia. This would have been a very difficult task, not only on account of the deserts and little water in those parts, but also because on the frontiers there are many Rajahs and Pâtans of no great generosity, who acknowledge neither the Persian nor the Mogol. However, when these strong reasons could not divert him from that design, a weak one urged, by his wife (C), did; namely, that if he took this last course, he must expect to see her and his daughter slaves to the king of Persia.

6. Khân
Aureng
Zib.

Dara near Bakar;

IN this perplexity Dara remembered that there was there-about a certain Pâtan, of some power, named Jon Khân, whose life he had saved twice, when Shâh Jehân had ordered him to be cast under the feet of an elephant, for having often rebelled. To this man therefore he resolves to go, and obtain succours to raise the siege of Tatta Bakar; after which, taking thence his treasure, he proposed to bend his course for Kandahâr, and so cast himself into the kingdom of Kâbul, in hopes of being assisted by Mohabet Khân, who had obtained the government by his favour. But his grandson, Sepe Shekroh, yet but very young, threw himself at his feet, and in-retires to

Jon
Khân.

which in that province was carried on by Amir Femla. The same author adds, that, on the 15th of May the same year, being then forty solar years, six months, and twenty-three days old, he was proclaimed a second time; and ordered, that the beginning of his reign should be dated from the 1st of Ramadân, Hejrab 1069, which answers to the 12th of May 1659.

(C) According to Tavernier, before he got to Jon Khân's habitation, he received the news of the death of his most beloved wife, who died on the road, of thirst; which almost distracted him. On this occasion he put on a dress of coarse linen, much the same with that which he appeared in afterwards at Dehli.

6 Khân
Aureng
Zib.

treated him, for God's sake, not to enter the country of that Pâtan. His wife and daughter did the same; remonstrating, that Jon Khân, being a rebel and revolted governor, would infallibly betray him: that he ought not to be so anxious on raising the siege, but rather endeavour to gain Kâbul; which was not impracticable, since it was not likely that Mîr Bâba would quit Tâtta Bakar to follow him. But Dara, hurried by his evil destiny, always maintained that Jon Khân would never be so base as to betray him, after all the good he had done him; and accordingly set forward to prove, at the price of his life, that no trust is to be placed in a wicked man.

who betrays him:

THIS robber, who imagined that the prince had numerous troops following him, at first gave both him and his soldiers the most hospitable reception that could be: but, when he found that the two or three hundred men, whom Dara brought with him, were his whole forces, he quickly shewed what he was. Whether instigated by letters from Aureng Zib, or tempted by some mules, said to be laden with gold; one morning, when every-body thought himself perfectly secure, this traitor, who in the night had gotten together many armed men, fell upon Dara and Sepe Shokqwh (D), killing some of their followers, who stood up to defend themselves; and, having overpowered them, he first took care to seize on the burdens with which the mules were loaded, and all the jewels of the ladies. Then he caused Dara to be bound fast upon an elephant, with an executioner behind him, who had orders to cut off his head, in case he should offer to resist, or any attempt to rescue him; and in this strange manner he was carried to Tâtta Bakar, and delivered into the hands of Mîr Bâba; who caused him to be conducted, accompanied by the traitor, to Lahûr, and thence to Dehli.

carried through Dehli:

WHEN this unhappy prince was at the gates of Dehli, it was debated whether he should be made to pass through the c BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 217, & seqq.

(D) According to Tavernier, Dara, awaked by a noise of their seizing his son, could not restrain venting his passion on Jon Khân, in these terms; Finish, infamous and ungrateful villain, as thou art, finish the work thou hast begun; we are become victims to bad fortune, and Aureng Zib's unjust ambition: but re- member, that I only deserve death for having saved thy life: for never prince of the royal blood had his hands tied behind him before. Jon Khân, in some measure, moved by these words, caused the young prince to be unbound, and only set guards over him and his father.

city or not. Many were against it; alleging, that it would be a great dishonour to the royal family, and that some might attempt to save him: others maintained, that it was absolutely necessary, that he should pass through the town, to shew the power of Aureng Zib; and take away all hopes from those who still favoured his interest, by convincing every body that he was actually in his brother's hands. This opinion, therefore, being followed, he was put on an old dirty elephant, with a pitiful seat, and his grandson Sepe Shckowh at his side; both dressed in dirty vests, and turbans of coarse linen. In this wretched condition, our author saw him pass through the principal streets of Dehli; all the shops being crowded with spectators, who wept bitterly: while the lower sort of people, by whom he was much beloved, exclaimed against the tyranny of Aureng Zib, who had already imprisoned his father, son, and brother. They also, with some Fakirs, reviled and threw stones at the infamous Jon Khân, who rode by his side: but not one man had the boldness to draw a sword in his behalf, although he was but very slightly guarded.

AFTER the prince had been led in this ignominious manner through the city, he was put into a garden called Hayder abâd (E): while Aureng Zib, being informed how the people had lamented Dara, and cursed the Pâtan, called another council, to deliberate whether it was better to send him to Gwaliyâr, as had been concluded before, or put him to death without more ceremony. Some were of opinion, it was sufficient, that he should be carried under a strong guard to that fortress; and on this Daneshmend Khân (F), although Dara's old enemy, insisted much: but Rushn Ray Begum, in hatred to this brother of hers, urged Aureng Zib to dispatch him out of the way; and not run the hazard of keeping him in prison. Of the same mind were all his old enemies, Khalilullah Khân, Shâh Hest Khân, and especially a certain medical parasite, who, having fled from Persia, was first called Hakim Dawd (or Doctor David); but afterwards, being become one of the great Omrâs, was named Takarrub Khân.

THIS upstart lord boldly rose up in a full assembly, and cried out, that it was expedient for the safety of the state to put him to death immediately; and the rather, because he was a kâfr, or idolater, without religion: adding, that he would take the sin of it on his own head. Of which impre-

(E) According to Frazer, he was sent to Khehrabâd (fifty-two measured kos from Dehli) where he was murdered by Aureng Zib's order, the twenty-eighth of August, 1659, in the night.

(F) Afterwards Bernier's Aga.

6. Khân
Aureng
Zib.

is murdered.

Jon Khân
lain.

Bakar surrendered.

cation he soon after felt the smart : for, falling into disgrace, he was treated like an infamous fellow, and died miserably. However, Aureng Zib, swayed by the reasons which were given, commanded that Dara should forthwith be put to death, and Sepe Shekowh sent to Gwaliyâr. The charge of this execution was given to a slave, called Nâzar; who, having been bred up by Shâh Jehân, had formerly received some ill treatment from Dâra. This slave, accompanied by three or four more to assist him, went presently to the garden; where Dâra was himself then dressing some lentils, with Sepe Shekowh. The prince no sooner saw Nâzar, than he cried out, My dear son. behold these who come to kill us! laying hold at the same time of a knife; which was all the arms that were left him. One of these butchers immediately seized on Sepe Shekowh: the others fell on the arms and legs of Dâra, throwing him on the ground, and holding him down, till Nâzar (G) cut his throat. His head was forthwith carried to the fortress to Aureng Zib, who commanding it to be put in a dish, and water to be brought, had the face washed clean from the blood, that he might see if it was Dâra's: which being done, he fell a weeping, and said, Ah! unfortunate man! Take it away, and bury it in the sepulchre of Humayûn.

AT night the daughter of Dara was brought into the harâm; but afterwards sent to Shâh Jehân and Begum Saheb, at their request. As for that prince's wife, she had poisoned herself before this at Lahûr, to avoid the misery which she saw falling on her family. Sepe Shekowh was sent to Gawliyâr. A few days after, Jon Khân, by Aureng Zib's order, appeared in the assembly; where having received some presents, he was dismissed: but, when he was near his own lands, he met with a more proper reward for his villainy; being killed in a wood^d.

MEAN time, Tâtta Bakar was surrendered, in obedience to an order which had been obtained from Dara; and all the conditions which the governor demanded were agreed to: but with an intention not to be kept. For as soon as the valiant and faithful eunuch arrived at Lahûr, he was cut in pieces, with the few men who accompanied him, by Khalîl'ollah Khân, the governor. The reason for non-observance of the capitulation was intelligence which arrived, importing, that

^d BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 226, & seqq.

(G) Bernier observes, that it had been made away with, as was not known what became of Jon Khân had been. this Nâzar; suggesting, that he

he had secretly conveyed abundance of gold into the hands of the Franghis, or Europeans, and all the rest who came with him out of the fortress, under pretence of accompanying him as far as Dehli, to Aureng Zib (who often expressed a desire to see the man, who had so gallantly defended himself); but in reality with design to go directly to Soleymân Shekowh.

6. Kbân
Aureng
Zib.

THIS prince was now the only one who remained of the family of Dara Shekowh; nor would it have been easy to draw him from Serenâgher, if the Rajah had been steady to his first declarations: but the death of Dara, and persuasions of Rajah Jesselyn, joined to the threats of Aureng Zib, who had actually excited the neighbouring Rajahs to make war upon him, at length prevailed on him to consent to their demands. Soleymân, being informed of this agreement, fled through the midst of those horrid mountains and frightful deserts, towards Great Tibet: but the Rajah's son, soon pursuing and overtaking him (H), caused him to be assaulted with stones. The poor prince was hurt, and, being seized, was carried to Dehli; where he was imprisoned in Serenâgher, that little fortress where at first Morâd Bukhsb had been confined. Aureng Zib, careful, as in the case of Dara, to convince the people that it was no sham, commanded Soleymân to be brought before him, in presence of all the grandees of the court. At the gate, the chains were taken off his feet; but those which he had about his hands, and seemed gilt, were left on.

Soleymân
Shekowh

WHEN this proper young man, so handsome and so gallant, was seen to enter, many of the Omrâs could not hold their tears; and all the great ladies of the court, who had leave to see him come in, fell a weeping. Aureng Zib, who appeared himself to be touched with his misfortunes, began to speak very kindly; telling him, "that he had nothing to fear: that "no hurt should be done him: that, on the contrary, he "should be well treated; and therefore ought to cheer up "his spirits: that he had put his father to death for no other "reason, than that he was a kâfr, and a man without religion." Hereupon the young prince returned his uncle the salem, and blessed him; letting fall his hands to the earth, and then lifting them, as well as he could, up to his head, after the usage of the country: but told him, with resolution taken and imprisoned.

(H) Tavernier says, that Nakti Raja, to save his oath, would not seize Soleymân: but a party of Jessom Seign's men, on notice given, surprised him as he went a hunting; and took him, after all his attendance had been slain, and he had slain nine of the party himself.

6 Khân
Aureng
Zib.

enough, " that if he was to drink the powst (I), his desire " was to die off-hand ; being very willing to submit to his " fate." In answer to this, Aureng Zib promised him publicly, " that he should drink none of it ; bidding him rest " satisfied as to that matter, and not entertain any melan- " choly thoughts about it." Having spoken these words, his nephew once more repeated the fable ; and, after answering to several questions, which had been put to him in the name of Aureng Zib, touching the elephant loaded with rupees of gold, which was taken from him when he went to Serendágher, he was sent to Gwaliyâr (K) to the rest.

Morád
Bukhsb

NOTWITHSTANDING these sugar words and fair promises of Aureng Zib, it is said, that not only Soleymân Shekowh, but his son Sepe Shekowh, and the grand-child of Morád Bukhsb, were dispatched by the powst. As to Morád Bukhsb himself, he was made away by a more violent death. For his brother, perceiving that the generality of people had an inclination to him, and that verses were dispersed about in praise of his valour and courage ; apprehended, that, if he took him off privately by the powst, his death would be doubted of, which might give occasion one time or other to some commotion : he therefore thought it safer to get rid of him in a more open manner ; and this he contrived to do under a shew of justice. For Morád Bukhsb, when he was at Ahmed abád making preparations for war, having, among other violences, to procure money (L), put to death a very rich Sayed, one of Mohammed's kindred, in order to get his estate ; the children of the Sayed were set on to make their complaints in a public assembly, and demand the head of that prince, in satisfaction for the blood of their father. Hereupon their petition was granted without any other form or process : nor did one of the Omrás interpose in the affair, not so much on account of the great veneration in which the Sayeds are

put to
death.

(I) This powst is nothing but poppy expressed, and infused one night in water. This is the potion which is given to those princes, whose lives are spared. It is the first thing which is brought them in the morning ; and they would rather let them starve for hunger, than give them any thing to eat till they have drank a large cup full. It emaciates them exceedingly, and kills them insensibly : for by degrees they lose their strength and understanding ; growing quite torpid and senseless.

(K) According to Frazer, Aureng Zib sent his son Soltán Mohammed and Soleymân Shekowh to Gwaliyâr, on the fourteenth of January, 1661.

(L) He borrowed, or took by force from those who scrupled to lend him, great sums of money, from all the rich merchants.

held,

held, as because every-body understood that Aureng Zib himself was at the bottom of it. In short, an order being issued out for the purpose, they went to Gwaliyâr, and took off the unfortunate Morâd's head ^{6 Khân Aureng Zib.}

THERE now remained no other thorn in the foot of Aureng Zib, excepting his brother Soltân Sujâh, who all this while held out in Bengâl: but Amîr Jemla was reinforced, from time to time, with so many troops of all sorts, that, being at length hemmed in on all sides, he was obliged to fly to Dakka, which is the last city of that province towards the sea; and now comes the conclusion of this whole tragedy. The prince, being destitute of ships, and not knowing whither to fly, sent his eldest son Soltân Banka to the heathen king of Rakan (M), or May, to know if he would give him leave to make that country his place of refuge only for some time, and do him the favour, when the monsoons, or season winds, should come, to furnish him with a vessel to carry him to Mekka; intending from thence to pass into some part of Turky, or Persia. The king of Rakan sent answer, that he should be very welcome, and have all possible assistance from him.

WITH this answer, and some galleasses, manned with Franghis, that is, fugitive Portugueses, and other straggling Europeans, who had put themselves in the service of this king, and did nothing but ravage the lower (or maritime) Bengâl, Soltân Banka returned to Dakka; where the prince, his father, embarking with his wife, his three sons, and his daughters, set sail for the kingdom of Rakan. When they landed, they were well enough received; and furnished with whatever that country afforded, at the expence of the king. At the end of some months, the monsoons began to blow; but no news of the ship which was promised him, although he demanded it at his own charges; for as yet he wanted neither rups of gold and silver, nor precious stones. His misfortune was, that he had too great plenty of them; for his riches were, in all appearance, the cause of his ruin, or at least contributed not a little to it. These barbarous kings, says our author, have no true generosity, nor much regard for the faith they give. To get out of their hands likewise, one must either be stronger, or else have nothing to tempt their avarice.

MEAN time, the king of Rakan, instead of furnishing Soltân Sujâh with the vessel, began to shew much coldness, and

* BERNIER, ubi s. pr. p. 236, & seqq.

(M) Called also Arakan, or Arrakan, and Arrakam.

complain,

6. Khân
Aureng
Zib.

complain, that he did not come to see him. The prince, either thinking it beneath him to pay the king a visit, or rather fearing to be seized on, if he went to the palace, and delivered up to Amîr Jemla, who had already offered great sums of money for that purpose, never would go thither himself, but only sent his son Soltân Banka; who, as he drew near the palace, threw rupis both of gold and silver among the people. Being introduced to the king, he presented him with store of embroideries, and curious pieces of gold-smith's work, set with precious stones of great value. He apologized for his father, as being indisposed; and besought him, in the Soltân's name, to remember his promise of the vessel. But for all this Soltân Sujâh could not obtain his request. On the contrary, five or six days after, the king of Rakan sent to demand his daughter in marriage (N); which being a thing he could never resolve to comply with, the king became highly offended.

Sujah's desperate attempt:

As the prince now saw it was high time to take care of himself, and the season was near spent without any hopes of his getting to Mekka, he undertook an action, which may serve as an instance of what despair is capable of attempting. Although the king of Rakan is a heathen, yet there are in his dominions great numbers of Mohammedans; who either retired thither to settle, or had been made slaves of, and carried thither, by the Europeans before-mentioned. These Mohammedans Soltân Sujâh gained under-hand, and with them, joined to two or three hundred men, remaining of those who had followed him from Bengâl, resolved on a certain day to attack the palace; and, killing all the royal family, cause himself to be proclaimed king of Rakan. This seems to have been a romantic project; and yet our author had been informed by Mohammedans, as well as Portugueses and Dutchmen, who were then present, that the thing was practicable enough. But the day before the stroke was to be given, the design was discovered; which broke all the prince's measures, and quite ruined his affairs f.

flies from Rakan:

FOR, finding it no longer safe for him to stay in Rakan, he resolved to attempt escaping into Pegu; which was a thing quite impracticable, on account of the vast mountains and forests, which were to be crossed. However, the unfortunate prince set-out with his family and some of his people:

f BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 244, & seqq.

(N) Tavernier says, the prince demanded and obtained the king's daughter in marriage.

but he was immediately pursued, and with so much diligence, that he was overtaken the same day on which he fled. Soltân Sujâh defended himself with great courage, and killed an incredible number of the Rakan soldiers: but was so overpowered by the multitude, that he was obliged to quit the combat. Soltân Banka, who was not so far advanced as his father, defended himself also like a lion: but at length he was taken, all over bloody with the wounds he had received from the stones which were poured upon him, and carried back with his two little brothers, his sisters, and mother.

WHAT became of Soltân Sujâh himself could never, with any certainty, be known: the common report was, that he got to the top of the mountain, with one woman, an eunuch, and two other persons: that he was hit by a stone on the head, which struck him down; but that, rising again, the eunuch wrapped his turbân about the wound, and that afterwards they escaped through the midst of the woods. However, our author observes, that he had heard the relation told three or four different ways, even by persons who were on the spot. Some affirmed, that he was among the dead; but not with certainty known: and Bernier saw a letter from the chief of the Dutch factory (at Rakan), confirming the same. This was what gave rise to so many alarms at Dehli. One time he was landed to join the kings of Golkondâ and Viziapûr: another time he was seen with two ships, carrying red colours (O), off Surât. Next he was at Shîràz, in Persia, and soon after at Kandahâr, ready to enter the kingdom of Kâbul. But the same author gave more credit to the report of his being slain: not only as it was confirmed by the letter of the Dutch, but because both an eunuch of his, with whom he travelled (P), and the great master of his artillery, assured him, that he was no longer in being; although they made a difficulty to say any more concerning him.

AFTER this last action, Soltân Sujâh's whole family was put in prison at Rakan; where they were treated roughly enough. However, some time after they were set at more liberty, and received a milder entertainment; which was increased by the alliance made by the king, who married the Soltân's eldest daughter. Mean time, some of Soltân Banka's domestics, in conjunction with several of the Mohammedans, formed a second plot like the first: but, on the day appointed for putting it in execution, one of the conspirators, who was half drunk, beginning to act before the time, blasted the whole design.

(O) The livery of the kings of Pegu and Siem.

(P) From Bengâl to Masli- pattan.

Yet

6. Khân
Aureng
Zib.

and is slain:

his family destroyed.

6 Khân
Aureng
Zib.

Yet our author takes notice, that it was very difficult to know the truth of this affair also, since he had heard forty different accounts of it. What is certain, is, that the king was at length so exasperated against the unfortunate family of Sujâh, that he commanded it should be quite extirpated. Soltân Banka and his brothers had their heads cut off with blunt axes, and the women were mured up between stone walls; where they were starved to death. In short, not one escaped the slaughter; excepting that daughter whom the king had made his wife.

Aureng
Zib's conduct.

THUS ended this civil war, which the lust of reigning had kindled among those four brothers, sons of Shâh Jehân, after it had lasted five or six years; that is, from about 1655 to 1660, or 1661, which left Aureng Zib in peaceable possession of this powerful empire^a. On this occasion, our author observes, that, although most of his readers will judge the ways taken by this prince to obtain the empire, to be very violent and horrid: yet that if they consider the custom of the state, which leaving the succession undecided, for want of being settled by law on the eldest son, exposeth it to the conquest of the strongest; and at the same time lays every prince of the blood under a sort of necessity, either to reign by destroying all the rest to secure himself, or else to perish for the security of others. These things considered, he is apt to believe, that Aureng Zib's conduct will not appear in so bad a light: however, he is persuaded, that those who attend to his history, will not take him for a Barbarian: but for a great and rare genius; for a statesman, and a great king^b.

S E C T. II.

Occurrences from the End of the civil Wars, to the Death of Shâh Jehân.

Ambassadors arrive

THE wars being ended, the Uzbek Tatars sent ambassadors to Aureng Zib, whom they had seen fight in their country, when yet a young prince; Shâh Jehân having sent him to command the succours, which the Khân of Samarkant had desired of him against the Khân of Balk. They considered likewise, that he could not but remember the affront which they put upon him, when on the point of taking the city of Balk, the enemy's capital: for the two Khâns agreed together, and obliged him to retreat; alleging, that he might make himself master of their whole dominions, as Akber had formerly done by the kingdom of Kashmîr. Whatever their motives were, the two Khâns sent their ambassadors to offer their service, and congratulate him upon the happy commencement of his reign. Aureng Zib was too judicious not to see, that, the war being at an end, this offer was out of season; and that it was nothing but fear, or the hope of obtaining some considerable present, which had brought these ambassadors. For all this, he received them honourably at their first audience, at which our author was present; commanding a serapah, or habit from head to foot, to be given to each: but they were obliged, at entering, to make the slavish obeisance of the country; and to deliver their letters into the hands of an Omrà, although they were so near the throne, that Aureng Zib might have taken them himself.

^a BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 251—253.
174, & seqq.

^b Ibid part ii. p.

6 Khân
Aureng
Zib.

from Great Bukhâria.

THEIR presents consisted of lapis lazuli, camels, horses, some loads of fresh fruits; as apples, pears, grapes, and melons; several more of dried fruits, as prunes of Bokhâra, apriots, raisins without stones, and two other sorts, both black and white, very large and very good. Aureng Zib expressed much satisfaction at the presents; and, in dismissing them, intimated, that he should be glad to see them often. They were extremely covetous and nasty, laid up the money allowed for their maintenance, and lived a miserable life, very unworthy of ambassadors: yet they were dismissed with great honour and rich presents, after above four months stay^a.

BEFORE their departure, Aureng Zib fell desperately ill of a violent and continued fever, which sometimes deprived him of his understanding. His tongue was seized with such a palsy, that he almost lost his speech, and the physicians despaired of his recovery: so that for some time it was believed he was dead, and that his sister Rausbn ray Begum concealed his death out of design. It was already hinted, that the Râjah Jessom Seyn, governor of Guzerât, was on the way to deliver Shâh Jehân: that Mohabet Khân, who had at length obeyed the orders of Aureng Zib, was advanced from Kâbul to Lahûr with three or four thousand horse, for the same end; and that the eunuch Atbar Khân, who kept the deposed monarch, would have the honour of his deliverance. At the same time interest was making for the succession. On one side, Soltân Mauzm, by bribes and promises, laboured to gain the Omràs; so far as that one night he went disguised to Râjah Jessmyn, intreating him, in the most respectful manner, to engage in his behalf. On the other hand, Rausbn ray Begum, with Teday Khân, and

Aureng
Zib falls
sick:

^a BERNIER, ubi sup. p. 1, & seqq.

6. Khân Aureng Zib. many Omràs, declared for the young prince Soltân Akber, though but seven or eight years old. Both parties pretended their design was only to release Shâh Jehân (which the people every moment expected), although none of them had any such thing in their thoughts : nor indeed had any of them reason to wish for his restoration, excepting Jessom Seyn, Mohabet Khân, and some others, who had hitherto done no great matters to his disadvantage.

his great resolution : BUT although Aureng Zib was very sick, yet he gave orders in all affairs; and although he advised Soltân Mauzm to open the gates to Shâh Jehân, in case he should die, yet he took care that Atbar Khân should be incessantly written to, in order to keep a strict watch over his father. The fifth day, in the height of his sickness, he was carried into the assembly of the Omràs to shew himself. The like was done on the seventh, ninth, and tenth day of his illness. What is almost incredible, on the thirteenth, after a swooning fit, which occasioned a rumour thro' the whole city that he was dead, he sent for two or three of the chief Omràs, and the Râjah Jessseyn, to let them see that he was alive; and, being raised up in his bed, called for ink and paper to write to Atbar Khân: he likewise sent for the great seal from his sister, fearing she had already made use of it to serve her designs^b. The cause of this sickness was probably owing to his rigid diet: for at the time that Aureng Zib ascended the throne he would not eat any wheaten bread, nor meat, nor flesh: but fed on barley bread, herbs, and sweetmeats (A), by way of penance for his crimes. This made him very thin and meagre.

fondness for Soltân Akber: As soon as he had recovered his health, he sought to get out of the hands of Shâh Jehân, Begum Sâheb, the daughter of Dara; in order to marry her to Soltân Akber, his third son, on purpose to give him the greater right to the empire. This he designed him for: as he had many powerful relations at court, and was born of the daughter of Shâh Navaz Khân, and consequently of the blood of the antient sovereigns of Masbat; whereas Mahmûd and Maûzm were sons only of Râji-

^b BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 14, & seqq. part ii. l. 2. c. 7.

^c TAVERNIER, Trav.

(A) The same author observes further, that, in 1665, all the time of the comet's appearance, he drank nothing but water, and ate millet bread; which so impaired his health, that it had like to have cost him his life. Besides he always lay on the ground, with only a tiger's skin under him; from which time he never was perfectly well. Tavern. Trav. Ind. l. ii. c. ix. p. 124.

powtu, or daughters of Rājahs. But it is scarcely to be believed, with what fierceness this proposition was rejected by the three parties; the young princess threatening to kill herself, rather than marry the son of him who had murdered her father. He had no better success with Shāh Jehān, in his application for certain jewels, to finish an addition which he had made to the famous throne (B) then in being; for the deposed emperor threatened to beat them to dust, rather than let him have them. However, at length, he obtained both his requests, by the kind treatment and great respect which he paid his father.

FOR although Aureng Zib caused Shāh Jehān to be secured with the greatest strictness, yet he left him in his old apartment with Regum Sahib, and his other women. He allowed him also his singers, dancers, cooks, and the like, with certain mollahs to read the korān to him; for he was become very devout. He had likewise, as formerly, the diversion of seeing beasts fight, and other sights. But what softened him most was the obliging letters, full of respect and submission, which Aureng Zib often wrote to him; consulting him as an oracle, and expressing a thousand regards for him. He was likewise incessantly sending him some engaging present: all which so gained on his father, that he answered his letters, and sent him some of the jewels, which he had before refused. He even consented, that the daughter of Dara should be delivered to him; in short he granted him at length that pardon and paternal blessing, which he had so often refused.

THE Dutch, to gain credit themselves in the country, and intimidate the governors of the sea-ports, resolved to send an ambassador to Aureng Zib. They pitched on Mr. Adrican, chief of their factory at Surāt, a person of integrity and good sense. Although Aureng Zib seemed to despise the Franghis, or Christians, yet he received him with honour; bestowing embroidered serapahs, or a full suit, on him, and some of his train. He gave him another at his last audience, and a very rich one for the general of Batavia; with a poniard adorned with jewels. The presents of the Dutch consisted of scarlet cloth, looking-glasses, with Chinese and Japan curiosities: among which was a paleki, and a takt-ravan, or field-throne,

(B) According to Tavernier, jewels was the reason that Aureng Zib, when he ascended the throne, had no more than one jewel on his bonnet; for it cannot be called a crown.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

Amorous
eunuch.

of admirable workmanship. About the same time, what seems almost incredible, Didar Khân, one of the chief eunuchs of the harâm, though cut close, fell in love with the beautiful sister of an Hindû scrivener, who lived near a house where the eunuch often retired to divert himself. The neighbours at length beginning to rally the scrivener on the occasion, he threatened both his sister and her lover to kill them, if they continued their correspondence. Soon after, finding them in the night lying together, he dispatched the eunuch outright, and left his sister for dead. The whole harâm, women and eunuchs, did their utmost to get the scrivener put to death; but Aureng Zib was content that he should turn Mohammedan ^c.

The king's clemency.

MEAN while this prince was informed, that his sister Rauzbay Begum had given access, at different times, to two young gallants into the harâm; yet shewed no resentment to either her or the young men. They were both found wandering in the garden, deserted by those intrusted to conduct them out: and being brought before Aureng Zib, the first said he got in over the wall; the other confessed he entered by the gate. They were ordered to go out the same way they came in: but the eunuchs, exceeding their commission, threw the first headlong from the wall, and killed him.

Other embassies.

PRESENTLY after the Dutch embassy, there arrived several others, almost at the same time; viz. from the Sharif of Mekka, the king of Yamman, or Happy Arabia, and the prince of Barah; whose presents were in horses: lastly, two others from the king of Habush (or Ethiopia). To the three first no great regard was paid; their appearance and equipage was so miserable, seeming to come only to get presents, and sell their merchandize, under pretence of being ambassadors. The Ethiopians fared better, though they deserved it as little. They were ordinary merchants, with a wretched retinue, and mean presents; consisting of twenty-five slaves, nine or ten of them very young, for making eunuchs of (a design very becoming a Christian prince!); twelve horses, a mule beautifully streaked and speckled, two huge elephant's teeth, and a very large ox horn full of civet. As Seva ji sacked Surât just after their landing, they lost the little which they brought for their subsistence, and were obliged to beg provision of the governor, who also sent them up to Dekli; where their half-naked train passed for beggars. Yet, by our author's speaking in behalf of their king to his lord, they were admitted to audience by Aureng Zib; who honoured them with serapahs, gave them money for themselves, and a rich present for their sovereign. They engaged to employ their interest with the king for

One from Habash.

^c BERNIER, part ii. p. 21, & seq. 99, & seq.

for rebuilding a mosk; and requested a korán, and some other religious books, in their master's name; which seemed as odd from a Christian ambassador, as one of them was, as from a Christian king ^d.

WHILE these Ethiopians were at Dehli, Aureng Zib assembled his privy council, to consult about the education of Soltán Akbar, which he had much at heart. After this there arrived a Persian ambassador, who was received with great respect. He made his salute after the Persian mode, and delivered his letters into Aureng Zib's own hands. The presents were very rich, and acceptable to the Great Mogol; who gave the ambassador considerable donatives, and assigned him a place among his chief Omràs. Notwithstanding all these tokens of honour, the Persian Omràs, at the Great Mogol's court, gave out, that their king had reproached him in his letters with the death of Dara, and imprisonment of Sháh Jehán, as actions unworthy of a brother, a son, and a mussulman: they reported also, that Sháh Abbás II. had twitted him with the word Alem Ghír; or conqueror of the world; which Aureng Zib had caused to be engraven on his coin. Our author, indeed, cannot think that the king of Persia would have ventured, in such a manner, to provoke so victorious a prince as Aureng Zib; and yet afterwards believes, either that there must have been some offensive expression in those letters, or else that the ambassador must have some-how displeased Aureng Zib. Because two or three days after he had dismissed him, that prince caused a report to be spread, that the ambassador had ordered the hamstrings of the presented horses to be cut; and being yet on the frontiers, made him return all the Indian slaves, whom he carried along with him, amounting to a prodigious number.

ABOUT this time, the death of the king's chief astrologer, who happened to be drowned, brought those of the faculty into disgrace; for people could not imagine how the man, who foresaw the fate of others, should be ignorant of his own. And yet this sort of impostors, practising on the credulity of the people, have found means to make themselves as necessary a set of men in the Indies, as the clergy or the lawyers.

AFTER Amír Jemla had driven Soltán Sujáh out of Ben-gál, he sent to intreat leave of Aureng Zib to remove his family into this province, that he might end his days in the company of his wife and children: but Aureng Zib feared if he had his son with him, that he might aspire to the

5 Khán
Sháh Jehán.

A Persian
ambassador.

Astrologers disgraced.

Amír Jemla rewarded.

^d TAVERNIER, p. 32-49.

^e Ibid. p. 58-89.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

crown, or at least make himself independent in Bengâl, where he had then a strong army at his devotion. At the same time considering that it might be dangerous to disoblige him, he sends to him his wife, and all the children of his son; creates the Amîr himself a Mîr'olmra, which is the greatest degree of honour that a favourite can be raised to; and makes Mohammed Amîr Khân the great Bakshis: a dignity like our great master of the horse, the second or third post in the state, but such as obliges the possessor to be always at court. The Amîr perceiving Aureng Zib's dexterity, thought it best to rest content with the honours he had received; and, at the same time, be always on his guard, that since he could attempt nothing against Aureng Zib, Aureng Zib should not be able to attempt any thing against him.

Invades
Achem.

THUS matters stood between them for near a year: when Aureng Zib, well knowing that a great captain cannot be long at rest; and that if he be not employed in a foreign war, he will at length raise a domestic one, proposed to Amîr Jemla to make war on the rich and potent Rajâh of Asbam (C), whose territories are situated to the north of Dâkka, upon the gulf of Bengâl†.

WE are told by a certain author, that before the expedition of Amîr Jemla, the kingdom of Asem (or Asbam) was not known. It had been at peace above 500 years before; and 'tis thought guns and powder were first invented here: which discovery passed from Asem into Pegu, and thence to China. 'Tis certain, that the Amîr brought from this country several pieces of iron cannon, and store of excellent powder, round and small, both made in Asem. When the king dies, all his beloved wives poison themselves, to attend him in the other world.

The country described.

ASEM is one of the best countries in all Asia; for, besides all sorts of provisions, it produces mines of gold, silver, steel, lead, and iron. Silk is plenty there, but coarse: there is also a silk, made by little round creatures, formed at the foot of trees, which is very glossy, but frets presently. Gum-lak is here in great store of both kinds, especially that of a red colour, which grows under trees, and with which they paint their callicoës. When the red juice is drawn out for that purpose, the remaining substance serves to varnish cabinets, and make wax. Altho' all necessaries of life are so † BERNIER, p. 107, & seqq.

(C) Tavernier calls it Asem; pital was formerly a city of the others Azem; and says the ca- same name. Trav. Ind. c. 17.

plenty in Asem, yet dogs flesh is in most esteem, and the greatest delicacy at feasts. It is sold in the towns every month, on market-days. Altho' there are abundance of vines, the inhabitants never think of wine, but dry the grapes to make their aqua vite. They have no salt, but what they get out of the ashes of the leaves of trees, especially that called Adam's fig-tree; whereof also they make a lye for washing their silk, which thereby becomes as white as snow.

THE king requires no subsidies of his subjects; his revenues arising out of the mines, which are his property, and wrought by slaves. The people live at their ease, have each four wives, and commonly an elephant to carry them. They are well complexioned; only the more southerly they live, the more swarthy, and not so subject to wens in their throats: but the women are flat-nosed. In the south parts they go naked, excepting a cloth to cover their privities, and a blue cap hung about with swines teeth. They wear gold in their ears, and bracelets of coral, amber, and shells, which, at the burial of friends, they fling into their graves.

BUT to return to the war: Amir Jemla, who, in all appearance, had before designed the same expedition, readily undertook it. He embarked at Dakka, with a powerful army, upon a river which comes from those parts (D): and having proceeded about 100 leagues north-east, arrived at Azo, a castle (E) which the Rajah had many years before wrested from the kingdom of Bengâl. This place he retook in fifteen days; and then in twenty-six more marched still northward, over land, towards Shamdâra, which gives entrance into Asbam. There a battle was fought, in which the Rajah being worsted, retreated to Gherghon (F), his capital city, four miles from Shamdâra.

THE Amir pursued him so closely, that he gave him no time to fortify himself, arriving there in five days time. This constrained the Rajah to fly towards the mountains of the § BERNIER, Trav. Ind. c. 17.

(D) Tavernier says it comes from Chiamay: but neither the situation, nor name of that lake, is with any certainty known, or mentioned by later travellers.

(E) According to Tavernier, the tombs of the kings and royal family of Asem are at this town; for they do not burn their dead, as in other parts. Great wealth was found here, in the vaults of the chapels of the great Pagod, where the tombs are.

Trav. Ind. c. 17.

(F) Tavernier says, the name of the city where the king keeps his court is Kennezoof, 25 or 30 days journey from that which was formerly the capital, and bore the same name.

5. Khân
hân.
Shâh Je-

kingdom of Lâssa, and abandon Gherghon, which was pillaged as well as Shamlàra. They found vast riches in that city, which was very large and fair, well traded, and the women exceeding beautiful. Mean time, the rainy season arriving sooner than usual, which laid the country under water, and the Râjah's people having carried away all the provisions of the fields; the Amîr's army was greatly distressed, without being able either to advance or retreat, for the mountains on one side, and the deep roads on the other: besides, the Râjah had caused the way to be dug up as far as Shamlàra. This obliged the general to abandon his design, and, when the rains were over, to return; which he did, after suffering extremely from the roads, want of victuals, and the pursuit of the Râjahs. He designed, however, to renew his attempt the next year: but at Azo, where the flux began to rage in his army, he fell sick, and died; which put an end to the just apprehensions of the Great Mogol. For on this occasion, those who knew the state of affairs, said, 'Tis this day that Aureng Zib is king of Bengâl; and he could not forbear to express something like it himself: for he said publicly, to Mohammed Amîr Khan, You have lost your father, and I the greatest and most dangerous friend I had. However, he caressed this son, and promised to be a father to him; in which he kept his word: for he confirmed him in his post of Great Bakshis, augmented his pension to 1000 rupis a month, and left him heir of all the Amîr's estate, which, by the custom of the country, fell to himself

Amîr
Jemla
dies.

Translation against

THE government of Bengâl, and command of the army in that country, with the title of Mîr'ol Omra, which Amîr Jemla possessed, the king gave to his own uncle, Shâh Hest Khân (G), who had so much contributed to his advancement by his eloquence and address. This lord was first made by him governor of Agra, when he left that city to meet Soltân Sujâh at Kajowh, and afterwards governor of Dekan, and general of the army there. As soon as Shâh Hest Khân was settled in Bengâl, he resolved to deliver the country from the Portuguese pirates, who had for a long time been a plague to that country; and then to attack the king of Rakan (or Arrakan) according to the order of Aureng Zib; who had a mind to be revenged on that prince (not so much for harbouring those execrable vermin, as) for his cruelty toward Soltân Sujâh, and all his family^b.

^b BERNIER, ubi sup. p. 11, & seqq. 131.

(G) He was son of the famous Asaf Khân, father-in-law of Shâh Jehan.

IN order to set this matter in a proper light, our reader is to know, that, for many years before, the kingdom of Rakan had been the refuge of all the runaway Portugueses from Goa, Kochin, Malukka, and other places which they had in the Indies, as well as of their slaves, and other Europeans. They consisted of such as had abandoned their monasteries, had been twice or thrice married, murderers, and the like, who led in that country a most horrible life, butchering one another, and assassinating their own priests, who sometimes were not better than themselves. The king of Rakan kept them as a guard of his frontiers against the Mogol, in the port called Chatigon (H) (which he had taken from Bengál), giving them lands, and liberty to live as they pleased. Their usual trade was robbery and piracy; they not only scoured the sea-coasts, but entered the rivers, especially the chanel of the Ganges; and often penetrating forty or fifty leagues up the country, surprised and carried away whole towns and villages of people, with great cruelty, and burning all which they could not carry away. Hence it is, saith our author, that there are seen in the mouth of that river so many fine islands quite deserted, which were formerly very populous.

5 Khan
Sháh Je-
hán.

the Portuguese pirates;

AFTER they had done all this mischief, they had the impudence to go and sell the old people, whom they could make no use of, in the very country from whence they had taken them; so that those who had escaped by flight, bought to-day their fathers and mothers, who had been made slaves of yesterday. The rest of their captives they made rowers of, and such Christians as they were themselves; or else sold them to the Portugueses belonging to other parts of the Indies; and even to those of Ogowli (or Hugli) who settled there by favour of Jehán Ghár, on promise to keep the bay of Bengál free from pirates. This trade was carried on towards the isle of Galles, near cape Palmas, where these Corsairs waited for the Portugueses, who filled their ships with slaves at an easy rate; this infamous rabble bragging that they made more Christians in one year, than all the missionaries through the Indies did in ten. They were these pirates who made Sháh Jehán at last to vent his passion not only against the jesuit their villanies;

(H) Chatigon. as Bernier writes it, and Katigam as the Portugueses. Its true name, according to Hamilton, is Chittagoung. It stands at the mouth of the eastern branch of the Ganges; is a poor place, in the hands of the Mogols; altho' the descendants of the Portugueses are the domineering lords of it. New Account of East Ind. vol. ii. p. 22. and 25.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

seize Sundiva.

A frier
king.

Pirates revolt to missionaries at Agra, most of whose church (I) he caused to be pulled down; but also against the Franghis of Owgli, for conniving at the pirates, and filling their houses with slaves, who were his natural subjects (K).

THESE miscreants, some time before the desolation of Owgli, offered the viceroy of Goa to put the whole kingdom of Rakân into his hands for the king of Portugal: but he refused to send the succours demanded by one Bastian Gon-salvo, who was their captain, and had married one of the king's daughters. This the viceroy did, as they say, not thro' detestation of the treason, but out of arrogance and jealousy, that Bastian should have the honour of doing such an exploit. About the same time these pirates seized on the island of Sundiva, commanding, in some measure, the mouth of the Ganges; in which isle a certain Augustin frier, a very famous man, acted the king for many years. Having taken a course, God knows how, says our author, to rid himself of the commander of that place, these same robbers, who carried Soltân Sujâh from Dâka to Rakan, as before related, found means, by the way, to open his coffers, and rob him of good store of jewels; which they sold privately at Rakan, for a small matter, for want of knowing the value of them. In short, their depredations were so great in Bengâl, that they for many years obliged the Great Mogol to garrison the passes every-where, and keep a great militia on foot at land, as well as a fleet of galleasses at sea, to oppose their courses: but they only laughed at the Mogol soldiery, and were become so daring at sea, that four or five of their galleasses would set upon fourteen or fifteen of the others, which they actually worsted and took, or run agroundⁱ.

THIS was the condition of the pirates, when Shâh Hest Khân entered upon the government of Bengâl; and this lord knowing that it was impracticable to pass any forces, either horse or foot, from Bengâl to Rakan, on account of the many chanel and rivers upon the frontiers; considering also, that those pirates would hinder him to transport his army by sea, he resolved to engage the Dutch in his design; and for that purpose sent an officer to Batavia, to persuade the general to join with him in subduing the kingdom of Rakan.

ⁱ BERNIER, p. 118, & seqq.

(I) It was fair and large, sound might be heard all over built as well as that of Lahôr, the city.
by Jebân Ghîr, with a great (K) See more of these affairs, steeple over it, and a bell, whose vol. vii. p. 29, & seqq.

The general of Batavia, judging this a proper means to de-⁵stroy the Portuguese power in the Indies, and enlarge their own, dispatched two men of war for Bengál, to favour the transportation of the Mogol troops: but before those men of war arrived, Sháh Hest Khán, having equipped a great number of galleasses, and many large vessels, for the same service, sent to acquaint the pirates with his design upon Rakan; promising, in case they abandoned the service of the king, and took part with Aureng Zib, that he would distribute among them as much land in Bengál as they desired, and give them double the pay which they then had. On the other hand, he threatened, in case they refused his offers, utterly to spoil and ruin them.

*Sháh Je-
hán.*

THE pirates, whether for fear of the Mogol general, or Sháh Hest the king of Rakan, one of whose officers they had about that time assassinated, were one day struck with such a panic, that they shipped themselves, all at once, in forty or fifty of their galleasses, with the utmost precipitation, and wafted over to Bengál. Sháh Hest Khán received them with open arms, and gave them considerable pay: then, without letting them cool, carried them with him to attack the island of Sundiva, which was fallen into the hands of the king of Rakan, and afterwards Chatigon, both which he took. About the same time the two Dutch ships arrived: but Sháh Hest Khán, imagining that he should now be able to compass his design, without their assistance, put off, with thanks and compliments, the captains of those vessels, who were not well pleased at being so duped. As to the pirates, when he had served his purposes with them, he never minded to perform the large promises he made. Knowing that they were in his power, and unable to help themselves, he let them go whole months without pay, considering them as traitors and infamous men, who were to be used at discretion; and in this manner did Sháh Hest Khán put an end to that rabble.

AURENG ZIB was very jealous and strict over his children. He sent his eldest son Soltán Mahmád, as hath been said, to Gwaliyar; but, according to report, did not make him drink the powst, or stupefying potion. Nor was he well satisfied, for a time, with his second son, Soltán Mauzm, who afterwards came to the throne; although he always was a pattern of reservedness and moderation. Whether it was to try his courage, or that he thought him too forward in making a party in his late sickness; he one day, in a full assembly, ordered him to go kill a lion, which, descending from the mountains, had made great havock in the plains: and when the master of the hunt called for those large and strong exploits.*

*Soltán
Mauzm's

5 Khan
Shâh Je-
hân.

strong nets used in this dangerous game, the king told him, that when he was prince, he did not look for such formalities. It was Mauzm's good fortune to succeed in this enterprise, without losing more than two or three men, and having a few horses wounded; altho' he was in some small danger himself, the wounded lion having leapt up to the head of his elephant. After that, Aureng Zib expressed much affection to him, and gave him the government of Dekan; but with so little power and income, that he had not much to apprehend from him^k.

Great officers advanced.

It has been already observed, that Mohabet Khân had been received into favour by Aureng Zib. This prince unwilling, as he said, to lose so brave a commander, and one who had stuck so close to his benefactor Shâh Jehân, not only pardoned him, but removed him from the government of Kâbul to that of Guzerât, in place of Jessim seyn, whom he sent to make war in Dekan. However, this favour of Aureng Zib was probably owing to some considerable presents which the Khân made to Rushn ray Begum, in conjunction with others presented to the Great Mogol himself, consisting of many excellent Persian horses and camels, besides 15,000 or 16,000 rupis of gold. As Aureng Zib did not ruin all those who were against him, or not of his party, in the late wars, so he did not fail to reward such as had faithfully served him: for, besides his uncle Shâh Hest Khân, on whom he conferred the government of Bengâl, he gave to Mir Khân that of Kâbul; to Khalil'ollah Khân, that of Lahûr; to Mir Bâba, that of Elabâs; to Lasfer Khân, that of Pâtna. He appointed the son of Alla Verdi Khan (L) governor of Sendi; Fazel Khân he made Khâneh Samman, that is, great steward of the house royal; Daneشمند Khân, governor of Dehli (M); and Dianet Khân, governor of Kashmîr^l.

Seva ji declared a Râjah.

'Tis true, that Nejabâd Khân, who had behaved well in the battles of Semongher and Kajoweh, was dismissed; but that was, because he had the presumption to upbraid the king with the services done him. As to what concerns the Râjahs Jessim seyn and Jessim seyn, this latter was suspected of holding intelligence with Seva ji, who had plundered

^k BERNIER, p. 131, & seqq.

^l Ibid. p. 146, & seqq.

(L) Who was of Soltân Sujah's party.

(M) This was the lord by whom Bernier was retained as physician. As he was always employed in studies and foreign affairs, he was dispensed with from attending twice every day in the assembly of Omrâs, without having his salary retrenched.

Surât (N): for which reason Aureng Zib called him away from Dekan; but, instead of going to Dehli, he went to his own territory. In his place the king sent Jesseyn, accompanied by his son Soltân Mauzm, who yet was vested with no power. This Râjah presently besieged the principal fortrefs of Seva ji; and, no less by his dexterity in treating, than by force, prevailed on that lord to surrender, before it came to extremities. This done, he drew Seva over to the Mogol interest, against Viziapûr; on which, Aureng Zib declared him a Râjah, and gave the pension of a considerable Omrâ to his son. Some time after, at the instigation of that monarch, he went to Dehli, on the faith of Jesseyn.

BUT Aureng Zib being prevailed on, by the persuasion of his uncle Shah Hest Khân's wife, to arrest him, he found his pavilions, one evening, beset by three or four Omrâs: however, he made shift to get away in the night. This escape made a great noise at court: and as every-body accused the eldest son of Jesseyn to have assisted in it, the Râjah left Dekan, to secure his estate, by advice of his friends; keeping night and day on his guard, for fear the Great Mogol should lay hold of the pretence to seize his lands: but when he was at Brambûr he died. For all this, Aureng Zib, far from expressing any resentment to his son, condoled with him for his father's death, and continued his pension: which confirms, says our author, what many said, that Seva ji's escape was with the consent of the king himself, that he might avoid the resentment of the ladies of the court.

AURENG ZIB, being now engaged in no foreign broils, began to think of recovering Kandahâr, which has of late ages been the subject of grievous wars. Akber took it from the Persians; and Shâh Abbas I. recovered it from his son, Jehân Ghîr: afterwards it returned to Shâh Jehân, by means of the governor Ali Merdân Khân, who, to avoid the malice of his enemies, surrendered it to him, and went to live at his court. The city was besieged, and retaken afterwards, by the son of Shâh Abbâs (O), from the same prince, who twice attempted to regain it, but without suc-

(N) This was in 1664; in which year, we are told by Frazer, that Aureng Zib went against the Râjapûts; and that his son Soltân Mohammed Akber revolted from him, and joined them; that the king pursued him into Dekan; but that the prince found means to get by sea to Persia. Yet Gemelli says, this revolt happened in 1680; as will be observed afterwards.

(O) Shâh Sefi.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

cess. The first time it escaped, thro' the misunderstanding among the Persian Omrâs, at the court of the Great Mogol; for they behaved very slackly, and would not follow Râjah Rowsh, who had already planted his standard on the wall towards the mountain. The second time it was saved by the jealousy of Aureng Zib himself, who commanded at the siege: for after a large breach had been made in the wall by the cannon, which was served by English, Portugueses, Germans, and French, he would not enter it: that it might not be said to have been taken in the time of his brother Dara, who first proposed the siege, and was then at Kâbul, with his father Shâh Jehân.

Aureng
Zib's attempt.

THIS prince, a little before the war among his sons, would have besieged it the third time, had he not been diverted by Amîr Jemla, who persuaded him to turn his arms towards Dekân. In this he was seconded by Ali Merdân Khân himself; who, on that occasion, told him, that he could never expect to take it, unless he had another traitor there, such as he was. However, Aureng Zib prepared to make a new trial, as above-mentioned; urged thereto either by the offensive letters of the king of Persia, relating to his proceedings against his father and brothers, or by the ill treatment given by that monarch to his ambassador, Tarbîet Khân. But hearing of the king of Persia's death, he turned back; saying, as was reported, that he would not meddle with a child, a new king. This reason, however, our author does not think probable; because Shâh Soleymân, who succeeded his father, was, in his opinion, about twenty-five years of age^m.

BERNIER does not inform us what that treatment was which Shâh Abbâs II. gave to the Mogol's ambassador: but we have an account of it from another traveller, of the same time, who relates it in the following manner.

Mogol
ambassador,

SOME months before the death of Shâh Jehân, Aureng Zib sent an ambassador into Persia, who was magnificently received and caressed for a month: but on the day when he delivered the presents, the king divided them among the officers of his house, only keeping one diamond, which weighed sixty carats. A few days after, Shâh Abbâs sent for the ambassador, who, having dropp'd some expressions against Ali, his majesty asked him what his name was? He answered, that Shâh Jehân had given him that of Baubek Khân; that is, Lord of a free heart; and honoured him with one of the chief employments at court. Then thou art a villain, replied the king, with an angry countenance, to desert thy sovereign in his necessity, after thou hadst received so many favours from him, to serve a tyrant, who keeps his father in prison, and has murdered all his brothers. How dares he, continued the Persian, to take upon him the title of Alem Ghir, or, Conqueror of all the world, who never conquered any thing; but possesses all he has by treachery and parricide? Hast thou been one of those who counselled him to shed so much blood, to be the executioner of his brothers, and to keep his father in prison? Thou art not worthy to wear a beard: and with that, immediately ordered it to be shaved off; which is the greatest indignity that can be offered in that country. Soon after, he commanded the ambassador to return home; sending with him, for a present to Aureng Zib, 150 beautiful horses, with a great quantity of gold and silver carpets, and other stuff, to an immense value. But when Baubek Khân had given his master an account of the king of Persia's behaviour, Aureng Zib sent the horses into several parts of the city, and ordered to be proclaimed; that the followers of Ali could not ride those horses, without being unclean, as coming from a king who did not obey the true law. After which, he ordered them to be killed, and the rest of the presents to be burnt; uttering, at the same time, many reproachful words against the king of *Persia*ⁿ.

AFTER Aureng Zib had sat on the throne near seven years, his father, Shâh Jehân, died, on Sunday the 21st of January, 1666, in the castle of Agra, aged seventy-four solar years and sixteen days. His body was interred in the same city, in the magnificent monument which he caused to be erected for his empress Mehd Alîya, called also Tâje Mâhl, and which had cost him sixty laks, or 750,000 l. Aureng Zib was exceedingly affected at this news; on which he that instant set out from Dehli for Agra, where every thing was with pomp prepared for his reception by Begum Sâheb (or Jehân Ara Begum); who at his entrance into the harâm presented him with a great golden bason, wherein were all her jewels, as well as those of Shâh Jehân. In short, she received him in so magnificent a manner, and entertained him with so much dexterity, that she not only obtained his pardon, but also gained his favour, and even his confidence^o. He took her along with him, in his return to Jehân abad, or Dehli: but not long after she died; and every-body suspected that she had been taken-off by poison^p.

ⁿ TAVERNIER, Trav. part 2. l. 2. c. 7. ^o FRASER, Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 25. BERNIER, p. 174. ^p TAVERNIER, Trav. Ind. l. 2. c. 3. p. 114.

5. Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

S E C T. III.

Conquests, and other Transactions, to the Death of Aureng Zîb.

ALTHOUGH Aureng Zîb reigned so long in Hindûstân, yet we meet with very little, in either travellers, or other authors, relating to his reign, after the death of Shâh Jehân, in 1666; where Bernier leaves off his history, which has furnished materials to succeeding writers. We are even assured, that there is no history extant, but of the first thirteen years of that monarch's reign, from 1658 to 1671; he having forbidden, under severe penalties, any account of his actions from that time to be written, during his life (A). All therefore we can do, in this case, is to collect the few scattered passages to be found chiefly in travellers, to supply, in some measure, this deficiency.

Râjapûts
attacked

ABOUT the year 1678 Râjah Jesson seyn, who had been instrumental in raising Aureng Zîb to the throne, dying, that monarch demanded of his widow the treasure and territory belonging to her late husband: but she returned for answer, that she had no money, but store of swords. This attack upon the Rânna, or princess, brought all the Hindus into a confederacy with her: besides, Mohammed Amîr Khân, governor of Guzerât, who was son of Amîr Jemla, and her relation, was making parties for advancing to the throne one of the sons of Aureng Zîb, who was thus engaged on all sides in wars. This gave occasion to Seva ji to move towards Surât, while a neighbouring Râjah marched against Brâmpûr, whose governor the Great Mogol had sent for to join him with his troops. In 1679 Aureng Zîb made great preparations to attack the Râjapûts, who had revolted, as before-mentioned; but was for some time prevented by the rains, which were so heavy, that the tops of trees, near Surât, were under water (B). However, as soon as they were over, that monarch left Jehân abâd (or Dehli) with 10,000 men, to go against them. Mean time his eldest son,

(A) For this information we are beholden to Mr. Fraser, author of the history of Nadir Shâh.

(B) Our author, Fryer, tells us, p. 414. that this same year there fell a shower of blood, for 12 hours, within the land; and that on the coast (of Golkonda) Machlipatan (or Masulipâtan) was overwhelmed by an inundation, whereby 16,000 of the inhabitants perished.—It was almost depopulated by a plague, in 1687.

Soltân

Soltân Mahmûd, advanced to Brâmpûr, with a formidable army; for all which, Seva ji plundered the country in 1680. Aureng Zib continues a double poll-tax on the Hindûs, and breaks down all their images where-ever he finds them; so that, being forbidden to worship them in public, they retired to woods and caves to perform their devotions.

5 Khân Shâh Jehân.

A. D.
1680.

IN the midst of these combustions, the famous Seva ji died, on the 1st of June, the same year.

IN the interim Aureng Zib, jealous of his eldest son, sent by Aureng Zib him to the Jowalar, or post (T). He likewise recalled his second and third sons; Soltân Azem from his government of Bengâl, and Soltân Mauzm (U) from Aureng abâd: but, fearing to trust themselves in his power, they refused to resign them, and repair to court. This disobedience to his commands their father was then obliged to take no farther notice of, as he had been out twice this year with a numerous army against the Râspûts; who, retiring into the mountains, so fatigued the Mogols, and distressed them with want of provisions, that the king was forced to return without being able to engage them ⁹.

THE disaffection of his three eldest sons made Aureng Zib His sons more fond of his youngest, Soltân Akber, whom he intended for revolt. his successor; but forbore to nominate him, till he had executed his designs against the Râspûts; whom he intended to extirpate. To weaken the conspirators, he ordered Mohammed Amîr Khân, the governor of Guzerât, to join him. This lord, who was originally a Hindû, inclined to favour the Rânnâ, or widow of *Jessen Sing; and finding that the Mogol generals drew from her great sums of money, under pretence of sending it to court to make her peace with the emperor, yet at the same time took Cheytiâr, the capital city, by surprise, he acquainted Aureng Zib with their fraudulent practices. He likewise informed him, that Kâbul Khân, who was of his privy-council, held correspondence with Soltân Mauzm in Dukkân (or Dekan): but at the same time advised him to remit his severities against the Hindûs; alleging, that otherwise a general defection of them was to be apprehended.

THIS advice Aureng Zib did not relish: but, having soon The pagodas after seized letters from Kâbul Khân to Soltân Mauzm, urging destroyed.

⁹ FRYER'S Trav. p. 412, & seqq.

(T) Perhaps it should be to Gwalijâr, to drink the powit, or stupefying draught.

U/ Fryer calls one Assum, the other Mossum.

* Or Jessen Sing.

5 Khân
Shâh Je-
hân.

him to begin a rebellion while his father was in Azmîr, at war with the Rânnâ, he found it was best for the present to take it; and ordered the treacherous Khân to be thrown headlong from a steep rock, as a reward for his perfidy. Mean time, although the emperor was with-held from his design of reformation among his Hindû subjects, yet he gave orders to demolish all the temples and images in Azmîr and the country of Jessén Sing, which his army had subdued. In this devastation Cheyttâr suffered most; its magnificent marble structures being levelled with the ground. This city, which is impregnable by its situation, could never have been taken by force: but the Rânnâ, relying on the promises of the Mogol generals, neglected to provide the place with either men or ammunition; so that they who were in it on the enemy's approach, finding themselves unable to oppose them, retreated into the mountains, and left this fortress open to their arms. After this, whatever the cause was, the Mogol forces were withdrawn in the midst of their career against the infidels; and commissioners left behind with very friendly offers towards an accommodation: which gave room to conjecture, that Aureng Zib was smitten with the Râjah's widow, who was a very beautiful lady^r.

Soltân
Akber
rebels;
A. D.
1684.

THE next thi g of note which we meet with in this reign, is the rebellion of his favourite son Soltân Akber; who, we are told, was more ambitious than all the rest. This prince was sent (X) with an army of 30,000 men to make war on the Râjah Lifonte, who borders on the kingdom of Azmîr (Y): but

^r FRYER'S Trav. p. 416, & seqq.

(X) There is much disagreement among authors about the date of this event. According to Frazer, he revolted to the Râjputs in 1664; but, had that been so, Bernier, Tavernier, and Thevenot, would have mentioned it. Gemelli places this revolt in 1680: but in that year Fryer says he was in great favour. Captain Hamilton, vol. i. p. 245, puts it about 1685. In this case Frazer must have mistaken 64 for 84. In effect, it must have been rather after than before 1684; since Gemelli says Aureng Zib had in 1695 been four years at Gulgalâ, after the defeat of Akber; whom he saw at Ispahân in 1694.

(Y) Hamilton says, that Aureng Zib was then in Dekan against Seva ji; but could not reduce him; because Akber had a friendship for that Râjah, and still betrayed his father's designs. Also that the king having drawn Seva ji to his camp, with design to cut him off, Akber gave him notice, and he fled by night. The king, suspecting his son, sent him a rich vest, but poisoned; whereupon Akber fled to Dandî Râjapûr, and thence to Maskât

but instead of subduing, he was prevailed on to join him : 6. Klân after which they both marched with their forces, consisting of Aureng Zib. 70,000 horse and a competent number of foot, most of them Râjpûts, and entered Azmîr, where his father then was ; who could hardly believe the thing real. Here, whilst the prince rested his army, much fatigued with the long march, the crafty old man, not having force sufficient to oppose him, had recourse to stratagem. He therefore wrote letters, directed to his son, in which he commended his conduct in drawing the idolaters to that place to be cut-off, as had been agreed ; and promised to advance the next day, and put that design in execution. This letter he sent by a trusty eunuch into the enemy's camp, with orders to behave so, that he might be seized as a spy, and the letter intercepted. The thing was managed accordingly, and had the desired effect : for, although Akber swore on the Korân that it was a contrivance of his father's to divide them, the Hindû chiefs would never believe him. These jealousies kept them so long employed, that Aureng Zib had time to call Shâh Alem, with a powerful army : who defeated both the Râjah and Akber.

AKBER after this put himself, with 4000 horse, under flies to the protection of Râjah Samba (Z) : but Aureng Zib attacked Persia. him so vigorously, that at length he took him prisoner, and caused his head to be cut-off, for having uttered some indecent expressions in his presence. This Râjah's ruin was owing to his drunkenness : for, though the centinels twice gave him notice, while he was drinking in his tent with his women dancers, that the Mogol army was advancing, instead of going to arms, he ordered their heads to be cut off ; saying, " the enemy would not dare to come where he was." His son, who was not so far gone in liquor, escaped with one thousand horse, leaving his father behind ; who soon smarted for his folly and intemperance.

As for Akber, he got away to Goa, and from thence was conveyed to Ormûz (A). Notice of his arrival being sent to Shâh Suleymân, this prince had him conducted to Ispâhân, Maskât in Arabia. New Account of East-India, vol. i. p. 245, & seq.

(Z) Samba Râjah, according to Fryer, was brother to Sevaji. See his Travels, p. 169, 171 ; but, p. 79, we find a son of that name, who succeeded his father in 1680. P. 415.

(A) According to Captain Hamilton, he went to Maskât ; where Messieurs Bondal and Stephens, two English gentlemen, provided him a vessel to carry him to Persia ; and soon after his arrival, he was married to the king's sister. Ibid. p. 245.

6. Khân
Aureng
Zib.

English at Bombay

make war, and submit.

and allowed him a pension suitable to his quality. Aureng Zib tried several arts to draw him out of Persia; but Akber was too wise to trust him. He likewise made war on Seva ji (B), for assisting that prince; and, after taking several towns, besieged him in his capital, called Jinji (C). This place is seated amidst seven mountains, with each a fort at top, which may be relieved in spite of the Mogols, who lay before them with 60,000 horse and foot, to little purpose. When Gemelli left India, the siege had lasted seven years¹.

IN 1688, Sir John Child, governor of Bombay, pretending grievances, gave in articles to the governor of Surât; and, not meeting with the redress which he expected, resolved to indemnify himself by taking the India merchant ships. In January 1689 he left Surât, and in his way to Bombay seized a fleet of vessels, carrying corn to an army of the Great Mogol's, which lay at Dunder Râjahpûr, fourteen leagues to the southward. Hereupon Sedi Yakûb, the general, sent twice to the governor, in a very civil manner, to desire that he would discharge his fleet: but Sir John returning an insolent answer both times, Sedi Yakûb, on February 14th, landed 20,000 men, and soon took the whole island, excepting the fort; which he began to press upon. So that, in December, the governor sent two deputies to Jehân abâd, to beg pardon of Aureng Zib, and desire a new Firmân; which, in June 1690, the 31st of his reign, was granted, on condition that the governor should leave India in nine months (but he died in January), and satisfaction be made to his subjects, for debts due, and damages received. This was an argument of that monarch's pacific and forgiving disposition, as his granting a Firmân to Mr. Boucher, an English merchant; to secure him against the implacable malice and wicked persecution of the governor, was of his justice and humanity. Not long after, he received a new insult from Captain Every (or Avery), an English pirate, who took and plundered a great ship of his called the Gunfway; on which occasion our author Captain Hamilton, and Mr. Vauz (judge of Bombay), were made prisoners at Surât, in 1696¹.

ABOUT

¹ GEMELLI Trav. ap. Churchill's Collect. vol. iv. p. 232.
² HAMILTON'S New Account East-Indies, vol. i. p. 200, 218, & seqq.

(B) If this was so, Akber's revolt could be neither in 1684 nor 1680; for Seva ji died in June this last year, and Akber was in favour at Jehân abâd.

There must be some mistake either in the Râjahs, or their names.

(C) We know of no place in Seva ji's country of this name.

Jeneah,

WE should have been glad to conclude the reign of Aureng Zib with an account of his conquest over the two kingdoms of Viziapûr and Golkonda; which he had long resolved upon, and often attempted without success. But of these great events authors barely make mention, without so much as noting the year wherein they happened (D). It should seem from one writer, that, in the year 1695, Golkonda was in the hands of its own prince; for that, the next year, advice arrived at Batavia, that the inhabitants were under much uneasiness, for fear of the Great Mogol; who, having conquered Viziapûr (E), was marching to attack that kingdom⁶. But the truth is, that the capital of Golkonda was taken in 1687*.

6. Khân Aureng Zib.

Viziapûr and Golkonda conquered.

AURENG ZIB died at Ahmednâgar, in the province of Aureng Dowlet abâd, the 21st of February 1707, after he had lived ninety lunar years, fourteen days, and reigned about fifty. He left a short will, in which he recommends the division of his dominions to his sons, as the way to prevent much bloodshed. He told them, that whoever settled in Agra might have the province thereof, with Dekkan, Mâlwa, and Guzerât; and that he who resided at Dehli might have Kâbul, and the other provinces: but assigned neither part to any of them; only he ordered all his servants to be faithful to Mohammed Azem Shâh, his third son, who was then with him, Mauzum being at Kâbul; and recommended to such of his fortunate children as should chance to rule the empire, not to molest Mohammed Kam Bukhsb, his youngest son, in case he rested content with the two new Sâbahs, or governments, meaning those of Vijapûr, and Hayder abâd, or Golkonda, which were lately conquered. He likewise ordered, that he should be buried in the place of Shâh Zeyno'ddîn, a Darwîsh, reputed holy, near the city where he died, without any pomp: and that only a tomb should be made for his corps, after the manner of the Dar-

Aureng Zib dies.

His will.

* See BRAEMN's report ap. rec. des voy. de la com. p. 155.

* See the Hist. of Golkonda, book x. ch. 4. sect. 2.

Jeneab, on the borders, comes nearest it. Rari was his residence in 1678, when Fryer was in India.

(D) This is the case both of Gemelli and Frazer; who only say, that he added those kingdoms to his empire. Only Gemelli says Viziapûr was subdued in 1685, Golkonda is now reduced into a province, under the name of Heyder abâd; which is the Persian name for Baghnagar, the capital city.

(E) Viziapûr must then have been conquered in or about 1695. But Gemelli, who saw Aureng Zib encamped in that kingdom with a vast army, the same year, speaks of the conquest as made nine years before. Which must have been the case.

6. Khân wishes, which is plain, and without any ornament (F). As Aureng this prince was very zealous for Mohammedism, those of the Zib. religion make a great merit of visiting his tomb, especially on the 28th of the month Zilkaadeh, which was the day he died on *.

His person, A CERTAIN traveller, who, in 1695, made a journey from Goa to the camp of Aureng Zib, then at Galgala in Viziapûr, and had an audience of him, gives the following account of his person. He was of a low stature, with a large nose, slender, and stooping with age. He walked leaning on a staff forked at the top, yet endorsed petitions without spectacles; and, by his chearful smiling countenance, seemed pleased with doing business in the public audience. His beard was white, and his complexion olive-coloured †.

and cha- AURENG ZIB laboured to gain the reputation of beacter. ing a strict observer of the Koran, and a lover of justice.
 He had so disposed of his time, that he could scarce ever be said to be idle. Some days in the week he bathed, before sun-rise:
 then, having prayed, he broke his fast. After that he spent two hours with his secretaries, and then gave public audience before noon. From thence he went to prayers again. This done he dined; and soon after gave audience a second time.
 Then followed the third and fourth time of prayer. He was next employed in the affairs of his family till two hours after it was dark: then he supped, and slept only two hours: after which he took the Koran, and read till break of day. This account was given our author by several eunuchs of the court; who, knowing their prince was skilled in necromancy (says Gemelli, no less superstitious than the eunuchs), believed he was assisted by the devil in that painful course of life; or could not have undergone so much fatigue in his old-age.
 Yet his diet was nothing but herbs and pulse.

His mild- AFTER Aureng Zib had prescribed to himself this sort of ness: life, he ceased to be bloody; and grew so mild, that the governors and Omrâs, depending on his clemency, neglected to pay him the obedience which they owed him. Hence the poor became oppressed by the great: for the king, when advited to be less merciful to those who transgressed his commands, answered, that heaven would punish them. The ge-nerality imputed this to his sanctity; but our author judged,

* FRASER, ubi sup. p. 33, & seqq.
 sup. p. 222.

† GEMELLI, ubi

(F) He left by his will 1000 distributed among the poor, at rupis (or 125 pounds), to be his funeral.

that he connived at the faults of his ministers to attach them to him, and make them averse to a change.

HOWEVER, he did not, when young, give himself up to sensual pleasures, as his predecessors had done; keeping a numerous haram of women for ostentation rather than use, Nor was his table maintained out of the revenue of the crown. He said, the food was not good which cost the sweat of the subjects: but that every man ought to work for his living. For this reason he made caps, which he sent in presents to his governors; who, in return for the honour, remitted by the messengers several thousand rupis. When our author was in Hindustân, his decrepid age having rendered him unable to work, he had reserved the revenue of four cities for his table. His expences were but small; for a vest of his did not cost above eight rupis (or twenty shillings); his sash, and chira, or cap, still less. He left in his private treasury 57,382 rupis (or 7172 l. 15 s.) as appears by his will.

AURENG ZIB, when he became emperor, assumed the titles of Mohio'ddin, that is, the reviver of religion; and Alem Ghîr, the conqueror of the world. Gemelli says, he took the name of Alem Ghîr, in a belief that he possessed three parts in four of it. For this reason he carried a golden globe as his ensign, and had it in his seal. He likewise always tore off one corner of the paper he wrote on, to signify that the fourth part of the world was not his^b.

THE revenues of the empire were greatly increased in this prince's time: for, excluding Balkh, Kandahâr, and Biddukhsân, which Shâh Jehân possessed, and were afterwards lost, the remaining twenty-one provinces, reckoning the two new conquests, yielded a revenue of 12,071,876,840 dams, which (at 320 dams to a pound sterling) make 37,724,615 l. 10 s. 0 d. (G).

AURENG ZIB had five sons; first, Soltân Mohammed, Soltân or Mahmûd, as most authors call him. He was several times confined by his father's order; and once or twice imprisoned in Gwaliyâr; where it is reported by some that he died by drinking the powst^c: but we are told by a certain author, supr. p. 29. ^b GEMELLI, ubi supr.

^a GEMELLI, ibid. p. 230, l. ii. c. 4.

^c FRASER, ubi
FRASER, p.

(G) Gemelli makes the revenue eighty kros of rupis, every krôr containing ten millions: by which account it will amount to one hundred millions. See his Voyage round the world, l. ii. ch. 6. ap. Church. Collect. vol. iv. p. 234.

6. Khân
Aureng
Zib.

that, aiming at the crown, he proceeded so openly towards taking away his father's life, that, to prevent him, he caused him to be poisoned one day, when he went a hunting: and, mistrusting that he was not really dead, when he was brought to the palace, he, to be sure, commanded a red-hot iron to be run into his leg from the sole of his foot to his knee.

Moham-
med
Mauzm.

MOHAMMED Mauzm, or, as Gemelli calls him, Shâh Alem (H), the second son, by the death of Mahmûd had the right of eldest, and entertained the same thoughts of destroying his father. With this design he once caused a great trench to be dug near Aureng Zib's tent, that he might fall into it, as he passed along: but, the plot being discovered by an eunuch, Shâh Alem was shut-up in a dark prison; where, though sixty years of age, he remained six years; till a few days before our author arrived at the Mogol's camp in Vizia-pûr, which was in March 1695. Yet, on account of his title by birth to the crown, many thousands of the soldiers were of his party, and even when he was in prison, continued firm; nor would receive any other pay, although he relieved them but meanly. He was at that time tall and corpulent, with a thick long beard, which began to be grey, being then sixty-five years of age. He succeeded Aureng Zib.

Moham-
med
Azem.

MOHAMMED Azem, or Azem Shâh, third son of Aureng Zib, played his game also in plotting against his father, with the king of Vizia-pûr, his kinsman, before he was taken, and lost his dominions. Azem Shâh was fifty-five years old in 1695. Aureng Zib appointed him his successor; but his brother Shâh Alem deprived him of the crown and life.

Moham-
med
Akber.

MOHAMMED Akber, or Soltân Akber, the fourth son, was the prince whom Aureng Zib was most fond of, and designed for the throne: but his father's indulgence could not restrain him, more than the rest, from seeking the empire before his death by rebellion; as hath been already related, with his flight to Persia, from whence he never returned to Hindûstân. In 1695 he was forty-five years of age.

Moham-
med
Kam-
bukhsh.

AURENG Zib's youngest son was Mohammed Kam-bukhsh (I). Gemelli, who calls him Sekânder, says, he was about thirty in 1695, and infected with ambition, like the rest of his brothers: for this reason, though after the conquest of Vizia-pur the emperor had no enemy left more

(H) This shews, that Soltân Mauzm took the name of Shâh Alem many years before he ascended the throne, as Shâh Jehân had done before.

(I) That is, the giver of desires, or wishes. Frajer.

considerable considerable than Seva ji, yet, fearing the designs of his sons, he had kept the field for fifteen years together ^d.

7. Khân Koth-bo'ddîn.

C H A P. IX.

Containing the Reigns of the Emperors, Koth-bo'ddîn, Bahâdr Shâh, Jehândâr Shâh, Mohammed Furrukshîr, and Rafîya al Derjâl.

S E C T I.

Reign of Kothbo'ddîn Bahâdr Shâh.

UPON Aureng Zib's death, Mohammed Azem Shâh (A) ^{Wins the crown} set out from Dekkan, with his father's troops, towards the capital, to take possession of the empire, according to his father's destination: but Mohammed Mauzm, as the eldest brother, resolved to dispute the title with him; and therefore, about the same time, departed from Kâbul with another army, in order to decide the controversy by a battle. The two princes met with their forces on the banks of the river Chun (or Jemni), near Agra. They were the most numerous which for several ages had come together in India; Mohammed Mauzm having had with him 150,000 horse and 178,000 foot, exclusive of the auxiliaries furnished by the Râjahs, and his brother nigh as many. In short, after an obstinate battle, Azem Shâh's forces were defeated, and himself slain. Hereupon Mohammed Mauzm was proclaimed emperor, and assumed the title of Kothbo'ddîn Bahâdr Shâh, and Shâh Alem (B).

THIS prince at his accession made Mohammed Khân his ^{from his brothers.} Wazîr; Zulfekar Khân, his Mîr Bukhshî, or paymaster-general; Darwâd Khân, Soubahdâr, or lord-lieutenant, of the provinces of Dekkan; and Affûd Khân absolute agent. Then, leaving this latter to take care of the capital, he marched against his brother Kam Bukhsh, who had left Vijapûr (or Viziapûr), and

^d GEMELLI, ubi sup. p. 220, & seqq. 231, & seqq.

(A) Azem Shâh signifies the great or glorious king. This prince was then, according to Gemelli, reckoned sixty-seven years old.

(B) Or, as it may be now pronounced in the Indies, Shâh Alûm, which signifies king of the world. According to Gemelli, he went by this name or title many years before; it being customary for the princes to change their names on certain occasions. Bahâdr Shâh signifies the valiant king, and Koth-bo'ddîn, the axis of religion. He was, according to Gemelli's account, seventy-seven years old.

8. Khân settled at Hayder abad (C). There, after some small resistance, Jehândâr. he was taken prisoner, and died the same night of the wounds which he had received in the fight.

Their sons. B A H A D R Shâh, having thus removed all obstructions out of his way, returned to his metropolis; and from thence went to Labûr, to suppress some religious riots: shortly after which he died, when he had reigned about six years. This emperor had four sons: Mauzo'ddin, called also Jehândâr Shâh (D); Mohammed Azim, or Azim al Shân (E); Raffiya al Kadr, or Raffiya al Shân (F); Khojesta Akhter, or Jehân Shâh (G).

SOLTAN Mohammed Azem had two sons; Mohammed Bîdâr Bukht (H), and Mohammed Wâllâ Jâh (I).

SOLTAN Mohammed Kam Bukhsh had one son; Jesdân Bukhsh, called also Rahmân Bukhsh (K); whose daughter was married to Nafr Allah Mirzâ (L), son of Nadir Shâh, or Tahmasp Kûli Khân ².

S E C T. II.

Reign of Jehândâr Shâh.

His success.

ON the death of Bahâdr Shâh, Azim al Shân gathered a powerful army: to oppose which, and prevent his possessing the empire, his three brothers, Jehândâr Shâh, Raffiya al Shân, and Jehân Shâh, joined their forces to oppose him. The two armies at length coming to an engagement, Azim al Shân was defeated and slain. The confederate brothers after this could not agree about the partition of the empire: and, during the contest, the treasure of the deceased prince fell into the hands of Zulfekar Khân, who was in Jehândâr Shâh's interest. As this accession of wealth greatly augmented his power, he marched against his two remaining

* FRASER'S Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 39, & seqq.

(C) Formerly called Bâgnâgar, the capital city of Golkondâ.

(D) Mauzo'ddin signifies the honour or glory of religion; Jehândâr Shâh, the king who possesses the world. Frazer.

(E) Mohammed Azim, Mohammed the Great; Azim al Shân, of great figure, or rank. Frazer.

(F) Raffiya al Kadr, of exalted power; Raffiya al Shân, of exalted rank.

(G) Khojesta Akhter, of happy stars; Jehân Shâh, king of the world.

(H) Bîdâr Bukht, whose fortune is awake. Frazer.

(I) Wâllâ Jâh, of august rank.

(K) Jesdân Bukhsh, God's gift; Rahman Bukhsh, the gift of the merciful. Frazer.

(L) Nafr Alla, assisted by God. Frazer.

brothers;

brothers ; and, having overcome their forces, took and put them both to death. The destruction of his brothers secured the empire to Jehândâr Shâh, and Zulfehar Khân became his med.
Wazîr.

HE was a weak prince, and so foolishly fond of one of his wives, named Lal Koar, who was of an obscure parentage, and a singer by profession, that he endeavoured to fill the places of greatest trust and honour in the empire with her mean relations. This misconduct so disgusted Seyd Abdallah Khân and Seyd Hassan Khân, two brothers, who were of great authority, and had a choice body of troops at their command, that they resolved to place Mohammed Furrukhsîr (M), son of Azîm al Shân, on the throne. This prince, who was then in Bengâl, notwithstanding he had but little treasure, got numbers of people to join his party, with whom he marched to dethrone the emperor. At first he met and defeated Eazo'ddîn, son of Jehândâr Shâh. After which he proceeded against Jehândâr Shâh himself : who, through the treachery and cowardice of his troops, was defeated near Agra, and obliged to fly, although he had near 100,000 horse and foot.

JEHANDAR Shâh had one son, Eazo'ddîn.

AZIM al Shân had one son, Mohammed Furruksîr.

RAFIYA al Shân had three sons ; Rafîya al Derjât (O), Rafîya al Dowlat (P), and Soltân Ibrâhîm.

JEHAN had one son, Mohammed Shâh, who was the late emperor of Hindûstân^b.

S E C T. III.

Reign of Mohammed Furrukhsîr.

MOHAMMED Furrukhsîr, son of Azîm al Shân, being settled on the throne, Seyd Abdollah Khân was made Wazîr, with the title of Kothb al Mulluk, and Jâr ba wafâ (Q). Hassan Ali Khân was appointed Mîr Bukhshi, or paymaster-general, with the title of Amîr al Omrâ (R). As these two

^b FRASER'S Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 41, & seqq.

(M) Farruksîr (or Farroksîr) signifies of happy disposition. Fraser.

(N) Eazo'ddîn (or Azzo'ddîn) signifies the glory of religion. Fraser.

(O) Rafîya al Derjât, of exalted degree.

(P) Rafîya al Dowlat, of exalted fortune. Fraser.

(Q) Kothb al Mulluk, the axis of the empire ; Jâr ba Wafâ, the grateful friend. Fraser.

(R) The prince of princes, or commander of commanders. Fraser.

brothers,

10. Khân brothers usurped the absolute management of all affairs, the Rasîya al Derjât emperor found himself in effect only so in name, while these ministers had the whole power in their own hands. Furrukhsâr, ill brooking the condition of a nominal sovereign, at length, by the advice of Khândoran and Mir Jumla, began to contrive means how to get rid of such assuming subjects. The two brothers, on the other hand, were intent on nothing so much as enriching themselves. They turned out Nizâm al Mulluk (S), son of Gâzi'uddin Khân (T), from his government of Dekkân, and Hajjân Ali Khân went thither himself. At last, the two brothers, finding that the emperor grew jealous of their power, resolved to dethrone him, and place a more passive prince in his room.

dethrone and murder him ;

To accomplish their design the more effectually, they endeavoured to draw into their measures Ajît Sang, the Mâha Râjah ; who, although his daughter was married to Furrukhsâr, joined in the conspiracy. Having seized the emperor's person, they first confined, and shortly after blinded him, by drawing a red-hot wire over his eyes. At length, on the 16th of February, 1719, after offering him a thousand indignities, they put him to death, when he had reigned seven years. It was in this emperor's time that the English East-India company obtained a Firmân (U), exempting them from paying any duties within his dominions^c.

S E C T. IV.

Reign of Rasîya al Derjât.

also his successor.

THE Seyds, after they had made away with Furrukhsâr, took Rasîya al Derjât, son of Rasîya al Shân I. out of the castle of Selîmgur, where the royal family are confined, and placed him on the throne. But he had not reigned above three months before they murdered him also : and, sending for his brother, advanced him to the empire.

^c FRASER'S Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 43, & seqq.

(S) A title, signifying he who arranges and puts in order the empire. His first name was Chin Kulij Khân, which, in the Tatar language, signifies the favour-drawing lord. Some corruptly pronounce Chullai Kawn. He has a son named Gâzi'uddin, who has lately gotten the title of Nâsir Jing, victorious in war.

(T) The champion of religion.

(U) It signifies, literally, an order ; but is used for a patent or grant from the emperor. Mr. Fraser has inserted a translation of this Firmân, with an explanation of the terms.

S E C T.

S E C T. V.

Reign of Rafi'ya al Dowlet.

11. Khân
Rafi'ya al
Dowlet.

THIS prince, after the murder of his brother, was by the assassins proclaimed with the usual solemnity; but in a few days after he died a natural death, and was succeeded by the late emperor ^d.

C H A P. X.

The Reign of Nasro'ddîn Mohammed Shâh, 12th Emperor.

S E C T. I.

Affairs at Court till the Invasion of Nadir Shâh.

MOHAMMED Shâh, who was the son of Jehân Shâh, 12. Khân on his advancement to the throne, assumed the title of Nasro'ddîn; that is, the supporter or assister of religion. But Mohammed Shâh. the Seyds, who had raised him to that dignity, allowed him no more of the imperial power than they had done to his cousin Furrukhsîr; which made him eagerly wish for an opportunity of making himself independent, and revenge the death of that prince. Nor was he long without accomplishing his desires. For, in October 1720, Mohammed Shâh, accompanied by Hassan Ali Khân and several other Omrâs, set out from Agra, with a numerous army, under pretence to reduce Nesâm al Muluk, who had grown very powerful in Dekkan. At the end of the first day's march, being nine measured kos from the capital, the emperor (as it had been concerted) called a Diwân, or council; and, after a short stay, withdrew. As soon as he was gone, Mohammed Amîn Khân (A), Heydr Kûli Khân (B), master of the ordnance, Khândoran; and several other Omrâs, who were most attached to the royal family, drawing their swords, fell on Hassan Ali Khân, and killed him, with two or three of his friends. One brother slain,

UPON this event, Mohammed Shâh laid aside the expedition to Dekkan, and returned towards Dehli, in order to cut-off the other taken;

^d FRASER'S Hist. Nadir Shâh, p. 54.

(A) The faithful Khân.

Mortîsa, son-in law of Mohammed;

(B) Heydr Kûli signifies the slave of the lion; meaning Ali the appellation of Heydr.

12. Khân
Moham-
medShâh.

Seyd Abdollah Khân, the other brother, who was in that capital, with a great force. This minister, as soon as he heard of Hassan Ali Khân's murder, took out of prison Soltân Ibrâhim, son of Rasfiya al Shân, and proclaimed him emperor. Then, having gathered what treasure he could, and broken to pieces the famous throne, which cost Shâh Jehân eleven millions two hundred and fifty thousand pounds, in order to pay his soldiers, he soon completed an army of 50,000 horse, and advanced to meet the emperor, who had encamped at Serkad, which is twelve kos from Mhetra. On the second of November 1720, both armies came to an engagement; and after a bloody battle fought, Abdollah's forces were not only defeated, but the young Soltân and himself taken prisoners. The latter was desperately wounded, and the former had no other punishment inflicted on him than being sent back to his old quarters, the castle of Selîmgur^a.

but is spared,

UPON this victory the emperor made great rejoicings: and, appointing Mohammed Amîn Khân Wazîr, returned to Debli. There, Abdollah Khân being brought before him, he said, "Traitor, see what thou hast done." To which the other answer'd; "I took you out of prison, and gave you an empire. As I was at the head of an army when my brother was murdered by your order, self-preservation directed me to make use of it. Providence decreed you the victory: use it as you think proper, by treating this clay as your resentment or interest may prompt you." Then the emperor asking him, "What harm had Farrukhsîr done him?" his reply was, "that he grew jealous of his and his brother's power; and that, as it was inconsistent with their interest to resign it into his hands, they thought it dangerous to lose any time in removing him." He added, "that if providence had permitted them to continue acting with the same prudence, they should not have come to such a tragical end." The emperor then ordered him to be confined, and four servants allowed to attend him.

and well treated.

HIS clemency to this usurper extended still farther; for Furrukhsîr's mother having desired that the murderer of her son might be delivered to her; he sent her word, that it was unlawful to put two persons to death for the murder of one, and that Hassan ali Khân had been killed in retaliation. He then ordered, that Abdollah Khân should lodge in the palace of Afsef al Dowlet, have a pension of 3000 rupis monthly, thirty household servants, and seventy menial ones, with provisions of all kinds from the royal kitchen; five women to attend him, and proper guards over him. But the Khân did not live long to enjoy this generous allowance; for he died a few months after of his wounds. Forty-five women, most of them his wives and concubines, and some his near relations, burned (C) themselves in one room, the night after his decease.

^a FRASER, ubi supr. p. 54. & seqq.

12. Khân
Moham-
med Shâh.

AETER the fall of the two brothers, Heydr Kâli Khân was in great favour, and afterwards made Sowbahdâr, or lord-lieutenant, of Ahmed abad. Nousrit Ear Khân was made Sowbahdâr of Ajmîr (or Azmîr); Sîr Bullind Khân was sent for from Kâbul to be made one of the Wazîrs; and Khândorân was made Mîr Bukhshî, or paymaster-general and treasurer, with the title of Amîr al Omra.

Promotions.

In the year 1721-2, the emperor wrote to Nezâm al Mulk, then in Dekkan; desiring him to repair to court, and take on him the office of Wazîr. But this lord, after mentioning the designs of the late Seyds against him, declined that post, under pretence that he was not equal to it: upon which it was conferred on Mohammed Amîn Khân, and after his death on Kamrêddîn Khân, his son; who still enjoyed it in 1741. Nezâm continued in Dekkan, as Subahdâr of Vijapûr, Heydr abad, Aureng abad, and other provinces, yet made no remittances to court; but appropriated the revenues to maintain an army, which he said was to keep in awe the Mâharâttas, or Ganims, the Sahow Râjah's subjects (D), in Dekkan; whom, notwithstanding, he permitted to ravage several of the king's provinces. They imposed a tribute of one

*Nizâm al
Molk*

(C) In antient times, none but the wives of the Brahmins had the privilege of burning themselves: but, since the government passed from them to the Râjpûts, it is customary, when any of their princes dies, for one or more of his wives to be burned with him; but there is no compulsion in the case. Lately the Seyd and Pâtan families, in several parts of India, have, through excessive pride, gotten into the custom: and as it is strictly forbidden by their religion, which is the Mohammedan, they do it privately, by setting an apartment on fire about their ears. Frazer.

keeps his court at Settara in Dekkan, is a descendant of Sewa Râjah, otherwise Sewa ji. He has lately taken the island of Salfet, the castle and town of Bagaim, with other places, from the Portugueses. He has above 200,000 horse in his dominions. Frazer's hist. of Nadir Shâh, p. 33. This seems to be the same prince, who, in Downing's history of the Indian wars, is called the Grand Scdey (or Seyd), from whom Angria took several territories along the sea-coast; and at length made an alliance with him, by marrying his daughter. The same author calls the subjects of that prince Sedeys, or Ganims, p. 232, and elsewhere.

fourth

(D) The Sahow Râjah, who

12. Khân fourth of the revenues (which they call chot) in many places, and some parts they have taken intirely to themselves. He well knew, that, with the assistance of the Mâharâttas, he could defy any attempts which might be made against him by the court ^b.

invited to
court.

THUS things went on for some time: but as the affairs of the empire grew daily worse, through the indolence of the Wazîr, Mohammed Shâh resolved to send again for Nezâm al Muluk, who had been one of Aureng Zib's old Amîrs, and was a person of great experience. Accordingly, orders being issued out for his appearance at Dehli, he left his son Gâzi'o'd-dîn Khân to command in Dekkan, and came to court. There he met with a gracious reception from the emperor; who made him absolute agent, which is greater than Wazîr, and honoured him with the title of Afif Jah (E). But as Mohammed Shâh was intirely governed by Khândorân, the paymaster-general, and Nezâm was for settling affairs on the same footing they were in Aureng Zib's time, whatever he required on that score was opposed and laughed at by the Omrâs. As by this he perceived the weakness of the emperor, and the dissoluteness of the courtiers, who spent their time in the company of loose women and buffoons, he told his majesty the affairs of his province required his presence, and left the court.

The Mâ-
harâttas

ON his arrival in Dekkan, resolving to rouse the emperor and those about him out of their indolence, he encouraged Râjah Sahow to send his general, Bajîraw, to ravage the empire. The Mâharâttas soon over-ran the province of Mâlwa, killed the governor Guerdir Bahâdr; and, seizing all his riches, returned to Dekkan. As the court took no notice of these inroads, next year they entered Guzerât, and plundered the inhabitants, although they agreed to pay a quarter part of the revenue. From thence they went and harrassed the country round Gwaliyâr; which being near the capital, the court was alarmed, and Kâhndorân, Kamro'd-dîn Khân, and other Omrâs, sent with a powerful army to chastise them: but these great officers, judging peace the safest measure, agreed to pay the chot, or quarter part, and returned home. Notwithstanding this, when the money was paid, the Mâharâttas not only plundered the redeemed places, but resolved to proceed as far as Agra; there to receive the shot for Dehli. This obliged the above-mentioned officers to march back to Agra; but, a little before they arrived, the enemy had crossed the river Jemna, with an intent to enter Awdih ^c.

^b FRASER, ubi supr. p. 57, & seqq.

(E) That is, in place and rank as Afif; who they say was Solomon's Wazîr. Frazer.

12. Khân
Moham-
med Shâh.

SAADIT Khân, governor of that province, having notice of their design, marched against them with a strong body of troops; and, after an obstinate engagement, defeated them, took two of their principal officers, and killed 5000 of their men. With the remains of their army, they advanced to Ferid abâd, ten kos from Dehli: upon which, Khândorân and the Wazîr, being joined by Saadit Khân, went in pursuit of them. But the Mâharâttas had left that place three hours before the Omrâs arrived, and proceeded to Kâlka, near that capital; where they stripped the inhabitants of all their effects; and, knowing that Dehli had but few forces therein, they intended to plunder it. On this advice, the emperor sent Amîr Khân and Hassan Khân to oppose them: but, after an engagement of some hours, Hassan Khân was killed, and the army being almost routed, the Mâharâttas were on the point of entering the city; when the Wazîr, who had out-marched the other two Omrâs, came to his assistance, and put the enemy to flight. Not content with that, he pursued them for seven kos from Dehli, and came up with them: yet, having no inclination to fight, secretly made up matters: upon which they marched back to Dekkan.

advance to Dehli.

THE emperor fearing always to be troubled with these incursions of the Ganims, while Nezâm al Muluk continued in Dekkan, in 1638, got Mehr Parvir, his grandmother, who had great interest with that lord, to write him a letter; promising him the intire management of affairs, provided he would come forthwith to court. Nezâm complied with her request: but met with worse treatment than before from the Omrâs, who took all opportunities of affronting him; especially Khândorân, and his creatures, who used to ridicule him when he came to court; saying, Observe how the Dekkan monkey dances. This usage having wrought him up to the highest pitch of resentment, he resolved to be revenged of Khândorân and his party, though by distressing the empire. Not being able to draw the Wazîr Kamroddin Khân, tho' allied by marriage (F), into his plot, he prevailed with Saadit Khân, Sowbahdâr of Awdih, who ever since the scan-

Nizâm's
conspiracy.

^c FRASER, ubi supr. p. 62, & seqq.

(F) Nizâm's son was married the Wazîr's son to Nizâm's daughter, and daughter.

12. Khân dalous peace made with the Mâharâttas, stood disaffected to the court; and the method they resolved on, was to call in Nâdir Shâh, ruler of Persia, who was then repairing and fortifying Kandahâr; which, during the confusion at the Great Mogol's court, he had subdued ^d.

S E C T. II.

The Conquest of Hindûstân by Nâdir Shâh, and Confinement of the Emperor.

Nâdir Shâh's invited:

THE conspirators having removed the difficulties which Nâdir Shâh urged in his answer to their letters, and promised to make every thing easy to him; that hero set-out with an army of 125,000 horse, of several nations, all inured to hardships. Mean time, Nezâm al Muhuk and Saadit Khân used all their endeavours secretly to promote their design; and as Sherzib Khân, governor of the castle (G) of Kâbul, Nazîr Khân, Sowbahdâr of that province, a creature of Khândorân's, and Zakarîya Khân, ruler of the province of Lahûr, were the chief obstructions in Nâdir Shâh's way, they wrote to inform them, "that, as the emperor and his favourite courtiers employed their time in nothing but wine and women, they could have no assistance from court; and therefore the best that they could do, was on this occasion to act discretely, and save themselves." These letters had the desired effect with the two latter. So that Nazîr Khân, finding that Nâdir Shâh, after he had taken Ghorbund and Ghoznavi (H), was marching to Kâbul, retired from thence to Peyshbur: but Sherzib Khân defended both city and castle for six weeks. He sent repeatedly to Nazîr Khân, and the court, for assistance; but none coming, both were at length, in June, taken by storm, and he, with his son, put to death. The victor here found treasures of great value; which had been laid up in vaults ever since the time of Soltân Bâbr.

^d FRASER, ubi sup. p. 66, & seqq.

(G) There are always two governors; one, called Hakem, to command the city; the other Kullehdâr, who commands the castle, and is generally for life; but must never stir out of it. Fraser.

(H) Or Gâznâ, a famous city between Kandahâr and Hindûstân, once the capital of a dynasty, or monarchs, who took from it the name of Gâzni, and Gâznavi.

THIS great success startling the court, the emperor ordered every thing to be gotten ready for taking the field : but as Râjah Jessing had informed Khândorân, that Nâdir Shâh's invasion was a concerted thing, that Omrâ advised Mohammed Shâh not to leave the capital. However, it was at last agreed, that his majesty should accompany the army to Labûr; and that from thence it should proceed towards Kâbul, under the command of Nizâm al Muluk, and the other two Omrâs. But, when all things were ready for setting out, Khândorân, to every body's surprize, returned to the palace, and delayed the march; while Nezâm seemed earnest to hasten it. The emperor's servants also contrived all the impediments which they could think of, so that Nâdir Shâh was far advanced in his march to Peyshûr (I). There the Afghâns and mountaineers kept him in play for seven weeks; when, seeing there was no forcing the passes without much bloodshed, he sent them offers of accommodation. These they came into the more readily, as the Sowbahdârs had sent no assistance; and they had been four or five years without receiving any of their usual pay, or allowance, from court.

THEREFORE, on Nâdir Shâh's giving them a certain sum of money, they not only let his forces pass unmolested, but lifted under him. Hereupon, leaving the main body behind, he set out in November with 10,000 chosen Kuzzilbâsh (K) horse, and in seven days got to Peyshûr. By this means surprising Nazâr Khân, who was encamped near the city with 7000 horse, he defeated such as stood the shock, and took him prisoner (L); after which he entered Peyshûr. When the news of this defeat came to court, Nizâm al Muluk, Khândorân, the Wazîr Kamrû'ddîn Khân, and the other Omrâs, set out the second of January, 1733-9, with a numerous army, and train of 700 artillery, to oppose the conqueror. Nizâm, after using delays, and prepossessing the soldiers with a terror of the enemy's power, marched-on, and encamped

* FRASER, ubi supr. p. 129, & seqq.

(I) A city 202 measured kos (or 253 miles) from Dehli, 97 from Labûr, and 35 from Attok. Frazer.

(K) Or Kezilbâsh, an order of soldiers, much like the janizaries, established by Sheykh Hydr, father of Shâh Ismael.

(L) Five hundred thousand pounds were remitted to this Navob; who, on his defeat, fled; but was taken and imprisoned: but in a few days was made one of Nâdir Shâh's Wazîr's. Frazer, p. 144.

12. Khân
Mohammed Shâh.

comes to Lahûr :

meets and
def. ats

in the plains of Karnal, fifty-five kos from Dehli; where the emperor (M) joined his troops on the fourth of February.

MEAN time, Nâdir Shâh having crossed the Attok (N), marched to Labûr; where Zekariya Khân had intrenched himself without the city : but, as soon as the enemy's troops appeared in sight, he retreated with his forces into the castle; from whence, having cannonaded the Persians for three days, he capitulated, and 1000 Kuzzlbâsh took possession. Nâdir Shâh staid there one week, and then, by continued marches, arrived (O) at the village of Tillawuri; which is near Karnal^f. The emperor's camp, about seven kos in circuit (P), was surrounded by mûrchas, or barricades, on which were mounted 5000 carriage-guns. In the center stood the imperial quarters; fronting which were the mûrchas of Nezâm al Muluk and Saad'ddîn Khân, mounted likewise with ordnance. On the right was Khândorân; on the left Kamrô'ddîn Khân; behind the emperor was posted Sirbullind Khân; and Mohammed Khân Bungush in the rear of all; each accompanied with several Omrâs at the head of their troops; the whole army amounting to 200,000 horse and foot.

NADIR Shâh had with him 40,000 horse, each with two or three attendants, grooms, and camel-drivers, robust young men. All were completely armed, with lances, bows, or muskets, even to the sutlers, and mounted on camels, mules, or horses; amounting in the whole to near 160,000 men. Nay, 7000 women, who had been taken captive, were, though veiled, booted and armed like the men; having a furtout over their own cloaths, and a sort of turbân on their

^f FRASER, ubi suprà. p. 136, & seq.

(M) The emperor, confounded on hearing Nadir Shâh had crossed the Attok, was for going by water to Patna, or to Kassi Benares, a city in the province of Alcababad, famous for Indian worship and colleges.

(N) When Nadir Shâh was about Attok, he wrote a letter to the emperor; in which he said the reason of his stay there was to do him and religion service, by driving to hell the infidels of Diksan (meaning the Maharatta, or Goons) in case they should any more invade his dominions; swearing by Ali Mortisa, that he had no other view. About the end of the same month (of August) by another letter he demanded five millions sterling.

(O) There were killed in the road and villages 8000 people, from Labûr to Karnal.

(P) What follows is taken from a journal of Nadir Shâh's transactions in India, written by Mirza 'uman, secretary to Sirbullind Khân, and communicated to Mr. Frazer.

heads.

heads. The same day that he arrived at Tillawuri, which was the thirteenth of February, 1738-9, several messengers were sent to Nezâm al Muluk, with offers of an accommodation : but he rejected all, and would hear of nothing but war. Next morning Saadit Khân arrived in the camp ; and being informed, while he waited on the emperor, that his baggage was attacked by the Persian vanguard, hastened to assist his people. As this affair happened near Khândorân's quarters, that Omrâ and above twenty more, with their troops, joined Saadit.

12. Khân
Moham-
med Shâh.

AT the same time, Nâdir Shâh, who had removed his camp on that side, being apprised of their design, advanced towards them ; and, having planted 3000 horse in ambush in three different places, sent 500 musketeers towards Saadit Khân, and 500 more towards Khândorân, in order to draw them into the snare. This stratagem having taken effect, the horsemen, who lay in ambush, broke-out on and engaged them furiously. Mean time, Nâdir Shâh, attended by 1000 Afshar horse, rode to and from all quarters to encourage those men. The rest of the army stood drawn up at a distance, ready at a signal to come to his assistance : but, as it happened, there was no occasion for them : for those four or five thousand having fought obstinately till the evening, when the emperor's forces gave ground, Saadit Khân, Shîrjîng, and Khândorân's youngest son, were taken prisoners. Khândorân himself received several mortal wounds, and was carried back to his quarters. Muzaffer Khân, with several other officers, were killed, besides what were wounded ; and great numbers lay dead in the field of battle (Q) 8.

An ac-commoda-tion proposed.

WHEN those who fled returned to the camp, a great tumult arose ; and the tents of Khândorân, Muzaffer Khân, Saadit Khân, and others, who were in the action, were plundered by their own people. In this confusion, the emperor, in conjunction with Nezâm al Muluk, the Wazîr, and other Omrâs, drew up their men without their barricades in a line of battle, with design to hinder the enemy from advancing

8 FRASER, ubi supr. p. 152, & seqq.

(Q) According to a letter wrote the next day from the Mogol camp, Nadir Shâh fought with 50,000 men. Khândorân received a bullet in his arm and in his side. Muzaffer Khân was killed jumping from his elephant. Mirza Khodabenda, grandson to the Great Mohabat Khân, was killed. On Nadir Shâh's side, seven principal officers and 2500 men were slain, and about 5000 wounded — 17,000 of the Hindûstân army were slain.

12. Khân any farther : but had not night come on, those precautions Moham- would have stood in little stead ; and that day would have medShâh. put an end to the whole affair. As many of those, who escaped out of the fight, as well as of such who attended the baggage, fled towards Dehli ; the camp was in some places so thin of men, that when at midnight the emperor sent for Nizâm al Muluk, the space of his mûrcha, or barricade, to come to his tent, about three quarters of a kos was entirely empty. This made them next day to contract their camp, within that space which was sufficient to contain all the troops which remained ; who stood under arms all that day, the 16th, every minute expecting the enemy's approach. On the 17th, Nizâm al Muluk and Azîm alla Khân went to Shâh Nâdir's camp, to accommodate matters ; and, after a stay of six hours, returned. Nâdir Shâh embraced Nizâm sitting, and made him stand honourably, close by himself ; he gave him a cup of sherbet, and appointed him to eat at the house of Kassim Beg Khân, his Eytémâdo'ddowlet, or Wazîr ; after which it was agreed, that Mohammed Shâh should go and see Nâdir Shâh. The same evening Khândorân died of his wounds.

The emperor goes to

THE 18th, at night, Nizâm received a rich kalaet, or vest, on being appointed Mîr Bukhshî, or paymaster-general, and Amîr al Omrâ (R', or head of the Omrâs, in the room of the deceased ; whose corps was buried the next day with marks of distinction, in the village of Karnal. Mean time, the emperor sitting in a royal litter (S), with a canopy and umbrella, one led horse, and a drum, attended by Ghâzi'uddin Khân, Azîm allah Khân, the Wazîr's son, and several eunuchs, marched out of the camp, with 200 horse ; who, when he had gone a little way, returned. With the rest, he went on to Nâdir Shâh's camp.
 When he was about half-way, Tahmâsp Khân Vakîl came to do him the usual honours. Afterwards he was met by Nâsir allah Mirza, the son of Nâdir Shâh ; who, alighting from his royal litter, paid the emperor his respects after the Persian form. Then Mohammed Shâh, ordering his own litter to be set down, embraced the young prince : after which they both marched on till they came to the train of ordnance. Here all the attendants were obliged to stay behind ; the emperor only, with the Omrâs above-mentioned, and two or three eunuchs, being allowed to pass ^h.

^h FRASER, ubi supr. p. 159, & seqq.

(R) A title given to the fa- vourite minister. Frâ- vân, or a moving throne. Fra- ser.

(S) In the original takht re-

WHEN

WHEN they came to the door of the royal tent, Nâdir Shâh 12. Khân came forth to receive his guest; and, having embraced, Moham- seated him close by himself on the same musnid (T). After the medShâh.
 usual forms of salutation, and enquiry about each other's health, were over, Nadîr Shâh addressed him thus: "It is " strange you should be so regardless of your own affairs,
 " that, although I wrote you several letters, sent an am" bassador, and testified a friendship for you, your ministers " should not think proper to send me a satisfactory answer.
 " Likewise, by reason of your want of command over your " own people, one of my ambassadors (U), contrary to all " laws, has been killed in your dominions. Even when I " entered your empire, you seemed under no concern for " your affairs; nor so much as sent to ask who I was, or " what was my design. Although I advanced as far as Lahûr,
 " yet none of your people came with a message, or salutation:
 " nay, not with an answer to my compliments to you. After" wards, when your Omrâs were awaked out of their le" thargy, they prevented all means of a reconciliation; and,
 " coming tumultuously with an intent to stop my farther
 " progress, brought themselves into one general snare."

THEN, having shewn how ill the war had been conducted is severely against him, he proceeded: "Even when you had thus en- lectured,
 " tangled yourself, I sent you offers of an accommodation;
 " but you were so puffed up with your own childish conceits,
 " and foolish resolutions, that you would not give ear to any " honourable overtures, or consult your own interest, until,
 " by the help of God, and strength of arms, you have seen
 " what has come to pass. Moreover, your predecessors were " wont to take the jeziyah (or poll-tax) from the infidels:
 " but you, in your reign, have paid it them; having, for " these twenty years, suffered the empire to be over-run by " them. However, as hitherto the race of Timûr have not " injured, nor misbehaved towards the Sefi family, and the " people of Persia, I shall not take the empire from you:
 " only as your indolence and pride have obliged me to march
 " so far, and I have been put to an extraordinary expence;
 " on account also that my men are much fatigued by long " marches, and want necessaries, I must go to Dehli, and
 " there continue some days, until the army is refreshed, and

(T) A place in the divân, commonly higher than any other, large enough for two or three to sit on. Frascr.

(U) On the Peyshûr side of the Astok, by some rebellious Râjpûts.

12. Khân " the peyîn kush, which Nezâm al Muluk had agreed to (X), Moham " is made good ; after that I shall leave you to look after medshâh. " your own affairs."

and returns :

MOHAMMED Shâh made no answer to this home speech, or lecture, in which he was treated contemptibly enough ; but was fixed in a silence, which testified a good deal of confusion and shame. There were none present, excepting Javead Khân, Behroz Khân, and Ghâzi'uddin Khân. Towards evening the emperor returned to his camp ; when it being represented to him, that the Baniyâns made the grain very dear, he ordered their shops to be plundered ; which, instead of mending the matter, very much increased the dearth of provisions. On the 20th of February, Nezâm al Muluk, the Wazîr, Azîm allah Khân, and Ghâzi'uddin Khân, waited on Nâdir Shâh ; and, at taking leave, received each a coat and vest : but Nezâm had a horse also. The same day, orders being given to bury the dead belonging to the Hindûstân army, their number was found to be 17,000, and the bodies spread over the space of seven kos. But not one of Nâdir Shâh's people were seen on the field of battle ; though it was said 400 of them were killed, and 700 wounded : for they buried them the same night. Many of the wounded Hindûstâns, who could not stir out of the place, died, because none had compassion enough to bring them off to be cured. Three elephants were also killed. The number of those killed, during three days after the battle, on the roads, and in the neighbouring country, by Nâdir Shâh's troops when they went out a marauding, amounted to fourteen or fifteen thousand men ⁱ.

his camp
 removed,

ON the 22d, the emperor's camp was removed to the side of Karnal, opposite to Shâh Nâdir's army : in their march, the Kuzzilbâsh horsemen carried-off 27 elephants and 25 camels. Next day, Nezâm al Muluk, being sent for to Shâh Nâdir's camp, was there detained, with five or six of his attendants : and several of the Kuzzilbâsh being sent against Tanisîr, they slew the inhabitants ; and, having plundered the place, returned with great spoil. About eight at night, the Wazîr received a firman, or order, from Nâdir Shâh, importing, that next day the emperor, Sirbullind Khân, Mohammed Khân Bungash, and Azîm alla Khân, should appear before him. Hereupon Mohammed Shâh sent for Sirbullind ⁱ FRASER, ubi supr. p. 163, & seqq.

(X) Of twenty kros of rupis, or twenty-five millions sterling.

Khân, and all the other Omrâs ; with whom having consulted till midnight, he at length declared, that, as affairs were now gone beyond his power, he was under a necessity the next day to do one of three things : to try his fortune by one desperate push ; put an end to all troubles by a dose of poison ; or else to submit tamely to whatever terms should be imposed : which last measure the emperor was inclined to, although he did not then discover it.

ON the 24th, Sirbullind Khân and the other Omrâs were ready, with their men, to act as the emperor should determine. But nothing was that day resolved on ; and at night a note arrived from Nâdir Shâh to that lord, bidding him be of good cheer, and repair to him before Mohammed Shâh set-out. Accordingly next morning he went thither, and about nine o' clock the emperor followed in a royal litter. On his arrival, he alighted at a tent, pitched for him in the front of the camp ; where he was allowed all his necessary domestics, and 1000 Kuzzlbâsh were set as guards round him. About eight in the evening, he went to visit Nâdir Shâh, and after three hours stay returned ; but orders were given, that none of the Omrâs should be allowed to see him. On the 26th, orders were issued to seize all the ordnance, and other arms belonging to the emperor and his Omrâs, with all his treasures and jewels. There was an order also to send to Mohammed Shâh, his son Soltân Ahmed, and the empress Malika al Zumani (X). A third order was also issued, that all the emperor's old servants and soldiers should be continued in their places ; but that the bahirs, or baggage-carriers, and new enlisted men, should be suffered to depart.

ON the 27th, Mohammed Shâh, with the Omrâs, his old servants, and baggage, went to the camp of Nâdir Shâh ; into whose possession their effects were put : and he, having picked out 200 cannon from the emperor's ordnance, sent them, with some treasure and other effects then seized, to Kandahâr, by way of Kâbul. The same day, Nâdir Shâh gave three months pay to every man in his army, attendants and all. On the 28th, early, Tahmâsp Khân Vakil, was dispatched to Shâh Jehân abâd, or Dehli, with 4000 horse and musketeers, to take possession of the castle ; and Saadit Khân to secure the city and effects of the Omrâs. On the 2d of March, Nâdir Shâh set-out himself for the same place, attended by 20,000 horse, and preceded by the mâhl, or women, with a guard of 4000, at the distance of one kos. At the same distance

(X) That is, queen of the times.

12. Khân behind him followed Mohammed Shâh, and forty or fifty Moham- of his principal people, with 12,000 horse to escort him.
 medSnâh. On the sides were Sirbullind Khân, Nizâm al Muluk, Kamrô'ddîn Khân, and Mohammed Khân Bungush, each with his men and baggage, separated by the distance of half a kos, with horsemen between, to keep them from joining. In this order they marched every day, taking up five kos in length, and three in breadth ^k.

with Na- IN the road, the Kuzzlbâsh not only plundered several vildir Shâh: lages, amongst which were Paniput and Sanput (Y); but likewise killed to the number of 7000 inhabitants. The 7th, Nâdir Shâh arrived at the gardens of Shallimâr. Next day, by his order, Mohammed Shâh, in a royal litter, attended by 4000 guards, entered the city at night, and was lodged in the castle. But Nâdir Shâh, being informed that the inhabitants were of a seditious, turbulent temper, deferred his entrance till the 9th, in the morning; when he marched in with all the caution imaginable, attended by 20,000 horse, leaving the rest of his army encamped without the city. After he had alighted at the castle, Mohammed Shâh came to congratulate him, and they breakfasted together. They were inconversation till the evening; during which time, Nâdir Shâh behaved with the greatest complaisance and seeming affection to him. He likewise gave orders to punish, in the severest manner, all persons molesting the Indians: who, on their side, were so who or- frightened at the terrible aspect of those men, and the barbarous ders af- figure (Z) they made, that most of them avoided coming near fairs. them. At night, Nâdir Shâh, having called Saadit Khân before him, spoke with a great deal of passion; and even used some hard words, in regard to collecting the peyshkush, or present of twenty-five millions sterling. That lord, who had for some time been indisposed, died at four next morning:
 some say, with vexation at his treatment; others, that he took poison.

* FRASER, ubi supr. p. 169, & seqq.

(Y) Two stages from Dehli.

(Z) The Persians, however polite and luxurious in regard to the more western nations, are but rude and hardy in their apparel, diet, and living, compared with the delicate India Mogols and Persians.

S E C T. III.

12. Khân
Moham-
med Shâh.

The Massacre of Dehli; and what passed there till Nâdir Shâh's Return.

ON Saturday, the 10th of March, being the cyd zoha, or feast of sacrifice, in the morning, Sirbullind Khân, Mos-tafa Khân, Arizbeghi, Nezâm al Muluk, and Kamro'ddin Khân, met at the castle, to deliberate on means for collecting the peyshkush-money, along with Tahmâsp Khân Vakîl; who, at noon, sent nine horsemen to order the granaries to be opened, and settle the price of corn. But, as the price which was fixed did not turn to the account of the proprietors, towards evening they assembled a mob; who killed the nine horsemen, and several Kuzzlbâsh, who repaired thither to buy corn. After sun-set, they spread a report, that Nâdir Shâh was taken prisoner, and some said he was poisoned: on which, the idle and disaffected people, joining from all quarters, poured like a torrent towards the castle; and killed several of the out-guards, who retired within, and to other places of security. Next morning, about eight o'clock, when the tumult was in its height, Nâdir Shâh, being greatly provoked, walked out of the castle; and, mounting his horse, went towards the bazâr of Chandin Chok, to quell the mob, who were committing great disorders in that quarter. In the way, perceiving many bodies of his people, who had been killed in the night, he sent a strong party to suppress the rioters: with orders, that in case neither threats nor persuasions would do, to cut them off; but on no account to injure others who were not concerned.

THE foldiers at first proceeded gently; which, instead of appeasing, emboldened the mob, who began to discharge fire-arms and arrows at them. Mean time, Nâdir Shâh having entered the masjed, or temple, of Royshn al Dowlet, the neighbouring inhabitants got upon their terraces, and began to throw stones. At length a musket was designedly shot at Nâdir Shâh; which, missing him, killed one of his officers who stood next him. This made him give way to his passion, and order a general slaughter to be commenced from that very place: at this command, the foldiers, in an instant getting upon the walls and terraces, began to plunder and kill. This bloody scene extended from the Serafa ardui (A),

(A) Where all the bankers to the king and his army have aud money-changers belonging their shops. Frazer.

which

12. Khân which is before the castle, to the Eydgab (B), which is three Moham- kos distant. The bazârs, streets, and alleys, within this medShâh. space, were all plundered; and whomsoever they found either abroad, or in the streets and shops, great and small, men and women, were put to the sword; nor did the beasts escape their fury^a.

the num- NÂDIR Shâh, after he had given those sanguine orders, ber slain. returned to the castle: where, about two o'clock, Moham- med Shâh and Nezâm al Muluk waited on him; and, having made great intercession for the city, at three o'clock it was proclaimed by beat of drum, that none of the inhabitants should be any longer molested. During the seven hours, which the slaughter continued, 400 Kuzzlbâsh were slain, and of the citizens 120,000 (C); some computed 150,000.
 Of the plunder, Nâdir Shâh had some, and much was destroyed by the fire. Although the Hindûs burned numbers of their dead, yet there still remained so many in the streets, that for a considerable time there was no such thing as passing through them. When the slaughter began, the persons, who had raised the commotion, disappeared in an instant, and left the innocent shopkeepers and families to be butchered. Several, jealous of their honour, first killed their women, and then themselves. One of these unfortunate creatures, seeing the soldiers near his house, burned about twenty women of his family, and expected they would come every minute and kill him. By chance they missed his house: at which, finding himself disappointed, he went out and brought some of them back; telling them there was a great deal of money and effects therein. They plundered his house; but, to his still greater disappointment, went away without killing him; which so enraged him, that he dispatched himself.

Peace re- THERE were great numbers of people, especially women flored and children, burned in their houses. About 10,000 women again. threw themselves into wells (D); some of whom were taken out alive, after being there two or three days. On the 12th, the prisoners of both sexes, to the number of 50,000, were,
 by the Shah's order, all conducted back to their respective

^a FRASER, ubi sup. p. 177, & seqq.

(B) The place where people assemble to prayers, on the two great annual gyas, or festivals.
Fraser.

(C) By the exactest computation, the number was 110,000.
See Fraser, p. 222.

(D) The number of people destroyed these two ways, joined to those who died of famine and other hardships, amounted to above 7000. See Fraser, p.
223.

houses ; but in affliction not to be expressed. On the 13th, 12. Kháu all people were ordered to betake themselves to their employ- Moham- ments, and be under no farther apprehension. The effects of med Sháh.
Saadit Khân, Khândorân, and Muzaffer Khân, were seized.
Those of Khândorân (exclusive of what he had in the camp) were computed at no more than one krór of rupis : but Muzaffer's amounted to very near four krórs. This day guards were planted round the city, to prevent any persons going out without licence ; and next morning a number of Fakirs, or poor people, wanting to go out of the city, with design to travel and beg abroad, the out-guards cut-off their noses and ears, and made them return again. The 15th was employed in clearing the streets of the dead bodies^a.

THE 16th, a firman was drawn up, exempting the dom- The peysh- nions of Persia from taxes for three years. At the same time, kush rais- arrears of 6,100,000 pounds, due to the foldiers, were dis- ed, charged : likewise one year's pay before-hand, and six months pay, as a gratuity, was given to all, even those who followed the camp. After this, all diligence was used to raise the peyshkush, or present of twenty krórs of rupis, that is, twenty-five millions sterling ; which the Sháh had demanded, over and above the jewels, gold-plate set with precious stones, and other fine goods, of the king and Omrás, which had been seized. The severity used on this occasion brought on a new calamity. In the king's treasury, the gold and silver coins did not exceed 3,750,000 pounds : but in the inward vaults, which had been shut-up and sealed for many years, there was found of gold and silver to a much larger amount.
Nizám al Muluk contributed 1,875,000 pounds, in jewels, money, and goods ; Kamro'ddín Khân did the like. Sirbul- lind Khân, on account of his poverty, was excused. The Omrás, Mansebdárs, officers, and rich inhabitants, were taxed on this occasion according to their circumstances ; of which they were obliged to give in an account.

THE care of collecting this peyshkush was committed to with great Sirbullind Khân, and other Omrás, who met daily for that severity :
purpose at his house. They were from the eighteenth of March to the 8th of April, settling the list of people, and the sum each was to pay. Mean time several persons, for fear of the consequences, leaving their effects and families behind, escaped out of the city, glad to save their lives. Many others, being hard pressed for their quotas, to save their reputation, killed themselves. Among whom were Allím Allah, the adopted son of Sidi Fekad Khân, and his Naib. On the

^a FRASER, ubi sup. p. 184, & seqq.

12. Khân sixth of April, Tahmâsh Khân ordered one of the ears of Mijilis Ray, the Duan (E) of the Wazîr Kamro'ddîn Khân, to be cut-off in presence of his master; who going to intercede for him, Tahmâsh Khân told him in an angry tone, that it would be his turn by-and-by, which presently silenced him; and six days after this disgrace, the Duan killed himself. Several of the emperor's Muttesiddis were so beaten with sticks, that the blood flowed from all parts of their bodies. Sitâ Ram, and Ghukl Keyshvir, the Bengâl Vakil, were so violently drubbed, that the latter went home, and murdered himself and family ^b.

The Mirza married. IN the interim; viz. the twenty-seventh of March, Nesr Alla Mîrza, son of Shâh Nâdir, was married to the daughter of Jesdan Bukhsh, son of Ram Bukhsh, and grandson of Aureng Zib; on which occasion there were fine illuminations, and fire-works played-off on the banks of the river. Mohammed Shâh made the young princess a present of jewels to the value of 6,250 pounds, and the same sum in money. Some days after, Nâdir Shâh sent her jewels to the value of 62,500 pounds ^f.

Cruelties exercised. WHEN the list of names was ready, Sirbullind Khân, one of those appointed to collect the money, pressed so hard on the people (F), that several killed themselves; which made Nâdir Shâh remit 250,000 pounds to great men, who were found indigent, out of 3,750,000 pounds, which remained to be gathered. For want of knowing people's circumstances, they were very unequally taxed. Some, worth 125,000 pounds, were only set down 625 pounds: others, who could not muster 12,500 pounds, were set down 15,000; and when the sum was once fixed, there was no redress to be had: but, if they did not pay, they were beaten so unmercifully, that many died of the blows. Those who came-off best, had either a leg or an arm lamed: this so dispirited the inhabitants, that one Kuzzlbâsh might have used 10,000 of them with what severity he pleased. This work went on till Nâdir Shâh left the city, by what time near five millions were collected from the people; of which 875,000 pounds were sunk by his Omrâs. The goods likewise which the Shâh took were under-rated. Thus a horse, worth sixty-

^b FRASER, ubi supr. p. 190—200.

^c Ibid. p. 197.

(E) The deputy and general-accomptant of the lord lieutenant. Frazer.

(F) However, he was forced to do this much against his will, for he succoured many under-hand, Frazer, p. 217.

two pounds, was valued at no more than twelve or thirteen pounds; and the like was done with jewels and other effects.

DURING this time, the Kuzzlbâsh horsemen went about plundering the villages, and killing the inhabitants, who made any resistance (G). The first of May, 1739, all the Omrâs being ordered to be present at Mohammed Shâh's apartment by five in the morning, they then put on forty-two ka-laets, sent thither by Nâdir Shâh. At eight o' clock, the emperor went in a royal litter, with several of the Omrâs, to the general divân: at the door all the Omrâs alighted, and followed the litter to the door of the private divân; where the emperor got-off, and went in to Nâdir Shâh. After they had embraced, they breakfasted together. The Omrâs likewise had breakfast given them. Presently after there were brought in for Mohammed Shâh, a crown set with jewels; a sirpeach, or band for the turbân; a bazow band, or bracelet; a girdle; a sword; a Dekkan sword with a strait blade, called dhowp; and an enamelled kutteri, or dagger, all set with jewels. The crown Nâdir Shâh put on with his own hands, making him an apology at the same time; and took his leave, after giving him some advice. Among the rest, he counselled him "to seize all the jâghîrs, or lands allotted them for maintenance, and pay them out of his treasury. To suffer none to keep forces of their own, but keep constantly himself 60,000 horsemen; to be acquainted with the name, family, and merit, of each; and not allow any to be idle. When he had occasion to send out troops, to put them under the command of one whom he could trust for conduct, courage, and fidelity; and recall them as soon as the expedition was at an end, it being dangerous to let any person stay too long in command; particularly to beware of Nezâm al Muluk, whom, by his conduct, he found to be full of cunning, and self-interested, and more ambitious than became a subject^d."

MOHAMMED Shâh was very thankful for this instance of his good-will to him; and desired him to appoint those whom he thought most deserving of the principal posts: but Nâdir Shâh said, that would not be at all for his interest; since such officers would have but little respect for him in his (the Shâh's) absence. He therefore advised him, when he was gone, to dispose of employments himself; promising, in case any should rebel, to send forces to chastise them; and,

^d FRASER, ubi supr. p. 200, & seqq.

(G) There were massacred on this occasion to the amount of 25,000. See Frazer, p. 222.

12. Khân
Moham-
med Shâh:
Shâh Nadir takes leave of Moammed Shâh:

gives him advice:

12. Khân if necessary, come with them in person. In effect, Nâdir Shâh recommended, during all the time of his stay, no more than one person to the post of Khân Saman, or steward of the emperor's household; and that was Danishmend Khân, whose brother Mullah ali Akber, was the Shâh's Mullah Bâshi, or chief Mullah.

threatens the Omrâs :

THE second of May, Nâdir Shâh sent for Nezâm al Muluk, Sirbullind Khân, and other Omrâs, whom he enjoined obedience to the emperor; and, threatening to punish them in case they rebelled, took his leave. It was reported, that he declared before some of his own Omrâs, that he had acted indiscreetly in regard to two things: one was, his giving the empire to Mohammed Shâh; who being unequal to so great a task, the affairs of India would become worse than before: the other, his giving quarter to Nezâm al Muluk; who being so very subtle and crafty, it was more than probable he would raise new disturbances: but, as by the decrees of providence, and their own good fortune, he had once passed his word to them, he could not act contrary thereto.

THE fourth of May notice was given, that, after the troops began their march, none should remain in the city, or carry with them any male or female, excepting bought slaves, or women married to them: nor even those slaves and wives to be carried contrary to their inclinations, under forfeiture of such person's life and estate. Upon this, almost all who were married at Dehli sent back their wives, on finding them unwilling to leave their native country: only a few of the chief commanders and officers, by intreaties, prevailed on some to seem contented to go. But, after some days march, Nâdir Shâh, being informed thereof, ordered them all to be sent back.

begins his march.

ON Sunday, the sixth of May, the Shâh began his march, having first ordered his army to be mustered; and, it being found that 400 soldiers and servants had deserted, he commanded the Kutwal of Dehli to find them out. That officer, after diligent search, discovered about sixty, and sent them with a party of horse after the army, which they overtook at Sherbind; where the Shah ordered all their heads to be cut-off: for this reason, others, who were taken, were let go again by the emperor's command. In his way he plundered and killed the people of Tamûr, and other villages, to the number of 12,000; because the country people killed and stripped his straggling foragers. It was said that he gave the Zemîlar (H)

(H) *Zemîdâr*s are the Râjahs, acknowledgment to the emperor Indian lords, who have free or. Frazer.
estates in land, paying a small of Karnal 5000 rupis, towards peopling a village on the spot ^{12. Khân} where he gained the battle; and directed him to call it Fat-Moham-tch abâd, or the habitation of victory. In his passage, he left ^{med} Shâh.

Lahûr on one side, after having accepted 1,250,000 pounds;  which was all the inhabitants could raise ^c.

MEAN time, on the 13th of May, the emperor appeared in The divân
the general divân; where the Omrâs came to pay their ^{opened.} obeisance, and make him their presents. But, from that day when the Shâh left Dehli till the 20th of June, nothing was done or proposed relating to the state or affairs in the empire: nor did the late dreadful calamity awaken the sufferers, who were intoxicated with pride and self-conceit, ill-will and malice to each other. Some days after, twenty-two Omrâs and Mansabdârs, who had run-out of the field of battle, were all discharged the service.

SINCE the battle of Karnal to Nâdir Shâh's departure, the Losses s f- loss sustained by the emperor and the people, in jewels, trea- ^{tained.} sure, goods, and destruction of fields, besides that of the buildings, amounted to near one arûb of rupis, or 125 millions sterling. Out of this Nâdir Shâh carried away to the value of 70 krons, or 87,500,000 pounds, in jewels and other effects (I): his officers and soldiers, 10 krons, or 12,500,000 pounds. The charges of his army, while he continued there, the arrears, pay, and gratuity advanced them, with what goods were destroyed by fire, and fields laid waste, came to near 20 krons, or 25 millions more. Of the inhabitants of the empire, since the Shâh's arrival in Hindûstân till his return to Lahûr, were destroyed 200,000.

BESIDES the immense riches, which Nâdir Shâh carried Peacocks, away with him, he obtained from the emperor in writing, ^{given up.} dated the 4th of Mûharram, 1152 (K), a cession of all the countries to the west of the river Attok, the river Sind, and Nala Sunkra, which is a branch of it; that is to say, Peyshor, with its territories; the principality of Kôbul; Ghoznawî (or country of Ghâzna); the mountainous residence of the Af- ghâns; the Hazârjât, and the passes: with the castle of ^c FRASER, ubi sup. p. 207, & seqq.

(I) In jewels, from the emperor and Omrâs, twenty-five krons; utensils and weapons set with jewels, with the peacock-throne, and nine others set with jewels, nine krons. Gold and silver rupis, twenty-five krons.
Gold and silver plate, which he coined into money, five krons.
Fine cloth and rich stuffs, two krons. House-furniture and other goods, three krons. Warlike weapons, cannon, &c. one kror. Besides 1000 elephants, 7000 horses, 10,000 camels.

(K) Second of April, 1730.
Bahar

12. Khân Bukkar, Sunkar, and Khorud abâd; the rest of the territories, Moham- passes, and abodes, of the Chokias, Balluches, and other people; medShâh. with the provinces of Tâtta, the castle of Ram, and village of Terbin; the towns of Chun, Sumawali, Ketra, and other places dependant on Tâtta. In short, all the fields, villages, castles, towns, and ports, to the west of the Attok, from its rise, as far as Nala Sunkra, where it falls into the sea: but all countries to the east of that river, the Sind and Nala Sunkra, with the castle and town of Lohri-Bundar (or Bendar), were to remain to the empire of Hindûstân^f.

to the Persians.

THUS we have brought the history of the Mogols in Hindûstân to the end of this great revolution; the most remarkable, unexpected, and easily accomplished, of any which hath happened in the world for many ages past.

B O O K X.

A Description of the Countries contained in the hither Peninsula of India.

C H A P. I.

General Division and History of this Peninsula.

General
Division.

THIS great peninsula, in its largest extent, is bounded on the north by an east and west line, drawn from the gulf of Kambaya to the mouth of the river Ganges; or, if you will, with the twenty-second parallel of latitude; and on the three other sides by the ocean (A). Within these limits are contained several spacious countries, namely, the provinces of Bâglâna, Ballagâte, and Tellin-gâna, or Telenga, all comprehended under the general name of Balagâte; the kingdom of Vijâpûr, which, with the other three provinces, are comprised under the name of Dekkan; the kingdoms of Golkonda and Orissâ, or Orixa; the kingdom of Karnâta, or Karnatek, a part of which was

^f FRASER, ubi supr. p. 214, & seqq.

(A) In a less extended sense, its northern boundary will be a line drawn from the city of Kambaya, at the head of the gulf of that name, south-east to the coast of Musulipatan, on the bay of Bengal.

formerly

formerly called Bīsnāgar, and Narsīnga; the kingdoms of Messūr, Madūra, Marava, and Tanjaor; lastly, the kingdoms of Kanāra and Malabār. A. D. 1264.

FOR many ages these countries were governed by their own Rājahs, or kings. But since the Mohammedans got footing in Hindūstān, they have undergone various revolutions: of these, however, we have as yet very imperfect accounts. The first expedition we meet with into this peninsula, is that of Mahmūd Shāh, king of Dehli, surnamed Nasr'oddīn, who ascended the throne in the year 1264; and is famous for his great conquests over India^a. We are told that this prince, descending from the north with a powerful army, conquered all the Hindūs as far as the kingdom of Kanāra, with part of the country possessed by the ancestors of the king of Bīsnāgar (B). Then returning to Dehli, he left Habed Shāh to prosecute his conquests. This general, by his conduct and valour, became so great, that he coped with his master. His nephew Madūra (C), following his good fortune, possessed himself of the kingdom of Kanāra; and casting off his allegiance to the king of Dehli, gave to his new-founded dominion the name of Dekan (or Dekkan) from the various kinds of people whereof his army, which conquered it, was composed; for Dekkan signifies bastards (D). Then dividing his territories into eighteen parts, he gave the government of them to so many of his slave-commanders; obliging each of them to build a palace at Bedir (E), which was his royal seat, and leave his son behind for hostage. In process of time the number of those governors diminishing, they who remained grew more powerful; while the king of Dekan had scarce any thing left more than his capital city, and the name. In short, when the Portugueses arrived first in the Indies, in 1498, there were in Dekan only seven descendants of those usurping slaves; whose names, or titles, were Nizamaluk, Madremaluk (F), Malek Veridi, Kosa Mokadam; Abeshjapado (or the Abyssine eunuch), Kota Ma- and history.

Dekan kingdom founded.

^a D'HERBEL, Bibl. Orient. p. 289, art. Deheli.

(B) By this account, Dekan must have extended southward only, over Kanara, and Part of the Karnata.

(C) Barros calls him Mahmūd Shāh.

(D) Others call it also Dakem, or D. ken, as if so named after king Dakem, mentioned lower down.

(E) Or Bider, in Tillingāna.

(F) All these names are sadly corrupted, according to the European manner. These two first should be Nezām al Muluk, that is, the regulator of the empire; and Imād al Muluk, the pillar or support of the empire.

A. D.
1467.

luk (G), and Sabay; which last was at that time lord of Goa, and the most powerful among them (H). This prince deceasing about the time when Albuquerque formed his design against that city, in 1510, Kuso Hidalkan (I) possessed himself thereof, and put it into the hands of his son Ismael^b.

Divided into provinces.

THIS is one account of the original of the Mohammedan kingdoms in the peninsula of India. Dr. Garcia d'Orta relates another. This author tells us, that a certain commander of Bengál, lord of some mountains there, having first slain the king, subdued the kingdom of Dehli (not long after the Mogols had conquered it), with other kingdoms, and assumed the name of Xa Holam (Sháh Alem), or King of the world, founding an empire 800 leagues in compass: that his acquisitions being too large for one sovereign, he conferred the government of Dekan and Kunkam on his nephew Dakem; who being fond of foreigners, intrusted the government of his provinces to them. To one named Adel Khán he gave all the maritime country from Anjediva (K), in the south, to Sifardam (L), in the north; extending about sixty leagues, with the adjoining inland regions. Another, called Nezám Máluk, he set over the provinces which reach from Sifardam to Negatona, the space of twenty leagues, adding thereto other inland provinces, with that of Kambaya.

Kunkam.

NONE but these two lords had any share in Kunkam, which stretched from the coast to the mountain of Ghâte (or Gátte), in Balaghátta, which signifies the country beyond the mountain (M). The government was divided among three others, Imâd Maluk (N), called by the Portugueses Madremáluk, Kotal Maluk (O), and Veridi.

Bala-ghate.

^b FARIA Y SOUSA Port. Asia, vol. i. ch. 5. p. 163, & JUAN DE BARROS.

(G) It ought to be Kothb al Maluk, the axis or pole of the empire.

(H) Thus writes De Faria: but he could not be the greatest of them, unless he was king of Visapúr, whose title was Adel Khán, mentioned within a line or two.

(I) Hidalkan, or, as it is often written, Idalkan, and Dialcan, should be Adel Khán; that is, the just king or lord. Barros says he was the son of Sabay.

(K) Opposite to Sinkatora, at the mouth of the river Aliga, 16 or 17 leagues south of Goa.

(L) Between Dabul and Charwl.

(M) Bala, in Persian, according to our author, signifies lofty, and Ghâte, a mountain: therefore that vast province beyond it is called Balaghâte, as who should say, the mountain or ultramontane province.

(N) Rather Imad, or Emadol Muluk, the pillar or support of the kingdom.

(O) Rather Kothb al Muluk, the pole or axis of the kingdom.

ALL these governors were foreigners, excepting Nezâm-ol Muluk, who is said to have been a natural son of Dakem; but the rest were slaves, bought with the king's money.

A. D.
1467.

FOR some time these governors did their duty; but at length growing weary of subjection, they joined in conspiracy, set up for themselves in their respective provinces, and, seizing king Dakem in Beder, capital of Dekan, gave him in custody to Veridi. There were concerned in this conspiracy certain Hindûs, as Mohadum Koja, and Veriche, to whom were given large countries, with some wealthy cities. On Mohadum, for instance, were bestowed Visapur; (which, when our author wrote, was the residence of Adel Khân); with Solapur (P), and Paranda (Q); which were afterwards taken by Nezâm Maluk: but Veriche kept possession of his province, which bordered on Kambaya, and the province belonging to Nezâm Maluk ^c.

The governors u. r. p.

THIS relation of D'Orta, tho' of great use for the general, both to the geography and history of these countries, is yet very much out with regard to the time when the founder of this great empire lived, if not as to his name also: for if he drove the Mogols out of Dehli, our author must have confounded him with Cher Khân, or Shîr Khân, the Pâtan, who, after conquering Bengâl, in 1540, obliged Humayûn to fly into Persia, as hath been related in the reign of that Mogol prince^d; and in effect Thevenot (whose account of this revolution agrees nearly with D'Orta's) says, that Cher Khân, after defeating Humayûn, assumed the name of Shâh Alem. But this contradicts the Portuguese history; by which it appears, that at the time of their arrival in India, in 1498, the several potentates before-mentioned were then existing, and consequently could not have their original from the conqueror of the Mogols, about forty years after. The same history gives an account also of Shîr Khân's victory over Humayûn; but mentions nothing of his conquering Dekân, nor of any revolution having happened in that country thro' all the sixteenth century^e; which could not have been the case, had any such come to pass. In short, the fact, so far this revolution

^c GARCIA D'ORTA. ap. De Laet. Ind. Vera. p. 158, & seqq. ^d See before, p. 216. ^e FARIA Y SOUSA. Port. Asia, vol. i. p. 411.

(P) Solapur is placed by De l'Isle on the river Krishna, about 20 leagues to the south-east of Visapur.

(Q) Paranda is mentioned by Bernier, and others, as a place of consequence, but they say not where situated.

[A. D. 1467. as relates to the date of this revolution, as assigned by D'Orta, is overthrown by the evidence of that author himself; for he says, the great grandfather of the Adel Khân then reigning, who was one of the conspirators, and from whom the Portugueses twice took Goa, died in 1535^f. Now this death was five years before the expulsion of the Mogols by Shîr Khân; and the city of Goa was twice taken in 1510. In this same year, 1510, he likewise places the death of Veridi, another of the conspirators; consequently, the revolution in Dekan must have happened, by his own account, before that period.

examined into.

AND this is conformable to the account of Castanneda, one of the earliest Portuguese writers of the Indian affairs, as well as of some later travellers, who place that event in the fifteenth century. Bernier, with whom Dr. Frier pretty nearly agrees, tells us, that scarce 200 years before the time he wrote (R), all this great peninsula of India, in its largest limits, was under the dominion of a heathen prince, named Ram Ras (S); who having raised three Mohammedan slaves, of the Shiyah sect, to great honour, gave to one the major part of those countries, at present possessed by the Great Mogol in Dekan, about Dowlet abad, from Bidar (or Beder), Paranda, and Sûrât, as far as Narbadar; to the second, all the other lands of Dekan, comprehended under the kingdom of Visapûr; and to the third, all which is contained under the name of the kingdom of Golkonda. These three slaves growing rich, and being supported by a good number of the Mogols, who were in the service of Ram Ras, joined in a general revolt; and having killed that unfortunate prince, each set up for himself in his respective government, and assumed the title of Shâh, or king. The issue of Ram Ras not finding themselves strong enough to oppose the usurpers, were content to betake themselves to that country of the peninsula, commonly called Karnâtek, but in our maps, Bijnagar; where their descendants remain to this day, with the title of *Rajahs*g.

As to the titles of those usurpers, which Bernier has omitted, authors generally agree, that the first, who had the ^f DE LAET. Ind. Vera. p. 160. ^g BERNIER Mem. Mog. Emp. part 2. p. 158, & seqq. FRYER's Trav. p. 165.

(R) That is about 1667; 250 years before 1675, which from whence deducting 200 puts that event in 1425.

(S) So he is called by Frier also. Even Th. Tennet makes his Fryer, p. 165, reckons about Cher Khan a Rajah of Bengal.

tramontane provinces, was stiled Nezâm Shâh (T); the second Adel Shâh, who seized Vishapûr; and the third, Kothb Shâh, who possessed Golkonda.

A. D.
1467.

AND here it may be proper to observe, that Dekan, or Dukkan, was not of so large extent as some authors have imagined; for, from the several accounts above-cited, it appears that it comprised no more of the peninsula than what lay within the dominions of Nezâm Shâh and Adel Shâh; that is, the provinces of Bâglâna, Ballagâte, and Tellenga, with the kingdom of Vishapur. The first three provinces being to the north of the mountains called Gâte, went under the denomination of Ballagâte, or the tramontane provinces; and under Vishapur we include Konkan, or Kunkam, which was that part lying between the Gâte and the Indian sea, or western coast, where the river Bate, near Bazaim and Bom-bay, separated it northward from the dominions of Nezâm Shâh; and the river Aliga, on the south, from Kanara and Bishnâgar^h.

Extent of Dekan.

S E C T. II.

Empire of Bishnâgar.

THIS kingdom, called Bishnâgar (U), from the capital city, Nar singa, from the name of one of its Râjahs or Kings, bounded Dekan on the south; and was, at the time of the above-mentioned revolution, or soon after, the most rich, potent, and extensive monarchy in the Indies, comprehending almost all the countries in the peninsula south of the sixteenth parallel: for, besides the large kingdom of Karnâta or Karnâtes, which was the hereditary dominion, and made the body of the empire, it contained the kingdoms of Kanâra, Messour, Travankor, Madûra, Marava, and Tanjaor; in short, all that vast region washed on three sides by the ocean, was subject to the king of Bishnâgar, excepting that part of Malabâr which belongs to the Zamorin, or king of *Kalekut*ⁱ. The inhabitants were Pagans, and called Ba-

Empire of Bishnâgar.

^h DE FARIA, ubi supra, p. 95, 99.
vol. i. p. 95. & seqq. vol. ii. p. 83, 142.

ⁱ DE FARIA,

(T) That is, King Nezâm; changing, probably, the title of Nezâm al Munuk, after his usurpation, into that of Nezâm Shâh. The like may be understood of the other two.

it Bishnaga: but we are told by the Jesuits of those times, that its true name was Vissan agor; another author says, Vidianagar. See Purch. Pilgr. vol. ii. p. 1746. and Della Valles's Trav. p. 93, & seqq.

(U) The Portugueses called

dagus,

A. D. 1200. digus, as are those of Karnata at present: they spoke the Tamul or Damal language, which is the same with the Malabaric; but the Badagun was used at court.

City of Bishnâgar. THE city of Bishnâgar, which still subsists, lies eight days journey (X) from Goa, and six from the diamond mines. Cæsar Frederic, who was at this capital of Narsinga in 1567, represents it as a very great city, twenty-four miles in compass, whose walls, inclosing certain hills, were washed by the river Nigondin. The buildings were all of earth, excepting the pagods, and three palaces. Of the many courts of kings which this traveller had seen, none could compare with that of Bezenegar, for the grandeur and order of the palace, which had five courts leading to it, with each a gate, and guards. But when Frederic was there, the city was destitute of people, although the houses were standing; the place having been sacked two years before^k, as will be related presently.

History of Bishnâgar. ACCORDING to the Portuguese writers, the kingdom of Charnataka (Y) had no sovereign prince till the year 1200: it began then in Boka, a shepherd, who stiled himself Rau, or Râjah, that is, emperor; which title has descended to all his successors. Boka, in memory of a defeat which he gave to the king of Dehli (who attacked these southern provinces), built the famous city of Visajanagar (Z), corruptly called Bishnâgar. The crown continued in his line till it was usurped by Narsinga, from whom this kingdom took its name, as well as that of Bishnâgar, from the city¹.

Khristna Râjah. WHATEVER the king of Bishnâgar might have lost by the usurpation of the Mohammedan governors before-mentioned, yet we find him still a very powerful prince about the year 1520: for Khristna Râjah, the then king, resolving to take the city (A) of Rachol from Adel Khân of Viziapûr, as having be-

^k PURCHAS'S Pilgr. vol. ii. p. 1704, & seqq.
FARIA, ubi supr. vol. 2. p. 118.

¹ DE

(X) This is confirmed by the Jesuits map of the hither peninsula of the Indies, inserted in vol. xxiii. of the Lettres Edifiantes; which puts it 105 geometrical miles east of that city. Yet former geographers, and even Del'Isle, place it near three degrees to the south-east more within land.

(Y) Karnatak, Karnates, or Karnata, as it is variously written.

Our author, De Faria, says Kanara (which is the name of a kingdom on the sea-coast) is a corruption of Charnataka.

(Z) The Jesuit Pimenta, who wrote in 1697, calls it Vissanagor; and Delle Valle, Vidianagar, as before observed.

(A) Situated in the island of Salsette, near Goa. De Faria, vol. iii. p. 417.

longed to his ancestors, he covered the hills and plains with an army of 35,000 horse, and 733,000 foot: besides these, were 586 elephants, carrying castles each, with four armed men in it, 12,000 water-carriers, and 20,000 common women. As Rachol was very strongly fortified, stored with artillery, and garrisoned by 8400 men, of which 400 were horse, the Rajâh could not take it by assault in three months; at the end of which Adel Khân coming to its relief with 18,000 horse, 120,000 foot, 150 elephants, and much heavy cannon, a battle ensued. At first Khrisna Râjah was worsted; but recovering himself, he fell on with such fury, that very few escaped the sword, or captivity. Among the slain were forty Portugueses, in the service of Adel Khân, who had escaped by flight. The principal booty consisted of 4000 horses, 100 elephants, 400 great cannon, besides small, and other riches.

As Khrisna Râjah returned in a rage against Rachol, Christopher de Figueredo, with twenty Portugueses, brought some Arabian horses, in order to sell them to that prince; who falling into discourse about the siege, Figueredo, after being permitted to view the place, undertook to reduce it: accordingly, in the second assault, being backed by the king, the city was forced. Khrisna, puffed up with this victory, when Adel Khân's officers came to beg the booty taken in the former battle, he answered, that it should be restored, provided Adel Khân would come and kiss his foot, as supreme lord of the empire of Kanâra. This base condition was accepted, but the execution prevented by several accidents^m.

AFTER this we met with no dispute between the two kings for many years. At length, about 1558, a Portuguese, of the city Meliapûr, or St. Thomas, on the coast of Choremandel (one of those, saith our author, who worship their interest, more religiously than the heathens do their idols; and of these, adds he, there are many in the Indies), persuaded Râma Râjah, then king of Bisnâgar, to march against that city; telling him, the plunder would be worth two millions; and that it would be of great service to the images in the pagods, which were there thrown down by the Christians. He was a good Christian, says De Faria, who was so zealous for idols (B). The king hearkening to the hopes of gain, set forward with 500,000 men. Peter de Atayde encouraged the inhabitants to defend themselves; but they, to palliate their fear, said,

^m DE FARIA, vol. i. p. 236, & seqq.

(B) The Romanists say the images of all other saints but their own are idols; altho' there is no difference either in the manufacture or the worship.

A. D. 1558. It was but reason that the king should be admitted to what was his own. Upon this answer, Atayde went away to Goa; and the townsmen, preparing for the king's reception, sent him a present of 4000 ducats, wherewith he was somewhat appeased. He encamped, and would not enter the city, but ordered all the inhabitants of both sexes, with all their effects, to be brought into his presence; which being done, he found that the whole value of their substance did not exceed 80,000 ducats. Enraged at the wickedness of the informer, the king ordered him to be thrown to the elephants, who tore him in pieces. After which he dismissed the citizens, and restored all their goods so punctually, that only a silver spoon happening to be missing, it was sought for, and returned to the ownerⁿ.

Bīsnāgar
attacked,
A. D.
1565.

and destroyed,

BISNAGAR was about this time resorted to by merchants from all parts, as being the greatest, if not the only mart for diamonds, in the east. Its riches were equal to its great extent. This happy state of the kingdom exciting the jealousy of the kings of Dekān, namely, Nezamō'muluk, Adel Shāh, and Kothb Shāh (C), they entered into a league to suppress it: for this purpose they took the field with 50,000 horse, and 300,000 foot. The king of Bīsnāgar (D) met them with double that number, and had the better at first; but fortune changing to the other side, he lost his life, at the age of ninety-six; and the enemy became victorious. They spent five months in plundering the capital, although the inhabitants had, in three days time, carried away 1550 elephants, loaded with money and jewels to the amount of above one hundred millions of gold; beside the royal chair for state days, whose price could not be estimated. For all this, Adel Shāh found a diamond, as big as an ordinary egg, on which the feather of the late king's horse used to be fixed; likewise a second, of an extraordinary size, tho' not so large as the first; besides other jewels, of an incredible value. After the aged Rājah's misfortune, the kingdom of Bīsnāgar was divided among his sons and nephews. This dissolution of the monarchy proved extremely hurtful to trade, which, in that year, was reduced to a very low ebb^o.

ⁿ DE FARIA, p. 194, & seqq.

^o DE FARIA, p. 252, & seqq.

(C) Cæsar Frederic makes four confederate kings, Dial Viridi.

Cur (or Adel Khān), Zamaluc (D) Named Rama Rājah; (or Nezām al Muluk), Coṭoma- the same, doubtless, who attacked Meliāpūr.

SUCH

A. D.

1567.

by the De-kan kings.

SUCH is De Faria's account of this great revolution, which happened in 1565 : but Caspar Frederic, who was at Bisnâgar two years after, that is, in 1567, is more particular ; and besides, relates it with different circumstances. According to this author, Bezenegher, or Bisnâgar, was attacked by four kings, Viridi being joined to the three before-mentioned. Yet was not their success owing to their power, but to the treachery of two of Râma Râjah's chief commanders, who were Mohammedans, and had each under his power seventy or eighty thousand men : for after the battle had continued near four hours, they went over to the enemy ; which so astonished the rest of the king's army, that they immediately fell into disorder, and took to flight. On this news, the inhabitants of Bisnâgar abandoned that city, and the four kings entered it in great triumph. They stayed there six months, searching all places for plunder, and then withdrew, as not being able to keep so large a kingdom in their hands.

RAMA RAJAH was not the lawful sovereign, but an Revolution usurper, who held the rightful king in prison. He, with there. his two brothers, Timi Râjah, and Bengâter, were commanders under the former king ; who dying thirty years before (E), and leaving his son very young, the three brothers seized the government ; Râma Râjah assumed the title of king ; Timi Râjah undertook to manage the affairs of state ; and Bengâter was made chief general of the army. As for the king, they kept him prisoner, and only shewed him to the people once every year. These brothers were all in the late battle ; from which Timi Râjah only escaped, with the loss however of one of his eyes. Upon the defeat, the wives and children of the three Tyrants fled from Bisnâgar, together with the prisoner king. Afterwards Timi Râjah returning to the city, began to repeople it. He likewise sent to invite the merchants at Goa, and other places, to bring him horses, promising to pay a good price for them ; but when, by this means, he had drawn together as many as he could, he dismissed the owners, without giving them any thing for their cattle.

IN 1567, the king, displeased with Bisnâgar, on account New troubles. of the late misfortune, removed with his court, to reside at Penegonda (F), a castle eight days journey farther within

(E) This will fall in the year 1535. 31 leagues distant, on a river which falls into the Krishna, the

(F) Or Penowkonda, as in the northern boundary of Karnâta ; Jesuits map of the peninsula : according to which, it lies to Nabâb, or Mogol viceroy. the south-east of Bisnâgar, about land. We learn nothing more concerning the affairs of Bishnâgar from Cæsar Frederic, excepting that the son of Temî Râjah put to death the lawful king, with design to remove all obstacles to the throne; but that the grandees would not acknowledge him for king. Hence arose great distractions; so that in a little time the country became divided among many princes, who set-up for sovereigns^P.

A. D.
1597.

Kingdom
at rest.

NOTWITHSTANDING this, in 1597, we find the provinces of Bishnâgar united again under one king, named Wentakapati. Whether he was of the race of the former kings, or the founder of a new dynasty, we know not: all we learn from authors is, that he kept his court at Chandegri (G), a city situate within land, exceedingly strong by nature, and defended by a castle built in the midst of it, so that it was reckoned impregnable; that his ancestors reigned as far as Gisa and cape Komori; but that lately the Naiks of Travankor, Madûra, Tanjaor, and Jinji, had thrown off his yoke^Q.

Is invaded anew.

FROM this time nothing of moment occurs in authors, relating to the affairs of Bishnâgar, till the entire ruin of that large monarchy, which happened about the middle of the last century. In order to explain the occasion of this great revolution, it will be necessary to look back to the affairs of Dekan, and see what was doing on that side. The descendants of the three kings, Nezâm Shâh, Adel Shâh, and Kothb Shâh, so often before-mentioned, maintained their possession so long as they preserved a friendly union, and assisted one another against the Mogols, who frequently made war upon them. But when that good understanding began to cease, they soon found the bad effects of their divisions: for their potent enemies watching their opportunity, about the year 1627 (H); possessed themselves, within a short time, of all the

^P CÆSAR FREDERIC'S voy. ap. Purchas, vol. ii. p. 1704, & seqq. ^Q Epist. de Reb. Japan & Indic. ab HAYO. Collect. p. 774, 803, & seqq.

(G) So written by the Portugueses; by the Italians, Giandegri; it is also written Chandegri by some. In the Jesuits Epistles, p. 770 and 836, it is said to be only three miles distant from a famous pagod called Tripeti, seated on a hill. This we judge to be the place named in the Jesuits map Tivropati, about 27 leagues west-north-west of Fort St. George, in which neighbourhood Chandegri appears to have been.

(H) Bernier says 35 or 40 years before the time he wrote; which brings it to about the year mentioned in the text: but the provinces of Tillingana (or Talinga), and Buglana (or Buglani), were taken by Shâh Jehân; and, consequently, some years later.

A. D.
1650.

the country belonging to Nezâm Shâh (I), the fifth or sixth descendant of the first slave^r; containing the provinces of Balagât, Telenga and Bâglana^s, and at length took him prisoner in Dowlat abâd, his capital, where he died (K). As this misfortune was owing to the envy of the other two kings, who refused to assist him, they were not long without the punishments due to their bad conduct: for some years after, Aureng Zîb, third son of Shâh Jehân, being made governor of Balagât, that prince invaded the territories of Adel Shâh, king of Vizîapûr, who immediately applied to the king of Biznâgar for succour. But that Râjah neglecting to furnish his ally with troops, the Mogols took from the latter Bider, Parânda, and other considerable cities. This so exasperated Adel Shâh, that, making peace with Aureng Zîb in 1650, he entered into a league with the king of Golkonda against him of Biznâgar, whom they vigorously attacked, and at last stripped of his dominions. Kothb Shâh seized the provinces along the coast of Choromandel, while Adel Shâh, having taken what lay next to him, pursued his conquests; seized Vclûr, then the capital city, with Jenji (or Jinji), and several other towns of Karnâta, as far as Porto Novo, and cape Nega Patan. As for the unfortunate Râjah, he fled into the mountains, where he remained in 1667, when our author, Thevenot, was on his travels^u. Thus was an end put to the kingdom of Biznâgar, which about twenty years after fell under the power of the Mogols, by the conquest which Aureng Zîb made of the kingdoms of Vizîapûr and Golkonda. and quite destroyed.

^r BERNIER, part 2, p. 160.
ch 2. p. 91.
Trav. part 3. p. 92, & seq. TAVERNIER, part 2. p. 66. BERNIER, part 2, p. 171.

^s THEV. Trav. third part,
^u THEV.

later. As Dowlet abâd is the capital of Balagât, so these three provinces must have belonged to Nizâm Shâh.

(I) Thevenot erroneously gives the title of Nezâm Shâh to the king of Vizîapûr; and, what is worse, assigns that of Adel Shâh, a Mohammedan title, to the Râjah of Biznâgar, who was a heathen.

(K) Fryer, agreeable to what we gather from other authors, makes Nezâm Shâh to have reigned in the countries between Vizîapur, Golkonda, and the Mogols empire; and, says Aureng Zîb put an end to his race, in return for the hospitable reception he gave him at Jeneab, when he repaired thither, under the colour of a Fakîr, and one who had been banished from court. The doctor adds, that he saw at Jeneab the sumptuous palace which Nizâm Shâh had built for that prince's reception.

Province
Balagât.

C H A P. II.

Of the Countries comprised in the Kingdom of Dekan, or Dekkan.

S E C T. I.

Describing Bâglâna, Balagât, and Telenga.

Division
of Dekan.

FROM what has been said in the former chapter, it appears, that the kingdom of Dekan, Dakan, or Dukkan, as it is variously pronounced, comprehended properly no more than the four large provinces of Baglâna, Balagât, Telenga, and Viziapûr, as it was before the destruction of the empire of Bishnâgar, in the last century. Although some authors, without sufficient authority, include Golkonda, and even Oria or Orisba, with the countries as far as Bengâl and the Ganges. The three first of the four provinces may be comprised under the general name of Balagât, as they lay to the north of the mountain Gâte: for Balagât, as hath been already observed, signifies the tramontane provinces, or those beyond the mountains. This northern part was likewise by much the larger or more considerable of the two; and therefore its kings, stiled Nizâm Shâh, were called kings of Dekan, till it was conquered by the Great Mogol Shâh Jêhân; after which that title was given to the kings of Viziapûr, who possessed the remaining part of Dekan; while the Mogols, with more right, added the crown of Dekan to their other titles, as having subdued the larger half of it. This being premised, we shall give our readers some account of each province in particular.

Province
of Balagât.

THE province of Balagât, properly so called, is largest of the three which composed the northern Dekan. It has Khândîsh and Berar, in the Mogol's empire, to the north; Tellinga, to the east; Bâglâna, with part of Guzerât, to the west; and Viziapûr to the south. This province, since it fell into the hands of the Mogols, has taken the name of Drolet abâd, from its former capital. It is a fruitful pleasant country, abounding with cotton and sugar. The chief city at present, called Aureng abâd, is very great; yet has no walls. The governor, who is commonly a prince, resides there, as did Aureng Zib in the time of his father. The houses are mostly of free stone, and pretty high, with pleasant gardens, and trees planted before the doors. They have sheep here without horns, and so strong, as, when bridled and saddled, to carry carry boys ten years old. This is a great trading town, and well peopled, with excellent ground about it^a.

Province
Tillinga.

DOLT A' B A D (or Dowlte abâd) is two leagues and a half northward of Aureng abâd; and was the capital of Balagât, before the Mogols conquered it. It belonged to Dekan (A), and was a place of great trade, which Aureng Zib removed to the present metropolis. The city is pretty big, much longer than broad, extending from east to west. It is walled with free stone, and has battlements and towers, mounted with cannon. It is reckoned the strongest place in all Hindûstân, on account of an oval hill within the town, which is strongly fortified; being invironed at the bottom with a wall of natural rock, defended by three forts, and having at top a good citadel, with the king's palace. These fortifications make the Indians deem the place impregnable.

Dowlet
abâd.

THREE hours march from Delt abâd are the famous pagods of Elora, standing in a plain about two leagues square. In this space there are a great number of tombs, chapels, and spacious temples, full of pillars and pilasters; with many thousand figures, all extremely well cut out of the natural rock, and polished. It is a stupendous work, surpassing in appearance human force; and to be admired by Europeans, although the architecture and sculpture be not so delicate as with us. There is a famous pagod on the road to Golkonda, between the towns of Indâr and Indelvay: it is called Chitanâgar, or the lady Chita, because dedicated to Chita, the wife of Râm (one of the Indian saints or demigods). It is built with a kind of Theban stone, and has a lovely frontispiece, adorned with figures of men and animals in relievo, as finely sculpted as if they had been done in Europe^b.

Pagod of Elora.

TELENGA, Tillinga, or Tillingâna, lies on the east of Ballagât Proper, south of Berar, and west of Golkonda, having also Golkonda and Ballagât on the north. It was formerly the principal province of Dekan, and reached as far as the Portuguese lands towards Goa: but since the Great Mogol became master of the northern parts of this country, with the towns of Beder and Kalion, it has been divided between him and the king of Dekan; who is only stiled king of Viziapûr (or Vijapûr), and is reckoned among the provinces of Hindûstân. It has on the east Golkonda, on the west Baglâna and Viziapûr, on the north Balagât, and on the south Bishnâgar.

Tillingâ-na, or Telenga.

^a THEVENOT, ubi supr p. 72.

^b Ibid. p. 76—79.

(A) Vanden Broecke, who was at Delt abâd in 1617, says it was then the capital of Dekan.

Province
Bâglâna.

THE capital at present is Beder (or Bedr), which did belong to Balagât when it had kings, and for sometime to Dekan. This is a great city, encompassed with brick walls, which have battlements and towers, mounted with huge cannon, some three feet wide in the bore. Here is commonly a garrison of 3000 horse and foot, with 700 gunners, as being a frontier against Dekan. The governor lodges in a castle without the town, and makes a considerable advantage of his post. The Hindûs are no-where more superstitious than in this province. It has a particular language, called the Telenga, which some make the same with the Kanâri.

Bâglâna.

B A G L A N A, or Buglâna, has on the north Guzerât and Ballagât, on the east this last province, and on the south and west that part of Viziapûr called Konkan, belonging to the Mâharâtas. It ends in a point, at the sea-coast between Daman and Balsera. It is the least of all the provinces of which the Mungl empire consists; and its capital is called Mouler. The Portuguese territories begin in this province at the port of Daman, twenty-one leagues south of Surât; and run along the coast by Bassaim, Bombay (now belonging to the English), and Chawl, to Dabûl, almost fifty leagues to the north of Goa. In this province, as in the rest of Dekan, they marry their children at four or five years of age, and suffer them to bed when the boy is ten and the girl eight: but the females who have children so young give over conceiving at thirty, and grow extremely wrinkled^b.

S E C T. II.

Kingdom of Visapûr, or Vifiapûr, described.

Kingdom
of Vizia-pûr.

THE kingdom of Vizapûr (B), called by the Mogols Bijapûr, is bounded on the east by Karnâta, from which it is separated by the mountains of Gâte, or a branch thereof; on the west by the sea, on the north by the provinces of Baglâna and Balagât, and on the south by Karnâta and the kingdom of Kanâra. These were its bounds before the destruction of the empire of Bisnâgar in 1667, which became divided between its king and him of Golkonda, by a line drawn from the borders of Vizapûr, south-eastward, to the coast of Choromandel, north of Porto Novo; which fell to the share of Adel Shâh, with the coast to cape Negapatan. With-

^b THEVENOT, ubi sup. p. 180, & seqq.

(B) It is variously written, or pronounced, Viziapore, Visapore, Viciapore, Vijapûr, and the like.

in land he had Velour, then the capital of Karnâta; Jinji, Geogra- and other considerable cities; his dominions being bounded ply, cities.
 on the south by the Naik of Madûra. After the extinction of the kingdom of Nezâm Shâh, who reigned in the Balagât provinces, the title of king of Dekan passed to him, as being possessed of all which remained of it: but by the removal of that barrier, through the neglect of him, and the king of Golkonda, his power daily declined, and the Mogols gained ground, till at length they became masters of Viziapûr in 1685.

THE capital of this country is the city of Viziapûr (C), The capi- from whence the kingdom took its name. It is about four tal city.
 or five leagues in compass, fortified with a double wall, on which are many cannon mounted, and a flat-bottomed ditch.
 The king's palace is in the middle of the town, and is vast, encompassed likewise with a ditch, full of water, wherein are some crocodiles. To the city belong several large suburbs, full of goldsmiths and jewellers shops; yet it hath but little trade, and not many things worth notice. Besides this capital, there are many other considerable cities in the kingdom, with three or four ports; namely; Dabul, Râjâhpûr, Kara- patân, and Vingûrla c.

THE coast of Visapûr, or, if you will, of Konkan (which makes the western part of Visapûr), is in a manner divided between the Portugueses and the Hindû states, lately erected in those quarters. About four miles south of the river Seragoung, which separates them from the Great Mogol's dominions, lies Damân, twenty-two leagues south of Surât. This city was City of formerly a place of good trade, but latterly was reduced to Damân.
 poverty. It belonged to the Portugueses till about the year 1740, when it fell, with the rest of their possessions between Surât and Goa, into the hands of the Mâharâttas or Marats.
 It stands at the mouth of a river, about three quarters of a mile from the sea-shore; and is naturally very strong, by a deep marsh which surrounds it. It is about half a mile long, and near as broad, surrounded with a good stone wall. The houses are built of the same materials. The streets are not paved; but very strait, and all very neat. It had six churches, a convent, monastery, nunnery, and an hospital; also a fort, on the opposite side of the river, garrisoned with 400 men;
 of which the Portugueses were more careful than of any other

c THEVENOT, ibid. p. 92. TAVERN. part ii. p. 72.

(C) Situated on the river 17° 30'. P. Bouhet ap. Latt.
Ménâua; and in the latitude of 1 dis. tom. xv. p. 58.

Geography, they had in the Indies. It was always a great eyefore to the cities.

governors of Surât; who often besieged it, but without success; although the Mogol army was at one time 40,000 strong^d.

Trapor and Bassaim. FROM Damân to Bassaim is about eighteen leagues: an half way lies Trapor, or Tarapor, a small but very rich city when under the Portugueses, and dependant on Damân. Bassaim is about two miles in circumference, and inclosed with a wall but its fortifications are but slight. The churches were very magnificent, the market-place large and handsome, the street clean and regular. It is divided from the island of Sâlset by an inlet of the sea, which washes the walls, and affords a harbour for small ships; but is too shallow to admit any great burden. It was a place of small trade; because most of its riches lay buried in their churches, or in the hands of indolent country gentlemen; who loitered away their days in ease, without having the least sense of the poverty and calamity of their country^e. There lived more gentry in and about this place, than at Goa itself; whence the Portuguese proverb, Fidalgos of Bassaim. In short, it was one of the most considerable places the Portuguese had^f; the governor being stiled general of the north; having had under him Diu, Damân, and Chawl, with all their territories.

Sâlset isle. THE island of Sâlset is about twenty-five miles long, and in some parts ten broad. It was stocked with villages and churches when the Portugueses had it; but has no city on it, excepting one, called Kanra, hewn out of the side of a rock with many antique figures and columns, curiously carved besides several good springs of water: but, in our author's time, it was inhabited only by wild beasts and birds of prey^g. Bandura is the most remarkable village, fronting Matrim in the island of Bombay, about a mile distant, of which mention has been elsewhere made. Passing Bombay, and some small islands in the hands of the Siddi and Konna jî Angaria, you meet with Chawl, which lies about seven leagues south-east of Bombay. The town was fortified by the Portugueses, and formerly a noted place for trade, having a river for small vessels, but latterly became miserably poor. Seven leagues still more south is Dandî Râjahpûr, a town belonging to the Siddî, who generally lies there with a fleet of the Great Mogol's vessels and ships of war, besides an army of 30 or 40,000 men. This place affords a good harbour, and the adjacent Provinces. country feeds store of black cattle, from whence the English at Bombay are mostly supplied, when they keep in good terms with the Siddi; otherwise he makes them feed on fish. There is a rock within a league northward of the mouth of the river, fortified by the Seva ji (D); as are the two little isles, called Horney Coat, opposite the river of Zeferdan.

Dandi Râjahpûr.

^d HAMILTON'S new account of East-Ind. vol. i. p. 178, & seqq. ^e DELLON'S VOY. p. 183. ^f HAMILT. ubi sup. p. 180. ^g DELLON, ubi sup. p. 187. ^h HAMILT. ubi sup.

FIVE leagues to the southward of this last place stands Dabul. Dabul, at the mouth of a large river; and, of old, was a place of trade, where the English had a factory. There is an excellent harbour, called Sangusîr, eight leagues to the south of Dabul: but the country, being inhabited by robbers, is not frequented; nor is Râjahpûr, seven leagues further down, although it has one of the best harbours in the world, and had formerly both an English and French factory settled there (E); the betillas and muslin being the finest in all India; but now there is no encouragement for such.

GHIRIA (F), the common residence of Konna jî Angaria (or Angria), lies about two leagues to the south of Râjahpûr, and is well fortified by a strong large castle, washed by the sea (G). Twelve leagues more southward is Malwan, an isle, two miles in circuit, inclosed with a stone wall. It lies about one mile from the main land, and is governed by an independent Rajah; who, with three or four grâbs, robs all he can master at sea.

VINGURLA, which lies four leagues south of Malwan, was formerly a place of trade, and the Dutch had a factory there for cloths: but, in 1696, a Rajah, called Kempason, over-ran that country; and, under pretence of visiting the chief factor, seized and plundered the factory. The trading people, for their security, fled to the Portuguese dominions

(D) That is, the successors of Seva ji. Cornwall, p. 36, says it belongs to the Siddi.

(E) It lies exactly in 17 degrees of north latitude, above four leagues up the river of the same name; which runs with a gentle stream. Our author says, the English were dislodged by the Indians. How the French came to quit it we do not find. He adds, that the chief commodities are saltpetre, calicoes, but especially pepper, which grows there in plenty. Dellon Voy. East Ind. p. 56. c. 19.

(F) Our author, Capt. Hamilton, doubts whether Ghiria be also called Vizcendruk, or lies seven leagues more southerly. But Captain Cornwall, in his observations on several India voyages, p. 36, makes them the same place.

(G) Karapatan, or Careptam, as in our charts, lies about three leagues to the south of Râjahpûr river.

Prouinces. of Goa, which lie within six leagues of Vingurla; and, on Sunda. the viceroy's refusing to send them back, entered his territories, and burnt as well as plundered whatever came in his way, not sparing the churches and images; for which sacrilege the Portugueses gave him the name of Kema Santo, or St. Burner: and, after bearing his inroads for many years, were obliged to buy a peace, by allowing him a pension. His army consisted of 7 or 8000 men, and he had two piratical grâbs at sea: but having a dispute, about a prize, with Konna jî Angria, this latter, who was much superior in power, burnt his grâbs; and, landing at Vingurla, destroyed the villages about the townⁱ.

Country of Sundah.

Country of Sundah. SOUTH of the Portuguese territories, which end at Cape de Rama, or Cape Ramus (as the English call it), lies the country of the Râjah of Sunda; whose dominions extend along the coast about fifteen leagues from the said cape to Merzee (or Merzeou), and sixty or seventy leagues within land, being bounded on the south by Kanara. He is at present tributary to the Great Mogol; but was formerly feudatory to the king of Visapûr, of which Sunda was a part^k. In Fryer's time he resided at Sunda; whence the whole country took the name. It is mountainous, and lies on both sides of the Gâtti, or Gâte; maintaining then in pay 12,000 foot and 3000 horse^l.

THERE is no river or harbour for shipping till you come to Sevasîr; and that is no good one, though covered with a large castle.

Karwâr port.

KARWÂR lies seven leagues south of Cape Ramus, with a good harbour, and a river capable to receive ships of 300 tons. The English have a factory here, fortified with two bastions, and some small cannon for its defence^m. Five days journey from hence lie the pepper mountains of Sundh, producing the best pepper in the world; known in England by the name of Karwar pepper: but as the Râjah finds a trade for it up the country, at the best rates, therefore but little of it is transported into *Europe*ⁿ. Hamilton says, the vallies abound in corn and pepper, the best in all India; and the mountain-woods with many sorts of wild beasts, as tigers, ⁱ HAMILT. ubi sup. p. 243—248.

^k Ibid. p. 261.

^l FRYER Trav. p. 162, 163, 169.

^m HAMILT. ubi sup. p. 262.

ⁿ FRYER, ubi sup. p. 163.

wolves, deer, elks, monkeys, hogs, and cattle of a prodigious size. He saw a bull killed whose four quarters weighed a ton: the horns measured twenty-three inches about the roots; and the bones so large, that he took out the marrow with a common silver spoon: but the flesh is not so well tasted as that of small tame cattle.

THIS country is so famous for hunting, that, in the year 1678, two English gentlemen of distinction went thither incognito, in one of the East-India company's ships, to enjoy that diversion. There are three species of tigers in Karwar woods; the smallest, which is not above two feet high, is the fiercest, and delights much in human flesh. The second sort is about three feet high, and hunts deer and wild hogs. The largest size tiger is three feet and a half high, less rapacious than the other kinds, sooner frightened, and seldom greedy of man's flesh. One of them, after killing a buffalo, bemired in a bog, and, sucking the blood, pulled him out, and threw him over his shoulder, as a fox does a goose, and was carrying him with his feet upwards to his den; but let him fall, on seeing the people pursue him.

S E C T. III.

History of Visapûr, or Vijapûr.

THE kingdom of Visapûr had seven kings, of the Pâ-tan race, who all enjoyed the title of Adel Shâh, assumed by the founder; whose names are given us by Dr. Fryer; viz. 1. Adel Shâh. 2. Asef Adel Shâh. 3. Bissa allah Adel Shâh. 4. Ibrâhîm Adel Shâh. 5. Soltân Mahmûd Adel Shâh. 6. Allah Adel Shâh. 7. Soltân Sokodr Kawder Adel Shâh; who reigned in our author's time.

ON the death of this last prince's father, Allah Adel Shâh, the great officers were divided in their interests. It was reported, that Allah was the son of an elephant-keeper; who, on a time when the choicest of those animals were stabled near the women's quarters, to hide them from the Great Mogol's ambassador, found means to get into the apartment of Soltân Mahmûd's queen. The issue of this correspondence was Allah Adel Shâh; whom his mother, after the old king's death, settled on the throne: nor did any stir to dispute his right during his life: but, on his death, Soltân Sokodr (or ° HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 263, & seqq.

A. D.
1675.

Disfrac-tions in Visiapur.

Sekânder), being an infant (H), some of the children of Soltân Mahmûd raised forces, to oppose his succession. However, after several hot disputes, the factions were suppressed by Kowis Khân, who by the late king had been appointed protector of the kingdom. This lord, who was an Hebshi, or Arabian (I) Kafir, kept Seva ji in no small awe. However, the nobles, who held their provinces as feudatories, or rather vassals, of him, taking advantage of the king's minority, began to withdraw their allegiance.

KOWIS KHÂN, though an excellent commander, yet being addicted to wine, the dissaffected laid to his charge not only all miscarriages in the government, but also the loss of the country, which had been over-run by Seva ji. Bullul Khân, the general, was indeed sent to oppose that rebel, and was able to have put a stop to the growing mischief: but the Pâtan envying the authority of Kowis Khân, he lets the enemy proceed without opposition; and, impatient to usurp his post, soon after he had been called from the expedition, basely murdered him. To effect this he invited that minister to a treat in his tent, where he took care to ply him with liquor till he became drunk, and fell asleep. Then Bullul Khân, surprising his few followers with 12,000 Pâtans, forced his way into the castle, and seized the young king: after which he put Kowis Khân to death, and usurped the government of affairs. However, being no less envied by the Dukkan princes, than his predecessors had been envied by him, he watched their motions, and hindered them from joining their forces. Mean time Viziapûr was in the utmost danger of being ruined; for, besides the factions, which tore the state to pieces within, the kingdom was threatened without by Seva ji on one side, and a great army of Mogols on the other. This happened about the year 1675, when the young king was scarce ten years old. The new protector endeavoured to gain the interest of the great lords; but to no purpose, so long as he refused to resign his power ^P.

^P FRYER'S Travels, p. 147. 167, 168.

(H) Other authors say, that, being an orphan, the late king and his queen adopted him for their son: that the king before his death caused him to be proclaimed; but, being an infant, the queen was proclaimed regent: and, having made peace with Seva ji, went to Mekka;

from whence she returned in 1664. See Therrenot Trav. Ind. p. 92. Tavern. p. 72.

(I) These Kafirs were preferred to the chief employments, under the title of Siddis; and only in Viziapûr arrived to great preferments, as being the frizzled woolly-pated Blacks.

SEVA

SEVA JI, taking advantage of the times, sends a detachment, under his son Samba ji, from his army at Pundit before Goa; which, marching through the country, proceeded as far as Bâghnâgur, capital of Golkonda, plundered and burnt that city: but, as Bullul Khân watched his motions, he did no harm to Viziapûr. At the same time Seva ji himself, with another detachment, advanced to Surât; which gave him the usual pishkush, or present. On his return he treacherously seized on the Rajah of Râmnâgar's territories in the mountains, through which he obtained leave to pass; and returned a bold answer to Bullul Khân, who had sent to demand a reason for his proceedings. The Khân, foreseeing from thence that a storm was gathering against him, took the field to prevent it; and, surprising Serji Khân (Rajah of Sunda), and Timi Naig, general of Kanâra, who were going to join the Dukkanefes, the first fled, and the latter was trodden to death in the confusion, after most of his forces had been slain by the pedereros, carried on the war-camels.

A. D.
1680.

Seva ji's
successes.

THESE auxiliaries were to have been seconded by Badur Mogols Khân, the Mogol general, who, some time afterwards appeared twice before Viziapûr, with a formidable army; pretending to support the rights of the Dukkanefes, and call Bullul Khân to an account. But he was both times repulsed by the protector, at the head of 12,000 Pâtans; who the last time forced him to leave his Hâsuah, or military chest, with 1000 camels, some elephants, and several pieces of ordnance. There were likewise slain 4 or 5000 Mogols, with the Bashâ of Bufferah, and his son, whose heads were put on poles, and set up on the city walls⁹.

FROM this time we meet with nothing remarkable concerning the affairs of Viziapûr for near twenty years, excepting what relates to the proceedings of Seva ji; who, by degrees extended his power in that country. At length, Pan Naik, a Rajah, relying on the strength of his country, as being situated among twenty-seven inaccessible mountains, called Set-tais Pale, in which there are villages and cultivated lands, took up arms also, in order to shake off the Viziapurian yoke. At this juncture Aureng Zib, who for a long time had an eye towards the conquest of this kingdom, seeing the forces of the kingdom, amounting to 30,000 horse, and as many foot, employed against those rebels, laid hold of the opportunity; and, under pretence that the king had given Seva ji (K)

⁹ FRYER'S Trav. p. 163, & seq.

(K) Seva ji died in 1680; so that his successor must here be understood.

A. D.
1685.

passage through his country (which yet he could not have hindered had the other attempted it), besieged the city of Viziapûr (L). This capital was valiantly defended by Siddi Manjutu (M), a Black, who governed during the king's minority : but at length, in 1685 (N), it was taken, with the castle, and the king, named Sikânder (or Sekânder), carried away prisoner : to whom however the conqueror allowed a million of rupis a year for his maintenance. Our author Gemelli saw this prince the same year at Aurang Zîb's camp (O). He was a sprightly person, about twenty-nine (P) years of age (Q), of a good stature and olive complexion^r.

Power of the lords.

THE ruin of Viziapûr was in a great measure owing to the privilege of inheritance, which the lords enjoyed, contrary to the custom observed in other countries of the Indies : for in Dûkkan, the lands descended from father to son among the nobility, although the common people were mere slaves. They built forts, made peace and war, fell-out with one another, and with their king, at pleasure : in short, were restrained only from raising men in his name, and for his use. This made them insolent and stubborn, so that it was difficult to get them to unite for the common good ; and many times they sided with the enemies of their country.

How checked.

IN some measure to balance the power of his lords, the king of Viziapûr bought Kafirs, or Blacks, whom he educated,

^r GEMELLI Trav. ap. Church. collect. vol. iv. p. 148.

(L) Hamilton says, he had an army of 3 or 400,000 men, and soon conquered the open country ; but the city being built on a flat mountain, of difficult access, and room enough to sow corn on it, it took him up a blockade of seven or eight years to reduce it. Hamilton, new Account of the East-Ind. vol. i. p. 262.

(M) The same, probably, whom Fryer calls Siddi Masure (or Masûd).

(N) This is the true year, not 1695 ; in or about which year Viziapûr was conquered, according to Draams ; and Golconda quickly after, as will be observed hereafter.

(O) It is likely that this prince was but newly conquered, and had not been yet out of Viziapûr : for if he had been once carried into the Mogol's dominions, it is hardly to be supposed that he would ever have been brought back into those which were lately his own.

(P) That was in 1685 ; which agrees not very well with Fryer's account ; who says, that, in 1675, the king was scarce ten years old.

(Q) According to Captain Hamilton, he was a good simple prince ; whom the conqueror carried in triumph, along with his victorious army, near the space of thirty years ; at the end of which he died.

and,

and, according to their merit, promoted to the chief places of honour and trust, in the same manner as the king of Golkonda made use of eunuchs, who were his slaves. By this policy the lords were partly kept in awe; and, if at any time they who raised disturbances fell into his hands, he not only cut-off their heads, but confiscated their estates, and gave them to his favourites; which bound them still stronger to his interest^s.

A. D.

1650.

C H A P. III.

The History of Seva ji, and the Mâharâttas.

SEVA ji was descended from an antient line of Râjahs, His birth; of the warlike tribe of the Bounseles. His grandfather, named Vangu ji Râjah, and his father, Shâh ji Râjah, were both in esteem under Nishâm Shâh, king of Dukkan, by whom the latter was made governor of Jengab Gur; where he had two sons, Seva ji (R) and Samba ji, by his first wife; and by his second, a third son, called Ekorw ji. On the downfall of Nishâm Shâh (which happened in 1650), Shâh ji Râjah and his two younger sons put themselves into the service of the king of Viziapûr, who gave them considerable employments, which they held in 1675, when our author was in India.

As for Seva ji, he, being of a turbulent nature, sought to restless raise himself by the ruin of others; setting the lesser lords at spirit; variance with their prince, and sharing in the spoils of those who were defeated. For this reason his father disinherited him (S), and at his death settled his youngest son Ekorw ji in the Râjahship of Benglûr, which yet was of no great value, having suffered much in the troubles of Dukkan.

^s FRYER, ubi sup. p. 167.

(R) Thevenot says, he was born at Bazeim, then belonging to the Portugueses: and, as the same author makes him thirty-five years of age when he plundered Surât in 1664, he must have been born in 1629. See Thev. Trav. Ind. part iii. chap. 16.

(S) According to Thevenot he rebelled in his father's life-time; and keeping the mountains with the robbers and debauched young men, who followed him, could not be reduced by the forces sent to attack him. The king, suspecting that his father held intelligence with him, caused him to be arrested; and he dying in prison, his son was so incensed that he resolved to be revenged. In a little time after, he plundered part of Viziapûr.

A. D.
1650.

deceives
Abdol
Khân ;

and kills him.

Attempts Panala,

and Viziapur.

THE king of Viziapûr, observing the aspiring genius of Seva ji, with an intent to blast him in the bud, sent a potent army against him, conducted by Abdol Khân, an experienced foldier. As soon as Seva ji understood that this general had taken the field, while the main body of his army was at a distance, he sent him flattering messages ; intimating withal, that, in case the Khân would stop his march, he would meet him at a certain chowlttri, and kiss his feet. Abdol Khân, believing him sincere, contrary to the intreaty of his friends, at the day appointed, set out with his son and a select number of his men to the rendezvous ; near which Seva ji had placed an ambuscade, and with a few attendants waited the general's coming. As soon as Seva ji perceived him at a distance, he advanced, and falling at his feet, with feigned tears, craved pardon for his offence ; nor would rise till Abdol Khân had promised to intercede for him. After this, as they were going to enter the chowlttri together, he cries out, that his lord, so he stiled the general, might possibly take away his life. Hereupon Abdol Khân, to remove all suspicion, delivers his sword and poniard to his page, and bids Seva ji enter with courage. The treacherous Dukkanese entered accordingly ; and, after some discourse, watching his opportunity, slips a dagger from under his coat-sleeve, and strikes it to the heart of the general. At the same time, the signal being given, his men came from their ambuscade : on which a skirmish ensued, wherein Seva ji received a wound from the son of Abdol Khân : but the latter with difficulty escaped, in disguise, to the camp, when the foldiers were so dismayed with the news of the disaster, that they immediately dispersed.

SEVA JI, elated with this success, resolves not to return till he had sacked Panala, one of the most strong and wealthy cities : but, finding much opposition from the garrison, tho' small, he sends 7 or 800 of his men, as deserters to the city, to complain of his barbarity, and offer their service. This offer was accepted ; and they were set to defend the walls, while the citizens themselves guarded the gates. But one night the pretended deserters received the enemy under covert of the trees, which were planted along the ditch ; and, having opened the gates, let in the rest of Seva ji's forces, who cut down the trees, to prevent their doing the like mischief to themselves !

MEAN time the son of Abdol Khân, being reinforced with new troops, joins Rustam Jemina, another general, in order to revenge his father's death : But Seva ji having gained Rustam, by a sum of money, whose influence the most loyal of those people are not able to resist, when the two armies were ready to give battle, that general withdrew with his cavalry, leaving his colleague with but a few forces to the mercy of his enemy. For all this, young Abdol fell on like a lion; calling out, thou coward, Seva, here am I. But Seva did not go near him; saying, he is a rash youth, let somebody else kill him. Abdol broke through the enemy two or three times; till, being tired, he founded a retreat, and hastened to Vizia-pûr, to complain of Rustam's treachery. This general with some of his friends went over to Seva ji; advising him to follow his blow, and set upon the capital itself; which he did, and would have taken it, had not Siddi Jor come to its relief with a vast recruit.

UPON this Seva ji retires to Panala, whither he is pursued by the Siddi, who closely besieges the place: but after he had lain a long time before it, Seva ji, by his connivance (as it was thought), stole out by night, and, by means of a false fîrman, gets possession of the Siddi's town of Râjapûr; pretending that the Siddi was to surrender it in exchange for Panala. On this general's return to Vizia-pûr, the king dissimulated his resentment for letting that traitor escape, and dismissed him with thanks: but, having made Bullul Khân commander in chief, he dispatches him after the Siddi; who, suspecting his design, attacks and puts him to flight. Upon this the king takes the field with his general; who did by fraud what he could not effect by force: for the night after the two armies were in view, the Omrâs, who were with the Siddi, forsaking him, he was slain, and his head brought to the king, without any more strokes given on either side.

SEVA JI, being thus delivered from an enemy whom he was not able to cope with, he, at his leisure, seizes on smaller places, such as Dande Râjapûr; whose prince being forced out of his possessions, excepting the strong castle at that town, which is encompassed by the sea, but within shot of the land, applied to the Great Mogol for his protection. Hereupon that monarch assisted him with succours by sea, which enabled the castle to hold out against the batteries of the enemy (T).

DURING these transactions the king of Vizia-pûr dies (U), and makes and leaves an infant to dispute for the throne. The queen, peace.

* FRYER's Trav. p. 172, & seq

(T) When Fryer wrote, in 1676, Seva ji had lain before the castle 15 years.

(U) This must have been about 1663, or 1664.

who

A. D.
1663.

who became regent, did all she could to reduce Seva ji to duty; but, her endeavours proving unsuccessful, she accepted of the peace which he proposed to her. After which she lived at rest.

*Invades
the Mo-
gols.*

MEAN time Seva ji, who could not be out of action, plundered some places belonging to the Great Mogol, Aureng Zib; which obliged that monarch to send forces against him, under the conduct of Shafta (or Shâh Hesh) Khân, his uncle, who was governor of Aureng abâd. Shafta Khan's forces being much superior to those of Seva ji, he vigorously pursued him; but as he was very vigilant, and his retreat was always in the mountains, the Khân could not surprise him. However, that experienced general resolved to continue with his troops on Seva's territories; concluding, that his turbulent spirit would at length oblige him to make some false step. This patience of Shafta Khân, being very irksome to Seva ji, he had recourse to a stratagem. He ordered one of his captains to write to the Mogol commander, offering to go over to his master's service, and carry with him 500 men, who were under his command. This was done with so much art, that at length Shafta Khân, believing the officer sincere, gave him leave to come to the Mogol camp.

*Almost
surprised.*

THE pretended deserter, by reviling Seva ji, and ravaging his lands with greater fury than any other, gained so far at length on the good opinion of Shafta Khân, that he made him captain of his guards. But, some time after, being appointed to be upon guard on a certain night at the general's tent, he sent word to Seva ji; who repaired thither at the time appointed. Shafta Khân, awaking with the noise, flew to his arms, and was wounded in the hand (X). However, he made a shift to escape; but a son of his was slain: and Seva ji, thinking that he had killed the general himself, gave the signal to retreat. This he did in good order, carrying off the Khân's treasure, and his daughter, who was treated with the greatest respect, and afterwards sent back, on payment of the ransom demanded. He wrote afterwards to Shafta Khân, desiring him to withdraw off his lands, for that otherwise he should certainly lose his life, by the stratagems which he continually formed against him.

(X) Bernier says, this attempt to seize and carry off the Khân was made in the city of Aureng abâd; and that this bold and enterprising lord gave Shâh Hesh

Khân more trouble in Dekan, than all the forces of the king of Visiapûr. Mem. Mogol Emp. part ii. p. 149.

A. D.
1664.Seva's
march;

THE KHÂN, not thinking it prudent to slight such advice, informed Aureng Zib that it was impossible to force Seva ji in the mountains, without ruining his troops; and received orders to withdraw, under pretence of a new enterprize. Mean time Seva, pursuing his resolution of revenge against the Great Mogol, in 1664, formed a design to plunder Surât; which he knew at that time to be full of riches. As his territories lay chiefly in the mountains on the road between Basfaim and Chawul, he divided his forces into two bodies, each of which encamped near one of those cities. Then, having ordered his commanders not to plunder, but pay for every thing they had, he departed, in the habit of a Fakîr, for Surât. In that disguise he observed every part of it at leisure, and returned to his army; from whence, being followed by 4000 men, he marched back, with all the secrecy he could, and encamped near Brâmpûr gate. To amuse the governor, who sent to know his business, he demanded guides, under pretence of marching to another place (Y): but that lord, without giving him any answer, retired into the castle, with his effects, and sent for assistance on all hands; while most of the inhabitants in consternation fled into the country*.

HEREUPON Seva ji's men entered the city, and plundered it for four days, burning several houses. None escaped pillage, excepting the quarters of the English and Dutch; who, instead of an attack, received his compliments, seeing them so well provided with cannon. We are told likewise, that he spared the Christians at the instance of a Capuchin frier. Neither did he attempt the castle, where he knew most of the wealth of the place was lodged; because it was capable of making a vigorous defence, and he was afraid the forces of that country would gather before he could execute his design. However, it was computed that he carried away, in gold, silver, and jewels, to the value of above thirty French millions (Z).

As Jessom Seyn Râjah was suspected to have held intelligence after this with Seva ji, he was recalled from De-kan, and Jessyn sent in his room, accompanied by Soltân

* THEVENOT Trav. part iii. p. 27, & seqq. BERNIER Mem. part ii. p. 149.

(Y) Bernier says, that he spread a report on the road, that he was a Râjah going to court.

(Z) In getting this wealth, Bernier's Mem. of the Mogol Emp. part ii. p. 151.

A. D.
1666.

declared a Rajah:

Marwzm (Aureng Zib's eldest son), though without any power. This Râjah vigorously besieged Seva's principal fortresses; and, being more expert than all the rest in matters of negotiation, he so managed the business, that Seva surrendered before it came to extremities. After this, he drew him to the Great Mogol's party, against Viziapûr; whereupon Aureng Zib declared him a Rajah: and, taking him under his protection, gave the pension of a very considerable Omrâ to his son.

SOME time after (viz. in 1666), Aureng Zib, designing to make war against Persia, wrote very obliging letters to the new Râjah; wherein he extolled his generosity and abilities to such a degree (A), that, on the fifth of Jessey, he went to Dehli. But the wife of his uncle Shâh Hest Khân (who was then at court) persuaded Aureng Zib to arrest the person who had murdered her son, wounded her husband, and sacked Surât. So that one evening Seva ji saw his pavilion beset with three or four Omrâs: but he made shift to get away in the night^v. This is the account given by Bernier, with which that of Dr. Fryer agrees: but Thevenot relates the fact in a somewhat different manner. According to this author, Seva ji at first met with all imaginable caresses: but some months after, perceiving a coldness in the king's behaviour, he complained of it; and boldly told him, that he believed his intention was to put him to death, although he was come voluntarily, on the security of his royal word, to wait on him: that, however, if he perished, there were those who would revenge his death; and that, in hopes they would do so, he was resolved to die by his own hands. Then, drawing his dagger, he made an attempt to kill himself; but was hindered, and had guards set upon him.

escapes
from thence:

AURENG Zib would willingly have put him to death; but feared an insurrection of the Râjahs. They already murmured at the treatment he had received, after the promise made to him; and the rather, as most part of them came to count upon no better security. This consideration obliged the king to use him well, and make much of his son. He assured him that he never had it in his thoughts to put him to death; and promised to give him a considerable government, pro^v BERNIER, ubi sup. p. 151, & seqq.

(A) Thevenot, who places this affair in 1666, says these letters were written to ensnare him; Aureng Zib having resolved to destroy him: but Bernier, who was then at court, may be presumed to have known the circumstances better.

vided he would go with him to Kandahâr; which he intended to besiege. Seva ji pretended to consent, on condition that he might command his own forces; and having, with that grant, obtained a passport for their coming, he resolved to make use of it for withdrawing from court. Accordingly he ordered those, whom he trusted with it, to provide him horses along the road: mean time he got himself and his son to be conveyed in panniers to the river-side. As soon as they were over, mounting the horses, which were ready for them, he told the boat-man he might go and acquaint the king, that he had carried over Râjah Seva ji. They posted day and night: but the son, unable to bear the fatigue of such hard riding, died on the road. Seva left money to have his body honourably burned, and arrived in good health in his own territories. Aureng Zib was extremely vexed (B) at his escape^z; which made a great noise at court: every body accusing the eldest son of Râjah Jessyn to have assisted in it^a, as hath been already observed^b. On the other hand, Seva ji, in revenge of this usage, at his return, went and plundered Surât a second time. Afterwards he enlarged his territories southward, as far as the walls of Goa: from whence he proceeded to the borders of Kanôra and Sunda Râjah's country^c.

his son
dies:

HAVING finished this expedition, Seva ji encamps at Pundit, before Goa; where leaving the main body of his army, he detaches two bodies of troops: one he gives to his son Sam-ba ji; who marches quite through Viziapûr, as far as Bâghnâghar, the capital of Golkonda; which he plunders and burns. This done, he returned the way he went; but without doing any harm to the country: because he was observed in his passage by Bullul Khân, who was then protector as well as general of the army. However he set upon and plundered Hublay, Rabay, and other mart towns. With the second detachment, Seva ji marched to Surât, which he called his treasury; and although they shut their gates against him out of form, yet they gave him his usual pishkush, or present. As the Mogol forces possessed the plain country, he obtained leave of Râjah Râmânâgar to carry his army, in his repeated expeditions, over the hills, which reach within thirty miles of Surât. By this means, having made himself acquainted with the avenues into that Râjah's country, he, in his last

plund. rs Bâghnâgar,

seizes Râmânâ-
gar:

^z THEVENOT, ubi supr. p. 30.

^a BERNIER, ubi supr.

^b See before, p. 442.

^c FRYER, ubi supr. p. 174.

(B) Yet Fryer, with others, says it was not without his privacy.

return

A. D 1675.

return from Surât (C), seized upon it; giving only this reason for his treachery, that it was inconvenient to trust him with the door of his exchequer. The inhabitants of Râmnâgar are the savages called Kûleys.

reply to Bullul
Khân:

BULLUL Khân, being at the helm, sent to demand how he durst attempt to rob those places? O, quoth he to the messenger, go tell thy master, I wonder how he durst dispossess any great man of life, or place, without having first advised with me (D). I did this only to let him know, that I, not he, am a member of Viziapûr. The protector, foreseeing by this answer that a storm was gathering, steps forth to prevent it; and, by surprising Serji Khân, and Timi Naig, who were advancing to join Seva, broke all his measures ^d, as hath been already related ^e.

his dominions:

At this time, Seva ji was master of all Konkbon; extending along the coast from Balfore hills, a little to the south of Surât, to the river Gongola, a little to the south of Goa, the space of 250 leagues. Within land his possessions were not very great in the plains: but he had intire dominion over the Goat, or chain of mountains which are piled one upon another. Nor did the Dukkaneses attempt to retake any of his acquisitions, although he had blocked up their ports, so that they had none left them free, excepting only Porto Novo (E), beyond Tuttikori (or Tuttikorin). Neither were those which the Portugueses and English possessed of any great account to them, in respect of trade, since he hindered the Kaffilas from repairing to their ports; not more to the detriment of the Europeans than his own: whereas the profits arising from commerce would have been of infinite more service to him, than ravaging countries, and murdering the inhabitants. He had taken and maintained above sixty strong hills against the Mogols; who, not caring for such rugged places, chose rather to desert than defend them. On the other hand, as they were masters of the plains, Seva ji was unable to do any thing there, but rob from time to time, and presently retreat

infests the Mogols:

^d FRYER, p. 162, & seq.

^e See before, p. 501.

(C) About the year 1674, or 1675.

(D) This alludes to Bullul Khân's having usurped the protectorship, by the murder of Kawis Khân.

(E) This place, called by the Malabars Pirenki Potey (a), is on the coast of Choromanâel, in the kingdom of Jinji, and a factory of the Dutch, between Tranquebar and Pondisberi.

^a See Peregrin. of the Gospel in the East, by Danish Missioners, part ii. l. 1. p. 44.

to the high lands ; whence Aûreng Zib called him his mountain rat ¹.

A. D.
1678.

IN (or about) the year 1678, Seva ji marched again towards Surât ²; which motion of his so frightened the merchants, who had suffered by him formerly, that although the city was then surrounded with walls able to resist a strong force, yet they would not venture it, but fled with their wealth and families. The Râjah, ever since the time that he had so cruelly plundered Surât, considered it as under contribution to him, and came to receive the usual tribute ; while the governor taxed the Banîyans to satisfy the enemy's demands, even after the walls were built. This being represented to Aureng Zib, he, in May 1679, sent Morâd Bek, his armour-bearer, to command that city ; who the same month marched to put a stop to the incursions of Seva ji's troops, who ravaged the neighbouring places : and although Aureng Zib's eldest son (Soltân Mahmûd) advanced to Brâm-pûr with a formidable army, yet Seva ji plundered the country ; knowing that the Soltân could not break his forces to hazard a battle, till he saw how his father sped against the Râspûts ; that he might be the better able to judge what was most proper to be done, in order to promote his own designs of mounting the throne. But not long after, death delivered the Mogol monarch from this troublesome enemy ; who died on the 1st of June, 1680 ³.

marches to Surât :

A. D.
1679.

plunders the country :

his death :
A. D.
1680.

SEVA JI, as to his person, was short of stature, and of a tawny complexion ; but had very quick eyes, which indicated a great deal of wit. He usually ate only once a day, and preserved a very good state of health. If he was 35 years of age when he plundered Surât, in 1664 ⁴, it from thence follows, that he was no more than 51 when he died.

person and
character.

ON Seva ji's death, the two chief ministers were at variance about settling the succession : one was for advancing his younger son ; the other declared for Samba ji, the elder ; who, at length prevailing, was declared Maw Râjah (F), or the lawful heir to his father's conquests ⁵.

WE know very little concerning the successors of Seva ji, whom some authors speak of as living many years after his ^f FRYER, p. 170, & seq.

of Aureng Zib, p. 446.

^h FRYER, p. 412, & seqq.

ⁱ THEVENOT, ubi supr. p. 30.

^k FRYER, ubi supr. p. 416.

(F) Rather Mâba Râjah, that is, the great prince, in the Sanskrit language, or that of the Brammans.

A. D.
1683.

death (G); while others seem to give that name, or title, in common to all his descendants. Thus much, however, we learn from several hands, that, instead of losing ground, they continued to enlarge their territories on all sides.

Portuguese beroine.

IN 1683, we are told that Seva ji Râjah (by whom must be understood Samba ji, his immediate successor), got footing on the island of Goa; and, having raised some batteries against the city itself, would have annoyed it very much, had not a Portuguese heroine, in a sally, forced into a redoubt of the enemy, and cut them all to pieces: which struck such a terror into the Râjah's army, that they quitted their posts and fled. The lady, named Donna Maria, received the pay of a captain ever after (H) that noble exploit; which was not the first she had achieved: for a gentleman, who had promised her marriage, having deserted her, and passed to India in quality of a captain, thinking that way to avoid her resentment, she followed him thither in man's apparel; and, when she had found him out, challenged him at sword and pistol. But he prudently chose to make up the quarrel by marriage, rather than put the matter to an issue; which, whatever turn it took, could not but end in his disgrace¹.

Seva ji's
successors:

THESE Râjahs continued to invade their neighbours by turns; nor does it appear, that they lost any thing by the conquest which Aureng Zib made of Viziapûr, about 1685: for although this monarch is said to have subdued that kingdom, which he in effect put an end to, yet in reality not much above half the country fell by that means into his possession: for the successor of Seva ji was then master of the western part from the mountains of Balagât to the sea (I), while other Râjahs kept the parts which they had before seized. And although by degrees the Mogol emperor not only reduced those Râjahs to a submission (K), but even subdued other countries to the south and east; yet the successors of Seva still maintained their footing against the Mogol generals, grow very powerful.

¹ HAMILTON'S Trav. vol. i. p. 254.

(G) Gemelli speaks of Seva ji's subjects; and tells us, he passed through his territories in the year 1695.

(H) She was living in 1705.

(I) Which part was formerly called Kankun, Kankhân, or Kon-
... afterwards they extended

it southward to the coast of Malabâr; part of which also they subdued; and northward, till within a little way of Surât.

(K) As the Sundab Râjah, who is now tributary. See Hamilton's new Account of the East Indies, ch. 22, p. 261.

in spite of whom they made frequent expeditions, both into Karnâta, formerly called Bisnâgar, even as far as the coast of Choromandel; and into the Mogol empire itself, where they levied tribute on several provinces.

A. D.

1740.

WE must not neglect to mention what we are told by a certain author, that at the funeral obsequies of the princes of the race of Seva ji, all the officers of their household (who amount to a considerable number) are burned with their corpses: and that the same custom is practised in several of the other petty kingdoms of the Indies ^m.

THE subjects of those princes are called Mâharâttas (L), Mâharâttas, or Ganîms; who have of late acquired a surprising power by such incursions. They have also taken the island of Sâlset, with the castle and town of Bâzaim, besides other places, from the Portugueses; maintaining on foot above 200,000 horse (M) in the northern, southern, and inland provinces. Their present prince is named Sahow Râjah, and keeps his court at Settara, in Dekkân ⁿ.

tas, or Ganîms:

OF their expeditions south-eastward into the peninsula of India, we find mention particularly of three, made in the years 1695, 1705 (N), and 1740: of which last only we are able to give our readers some account.

It has been already remarked, in our account of the late re-^{their ex-}volution ^{peditions} in the Mogol's empire, that Nezâm al Muluk (other-^{wise called} Azof-ja *) was for a long time governor of Dekan; where he staid without going to court, under pretence of keeping the Mâharâttas, or Ganîms, in awe. The truth is, they never ravaged the empire, excepting when, to serve his own designs, he set them to work: but, being at length prevailed on to return to court, the Mâharâttas (O) took advantage of the troubles which ensued, and descended like a torrent from their mountains; with no less a design than to subdue the whole western peninsula of India, and root out the Mohammedan government. In the year 1740, they made an incursion as far as the Ganges: then, turning towards the west, they seized all the country in India belonging to the 1740.

A. D.

^m DELLON's Voy. E. Ind. p. 51.
dir Shâh, p. 33.

ⁿ FRASER's Hist. Nâ-

^o See before, p. 459, & seqq.

(L) Corruptly, by some, Mar-raffes and Morats.

(M) P. Saignes says 140,000.
See Lettres Edif. & Curieuses.
Recueil 26, p. 200.

Surât, p. 188; and Lettres Edif.
tom. xxvi. p. 257, & seqq.

* Or Af-ja, Azofia, in our author and others.

(O) P. Saignes and others call them Marrates, or Marats.

A. D. 1740. Portugueses; excepting the city of Goa, which they besieged, and would have taken, but for the forts which defended it.

they invade Kar-hata :
defeat the Mogols :
AFTER this expedition, their prince Sitoji began his march southward with 50,000 horse, and passed the mountains belonging to the Paleakarens (P), or Indian princes; who made no resistance, but seemed to be engaged in the combination to throw-off the Mohammedan yoke. However that be, as soon as the Mogol governors were apprised of this invasion, they gathered forces, and went to meet the enemy with an army nearly equal to theirs. The Mâharâttas, it is true, were repulsed, and obliged to retire to their hills : but a detachment having slid down by another defile which was not guarded, and appeared behind the Mogols; these latter, taking them for a reinforcement sent them from the city of Arkat (Q), suffered them to approach without opposition, till they discovered the error; but then it was too late. This surprize put the whole army in confusion; which, being shut in by the mountains, had not room to draw out in order of battle; so that the Mâharâttas, attacking them both in front and rear at the same time, cut them all in pieces; except a few who either escaped, or were taken prisoners P.

plunder
Arkât :
Velowr
and
AMONG the slain, there fell the Nabâb, who was general of the army, with his son, and some other lords, gallantly fighting. As soon as this news reached Arkat, that lord's second son, his mother, wife, children, and a great number of quality, fled with their effects to Ponticherri, which is but three days journey from that city, under a guard of 7000 horse. Some time after the Mâharâttas arrived at Arkat; which, though very large, is defended only by a defensible citadel, built of earth : so that the garrison, making no resistance, for fear of being put to the sword, suffered the enemy to plunder the city without molestation. From thence they marched to Velowr, another considerable city, whose citadel is built with a double wall of free-stone, fortified with bastions, and a large ditch full of crocodiles : so that being impregnable without cannon, and the Mâharâttas having

P P. SAIGNES ap. Lettr. Edifiantes, tom. xxvi. p. 260, & seqq.

(P) The kingdoms of the southern India are divided among several Paleakarens; who, though dependant on the kings of their respective countries, are yet absolute masters of their little states.

(Q) In the map of the higher peninsula of India, made by the missionaries, and inserted in the 23d recueil, this place is called Arkate, and placed on the river Palamalerow; which falls into the bay of Bengâl, at Sadraspatan, about two stages to the east by south. In Saignes's Letter it is printed Arkar.

est theirs beyond the mountains, they proceeded to Polowr, A. D. 1740. Kanji-voran :
 a town where there resides a Nabâb ; which they took and plundered. They did the like to Jingama, Tirowna-Maley, Kanjibowran (R), and all the towns and villages whither they went. However, they did not burn many places, nor kill the inhabitants ; excepting such as opposed them : but sometimes, not having the patience to wait while the women took the rings out of their ears and noses, they, to make short work, tore them out. Several principal persons in the villages were so cruelly chabowked, or horse-whipped, to make them discover where the provisions and goods were hidden, that they died under the lash.

AT Tirowna-Maley, the inhabitants put all their riches into pillage the the pagod of Rowtren ; imagining, that the Mâharâttas, pagods, out of respect, would not meddle with them. But they were mistaken : for the enemy, not having had so great a veneration for their deities as they expected, carried-off not only the goods, but also the dancers, and such other girls belonging to the temple as they took a fancy to. They served the Romish churches, which came in their way, in the same manner ; the missionaries flying on all sides to Pandicherri ; where fourteen got safe. Four Portuguese Jesuits fell into the hands of the enemy ; and Pere Madeira, after being cruelly flogged, was exposed several days naked in the sun, tied to a post, and with only just victuals enough to keep him alive. This and churches ; was done at the instigation of a Brâmmen, who said he had hidden great treasures ; and, when none could be found, advised the Mâharâttas to tell him that he should be put to the most tormenting death, unless he got his disciples to redeem him, with a large sum which they demanded. Instead of this, the missionary forbade them to advance the money ; declaring, that he would rather die, than they should, on his account, be reduced to extreme necessity. In short, every thing was prepared for his execution. The iron chair and cask were made red-hot : the first for him to sit in, and the second to put on his head : when one of the Mâharâtta commanders, taking pity on him as a stranger, desired that he might be set at liberty¹.

THE king of Maissour (or Messûr) sent a powerful army to ravine Messur, guard his frontiers : but the enemy, having defeated it, en-

¹ P. SAIGNES, ubi sup. p. 254—271.

(R) Or Kanjivoran, as others write. It is a large city of Karnâta, a little to the north of the river Palemalee ; which falls into the gulf of Bengâl, at Satrapatan : but is not inserted in the missionary's map of the peninsula of India.

A. D.
1740.

~~~~~

and Ma-dûra :

take Tirowchirapali

from the Nabâb :

tered his country, and committed all sorts of robberies. The people, who dwelt near the woods and mountains, fled thither for refuge; but gained little by escaping from the Mâharâttas : for the Paleakarens made them pay dearly for the shelter given them, under pretence that they were obliged to raise new troops to guard and defend them. The greatest mischief which the enemy did, and what was most regretted, was their seizing on children of both sexes; whom they carried into their own country. Mean time, the rainy season came on; but that did not put a stop to their incursions : for they pushed forward as far as Porto Novo (S), a factory of the Dutch, on the coast of Choromandel; which they plundered. With the same design they advanced within three leagues of Pondicherri, and even to some villages belonging thereto : but the French having detached troops to repulse them, and the enemy being informed of the strength of that place, they turned-off towards the kingdom of Madûra; continuing their ravages all the way they went.

THE conquest of this country cost them but little trouble. They burned two churches in their route, and plundered the rest. The missionaries, who were able to get to Tirowchirapali, a pretty good city, and capital of a kingdom of the same name, fled thither, under the protection of Skander Sahab; who had lately conquered it, and been made a Nabâb by the Great Mogol (T). This Mohammedan lord, unable to keep the field, with 11,000 men retired into the citadel; where he defended himself with much valour for two months. Bara Sahab, his brother, coming to his assistance with 4000 horse, slew in the first encounter 2000 Mâharâttas. However they still pushed on the siege, and summoned Shauder Sahab to surrender; threatening otherwise to destroy all with fire and sword. In short, 3000 ladders were already prepared to scale the walls, when the Nabâb resolved to put all to the risk, and make a sally with the whole garrison. He did so, but with very ill success : for his brother was killed, his troops cut to pieces, and himself taken prisoner. Of all their conquests, the Mâharâttas kept none excepting this place; where they left 15,000 men to command the country, till they had their king's orders<sup>r</sup>.

<sup>r</sup> P. SAIGNES, ubi supr. p. 271; & seqq.

(S) Called by the natives
Piranki Potry. Propag. of the Gospel in the East, part ii. let. 6.
p. 41.

(T) Soltân Mohammed Shâh, the late emperor, is here to be understood.

THE design of the Mâharâttas was not to stop here. Their intentions were to go and dethrone the king of Tanjaour; and, having placed another prince in his room, to return along the coast of Choromandel, by Pondicherri, Kareykal, Sadraspatan, Madras (or Fort St. George), and other cities belonging to the Europeans, with a resolution either to oblige them to pay contribution, or to take them by force. Their resentment was levelled chiefly against Pondicherri, for having deprived them of the rich prey, in giving protection to Dost al Khân, the late Nabâb's son, and the treasures of Arkat. That lord informed Azof-ja (or Nezâm al Muluk) of the kind reception given him and his family by Mr. Du Mas, the governor; who thereupon received a letter of thanks from the Wazir, accompanied with a habit, turbân, and scarf of honour.

A. D.
1740.

their farther designs:

As the Mâharâttas make war purely for sake of pillage, they quit and not to keep the places which they conquer, they abandoned Arkat six days after they had taken possession of it. Hereupon Dost ali Khân, having reassembled part of his troops, to the number of 20,000 horse, he left Pondicherri, and returned to that city; where he came to a treaty with the enemy, by paying them a considerable sum of money.

Arkat:

THE Mâharâttas had never penetrated so far into this part of the peninsula, since the time that Aureng Zîb had driven them out of it: because the Mogol governors had always, either by their policy or valour, hindered them from crossing the mountains which separate Karnâta from their dominions: but jealousy having sown discord among the governors of Arkat, Velowr, Palowr, and Tirowchirapali, although relations, they refused to succour one another; and by that means were beaten each in his turn. On this occasion the empire suffered considerably: not only by the loss of the usual tribute, but the country also was so ravaged, that no provisions were left on the lands; and what was worse, the people had not grain to sow them. It was reported, that the Wazîr had ordered his son to fall upon the territories of the Mâharâttas with an army of fourscore thousand horse, in order to oblige those robbers to return home<sup>s</sup>: but this is all which our memoirs inform us concerning this remarkable expedition (U).

their success owing to Mogol discord.

THE Mâharâttas, or Ganims, are sometimes confounded with, at other times distinguished from, the people called Siddhs in the parts about Surât, from their prince, who is

Rise and success

(U) These people took part among the governors, and then in the wars which ensued; first between the English and French.

<sup>s</sup> P. SAIGNES, ubi supr. p. 275, & seqq.

A. D. 1740. stiled the Grand Siddi, at least by the English. But however fortunate he hath been elsewhere, he has of late years been incroached upon by Konna Ji Angria, a famous Indian pirate. of Angria. This Angria, about the year 1710, first seized Kanneri, a little island near Bombay, from whence he did the English great mischief; and in a short time increased so much in strength by the natives, who flocked to him in numbers, that he attacked and defeated the forces of the Grand Siddi; who at length, to get rid of the danger, thought fit to give him his daughter in marriage, and make an alliance with him, which has proved of great use in his wars against the Great Mogol. These Maharattas have a peculiar language: for Fryer occasionally mentions the Moratti tongue.

C H A P. IV.

Of the Kingdom of Golkonda.

S E C T. I.

Description of the Country.

Kingdom
of Gol-
konda:

THE kingdom of Golkonda is bounded on the east with the sea of Bengál; on the north, with the mountains of the country of Orixa (or Orísba); on the south, by that part of Bisnâgar of Narsinga which heretofore belonged to the king of Viziapûr; and on the west, by the province of Balagât.

weather:

WINTER begins here in June, by rain and thunder. The thunder, when our author was in Golkonda, continued not above four days; but the rains poured down, with furious storms of wind, till the middle of July, with some intervals of fair weather. The rest of that month was pretty fair; but in August, September, and October, there fell great rains, yet without thunder; which swelled the rivers so prodigiously, that there was no passing over the bridges. The river of Bâgnâgar threw down near 2000 houses, in which many people perished. The air was somewhat cold in the night and morning; but the heat, during the day, was as moderate as in France in the month of May: and thus it continued till February following, when the great heats began again. These rains render the land exceeding fertile; especially in fruits. Vines are very plenty there; and of the grapes, which for the most part are ripe in January, they make white wine. They have two crops of rice and several other kinds of grain.

produce:

<sup>r</sup> DOWNING'S Hist. of the Indian Wars, p. 1, & seqq. & p. 232. <sup>u</sup> Trav. p. 78.

GOLKONDA has some good and well frequented ports Cities and on the coast of Choromandel; particularly Masulipatan, Palia-kata, and Madraspatan. The first lies E. S. E. from Bâgnâgar, on an excellent coast. The English and Dutch have factories in this place; where our author bought a sheep for twelve pence, a partridge for one penny, and a fowl for less than two pence. Provisions bear the same price almost all over the coast of Choromandel, which extends from Masulipatan to the cape of Negapatan. At Paliakata is Fort Gueldria, a factory of the Hollanders; and at Madraspatan, commonly called Madras, is Fort St. George, the chief factory of the English in the East Indies. A little to the south stands Meliapûr, or St. Thomas; which was taken from the Portugueses by the natives, in 1662. The kingdom of Golkonda extends along the coast from Siakola, or Sikokel, to about two leagues south of St. Thomas<sup>a</sup>; although Karnâtes reaches thirty or forty leagues lower to the south of Sadrâspatan, where the Imperialists have a factory. ports there:

THE capital of this kingdom is called Bâgnâgar (by the Bâgnâgar natives), and Hayder abâd by the Persians. It is fourteen or fifteen leagues from the borders of Viziapûr, in a very long plain, surrounded by little hills. It is washed on the west side by the Nerva, a small river; which, in the rainy season, is as large as the Seine at Paris. It is crossed by a stone bridge of three arches; which joins the city to a large suburb on that side. The town makes a kind of cross, much longer than broad, being 5,650 paces in length; not in a strait line, but with a sweep. Beyond it is another large suburb. The houses are built with earth, and thatched with straw: they are likewise so low and ill contrived, that they seem no better than huts, excepting those of the quality; but they have all fine gardens.

THERE are several meydâns, or public places, in the city; king's but the fairest is that which lies before the king's palace, palace; which stands on the north side. Over-against it is a portico, where the musicians repair several times a day to play on their instruments, when the king is in town. The palace, which takes up one side of the square, is 380 paces in length; and is continued to a building call The Four Towers. The walls, which are of great stones, have at certain distances half-towers; and facing the square is an open gallery, from whence to behold the fights of elephants, and other spectacles. Nobody enters the palace but by express orders from the king, <sup>a</sup> THEVENOT'S Trav. part iii. p. 93, 104, & seq.

Cities.
Bâgnâgar.

the Four Towers :

THE Four Towers is a square building, about forty-two feet high. Each front is sixty feet long, and has an arch in it twenty-four feet wide ; each arch facing a street of the same wide-ness. This building has two galleries, one above the other, and a balcony, or turret, at top : at each corner is a decagon tower, sixty feet high, with four galleries each. The whole adorned with roses and festoons, pretty well sculpted. It is arched underneath, and appears like a dome, surrounded on the inside with balusters, and all open. There are several doors in the walls to enter at ; and under the dome stands a large table on a divan, raised seven or eight feet from the ground, with steps to go up. All the galleries serve to make the water mount, so as to be conveyed to the highest apartments of the palace. Although nothing in the city is so beautiful as the outside of this fabric, yet it is surrounded with ugly wooden fruit-shops, covered with straw ; which spoil the prospect <sup>b</sup>.

beautiful gardens.

THERE are many fair gardens in Bâgnâgar ; whose beauty consists in having long walks, kept very clean, and lovely fruit-trees : but they have neither beds of flowers, nor water-works ; contenting themselves with cisterns, or basons of water. The loveliest gardens are without the city ; among which there is one remarkable for its beauty.

Trading
city.

THERE are in Bâgnâgar many rich merchants, bankers, and jewellers ; besides vast numbers of very skilful artificers. There are likewise many Franks ; especially fugitive Portugueses : the English and Dutch have settled there, and the last make great profits. Public women are allowed in this kingdom ; and the common people give their wives great liberty, as to walk through the town, visit their neighbours, and drink fari, which the Indians here are very fond of. Theft is punished by cutting off both the hands.

Golkon-da fortrejs.

THE castle, where the king commonly kept his court, is two leagues west of Bâgnâgar, and called Golkonda ; from whence the kingdom takes its name. In the middle of the castle rises a hill, like a sugar-loaf ; the sides of which are surrounded by the king's palace. This fortress, for largeness, may be called a city. The walls are built of stones three feet diameter, encompassed with deep ditches, divided into tanks full of good water. After all, it hath no fortifications except five round towers ; which, as well as the walls, are mounted with a great many cannon. The palace is very large, and well situated for air, and prospect over Bâgnâgar itself. One must pass through twelve gates before he comes to the apartment of the prince. All the Omrás and great lords have houses in the castle; where there are several good bazárs, with all sorts of necessaries: but, besides the lodgings of some officers, there is no good building in the castle. The king, before the conquest, used to make jewellers, and other artificers, live in the palace; where the former were fully employed in cutting diamonds, and other stones, of which the king had great quantities. He hath likewise store of excellent bezoars; keeping goats which produce them. It was sold for forty crowns the pound. The sepulchres of the king, who built Golkonda, and his five successors, are about two musket-shot from the castle; each in the middle of a garden, with the tombs of their relations about them <sup>c</sup>.

<sup>b</sup> THEVENOT, ubi supr. p. 94, & seqq.

*The king
and court.*

THIS king had vast revenues arising from the property of lands, customs of merchandizes and provisions; but chiefly the diamond mines: for Golkonda might be said to be the country of diamonds. They who were allowed to dig, those towards Masulipatan, paid him a pagod every hour they worked, whether they found diamonds or not. His chief mines were those in the kingdom of Karnâtes (or Bisnâgar) in several places towards Vizianpûr; he had 6000 men continually at work in them, who daily found near three pound-weight of those precious stones: and nobody dug there but for the king.

*King's
riches.*

THIS prince wore on the crown of his head a jewel almost a foot long; which was reported to be of an inestimable value. It was a rose of great diamonds, three or four inches diameter; and on the top of it was a little crown, out of which issued a branch, shaped like a palm-tree branch; but round and crooked at the top. This branch was an inch thick, and about six long. It was made up of several sprigs, which served as leaves, with each a lovely pearl (shaped like a pear) at the end. At the foot of this posie were two bands of gold, in form of table-bracelets; in which were incased large diamonds, set round with rubies. This, with large pearls which hung dangling on all sides, made an exceeding brilliant shew. These bands are fastened to the head by diamond clasps. The king of Golkonda had many other rich jewels in his treasury; and surpassed all the Indian monarchs in precious stones.

Jewel for the head.

THE Omrás, or great lords of Golkonda, were of the same nature with those in the Mogol's empire; being for the most part Persians, or the sons of Persians, and all very rich: for, besides the great pay belonging to their respective offices, they made great advantage by the soldiers; as they kept in pay

The great Omras.

<sup>c</sup> THEVENOT, ubi suprà. p. 96, & seqq.

The king
and court.

their state.

scarce half the number which they were obliged to maintain. The king also gave them lands and villages for life; where they committed great extortions, by the Brammâns, who were their farmers. These Omrâs always made a handsome figure in the streets; either riding on horseback, or carried in a palanki, preceded by musick, forty or fifty troopers, with an elephant or two, and men carrying banners, at their head. The lord himself is attended by thirty or forty footmen; some clearing the way; others, with fine napkins, driving away the flies: one holds an umbrella over his head, another his tobacco-pipe; others carry pots with water. The palanki, with its porters, come next. Lastly, a camel or two, with men beating of timbrels on their backs, close the procession. When the Omrâ chose his palanki, he was seen lying in it effeminately, with flowers in his hand, smoaking tobacco, or chewing betel. All, who had any considerable pay, imitated the state of the grandees. The Dutch interpreter at Bâgnâgar went with such an equipage; nor was there a cavalier but had his umbrella-bearer, his two fly-drivers, and his cup-bearer.

Lesser Om-
râs.

THE lesser Omrâs, for there were several orders of them, proportioned their equipage to their revenue: but then the quality of Omrâ was become so common about the year 1665, and so much liberty allowed to take the title, that the Indians who guarded the castle, and the outside of the king's palace, to the number of a thousand, would needs be called Omrâs; although their pay did not exceed one crown a month. However, some of the great Omrâs were exceeding rich: among whom might be reckoned the Amîr Jemla. He was the son of an oil-man of Ispâhân, and had the wealth of a prince. He left the service of the king of Golkonda; and, going over to that of the Great Mogol, died governor of Bengâl. He was very powerful there; and, could he have drawn his son from the court, would have made himself king of that province. He had in diamonds the weight of twenty mans, which make 408 pounds of Holland weight. This vast wealth he got by the plunder which he made in Karnâtes, at the head of the king of Golkonda's army; when that prince, in conjunction with him of Viziapûr, made war on the king of Bisnâgar. That general took many places in a short time; but finding he could not take the fortress of Gandikot (U)

Amîr
Jemla.

(U) It is within ten days journey of St. Thomas, Melikâpûr, or Fort St. George, on the coast of Cheromandel.

(standing

(standing on the top of an inaccessible rock) by force, he Its latter drew out the governor by fair promises, and then detained State.
 him till it was delivered up<sup>d</sup>.

S E C T. II.

Latter State of Golkonda, and Conquest by Aureng Zib.

THE king of Golkonda maintained in pay above 500,000 Amîr soldiers; but as Abdo'llah Kothb Shâh, who reigned in Jemla en- 1667, did not keep so good an army on foot as his father, he vied: became tributary to the Great Mogol Aureng Zib; who about eight years before, when governor of Aureng abâd, surpris'd Bâgnâgar<sup>e</sup>; which happened on the following occasion. Amîr Jimola (or Jemla) generalissimo of the forces of Golkonda, having been sent to reduce certain rebellious Râjahs, whose territories lay upon the Ganges; according to custom, left with the king both his wife and children, as a pledge of his fidelity. He had several daughters, and but one son; who made a great figure at court. During the Amîr's absence, the enemies, whom his reputation and riches had procured him, endeavoured to render him suspected by the king, as if he intended to dethrone his majesty, and set his own son upon the throne. The method they propos'd to make away with Jemla, was to poison him; and Abdo'llah, being easily persuaded, gave them leave to act as they thought most proper for his security. Under this authority they set their instruments to work; but, having miss'd of their aim three or four times, the Amîr's son got intimation of the plot, and gave his father notice.

As soon as the messenger returned, the young lord, natu- his son rally high-spirited, went to the king; and, representing the ill treat- great services of his father, who had been the chief instrument ed:
 of setting the crown on that prince's head, reproach'd him with ingratitude in no very respectful terms. The king, offended with this liberty, having withdrawn, the lords who were present fell upon the Amîr's son, and treated him very roughly. At the same time he was arrested and committed to prison, with his mother and sisters. This affair made a great noise at court; and coming quickly to the general's ears, he resolv'd to be revenged for the injury done him. To compass his design, he wrote to Soltân Sujâh, Shâh Jehân's

<sup>d</sup> THEVENOT, ubi supr. p. 102, & seq.<sup>e</sup> Ibid. p. 100.

*Its latter
state.*

second son, who was governor of Bengál, near which the general then was; promising, in case he would join him with his forces, to put him in possession of the kingdom of Golkonda. But Soltán Sujáh, instead of accepting so advantageous an offer, sent the Amír word, that the person who could betray his natural prince might betray him, and therefore he would not trust him.

*surprises
Bághnâ-
gar.*

UPON this unpolite refusal, Jemla wrote to Aureng Zib, who was then governor of Brampúr; and, not being so nice as his brother, readily embraced the proposal. The two armies, being at length joined, they arrived at the gates of Bághnâgar, before the king was in a condition to oppose them. He had only time to escape to his fortress of Golkonda; to which the Mogol prince, after he had rised the city of Bághnâgar, and plundered the palace (A), laid a close siege. Kothb Sháh, finding himself thus vigorously pressed, sent the Amír Jemla his wife and children, in an honourable manner. He did an action still more generous than this: for a cannoneer, observing Aureng Zib on his elephant, riding about to view the fortifications of the castle, told the king, who was standing on the bastion, that, if he pleased, he would bring down the Mogol prince with a ball. But the king forbade him; saying, it became princes to spare the lives of one another. The gunner obeyed; and, instead of shooting at Aureng Zib, took off the head of the general of his army, who was a little before him: which put a stop to the assault they were about to have given. Abdo'l Jaber Beg, who commanded the king of Golkonda's army (B), understanding the disorder which the loss of their general had put the enemy into, attacked them furiously while they were in that confusion; and, putting them to the rout, pursued them for four or five leagues, till night put a stop to their career. Some few days before this event, the king of Golkonda, finding provisions fail in the fortress, was about to have delivered the keys to Aureng Zib. But Mirza Mohammed (C), his son-in-law, and kinsman to the great Sheykh of Mekka, snatched them out of his hand, and threatened to kill him if he persisted in that resolution<sup>f</sup>.

Aureng Zib besieges Gol-konda.

<sup>f</sup> TAVERNIER'S Trav. part ii. p. 67, & seq.

(A) Thevenot says, even to the plates of gold, wherewith the king's apartments were covered.

(B) Gemelli says, it consisted of 70,000 men.

(C) In Ovington's memoir of the revolution in Golkonda, he is called Meera Mamood [that is Mir, or Mirza, Mahmúd]. Voy. to Surát in 1689, p. 527.

AURENG Zib, being thus constrained to raise the siege, spent some days to rally his forces; and, having received a reinforcement of fresh troops, returned to the leaguer with new resolution. However, Amir Jemla, who still retained some kindness for the king of Golkonda, would not suffer the Mogol prince to use the utmost extremity: but by his wit and good management obtained a suspension of arms. Shah Jehân, after the battle which he lost against his father Jehân Ghîr, fled for refuge to the king of Golkonda; and, having met with a very kind reception, entered into a strict friendship with him; swearing to his benefactor, never to make war against him, upon any pretence whatever. Amir Jemla, therefore, knowing that it would be no hard matter to bring two kings, who had such ties upon them, to an accommodation, wrought underhand with both towards a peace, and so brought it about, that Abdollah Shah humbly wrote a letter to Shah Jehân, wherein he requested “that monarch to become an arbitrator between the prince, his son, and him; promising to submit intirely to his decision, and sign such articles as he should propose.” On the other hand, Shah Jehân was prevailed on by the Amir’s persuasions, in answer to the king of Golkonda’s letter, to propose a match between his second daughter and Soltân Mohammed, son of Aureng Zib, on condition that, after the death of the king her father, the son-in-law should inherit the kingdom of Golkonda; which proposition being accepted of, the peace (D) was concluded.

Its latter state.

Peace brought about,

by Amir Jemla;

As for the Amir Jemla, he quitted the service of the king of Golkonda, and went to Brampûr with Aureng Zib; who, by his powerful assistance, afterwards obtained the crown of Hindûstân. Soon after Shah Jehân made him his prime minister, and generalissimo of his armies. According to our author, who had occasion to speak with him several times, he was a man of great parts and dexterity, in dispatching affairs which came before him <sup>g</sup>.

THE king of Golkonda had two other daughters: the eldest was married to Mirza Mohammed, a relation of the Sheykh of Mekka, as mentioned before; whose courtship was attended with some very uncommon circumstances. This Sheykh came to Golkonda in the habit of a Fakîr, or religious mendi-

who quits
Golkonda. da.
Mohammed.

<sup>g</sup> TAVERNIER, ubi sup. p. 68, & seq.

(D) Thevenot says, this peace was obtained from Aureng Zib by the address of the queen-mother; and that the son-in-law, whom he calls Mahmûd, should succeed, in case the king died without children; meaning, doubtless, male issue.

cant;

*Its latter
state.*

cant; and for some months lodged without the gate of the palace, disdaining to give any answer to several courtiers, who demanded what his business was. At length, the affair being made known to the king, he sent his chief physician to enquire the reason of his coming to Golkonda. The physician, and some other lords of the court, who likewise discoursed with him, finding him to be a person of great wit and learning, carried him to the king; who was very well pleased with his aspect and deportment: but at length the Sheykh coming to declare to his majesty, that the end of his coming was to espouse the princess, the king was much surpris'd at the proposal, and most of the court lords judged that the Sheykh was out of his senses. The Kothb Shâh laugh'd at him at first; but when he found him persist in his demand, and even threatened the kingdom with great calamity, unless the princess was given to him in marriage, he was committed to prison; where he lay a long time. At length the king sent him in a vessel, which carried pilgrims from Masulipatan to Mekka in Arabia, in order to travel to Mekka.

*his strange
history.*

FOR all this bad success, the Sheykh was not discouraged; but two years after returned to Golkonda, and managed matters so well, that he espoused the princess, and grew into high reputation, as well as power in the kingdom; which he governed with great applause. Before the siege of Golkonda the king had no great love for him; but after that bold action, by which, as before mentioned, he prevented his surrendering the fortress, Abdollah Shâh took a great affection to him, and did nothing without his advice. He was a passionate lover of all who understood mathematics, and a zealous Mohammedan; so that, to hinder the great pagod in Bâgnâgar from being finished, he threatened the whole kingdom with some signal calamity, if that work went forward<sup>h</sup>.

*Abdo'llah Shâh's
jour.*

THE third princess of Golkonda had been promised to Seltân Sejed, another Sheykh of Mekka; and the day was appointed for celebrating the nuptials: but by the instances of Abdol Jabber Beg, general of the army, and other lords, the match was broken off, and the princess married to Mîrza Abdol Kofing; to whom she would have been given before, but for his debauched courses, which however he forsook after his marriage. He had by her two sons (E); which, says Taver-

<sup>h</sup> TAVERNIER, ubi sup. p. 66.

(E) By Sheldon's account, nor was this lord reckoned debauched. hereafter mentioned, he had but one son and two daughters:

nier, quite annulled the pretensions of Aureng Zib's son; his latter who was then imprisoned by his father in the castle of Gwa-lyâr, for joining with his uncle Sujâh against him. Now, continues the same author, the king of Golkonda does not stand in so much fear of the Great Mogol as before; for, in imitation of him, he keeps his money within his own country, and has already hoarded up treasures sufficient to maintain his wars. Besides, he was devoted to the sect of Ali, as well as the king of Viziapûr, who was married to the sister (F) of him of Golkonda; for which reason the Persians, who repaired into India to seek their fortune, chose rather to offer their service to these kings than to the Great Mogol<sup>h</sup>.

THEVENOT, who was at Golkonda much about the same time as Tavernier, gives an account very different of this prince's affairs; and which seems to agree better with the revolution, which some years after followed in his dominions. According to that author, notwithstanding the peace before-mentioned, the king of Golkonda was in continual fear of another visit from Aureng Zib. After sending 200,000 men to the assistance of the king of Viziapûr, who was vigorously attacked, he was obliged to recall them, and pretend they were sent without his knowledge. This shewed how low the power of Abdo'llah was reduced. He durst not put to death his Omrâs, even for crimes; for which, on being found guilty, he only fined them, and took the money. The Dutch themselves insulted over him, and obliged him to abandon an English ship, which they had seized at Masulipatan; although he had undertaken to protect her<sup>i</sup>.

THE weakness of this prince's reign, and power of his chief Omrâs, is confirmed by the testimony of a later English author (G); who hath written the history of Mirza Abdallah Koffin, or, as that writer calls him, Soltân Abdulla Hoosan (H), till he ascended the throne of Golkonda; of which he was the last king. Our author begins with the circumstances of this

<sup>h</sup> TAVERNIER, ubi supr. p. 69. p. 100, & seq.

<sup>i</sup> THEVENOT, ubi supr.

(F) Thevenot says, to the fourth daughter of the king of Golkonda; but other authors say he had no more than three.

(G) Late revolution of Golkonda, by Mr. Daniel Sheldon, inserted by Overton in his Voyage to Surât, p. 527.

(H) It is hard to say, whether by Koffin and Hoosan is to be understood Hussayn or Hassan. If this was the king, from whom Golkonda was conquered, his name, according to Frazer, was Abu'l Hassan.

*Its latter
state.*

Sudden rise of prince's marriage ; which he relates at large, in the following manner.

KOTHB Shâh, being old, and perplexed with the factions of his ministers, to whom he had wholly left affairs, resolved to marry his third daughter, whom he loved exceedingly, to some person of quality and courage ; who might be able to curb the factions at court, and worthy to become his successor. For he hated Soltân Mahmûd, eldest son of Aureng Zîb, who had married his eldest daughter : nor had any affection for his second daughter, or her husband, Mirza Mahmûd ; who was an Arab of high birth. This princess was courted by Sind Soltân (I), another Arab, descended from Mohammed ; and as he was a man of wit and spirit, the king of Golkonda thought him a proper person to execute his designs, and accordingly encouraged his addresses : but this person, presuming too much on the favour of the king and princess, by his insolent behaviour disobliged the ministers ; who, fearing worse treatment in case he came to the crown, resolved to hinder the match.

*Mirza
Abul Hasan.*

THE three who managed the business of the state were Moso Khân, Sind Mirza Zaffer (K), and Mushûk ; for Mirza Mahmûd, not being in favour, was out of employment. However he had free access at court, and was respected by all, as one who was likely to succeed the king. These hopes made him jealous of Sind Soltân, and put himself at the head of the party, which was formed against him. The old courtiers therefore set upon the king ; and having persuaded him to break off the match, by representing the young Arab as a person of great ambition, and one likely to form dangerous designs, Mushûk advised his majesty to marry this princess to some person of birth and courage, but small fortune, and rather given to pleasure than business ; as qualifications which would render him obedient, and divert him from ambitious views. This counsel being approved of by the king, he ordered them to look for a person of that character ; and they pitched on Mirza Abdallah Hassan<sup>k</sup>.

The Wazîr's contrivance,

THIS young nobleman was the son of an Arab of quality, but low circumstances ; who, coming to Golkonda to seek his fortune, had a small government conferred on him by the king : from which, by his good behaviour, he was advanced <sup>k</sup> OVINGTON'S Voy. to Surât, p. 528, & seqq.

(I) This is Soltân Sejed of Tavernier. It should perhaps be Seyd.

(K) Afterwards named Zind Mir Zaffer.

to one of the most considerable commands in the kingdom. Its latter
 But at his death, the king being heir to his estate, his son state.
 was reduced to a very poor condition, and forced for subsistence to enter into the army; where he received the pay of five or six pounds per month. As soon as the affair was agreed upon, Zind Mir Zaffer sends for the young soldier to his house, that the king might have a sight of him; and, having held him in discourse for some time, about his father's merit and his own circumstances, promised to provide for him, and then dismissed him. When he was gone, Kotbb Sháh objected, that he was not so comely a person as he had been represented; nor discovered so much life and vigour as he expected. This being imputed by Mir Zaffer to the defection consequential to his sudden fall from grandeur into poverty; he told the king, that he would find a change presently in Abdallah, had he but money to make an appearance.

HEREUPON the king, resolved to make the experiment, to supply orders Mir Zaffer to contrive some way to furnish him, his wants.
 without letting him know from whence it came. The minister immediately sends for some Sherafs, or money-brokers, and orders them to furnish him with whatever money he required; promising to repay them: but enjoined them, under pain of death, not to discover the affair. Away the brokers go to Abdallah; and under pretence of desiring his assistance in business they had with some great men (for persons of high birth, though ever so poor, are respected in those countries), after two or three visits, growing more familiar, they told him he looked melancholy; and, as they believed he might have occasion for money, offered to lend him two or three thousand pounds. At first he thankfully refused the offer; fearing to borrow money, which he had no prospect of being able to pay: but at length, overcome by their importunity, and his own wants, he accepted of a considerable sum: for which they not only refused security; but bid him live like the son of so great a father; promising to supply him with more, when that was spent<sup>1</sup>.

THE young cavalier, naturally inclined to gallantry, and He lives high living, presently took a house, with servants, and all splendidly:
 things fit for a person of quality. Mean time Mir Zaffer, who presently perceived the alteration which he expected both in his person and behaviour, desires the king to see him again; which his majesty does; and now likes him so well, that he orders Zaffer to give him frequent opportunities of seeing him; and the more he sees him, the more he is <sup>1</sup> OVINGTON, ubi sup. p. 527, 532, & seqq.

*Its latter
state.*

taken with him. At length, resolving to marry his daughter to him, without delay, the king one evening sends the Devâr, or secretary of state, with an Omra, called Jabber Beg, and a guard of horse to conduct Abdallah Hassan to court. The young gentleman was entertaining some friends at his house, when word was brought, that some great officers belonging to the court were at the door. His company, with the dancing women, immediately retired by a back-way, while he went out to meet the officers, to conduct them in. As soon as he beheld two such eminent persons, attended with a guard, he was greatly surprised; and his fears were much increased at the sight of a rich vest, which the secretary presented him from the king; for he took it for granted that it was poisoned. However, after mentioning his father's services, with his own fidelity to the king, and apologizing for his present way of living, he put on the vest; and, at the same time, desired the secretary to present his duty to the king, and tell him that his majesty had more reason to preserve such subjects as he was, than to take away their lives only for his pleasure.

*Marries
the princess:*

THE secretary, who had orders to observe every thing which he said and did, having helped him on with the vest, made a low reverence, and assured him, that they were not sent by the king to execute any sentence of his displeasure, but to conduct him to his favour, and the greatest honour which he could bestow on him. On this he goes with them, not very well assured of his safety, till they brought him a fine horse, with rich furniture; on which mounting, he rode between the secretary and Jabber Begh to court, where he was the same night married to the princess; and the whole business was managed with so much privacy, that Mirza Mahmûd, who had married the king's second daughter, had not the least knowledge of it, till it was made public at court. This news threw him into a rage, in which he railed at the king and his nobility: but finding nobody regarded it, he left the kingdom, and retired to Dehli, where Aureng Zib received him kindly, and gave him a pension.

but kept very dependent.

KOTHB SHAH was every day more pleased with his son-in-law; but conferred on him no command of soldiers, nor government of a province, nay, nor allowed him any money, for fear he should lay up some: but, at the same time, ordered an eunuch constantly to defray his expences, were they ever so great. The new-made prince, who had an excellent understanding, wisely resolved to submit to the king's pleasure, which not only made his majesty deot on him, but fixed the Omras and governors to his interest; as believing that if one who seemed to know so little of affairs was once king, they should be their own masters<sup>m</sup>. Thevenot represents the conduct of the Mirza Abdol Keffin (or Abdâl Hoosan) who, he says, was called the King's little son-in-law (L), in a different light. According to that author, this prince gave Abdallah Kothb Shâh a great deal of uneasiness; for being a prince of the blood (M), he pretended to the crown, notwithstanding the agreement made with the Great Mogol, and caused himself to be served with as much state as the king. This changed the affection which the king had once for him to a settled jealousy, and made him fear that his little son-in-law had a design to destroy him, altho' he was reckoned a person of great integrity<sup>n</sup>. Possibly the restraints laid upon him by Kothb Shâh, as above-mentioned, might give occasion to such a report.

HOWEVER that be, the king, who was worn with age, and excess of pleasures, at length falling sick, he sent for all the lords of his court; and declaring his son-in-law, Soltân Abdollah Hoosan, for his successor, obliged them to swear on the korân to obey his last commands. After this he died, having lived above eleven years since the marriage of his beloved daughter, who had in that interval secured the succession in her family, by the birth of a prince, and two princesses. On the king's death, his second daughter, wife to Mirza Mahmûd, having made a small party, seized on the palace, in behalf of a son her husband had by a former wife (for by him she had none), whom she endeavoured to set on the throne: but Moso Khân, Sind Mir Zaffer, and Mushâk, the three chief ministers, quickly suppressed the tumult which she had raised, and proclaimed Soltân Abdollah Hoosan padishâh, or emperor.

THIS king, as soon as he began his reign, gave an instance of his policy, in the method he took to gratify the two first of those lords who had advanced him to the throne; and, at the same time, destroy their power, which was grown exorbitant, thro' the indolence of the preceding king. He considered, that the way to lessen their authority was to make them too great, by dividing the administration of affairs between them; knowing that the hatred which they bore each

<sup>m</sup> OVINGTON, p. 536—541.
p. 102.

<sup>n</sup> THEVENOT, ubi supr.

(L) Possibly on account of the low circumstances he was in just before he married the king's daughter. (M) This must be understood of his being so by marriage only.

*Its latter
state.*

other would soon throw things into confusion, and furnish him with a pretence to dismount them. On Moso Khân, therefore, he confers the title of Khân Khanna (N); and being a man of courage, makes him general of the army. To Sind Mir Zaffer (O) he gives the title of Amîr Jenla; and being a man of business, makes him Duân; in which office are comprised those both of chancellor and treasurer. So that the general being to receive the army's pay of the Duân, was sure to find delays and affronts; while the Duân, being by his place to inspect into the disposal of the king's money, and payment of the troops, was no less certain to meet with reprisals.

his corrupt ministers.

WHEN the king had thus rewarded these corrupt ministers, as well as others who had deserved well of him, he seemed to abandon business wholly, to mind his pleasures: but at the same time posted himself so conveniently, that he had a perfect knowledge of every thing which passed. In this time of leisure, he often would retire to consider the abuses which had crept into the state, and of the best ways to reform them. He likewise set down, in writing, several rules and maxims, by which he proposed to regulate his future government. Mean while, the two great men strove who should procure the finest women, musicians, and dancers, to divert the king, and continue on him the lethargy, which they imagined he was seized with. But while they to no purpose endeavoured to render him insensible, he had soon the pleasure to see that his medicine wrought its effect with them: for neither of them being able to bear an equal in authority, each watched for an opportunity to accuse and ruin the other, that the whole might fall into his own hands°.

They fall out.

It was not long before the Duân, on inspecting the payment of the army, received many complaints against the general, whose avarice made him defraud both the king and soldiers of great sums. Of this the Duân complains to the king, who seems not to believe it. The Duân, therefore, resolving to bring such evidence, as should convince the king of the truth, seizes the general's Brámmán, who kept the accounts of the army. At this the general is so enraged, that, taking soldiers with him, he resolves to cut the Duân in pieces: but the latter was prepared with sufficient guards to keep off his enemy, till the king sent and commanded him to retire. At first he refused; but being advised by his cooler friends, ° OVINGTON, ubi supr. p. 541, & seqq.

(N) Or Khân of Khâns. (O) Fryer calls him Siegman jassa.

at last returned to his house. The Duân being now recovered from his fright, repairs to the king, and desires him to consider whether he could be safe in his palace, if such outrages were committed in the garrison. The king tells him calmly, that he will take care of both their safeties, and prevent such violences for the future, by perfectly reconciling the general and him. Altho' the Duân knew that was a thing impossible, yet he goes away seemingly contented. The king sends for the general, and acquainting him that he had undertaken a reconciliation between them, advises him to frame himself to it. At first he storms, and calls the Duân a thousand names: but growing calmer, returns his majesty thanks, and promises submission to his command.

A FEW days after Kothb Sháh sends for the general, as customary, to come to the palace: but that officer reflecting on his rash proceedings, was unwilling to go, till, by the persuasion of friends, that there was no danger, and that the king had secretly more esteem for him than the Duân, he went. However, he was no sooner entered within the palace-gate, but he found himself seized by the guards; and was sent in irons to prison. The charge against him was for slighting the king's commands, daring to assault one of his counsellors within his garrison, converting the king's treasure to his own use; and for refusing to pay several sums of money to Aureng Zib's ambassadors, very much to the dishonour of the king, who had passed his word for the payment of them. As soon as he was confined, all his estate was seized on; there being found in his house, in ready money, 500,000 new pagodas, which is about 200,000 l. besides jewels; wherein he was very rich, for he had been governor of the diamond mine of Korulowr (P). Immediately after this, the king musters the army, pays them their arrears, and gives the command to Musbák; but, to their great satisfaction, enrolls them in his own lists, and promises to take care of them himself for the future<sup>P</sup>.

THE Duân is infinitely pleased at the fall of Mosó Khân; The treacher and imagining that he had now no rival in Kothb Sháh's favour, surer catches upon him to controul every-body, and turn out of place whomsoever he thought fit. The king lets him go on, without taking notice of small presumptions: so that growing confident, thro' his majesty's neglect, he ventured to give

<sup>P</sup> OVERTON, p. 546, & seqq.

(P) It is the richest of all the diamond mines in Golkonda, or Hayder abad.

Its latter
state.

orders of the greatest importance, without consulting him. The acts of tyranny and injustice which the Duán committed by his abuse of power, at last occasioned a general clamour; which made his remove necessary, and gave the king an opportunity of doing what he had so long designed. For this purpose notice was given, that such a morning the king intended to appear at the Durbar, where the lords were to come, according to custom, to make their Salam, or obeisance. When that ceremony was over, the king commanded the Duán to stand before him; and began to speak in so obliging a manner, that every-body thought he was going to do him some new honour. He tells him "how particular a regard he always had for his person; how great a confidence in his fidelity and abilities; insomuch, that he had left almost the whole affairs of the kingdom to his management, and made him, as it were, king, in power, contenting himself only with the name. But, that to his extreme dissatisfaction, he found himself intirely deceived in him: for that he had made use of the indulgence which was shewn him, and of his own great abilities, only to affront his king, and oppress his fellow-subjects." Then altering his tone, in the sharpest terms he could utter, tells him "of all his insolences, and the affronts which he had offered him, by presuming to do things of the greatest consequence, without acquainting him; he likewise reckons up all the miscarriages of his administration." The king added, "that after committing such high misdemeanors, he had nothing to expect, but to be made a sacrifice to public justice: that, however, in consideration of some former good services, he gave him his life, and the government of such a province; commanding him, under forfeiture of both, to retire immediately to his command, and, for the future, not to meddle with any business but what concerned it." Thus the Kotbb Sháh dismissed him (Q), without any further disgrace; and even ordered every-one to pay him the respect due to one in his employment.

and banished.

Reformation at court.

THE king having thus, with great applause and satisfaction of the people, got rid of his two partners in the government, left his retirement; and dismissing the lewd women and dancers, applied himself wholly to business, ap-

(Q) Dr. Fyer says Seigman jessa was an eunuch: he makes him the general; and says, he then managed all affairs of the kingdom under the king;

so that his disgrace did not happen till after the year 1673, when Fyer wrote. See his Trav. p. 28, & seq.

peared

peared frequently in the durbar, looked into all affairs of the Its latter kingdom with his own eyes, and examined the accounts relating to his revenues, the auditing of which he gave to Musshûk, who then became his favourite. He rewarded bountifully those who did their duty; and altho' he condemn'd none to death, yet he punished offenders after other manners, very severely<sup>9</sup>. As our author mentions no dates, we cannot precisely fix the beginning of Abdollah Hosfan's reign; but judge it must have been between the years 1670 and 1673, when Dr. Fryer landed at Madras; for he speaks of this king (R) as then on the throne. However that be, we find nothing more relating to the transactions of this king's reign, or of affairs there, till the conquest of his dominions by the Great Mogol; with regard to which revolution we are informed as follows.

AFTER the peace made with the king of this country, Aureng whom our author calls Tana Shâh, on condition of giving his Zib daughter to Soltân Mahmûd, as before-mentioned, the Mogols attempted nothing against Golkonda for several years. But at length Aureng Zib having resolved to make a conquest of that kingdom (S), after he had quashed the rebellion of his fourth son, Akber, in 1680, sent his second son, Shâh Alam (T), with a powerful army, to attack Golkonda afresh: but the Mogol prince, either thinking the conquest difficult, or overcome by Tana Shâh's (U) promises to give him his daughter in marriage, and assist him to secure his father's throne, so managed affairs, as to obtain his father's consent to conclude a peace. And altho' afterwards he received many repeated commands, could never be prevailed on to return to the siege; but casting his simiter at his father's feet, told him that he

<sup>9</sup> OVINGTON, p. 549—552.

(R) He does not name him; but it appears to be Abdollah Kofing, or Hosfan, from the account given of his marriage, eleven years before, with his predecessor's daughter; which is related nearly in the same manner as in Sheldon's memoir.

(S) To which the claim, in right of his son Mahmûd, as before mentioned, was doubtless both a pretence and a spur.

(T) This must be Mahammad

Mauzm, as in Frazer, who succeeded his father.

(U) G. Meli here commits a great mistake, by making the king, who gave his daughter to Soltân Mahmûd, the same with him who was conquered by Aureng Zib; or confounds Abdallah with Abûl Hassan; as appears from the authority of other credible authors: besides, Abdallah had but three daughters, all disposed of before the year 1662 or 1662.

Its latter state. was a Mussulman, and could not violate the peace which he had promised to keep.

besieges the fortress,
 UPON Shâh Alam's thus refusing to renew the war, Aureng Zib, after he had made himself master of the kingdom of Viziapûr, marched in person, with a mighty army, to conquer that of Golkonda. At his first arrival near Bâgnâgar, he secured the passage of the river, and that city: then, without staying to fortify it, by the advice of the Franks, who were in his service, and gave our author this account, he proceeded to besiege the fortress of Golkonda, whither the king had retired. As this place was built with stones of vast dimensions, and inclosed with a deep ditch, it held out a siege of nine months, tho' battered with many pieces of cannon, particularly by three pieces of such a prodigious size, that each of them was drawn by 500 elephants, and 200 men: for they could make but a small breach in the citadel, which was not inclosed with walls, but a solid rock. At length want of provisions, and distempers which raged in the place, joined to the presents and promises made by the Great Mogol; not only prevailed on the soldiers to desert to him, by getting down the walls at night, but also corrupted the governor, who surrendered the fortress against the will of his sovereign. The king of Golkonda offered to pay a tribute of three millions and seven hundred thousand rupis, and become his vassal: but Aureng Zib refused, and entered the place in triumph, in the year 1687 (X).

and takes it,

(X) Gemelli places this event in 1686; but it happened not till the year after. The siege began the second of February, 1687, and ended the twentieth of October following; which agrees very well with what that author observes about its duration. Scarce any of the travellers mention the exact time of this important conquest. Owington, who was at Surât in 1690, says nothing of it: nor does Frazer himself mention it in his Short History of the Great Mogols. Bracms, who left Batavia in 1696, in his report to the States General [see Recueil des Voy. de la Comp. Introd. p. 133.] observes, that according to the last advices which they had from the coast of Choromandel, the Great Mogol having subdued Viziapûr, was marching to conquer Golkonda; as if it happened the last-mentioned year: so shamefully careless and inaccurate are some of those who go into foreign parts. But we learn from Count Forbin's memoirs, that on his return from Siam, in 1687, the ship put in at Masulipûtan, at which time Golkonda was besieged; and that, being but 30 leagues distant, he would have gone thither to see the Indian way of making war, if he could have met with a boat to carry him; Masulipûtan having been almost depopulated by the plague.

THE king, who had on a collar of inestimable value, Its latter presented it to Azem Shâh, who carried him away prisoner, state. on an elephant. Aureng Zib observing that his hands were with the not bound behind him, called out to put his son in mind of king. it. Azem Shâh answered that he was a king, and that they ought to be satisfied with depriving him of his kingdom and liberty. The unfortunate king was shut up in the fort of Dawlet abâd, where his conqueror allowed him the wretched maintenance of twenty rupis (or about ten crowns) a day (Y). But a son being born to him in prison, a blessing which he never had while upon the throne (Z), in pity to the infant prince, he raised the father's pension to 500 rupis. Pan Naik (A), who had with considerable forces assisted Aureng Zib in conquering the kingdom, was rewarded with death, upon very slight jealousies. His son, enraged at his father's treatment, refused to pay the tribute, and retired among inaccessible mountains: but a few years after (B), the greater power prevailing, he submitted to pay tribute, and to receive a governor, appointed by the Great Mogol to reside within his dominions<sup>r</sup>.

CHAP V.

The Kingdom of Kanora, or Kanara.

KANORA, or the Kanatick country, begins at Gongola, a Kanora. village about 40 miles to the south of Goa, and extends along the coast to the dominions of the Zamerhîn (or Zamorrîn) of Kâlekut; and within land, up to the pepper mountains of Sunda, and the district of Serji Khân, in the kingdom of Viziapûr<sup>a</sup>. This country has on the north the principality of Sundab; on the west, the sea; on the south, Malabâr; and on the east it is bounded by the mountains of

<sup>r</sup> GEMELLI'S Trav. ap. Churchill's Collect. vol. 4. p. 248, 249, 232.

<sup>a</sup> FRYER'S Trav. p. 162.

(Y) Our author says he was 60 years of age in 1695.

(Z) Mirza Abdallab Kofing, or Hoosan, had a son before he came to the throne; which seems to corroborate the opinion that Abûl Haffan (the king here spoken of) was his son.

(A) Mentioned in our description of Viziapûr, or Vijapûr.

(B) This farther proves, that the conquest of Golkonda was not in 1696, according to Braem's report; for this must be supposed to have happened while Gemelli was in Golkonda, where he was in 1695.

Gatti,

Sea-ports. in this country, that robbery and murder are scarcely ever heard of among them: and a stranger may pass thro' the country without being asked where he is going, or what business he is about<sup>1</sup>. This may be owing, in great measure, to the manner of executing their criminals, which is very cruel: for they strip them stark naked, and thus tied hands and feet, expose them on the sands to the scorching of the sun; and stinging of the flies; where they die a most miserable and lingering death<sup>k</sup>.

Onor. THERE are on the coast of Kanâra several considerable places. The most northern is Onoar, or Onor, situated on a river capable to receive ships of two or three hundred tons. It has a castle on a low hill, about a mile within the bar, built of old by the Portugueses: but the Râjah of Kanâra, unable to bear their insolence, reduced it by famine, after a three years blockade. There is a pagod here, called Ram-trut, visited yearly by great numbers of pilgrims. The image, which resembles a monkey more than a man, is sometimes carried in procession. He is placed in a coach, in form of a tower, with a pyramidal top, about fifteen feet high; where eight or ten priests are set to bear him company, and sing his praises. The coach, which goes on four wheels, is drawn thro' the streets by means of a good strong rope, attended by a great mob, who are always fond of superstition<sup>l</sup>.

Batakola. THE next port southward, is Batakola, which has the vestigia of a very large city, standing on a little river about four miles from the sea. There is nothing worth notice now remaining, except ten or twelve small pagods, covered with copper and stone. The country produces good quantities of pepper; and the English had a factory there: but, about the year 1670, one of their ships coming there to lade, the chief begged a fine bull-dog of the captain; which sometime after killing a cow, as they were out a hunting, the priests raised a mob, who slew the whole factory, eighteen in number. Since which time the English never resettled there, but often repair thither to buy pepper.

Barselor. AFTER Batakola follows Barselor, standing on the banks of a broad river, about four miles from the sea. The Dutch have a factory here, about a mile from the river's mouth, which has a castle on the north side for its guard. Their business here is purely to buy up rice, with which the adjacent country abounds, for their garrisons on the Malabâr coast. The Portugueses also get supplies of the same grain for Goa; and have six or eight ships there, which carry rice to Muskât, in Arabia, bringing back horses, dates, pearls, and other commodities, in exchange. To the south of this place, in the road to Mangulore, there is a walk eight or ten miles long, planted with four rows of trees, whose spreading branches afford umbrellas to passengers; who are likewise refreshed, from time to time, with fine clear water, given gratis by some old people, placed there in little huts, at the charge of the state. Between Barseloar and Mangulore lie Bakkanoar and Molkey; by whose rivers the large quantity of rice which their fields produce are exported<sup>m</sup>. Sea-ports: }

<sup>1</sup> HAMILTON, ubi supr. p. 282. <sup>k</sup> DELLON, ubi supr. p. 154. <sup>l</sup> HAMILTON, ubi supr. p. 278, & seq.

MANGULORE is the greatest mart for trade in all the Kanâra dominions; having the conveniency of the united stream of three rivers, which are made by the great rains and dews falling from the mountains of Gâtti, twenty-five or thirty leagues distant, and join about a mile from the sea. The town is poorly built along the streams, and has no defence but two small forts, one on each side of the river's mouth. The fields bear two crops of corn yearly; and the higher grounds produce pepper, bettle nuts, sandal wood (or sanders)) iron, and steel, which creates a pretty good trade. The Portugueses have a factory for rice at Mangulor, and a pretty large church; because great numbers of black Christians reside there: but, says our author, both priests and people are the very dregs of Christianity. The clergy are so shameless, that they will bargain with a stranger to pimp for him; and the laity look on whoring, thieving, and murder, as no sins, provided any gain can be gotten by them.

IN 1695 the Muskât Arabs came with a fleet, and plundered the sea-coast of Kanâra, burnt Barseloar and Mangulore, and carried away a rich booty. The same coast was insulted in 1720 by Konna ji Anguria; but on landing some men, he found so much resistance, that he embarked again without doing any great mischief.

THERE is only one small sea-port more in Kanâra, called Manguzir, about five leagues south of Mangulore, and three from Dekulli; which is a large fort built on an island, close to the continent. And three leagues farther south is a small river, which divides Kanâra from the Malabar territories<sup>n</sup>. Manguzir port.

<sup>m</sup> HAMILTON, p. 282, & seqq.

<sup>n</sup> Ibid. p. 285, & seqq.

Extent,
bounds.

CHAP. VI.

The Dominions commonly called the Coast of Malabâr.

S E C T. I.

*The Country described.*Extent and bounds.

THE country of Malabar, taken in its larger sense, contains not only the country under that name, to the west of Cape Komori, but also those to the east, as far as Nagapatam: for so far the inhabitants are called Malabârs; and the Malabar tongue extends a great way beyond, within the kingdom of Karnâta. Taken in the more contracted and modern sense of the word, Malabâr includes only the countries so called to the west of Cape Komori, otherwise denominated the dominions of the Samorîn. This country begins at the small river three leagues to the south of Fort Dekullî before-mentioned, and ends at Cape Komori, the most southern point of the peninsula of India intra Gangem, the space of about 350 miles. Its greatest breadth is about eighty miles; in some parts it is not more than twenty broad. It is washed by the sea on the west; and on the east is bounded by the mountains of Gâtti, or Gâte, which divide it from the kingdoms of Messûr and Madûrey.

Soil and
produce.

THE air all over Malabâr is very good, the coast delightful, and the soil one of the most fruitful in all Asia; affording two crops a year<sup>o</sup>: yet rice is not very plenty, much being imported from Kanâra (B): but the coast being low and sandy, it nourishes vast numbers of kokoa-nuts, bettle, and arekka trees, whose fruit brings in much riches from abroad<sup>p</sup>. Here are likewise store of other kinds, excellent in their nature, but very different from those of Europe; such as the jalkka, of a prodigious bulk. Its fruit is divided into many partitions, which contain a substance of a yellow colour, and taste, like melons, inclosing a sort of chesnuts, which are the trees.

Fruit-

<sup>o</sup> CORNW. Obs. on Ind. Voy. p. 55. DELLON, ubi supr. p. 61. <sup>p</sup> HAMILTON. vol. i. p. 292.

(B) Particularly from Bar-jalore; because the Malabâr rice will not keep above three months out of the husk; but in the husk it will keep a year. Hamilton's New Account, p. 331. feed.

feed. The mango is a much more excellent fruit, resembling the nectarine. They are of different colours when ripe, as red, white, and green; some the size of an egg, others bigger than the largest pears. The skin is hard, and the pulp soft; they are excellent either to preserve or pickle: but the Malabâr mangos are the worst in the Indies; those towards Surât are better, and those of Goa best of all<sup>a</sup>.

THE higher grounds produce pepper and kardamums; which, we are told, grow no-where in the world except in the kingdom of Kannanor, near the mountain six or seven leagues from the coast. They need neither sow nor plant it: it is enough, after the rainy season, to burn the herbs which grow on the spot, whose ashes produce this grain; which is the grand seasoning of the eastern countries. Cinnamon grows on the Malabâr coast; but it is not comparable to that of Seylân. The arbor de reys, baniyan, or war-tree, is no-where so plenty as in this country<sup>r</sup>. The mountains yield iron and steel, but not so good as the European. Their woods, besides store of game, furnish teak-timber, and angelique, for building; sandal-wood, or saunders, white and yellow; cassia fistula, nux vomica, cocolus indiae, and other drugs, in plenty<sup>s</sup>. The soil likewise produces all sorts of pulse; and, among the rest, beans, four inches long, inclosed in a pod a foot and an half in length: but they are only used by the poorer sort of people, as having no good taste.

MALABAR abounds with wild-fowl and tame, the same as in other parts of the Indies; likewise with tigers of the three sorts already mentioned; jackalls, or addives, buffaloes, civet-cats, and monkeys: but no animal is so noxious in this country as the adders, especially a green kind, whose poison is incurable. Some, tho' long, are very small; those of the largest size are near twenty feet long, and of so vast a thickness, that they are able to swallow a man. But they are less dangerous than the other sort, because they are sooner discovered, and more easily avoided<sup>t</sup>.

THE country of Malabâr was formerly united under one emperor, called the Samorin (C), who, in his old-age, turned Division into king-
Mohammedân; doms.

<sup>p</sup> DELLON, ubi sup. p. 61.
 MILTON, ubi sup. p. 291.

<sup>r</sup> Ibid. p. 66.      <sup>s</sup> HA-
<sup>t</sup> DELLON, p. 77, 85.

(C) Hamilton says, this emperor reigned when the Portuguese first entered the Indies by sea, in 1498. But De Faria y Sousa, and other Portuguese authors, place the reign of this Samorin, called Perimal, 600 years before. As to the division,

Provinces, towns. Mohammedan; and resolving to make the pilgrimage to Mekka, before he put to sea divided his dominions, by will, among his four nephews. To the eldest he bequeathed Kallistra, whose sea-coast reaches from Dekulli to Tikorey, about twenty-four leagues; to the second, whom he loved best, he left from Tikorey to Chitawa, the same extent of coast, with the title of Samorin; to the third, Attinga, which reached from Chitwa to Cape Komori, about fifty leagues: because that part of the country is confined between the sea and the mountains of Gâtti (D); and divided by rivers from those mountains, by more than 1000 islands, between Chitwa and Quoyloan (or Koulam). The youngest had Kôyl, which reached from Cape Komori to the river of Nagapatam, about fifty leagues beyond. In process of time each of these kingdoms became to be divided into many lesser principalities, as it is at present (E). However, many of the Hindû tribes continue tributaries to the provinces mentioned in the old king's will; although a much greater number are become independent<sup>a</sup>.

No villages.

It is remarkable, that although cities and towns are frequent enough in Malabâr, yet there are no villages to be seen all over it; every one having his separate habitation and inclosure in the country: and, as it is an established custom among them not to make use of their neighbours water, every house which does not stand by the side of a river has a well of its own<sup>x</sup>.

Mount Delli.

BETWEEN Dekulli and mount Delli (F), there is no harbour: but a fine deep river runs all the way for about eight leagues, never above a bow-shot from the shore, and falls into the sea at the foot of the mount, over rocks and sands,

<sup>a</sup> HAMILTON, ubi supr. p. 291. p. 108.

<sup>x</sup> DELLON, ubi supr.

sion, De Faria says he gave to the chief of his relations the kingdom of Koulam, where he placed the head see of the Braman's religion, and called him Kobritim; which is the same as high priest. This dignity was afterwards translated to Kochin. To his nephew, Perimal gave Kâlikût, with all the temporal dominion, calling him Zamori, which is the same as emperor. See Portug. Asia, vol. i. p. 100, & seq.

(D) So is the whole country; and this part broadest of all.

(E) Of these captain Hamilton has given a list, p. 287, as it was procured in 1694 by the Heer Van Rede, commissary-general of the Dutch East India company.

(F) Or mount D'Eli; that is, Eli's mount; as Dellon, and some others, name it. Voyage to East India, ch. 21. p. 61. Engl. edit.

in a chanel half a league broad. A small river also runs on the south side: and three leagues lower down is a spacious river, called Balliapatam; where the English company had once a factory for pepper. Cities, Ports.

NOT far from thence, southward, is Kannanore, a town formerly belonging to the crown of Portugal, with a strong fort, built on a point of land almost surrounded by the sea. But the Dutch, joined by the natives, who were weary of the Portuguese tyranny, took it about the year 1660, with very little trouble: for a Fidalgo being killed by a cannon-shot, the first day on which the enemy opened their trenches, the governor fled in the night, and left the garrison to shift for themselves; who capitulated the next day. The Dutch demolished the town, and with the stones fortified the fort, which has a garrison but of forty soldiers, their trade being small. However, there is a pretty large town built in the bottom of the bay, belonging to Adda Râjah, a Mohammedan prince; who can bring near 20,000 men into the field. His government is neither absolute nor hereditary. He has not so much as the command of the public money: but, when there is occasion for any, the Râjah, the commissioner of trade, the chief judge, and the treasurer, meet, to take it out of the chests, where it is lodged, by means of holes in the lids, of which each has a key. The coin is all gold. Kannanore.

Adda Râ-
jah.

IN 1668, this prince paying a visit to the Dutch captain, his men attempted to surprize the fort, but without Adda's knowlege; for which the ringleader was put to a cruel death by his order.

EIGHT or ten miles from Kannanore the king of Kallistri keeps his court; whither our author, with another Englishman, went in 1702. His palace was built with twigs, and covered with Kadjans, or kokoa-nut tree leaves, woven together. The king, named Ommitri (G), was about forty years old, and successor to the eldest son of the Samorin before-mentioned, who died in his voyage towards Mekka. They King of Kallistri

✓ HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 292, & seqq.

(G) Dellon, who calls him Onitri, says it is a title belonging to all the kings of Kannanore, as he makes him to be; and that he was in his time the most powerful of all the kings in Malabâr; and much superior in strength to the Samorin, tho' his territories were not near so large. See Voyage to the East Indies, part 1. ch. 21. p. 61. also ch. 38. p. 117. But ch. 40. p. 123, he says the Samorin is the most powerful of all the Malabâr princes.

Cities,
Ports.

paid their compliment each with a gold Chekín, and a few grains of rice laid on it. He treated them with toddi wine, some plantains, and young kokoa-nuts. His dress was only a silk Lunjey, or scarf, which was fastened about his middle by a girdle of gold plate, and reached to his knees. He had great jewels of massy gold, set with rubies, emeralds, and pearls, hanging at his ears; but no ornament on his head, except his hair, which hung over his shoulders, and was very beautiful. His queen and daughters were in the same habit, only their hair was tied up behind; being all naked above the navel, and barefooted. Her majesty had a cheerful countenance, and was very affable, distributing Bettle and Arekka with her own royal hands.

ABOUT the year 1680, three princes of the royal blood conspired to cut off Ommitri, and his family: but, being detected, they were beheaded on altars, built square, of stone, about three yards high, and four in diameter, two miles from Kannanore.

Dormé-
patam.

ADDA RAJAH's dominions reach but ten miles to the south of Kannanore to Tellicherri river; near which he has a harbour, called Dormépatam. The entrance is embarrassed with rocks, and has an island opposite to it, about a league from shore, invironed with the same dangers. The same Rajah is likewise in possession of the Lakka Diva islands (H), which lie about forty leagues off the Malabar coast, between the latitudes of eight degrees thirty minutes, and twelve degrees thirty minutes. Our author had seen eighteen of them (I). They are all low, and have many dangerous shoals about them. There is a large chanel between them and the Maldivé islands, called the eight-degree chanel. They produce nothing but kokoa-nuts and fish; which latter they export dried to the continent. From the nut-kernels they express oil; and of the fibres of the husk, called Kayar (or Kayro), they make cordage and cables for shipping. Sometimes in the south-west monsoons they find ambergris floating on the sea. Captain Hamilton saw a piece in the Rajah's possession as big as a bushel; and he valued it at

Lakka
Diva
islands.

(H) In Dillon's Voyage, p. 118. he is, doubtless, by some mistake of the press, called Atitaja; and is said to be king of several of the Maldivé islands (instead of the Lakka isles); yet subject to the king of Kannanore; meaning Onitri, or Ommitri.

(I) In effect, the large ones do not exceed that number. Captain H. Cornwall has given a chart of them in his Observations on several voyages to India, p. 40.

10,000 rûpîs, or 1250 pounds sterling. The inhabitants are, like their prince, Mohammedans <sup>2</sup>.

Cities,
Ports. -
Telli-cherri.

THE next province to Adda Râjab's dominions is Telli-cherri (K); where the English have a factory, pretty well fortified with stone walls and cannon: but to little purpose; since it has no river near it to protect, nor can it defend the road from the insults of enemies. The town is inclosed with a stone wall, and stands behind the fort, within land.

TWELVE or fourteen miles farther southward stands Burgara, a sea-port belonging to Ballanore Burgarey, a formidable prince, whose country produces pepper and the best cardamums in the world. This prince and his predecessors have been lords of the seas, time out of mind; and all trading vessels between cape Komori and Damân were obliged to carry his passes. Those of one mast paid eight shillings yearly, and those with three, about sixteen. But when the Portugueses settled in India, they pretended to the sovereignty of the sea; and this occasioned a war, which has lasted ever since. This prince keeps some light gallies; which cruize along the coast from October to May, in order to make prize of all such vessels as have not his pass. He, without any scruple, went on board Captain Hamilton's ship, who was there in 1703, and treated him nobly on shore: but would drink nothing on board; telling the Captain, that his water was polluted by his touch. And, when our author had paid his visit, he caused an apartment of his palace, built with reeds, and covered with kokoa-nut leaves, to be new thatched; because, in walking together, the stranger's hat had chanced to touch the roof.

Lord of the seas.

THE dominions of this prince end at Tikorey, about twelve miles south of Mealey (L). Midway is Kottika (M), famous for seizing vessels which traded without their lord's pass. Off Kottika, about eight miles, lies sacrifice rock: so called because, when the Portugueses first settled in India, the cruisers of that place sacrificed on it the whole crew of a Portuguese vessel, which they had seized. It is observable, that those rock.

Sacrifice

<sup>2</sup> HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 296, & seqq.

(K) Or Tilseri, as the French call it: but its true name is Tatishere. See Dellon's Voyage East Ind. p. 118, ch. 38.

(L) Or Meali, two leagues north of Bargara (or Burgara). Dellon's Voya. part ii. ch. 1. p.

(M) This doubtless is Kota, or Kagnali, a Bazâr, or market-town; whose lord was a great pirate: but Dellon, p. 138, places it not above a mile and half from Bargara. Kota signifies a fort.

Cities,
Ports.

Europeans could never get one foot of ground in the Balanore's country, although they often attempted it <sup>a</sup>.

Samorin's country.

THE country of the Samorin (N) reaches along the sea-coast of Malabâr, from Tikori to Chitwa, about twenty-two leagues. Its products are, pepper in abundance: bettle-nut and kokoa-nut, whose tree yields Jaggheri, a kind of sugar; and Kopera, or the nut-kernels dried, which affords a clear oil. Here are found iron, sandal-wood, cassia lignum, and timber for building; which commodities are exported to great advantage.

Kalikut, or Koy Kota.

THE chief city (if it may be called one) of the Samorin is Kalekut (O); where he commonly resides. His palace is built of stone; and there is some faint resemblance of grandeur to be seen about his court. He is reckoned the most powerful king on the Malabâr coast, and has the best trade in his country; which makes both him and his people richer than their neighbours. The English had a factory there for many years: but are now removed to Tellicherri; whither their pepper is sent from thence by sea. The French have a small factory also, settled in 1698; and the Portugueses a poor church: but the first have not money to carry on trade; nor the latter credit enough to procure converts.

Road of Kalekut.

THE Portugueses formerly built a town before Kalekut; which being undermined by the sea (P), or swallowed up by an earthquake, as some affirm, in 1703, Captain Hamilton's ship, which drew twenty-one feet, struck on some of the ruins in six fathom water, in the road of that city <sup>b</sup>.

Tannore.

FIVE or six leagues south of Kalekut is Tannore (Q) (or Tanor), a town of small trade, inhabited by Mohammedans;

<sup>a</sup> HAMILT. ubi sup. p. 299, & seqq.

<sup>b</sup> Ibid. p. 318,

(N) Or Zamerlim, as Fryer and Cornwall say.

(O) Called in the Malabâr language Koy Kota; that is, the fort of the cock, or cock-fort; because the Samorin's kingdom was of no greater extent formerly than you might hear a cock crow. Dellon Voya. East India, p. 140.

(P) Dellon, p. 141, imputes this to the inundation caused by the south-west winds, which blow from May to September. The fort, he says, lies half under water: and those inundations removed the trade from Kalikut to Goa. The same author says, gold dust is found among the sands on the sea-shore.

(Q) The king resides about a league from thence: and though his dominions are not above eight or ten leagues long, and as many broad, yet he is as absolute as any in Malabâr, and tributary to none. Dellon Voy. p. 144.

who

who are a little free state ; but pay an acknowledgement to the Samorin. Five leagues from thence, towards the same point, is Pennaney, before-mentioned ; which has the benefit of a river, and was formerly a place of trade ; where the French and English had their factories till the year 1670, when they removed. About four leagues more, to the south, is Chitwa river (R), which bounds the Samorin's dominions on that sides ; where the Dutch built a small fort, and settled, about the year 1714<sup>c</sup>.

Cities,
Ports.

MANY strange customs were observed formerly in this country ; of which some still continue. One was, for the Samorin to reign no longer than twelve years. If he died before that time expired, it saved him a troublesome ceremony of cutting his own throat on a public scaffold ; which he ascended for that purpose, after feasting, and taking leave of his numerous nobility and gentry : who, having buried his body with great pomp, elected a new Samorin. In place of this custom, at present, at the end of twelve years a jubilee is proclaimed through the Samorin's dominions ; and, a tent being pitched for him in a large plain, a feast is celebrated for ten or twelve days, with great rejoicings, guns firing both day and night. At the end of which, any four of the guests, who have a mind to gain a crown by a desperate action, may undertake it ; which is, to force their way through 30 or 40,000 of his guards, and kill him in his tent : he who gives the bold stroke succeeding him in the empire.

One odd
custom,

IN 1695, one of these jubilees happened, and was kept at Pennani (S), a sea-port, about fifteen leagues southward of Kalekut. No more than three men would venture on that extravagant enterprize. They fell in, with sword and target, among the guards ; and, after they had killed and wounded many of them, were themselves killed. However, a nephew of one of the desperadoes, about fifteen or sixteen years old, had like to have carried the prize : for, keeping close by his uncle's side, when he saw him fall, the youth got through the guards into the Samorin's tent, and, making a stroke at his majesty, had certainly dispatched him, if a large brass lamp, which was burning over his head, had not marred the blow : but before he could make another he was killed. Our author Captain Hamilton happened at that juncture to changed for another.

<sup>c</sup> HAMILT. ubi sup. p. 322.

(R) It is about ten leagues to the north of Kochin. sometimes the place of the Samorin's residence.

(S) Pennaney, or Panianey;

Cities, Ports. sail along the coast, and heard the guns for two or three days and nights successively.

Marriage customs. WHEN the Samorín marries, he must not cohabit with his wife till the Nambourey, or chief priest, has enjoyed her ; and, if his sanctity pleases, he may have three nights of her company. Because the first fruits of her nuptials must be an holy oblation to the god she worships : and some of the nobles are so complaisant as to allow the clergy the same tribute. However the common people cannot have that honour done them, but are forced to supply the places of the priests themselves<sup>d</sup>.

Kingdom of Kochin. THE king of Kauchin's (or Kochin's) dominions are next to the Samorín's, and extend from Chitwa about twenty-four leagues to the southward. So many rivulets descend from the mountains of Gâtti (or Gâte), which reach within eight leagues of the coast, that they reckon above 1000 islands made by their streams, which join at Kranganôr, five leagues below Chitwa ; where they make one great outlet to the sea.

Kranganôr. THE first place of note after leaving Chitwa is Kranganôr ; where the Dutch have a small fort, which retains the same name, standing about one league up the river. Formerly it bore the name of a kingdom, and was a republic of Jews ; who once could reckon 80,000 families, but now are reduced to 4000. They have a synagogue at Kochin, not far from the king's palace, about two miles from the city, in which are preserved their records, engraven on copper-plates in Hebrew characters ; and when any of the characters decay they have them new cut.

Jews there ; MYNHEER Vanreede, before-mentioned, about 1695, had an abstract of their history translated into Low Dutch. They declare themselves of the tribe of Manasséh, a part whereof was, by order of Nebukhadnezzar, carried to the most eastern province of his large empire, which it seems extended as far as Cape Komori : and this journey 20,000 of them performed in three years from their setting out from Babylon.

their history. WHEN they arrived in Malabar, they were received with great civility by the inhabitants, who allowed them liberty of conscience, and the use of their own customs. There, having increased in number and riches, they at length purchased the little kingdom of Kranganôr ; and chose two sons of an eminent family to govern the commonwealth, and reign jointly over them. But one of the brothers, ambitious to reign alone, killed the other at a feast ; and his son, having revenged his father's death by that of the murderer, the state fell again Cities, into a democracy; which still continues among these Jews. Ports.

<sup>d</sup> HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 309, & seqq.

 Many of them, through poverty, have embraced the Hindû religion; the lands having for many ages reverted into the hands of the Malabârs.

To the south of Kranganôr, and within the island of Bay-pin, which reaches from thence to Kochin, there is an old Portuguese fort; and five leagues up the rivulets is a Romish church, called Verapoli, served by French and Italian priests; whose superior can raise 4000 men, all of the church of Rome. But there are many more Christians of St. Thomas, who will not communicate with those of St. Peter; and some Portugueses, called Topases, who communicate with neither: for they will be served by none but Portuguese priests, because they indulge them more in their villanies, and let them have absolution from their crimes at an easier rate.

THE water of this country near the sea-coast from Kran- Swelled ganôr to St. Andrea (T), about twelve leagues to the south, legs.
 has the bad quality to give the constant drinkers of it swelled legs; some it affects in one, some in both. Our author has seen legs above a yard about at the ankle. It causes no pain, but itching: nor does the thick leg seem heavier than the small one to the owner. The Dutch at Kochin, to prevent that malady, send boats daily to Verapoli for water to serve the city: and yet Captain Hamilton has seen both Dutch men and women troubled with that distemper; to heal or prevent which, no remedy hath yet been found. The Romish legends impute the cause of those great swelled legs to a curse St.
Thomas laid upon his murderers and their posterity. But St.
Thomas was killed (they say) by the Tillinga priest at Meliapûr, on the coast of Choromandel, about 400 miles distant, and the natives there are not afflicted with this distemper.

THE Portugueses, who were the first Europeans settled at City of Kochin, built there a fine city on the river-side, about three Kochin.
 leagues from the sea: but, the latter gaining on the land yearly, it is not now above 100 paces from it. However, the situation among rivulets and canals makes it exceeding pleasant.
 It was a mile and half long, to one mile in breadth; but the Dutch having taken it about 1660, with the assistance of the king of Kochin, whose friendship had been destroyed by the • HAMILT. ubi suprà. p. 323, & seqq.

(T) This is only a village priests of St. Thomas; who are with a church in it, dedicated generally both poor and illiteto St. Andrew, and served by rate. Hamilt. p. 332.

Cities,
Ports.

Portuguese insolence, they contracted it to almost one tenth of its former magnitude : it being now about 600 paces long by 200 broad ; but fortified with seven large bastions, and thick curtains. The garrison consists of 300 men. The king of Kochin, who at best is but a vassal to the Dutch, has a palace built of stone, about half a league from the Dutch city ; and there is a straggling village not far from the palace, which bears the name of Old Khochin, with a Bazár, or market-place, in it ; where the country merchandizes are sold, but no curiosities. His majesty's ordinary residence is at another palace, six leagues to the south of Kochin, and two from St. Andrea ; but he keeps only a small court.

Mud Bay
Irregularity.

ON the shore of St. Andrea, about half a league out in the sea, lies Mud Bay, a place which few in the world can parallel. It is open to the wide ocean, and has neither island nor bank to break-off the force of the billows, which come rolling with great violence on all other parts of the coast in the south-west monsoons. But on this bank of mud lose themselves in a moment ; and ships lie on it, as secure as in the best harbour, without motion or disturbance. It reaches about a mile along shore, and has shifted from the northward in thirty years about three miles<sup>f</sup>.

Porkah
principality.

ABOUT two leagues south of St. Andrea begin the dominions of Porkat, or Porkah, which are of small extent, reaching not above four leagues along the coast. The prince is poor, having but little trade, although it was a free port for pirates when Avery and Kid robbed on these shores : but since that time they infest the northern parts, where they find richer prizes, among the Mokha and Persian traders. The Dutch keep a factory at Porkah ; but of small consequence.

Kali Koulam.

KOILKOILAN (or Kali Koulam) is another little principality contiguous to Porkah, where the Dutch keep a factory : and next to it is Koyloan (or Koulam), another small principality, and city. It has the benefit of a river, which is the southermost outlet of the Kochin islands ; and the Dutch have a small fort within a mile of it, on the shore, which they took from the Portugueses. It has a garrison of thirty men ; and its trade is inconsiderable. At Erwa, two leagues to the south of Koyloan, the Danes have a small factory, being a poor looking thatched house by the sea-side, with a trade suitable to it : and two leagues beyond Erwa lies Aujengo, a fort, built by the English in 1695. It stands on a sandy foundation, and is fortified by the sea on one side, and a little river on the other : but there is not a drop of fort.

Aujengo

<sup>f</sup> HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 325. 328, & seqq.

water for drinking but what comes from the Red Cliffs, three Cities, miles to the north ; which would have been a much better Ports.
situation. The country produces good quantities of pepper, and long cloth, as fine as any made in the Indies. Their factory is in the dominions of the queen of Attinga. Before it was built, the English had two others in her country, to the south of Aujengo ; one called Brinjan (or Bringjohn), the other Ruttera (or Reytora) : but, being naked places, they left them, to avoid the insults of the needy courtiers.

In those times they sent a yearly present to the queen of Attinga, whose court is about four leagues within land from Attinga. Aujengo : and, in 1685, it being carried by a young beautiful gentleman, her black majesty fell in love with him, and next day made him proposals of marriage. But, although he modestly refused so great an honour, yet, to please her majesty, he staid at court a month or two ; and when he came away she made him some presents. About 1720, the annual present being demanded by the queen's officer, and the English chief refusing to pay it to any but the queen herself, she invited him to court ; where, to appear great, he carried two of his council, and some others of the factory, with most of the military belonging to the garrison : but they were all cut off by stratagem, excepting a few black servants, who made their escape.

TEGNAPATAM (or Tengapatam) lies about twelve leagues southward of Aujengo, in a country producing pepper and coarse cloth. Here the Dutch have a factory. Kolicha (or Kolechey) situate between the middle and west point of Cape Komorin (or Komori) affords good cloth and salt ; but neither the English nor Dutch trade thither. Close by Kolicha, at the said middle point (U), there is a secure harbour for small vessels §.

FROM the borders of Koyloan, above-mentioned, as far as this cape, is called the kingdom of Travankôr : and, as we are told on one hand that it belonged to Attinga, and on the other, that it was governed by the queen, it may be presumed that she was the same just now mentioned. Besides the places on the sea-coast already taken notice of, this country has several considerable ones within land ; among which are the § HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 333, & seqq.

(U) By the context our author must mean the point commonly called Cape Komorin ; but Kolicha is above fifty miles to the north-west of it, by the late map of the Jesuits sent from India ; although De Lifle and the charts place it near the Cape.

cities

Cities,
Ports.

City of Kotate.

Cape
Komori.

Strange
variety.

cities of Travankôr, Kali, and Kotate. This last is situate at the foot of the mountains (of Gâtti) about four leagues from Cape Komori, and is very large and populous<sup>h</sup>; but without either walls or ditches, as are most of the towns in these parts.

AT this famous Cape, which makes the most southerly point of this peninsula of India, one experiences two opposite seasons of the year, winter and summer at the same time; for in that tongue of land, which is not above three leagues in extent, sometimes even in the same garden, which is not more than 500 paces square, one has the pleasure to see those two seasons united; the trees being loaded with flowers and fruits on one side, while on the other side they are stripped of all their leaves. This surprising phænomenon is owing to those mountains; and our author, who relates this fact on the testimony of others, himself observed that on the opposite sides of the Cape the winds are constantly opposite, and as if at strife: so that at the same time the winds blow from the west on the west side, they blow from the east on the eastern side<sup>i</sup>. More than this, those mountains of Ballagâte (or Gâtti) being covered with a very fine sand, light as dust, it is carried by the winds as far as the island of Seylon, and is very troublesome at Tutukurin, on the Fishery coast: besides, as this sand is red, the reflection of the sun's rays makes the sky seem all on fire; which is a sight dreadful to behold<sup>k</sup>.

SECT. II.

The Inhabitants of Malabâr.

Inhabitants.

Character.

THE inhabitants of Malabar are generally well-shaped, all of them black, or at least very deep tawny; but are not near so ugly as the Africans. They let their hair grow to a great length: but shave their beards close; excepting a few who wear whickers. They do not want ingenuity; but very rarely improve it by any useful arts or sciences. They are very treacherous, breach of faith being their daily practice; in which, says Dellon, they almost outdo the Mohammedans their masters. However, they are generally very patient, and not easily put in a passion. Besides, it ought to be mentioned to their honour, that when injured or affronted, they have recourse to the most generous methods of taking satisfaction, and never revenge themselves by clandestine means; poison not being so much as known among them. Government.

<sup>h</sup> BOUCHET ap. Lettr. Edif, tom xv. p. 44, & seq. <sup>i</sup> TACHARD, ibid. tom. iii. p. 209, & seq. <sup>k</sup> NIEBUOFF, ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. ii. p. 262, and BALDÆUS, ibid. vol. iii. p. 583.

THE Malabâr females are for the generality well shaped, and not ill-featured: but little women are in greater esteem than tall ones<sup>1</sup>.

THESE people are distinguished, as in other parts of India, Divided into several degrees or tribes. The first is that of their princes, the second of their clergy; the third consists of their Nayers, or nobles; the merchants make the fourth; and under the fifth may be comprised the mechanics, husbandmen, fishers, and the inferior kinds of people.

WITH regard to the first order, or that of the princes, Crown hereditary. in each kingdom of the Malabârs there are several families which are branches of the royal stock, superior in rank to all others; and, for the general, the most antient of all the princes succeeds without opposition: so that a young sovereign is the greatest rarity that can be seen among the Malabârs.

THE first thing which a new king does, is to appoint a lieutenant-general, or first minister: for although this post Prime be exposed to sale, yet the king reserves a power of chusing minister. from among the candidates, him whom he judges most capable of executing that important trust. And whether a Nayer or Shati be invested with this dignity, he will make himself obeyed even by the princes themselves, no less than if a person of the first quality had been elected. The king leaves the whole management of affairs to his conduct; and, for the most part, lives in a retired place; but with a great deal of magnificence. This governor-general has the whole direction of the treasury, as well as of making peace and war, in concert with the king; in whose presence he always stands. He permits not any of the courtiers or guards to enter his majesty's bed-chamber; and never speaks to him without laying his hand on his mouth. The least neglect in any of these respects would be attended with the loss of his office, which is only during pleasure: however, such changes rarely happen<sup>m</sup>.

WHEN the king (for instance, him of Kannanôr), goes The king's abroad, he is carried either on an elephant, or in a palanki; state. having on his head a crown of gold, shaped like a ducal bonnet, weighing somewhat above 200 guineas. It is always given by the new governor-general, and repositied in the treasury of the chief pagod when the king dies. His majesty is surrounded with his guard of Nayers, before whom certain

<sup>1</sup> DELLON Voy. to Ind. p. 91, 106, 107. 114.
p. 101.

<sup>m</sup> Ibid.

Tribes, or Classes. officers march to clear the way, and give notice that the king is coming; who marches under the sound of drums, trumpets, and other warlike instruments. The prince and princesses, when they go abroad, appear with the same pomp: but the prime minister is only attended by his guards, without martial instruments, or any to clear the way; unless he happens to be a prince, and then he enjoys those honours in respect of his birth, and not of the dignity of his office.

The clergy. THERE are in the Malabâr countries many degrees or dignities in the church, as well as in the state. The clergy consist of three orders; Nambourî, Brâmans, and Buts. The Nambouri are the first in both capacities of church and state: and some of them are popes, being sovereign princes in both respects. Of these priests there are two ranks or orders; the first called Iregale Nade, the second Nambiar. The Brâmans are the second degree of clergy, and concerned in spiritual affairs only. The Buts, or magicians, says our author, are next to them, and in great veneration<sup>n</sup>. Such is the authority of the clergy here, that in all matters which concern religion the kings are subject to the Nambouri and Brâmans.

Nayers, or gentry, THE Nayers, or, as others write, Nairs, Nahers, and Nayros, are the gentry. These are very numerous<sup>o</sup>. They may be easily distinguished from the rest, by their civil deportment and conversation.

serve as guides IT is an antient law or custom for all strangers or others, who are not pagans, never to travel without a guard of one or more of these Nayers; insomuch that the princes never take cognizance of any violences offered to travellers who neglect this precaution. These Nayers, whose pay is no more than eight Tares, or four pence a day, never betray or abandon those they guard upon the road: but if a man happens to lose his life while he is under their care, they will not survive him. If they should do otherwise, they would be looked on as cowards: and where-ever they chance to violate their trust, none are so forward as their own wives and kindred to be their executioners. For all this, a traveller is more secure under the guidance of a son of a Nayer, than of several Nayers themselves: because it is a sort of law among the Indian robbers never to hurt children, or such as are not able to defend themselves; whereas they spare none who are provided with arms.

to all strangers. WHEN the Nayers children go into the country, they only carry in their hand a twisted stick, about a foot and half

<sup>n</sup> HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 290. 312.
p. 104.

<sup>o</sup> DELLON Voy.

long, with a handle at top, like that of a dagger, and a large knob at the other end. None but the sons of the gentry are allowed to wear such a stick, by which they are distinguished from others; and their wages is not above three halfpence a day. But although this is the securest way of travelling, yet none but the poorer sort of people use it: because travellers are respected in this country according to the number of their guards from place to place <sup>P</sup>.

THE Teyvís are next to the gentry, and the farmers of Teyvís. kokoa-nut trees. They apply to husbandry, and gathering the palm wine. These may bear arms; but not without a licence.

MERCHANTS are of all orders, excepting that of Nam-Chatims, bouri; and are in some esteem.

THE Maynats, or whiteners of linen, the weavers, and Maynats. those who make it their employment to draw it, are divided into so many different classes or families.

THE Poulias produce the labourers and mechanics. These Poulias Hamilton thinks are inferior to the Mukwas (X), or fisher- and Muk- men; who are obliged to live near the sea, and are not per- was. mitted to follow any other employment, or to bear arms, even in case of the greatest extremity. But Dellon says, the Pouliats are the vilest and most contemptible of all the Mala-bârs; if he does not confound them with the Poulichis (or Pulchis), who, according to the former author, are the lowest class of human creatures, and excluded from the benefit of laws both human and divine.

If a Poulia, or Teyvís, meets with a Nayer on the road, he must go out of the way to let his worship pass, on pain of a severe chastisement, if not of death, at his hands. But the Poulichis are in a much worse condition: for, by the law, they Poulichis. are not permitted to converse with any other tribe (Y); nor to or Pulchis, wear any kind of cloth, but only a little straw to cover their nakedness, made fast by a cord round their middle. They must not build houses or huts (Z) on the ground, nor inhabit the plains where there is corn-land; but are doomed to dwell in the woods, and build on the branches of trees, like birds, with

<sup>P</sup> HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 94. & seq.

(X) In the English translation of Dellon they are called Moconas; perhaps by mistake.

(Y) Dellon says, if a Nayer has a mind to try his arms by killing one of the Pouliats, he may, with impunity.

(Z) Dellon says, they live in wretched huts, made of palm-leaves; and that their whole business is to watch the rice fields.

Tribes, or Classes.

used with rigour.

grafs and straw. If they happen to see any body coming towards them, they howl like dogs, and run away; lest those of quality should take offence at their breathing the same air. Not being permitted to till the ground, they plant fruit and roots in obscure places of the woods, stealing the seed in the night from the neighbouring gardens: but if they are caught, they are put to death on the spot, without any form of law. When they want food, they come to the skirts of their woods, and howl like foxes. Upon this signal, the charitable Poulias and Teyvîs relieve them with rice, kokoa-nuts, and fruits; which they lay down within twenty paces of them, and then withdraw, that the Poulichîs may come and carry it into their forests. They are very swift of foot, and dextrous in catching wild beasts and fowl<sup>a</sup>.

Religion.

THE inferior tribes have liberty of chusing their deities. Our author had seen at the houses of many Mukwas, or fishers, a stake with a few notches cut about it, fixed in the ground two feet high; and this, covered with Kadjans, or kokoa-tree leaves, serves both as a temple and god to that family. Some get a tree consecrated for their worship: others pay their devotion to the first animal, let it be cat, dog, or serpent, which they see in the morning; and this serves for the day. Their temples are neither large nor beautiful, but dark; their images all black and deformed, with lamps continually burning before them. However, they all believe in one supreme God, of whom they never make any image: and the transmigration of souls is a doctrine universally received by them<sup>r</sup>.

*Reckoned
infamous.*

THESE people eat carrion and vermin, which contributes to render them so odious; especially their not scrupling even the flesh of oxen and cows which die a natural death. They are so despicable, that no offering to the gods, or presents to the prince, will be accepted from them, unless it be gold or silver: and then they must lay it down at a distance, and retire twenty paces; while the Nayers, who are the prince's guards, come to take it up, and give them an answer at that distance. They are often fined in very great sums; which they are able to pay, because they rob the graves of the Malabârs, most of whose gold and silver is buried with them. But this being considered as a kind of sacrilege, they are looked upon as forcerers, and an infamous generation, capable of the most enormous crimes. For this reason they are, on the least suspicion, accused, and condemned to death; whereas no person belonging to the other tribes can be convicted, Manners, Customs. without very substantial evidence<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>a</sup> HAMILTON, p. 312, & seq. DELLON, p. 91, & seqq.

<sup>r</sup> HAMILTON, p. 314, & seq.

THE laws which forbid an upper Hindû tribe or family to have any commerce with an inferior, particularly as to eating and drinking, are no-where more strictly kept up than among the Malabârs; or, in other words, the folly of family pride, Superiority of families which reigns in most nations, is carried here to the greatest pitch of extravagance. They will not suffer their victuals to be dressed by one of a lower rank; nor will they drink of the wells used by such: nay, if one of an inferior tribe enters their houses, the Brâmmân is sent for to take away the infection, by certain ceremonies used for that purpose. But this rule is observed with the greatest exactness when they strictly kept up. contract alliances by marriage: nay, the women (A) are even debarred having commerce with a man of an inferior degree. Thus, a man may marry a woman of the next class below his own, but not of a superior rank. In such case both parties are punished with death; except the females descended of the Nambouris and Brâmans: for, in such case, they are left to the disposal of the prince, who sells them for slaves; and as they are generally the handsomest among the Malabârs, foreigners are eager to purchase them at a dear rate; of which our author saw an instance.

IF a man of an inferior degree be accused of having received a favour from a lady of a rank superior to his, they A cruel law. conduct him, with fetters on his hands and feet, to the prince, where he is put to death. Nor is this thought a sufficient atonement for the offence; but the nearest akin to the lady have liberty for three days to kill all such relations of the criminal as they shall meet with in the district where the fact was committed. The Nayers have a power to exercise this cruelty on such occasions against the Teyvî, and Sheres or weavers; as these have the same power over the Mukwas or fishermen; and these again over the Poulchis. The Nambouri and Brâmans not being allowed to kill any body, their authority extends no farther than to deliver up those poor victims to slaughter. This cruel custom would be intolerable, were it not that they commonly respite the offender for eight days, that his relations may have time to get out of the way, till the three days, allotted by the law for revenging the affront, are expired<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> DELLON, p. 92.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, p. 97, & seqq.

(A) That this Law should respect the Women and not the Men, as in the English Translation of Dellon, appears from what follows, which otherwise would be a contradiction.

Manners, Customs.

Habit.

IN point of habit, there is scarce any difference between the men and women in Malabâr. They wear their hair, which is black, and very long; and go naked as far as the middle. The princes themselves, if they sometimes make use of a small vest, leave it open before. About their middle they fasten a piece of cloth, which reaches to their knees, and never make use of shoes or stockings. In other countries ladies pride themselves in rich gold and silver stuffs: but, on the contrary, in Malabar such cloaths are worn by the meaner sort; while the wives of the Nayers, and others of chief rank, wear nothing but fine white callico; placing their fondness rather on girdles of gold, and bracelets of silver or horn. They never adorn themselves with any jewels, unless it be a ring. Both men and women have ears hanging down to their shoulders, occasioned by the weight of the pendants, sometimes exceeding two ounces, which stretch the holes to such a degree that one may thrust his fist through them. Some wear gold chains: but these are only such who have merited that favour from the king by some remarkable action.

*Houses and
furniture.*

THEIR houses are commonly built with earth, and covered with kokoa-leaves; it being rare to meet with one of brick or stone. Nor is their furniture more sumptuous, consisting only of some baskets, with a few earthen pots and dishes. Their cups are of the same materials: nor do their kings make use of better. As they have no chimnies in their houses, on account of the heat of the climate, their victuals are dressed without-doors, and without sauces, consequently unfavoury. When they eat, they always turn their backs to the light. At night they make use of lamps supplied with kokoa-nut oil. Their beds are nothing but deal boards, which the rich cover with tapestry, and the poor with mats<sup>t</sup>.

Marriages of princes;

PRINCESSES are here married to either the Nambouri, or Brâmans; and their issue are princes, and capable of inheriting the crown in their turn: but, as there is not a sufficient number of princesses to furnish all those ecclesiastics with wives, they are allowed to marry women of the same rank, or family, with themselves; and their children are either Nambouri, or Brâmans, according to the quality of their mothers: for all pedigree and inheritance among the Malabârs runs in the female line. For this reason the princes never marry any princesses, but the daughters of Nayers, to whose race the children belong, and not to that of the princes.

<sup>t</sup> DELLON, p. 106, & seqq.

The Nayers are obliged to marry one of the same quality, Customs, or a woman of the next degree or family to themselves; Mar- namely, the Minats, or the Sheti. The other tribes and fa- riages. milies have the same liberty in wedlock; but the females must not debase themselves by marrying below their rank, on pain of death.

THE Malabâr princes, the Nambouri and Brâmmans, as female po- also the chief Nayers, commonly have only one wife; whom lygamy: they endeavour, by the most obliging means, to dissuade from taking another husband: for they cannot compel them to refrain, as they are allowed by the law of the country to marry as many husbands as they please<sup>u</sup>. Thus says Dellon. But, according to Captain Hamilton, every woman is stinted to twelve husbands at one time; while the men are not confined to a set number of wives. When a woman is married to her first husband, she has a house built for her; and he cohabits with her till she takes a second, or her legal number. In which case the husbands agree to live with her in their turns, for ten or more days together; each maintaining her for the time<sup>x</sup>.

WHAT is most surprising (and shews the force of custom), how re- this female polygamy is not attended with the least disorder gulated. or jealousy; for if one husband sees the arms of another at the lady's doors, he is satisfied that the place is taken up; and rests contented till he finds the coast clear. It is some consolation, however, to the men, under this female usurpation, that their marriage-engagements are only during pleasure: and that, whenever the parties are weary of each other, they part as freely as they meet. Nor are these marriages any great expence to them: for the usual present, which the new husband makes his wife, is a piece of linen to cover her<sup>y</sup>. During the time of such cohabitation, she serves the husband as purveyor and cook; and also keeps his cloaths and arms clean. When she proves with child, she declares who is the father; and after she has brought it to walk, or speak, he takes care of its education<sup>z</sup>.

IT is from this custom of the women marrying so many Inherit- husbands, and quitting them again at pleasure, that the chil- ances. dren derive their pedigree from their mothers; it being impossible to know their true fathers: neither are the sons here considered as the next heirs, but the nephews; who besides must be the sister's sons<sup>a</sup>: and if she has none, then the

<sup>u</sup> DELLON, p. 104, & seq.<sup>x</sup> HAMILT. p. 311.<sup>y</sup> DELLON, p. 105.<sup>z</sup> HAMILT. p. 311.<sup>a</sup> DEL-

LON, p. 105.

Customs,
Laws.

nearest in blood from the grandmother ; which custom is followed even by the Mohammedan Malabârs, although they keep a watchful eye over their wives<sup>b</sup>, and practise a different kind of polygamy.

Marry
very young.

THEY marry their daughters for the most part at twelve years of age ; and many have children before that time, who are generally very small ; possibly because their mothers marry so young. For all this, their labour is so easy, that midwives are unknown in these parts (and indeed throughout the Indies) ; any woman, who is somewhat advanced in years, taking upon her to perform that office. The Malabâr, as well as African women, as soon as they are delivered, wash themselves ; and take no farther care of their infants than to give them suck.

Burials.

IN Malabâr all dead bodies are interred ; excepting those of their princes, the Nambouri, Brâmmans, and Nayers ; which are burned : but the privilege of marrying so many husbands as they please, exempts the women from the cruel obligation of burning themselves<sup>c</sup>.

Theft rigorously punished.

JUSTICE is administered in Malabâr with much impartiality. Murder is seldom punished with death, nor does the law appoint any punishment for it ; leaving it to the discretion of the kindred to take what satisfaction they think fit : but they are the severest people in the world in case of theft ; for whoever steals but a bunch of pepper, or the value of it, pays for it with his life.

Their prisons.

THEY have no close or barricaded prisons in Malabâr ; nor are their criminals strongly guarded. They only load them with fetters ; which are never taken off till they are either discharged or executed.

Trial by ordeal.

ALL causes, both civil and military, are pleaded before the prince ; where both parties produce their evidence : but if witnesses be wanting, or they do not sufficiently clear the point, the accused may purge himself in the following manner. They cause a piece of iron, not unlike a hatchet, to be made red-hot before him ; then laying upon his hand a leaf of the bananas-tree, at top of that they lay the hot iron ; which he is not to throw on the ground, till after the redness is gone. This done, the superintendant of the prince's laundry wraps a napkin, dipped in rice-water, round his hand ; and having tied a cord or ribband about it, the prince puts his seal upon it. Three days after the napkin is taken off ; and, if any mark of the hot iron appears on his hand, he is deemed perjured, and punished accordingly<sup>d</sup>. In other places, the accused is obliged to put his bare head into a pot of boiling oil; and if any blister appears, the party is found guilty. Our author had been credibly informed, both by English and Dutch gentlemen, as well as natives, who had seen such trials, that the innocent person had not been in the least affected with the scalding oil (B); in which case, the punishment due to the crime is inflicted on the accuser<sup>e</sup>.

<sup>b</sup> HAMILT p. 312.

<sup>c</sup> DELLON, p. 106, 112.

*Customs,
Laws.*

THE prince in person always pronounces sentence; from whence there lies no appeal: and if the criminal be condemned to death, he is forthwith led out of the palace, and executed without delay. As the Indians of these parts look upon it the most glorious action they can do to obey their prince without reserve, they have no occasion for common executioners; the Nayers belonging to the guards being the most forward to do that office. Nay, if the crime be very heinous, it is common for the next kindred of the criminal to strive who shall give him the fatal blow; to wipe-off, as they say, the stain which he has brought on the family. Their usual way of putting to death is by running a lance through the criminal's body: after which they cut it into quarters, and hang them upon trees<sup>f</sup>.

*Sentence
and punishment.*

THEY have a good way of arresting people for debt. An officer is sent with a small stick from a judge, who is commonly a Brâmmân; and when he finds the debtor, he draws a circle round him with that stick; charging him, in the name of the king and judge, not to stir out of it till the creditor is satisfied, either by payment or surety: and it is no less than death for the debtor to break prison by going out of the circle.

Recovery of debts.

THE Malabârs make no use of pens, ink, and paper; but write on leaves of flags or reeds; which grow in morasses. They are generally about eighteen inches long, and one and a half broad, tapering at the extremities; having a small hole at one end for a string to pass through. This leaf is thicker than our royal paper, and very tough. They write with the leaves.*

*Write on

<sup>d</sup> DELLON, p. 100.
p. 101.

<sup>e</sup> HAMILTON, p. 315.

<sup>f</sup> DELLON,

(B) That is, they supposed such to be innocent. But nothing can excuse the superstition, as well as stupidity, of this barbarous custom; which not long since prevailed among ourselves, and still subsists in the countries of our enlightened neighbours.

where confessions are forced by torture, and witches are tried by throwing them into water bound hand and feet. They must reform these, and many others as irrational customs, before they have a right to reproach the Indians.

*Customs,
Arms.*

point of a bodkin, or style; holding the leaf athwart their left thumb-end, over the foremost finger. The impression does not pierce above half way through; and on two or three of such leaves they will write as much as we can on a sheet of small paper. All their records are written in the same manner. After the leaves have been strung, and rolled up in a scroll, they are hung for some time in smoke, and then locked up in their cabinets. Our author saw some such smoke-dried leaves; which they told him were above 1000 years old &c. The Malabâr language is spoken not only in the country to the west of Cape Komori, and in the Maldive islands, but also in those to the eastward of it; viz. Madûra, Tanjaor, and Karnâta, as far as the mountains near Ponganowr, in that kingdom; in which parts it is called the Tamul, or Damul, language.

*Their
arms,*

THE arms of the Malabârs are the lance, simeter, the bow, and musket; at all which they are exceeding dexterous. Their muskets are very light, though six feet long. In giving fire, they lay the but-end of their piece to the cheek, not the shoulder; and are excellent marksmen. Their bows are six feet long, and their arrows three, which they carry in their hands, and not in a quiver, as at Surât; and are masters of it to such a degree, that Dellon has frequently seen them shoot one arrow into the air, and hit it with a second. Besides these arms, they have fastened to their sides, with an iron hook, a large bayonet, about six inches broad, and a foot and a half long; which they use in close engagements. They who wear simeters, make use of bucklers. All carry their arms naked, and very bright, without scabbards, or other covers. They train their children to the bow, from the time they are able to walk; and in each kingdom there are academies maintained at the prince's charge, where the youth are instructed at their weapons; who often perform their exercises before the king, or others of eminent rank. Some, who have an opinion of their own skill, at certain times invite persons of quality to be judges of their ability, in feats of arms; when the prize is given to such as acquit themselves best. On these occasions, being animated by a double motive, of honour and interest, they attack one another with so much vigour, that it commonly costs the lives of several young fellows.

and exercise.

Single combat.

IF there happens to be a family-quarrel among the Nayers, they choose one or more of their meanest vassals to decide it; who, armed with certain knives, or bayonets, invented for the purpose, fight naked before the king and his whole court, till one of them is slain ; which terminates the dispute.

*Customs,
Commerce.*

THEY march without order, and fight without discipline. When they do go to war, it is barely out of a point of honour ; or, at most, for a little pillage : it being a custom, generally agreed on among the Malabâr princes, to restore, as soon as peace is concluded, all that was taken on any side during hostilities <sup>h</sup>.

*Their
wars.*

VERY few of the Malabâr Hindûs, especially the Nayers, apply themselves to commerce ; which is the reason that most of the commodities, either imported or exported, pass thro' the hands of strangers ; that is, the Mohammedans. These have for many ages settled in the country for sake of trade ; chiefly on the sea-coast, near the mouth of the rivers, for the convenience of foreign merchants ; who are for the most part Europeans.

Commerce.

THESE Mohammedans, living among the Malabârs, are Moham- obliged to accommodate themselves in all respects to their medans laws and customs, which are not directly opposite to their religion. They are distinguished from the Hindûs only by their beards, turbâns, and vests : but, according to Dellon, are a vile and treacherous sort of people. Besides, many of them live by piracy ; and these are more ignorant and barbarous than the rest : for they attack all they meet, without any respect to religion or nation, sparing friends no more than foes. Nor have they the least regard to passes, although given by such lords or princes as they stand in awe of. Indeed piracy is looked upon as a free exercise in those parts ; and the kings take no cognizance of what is transacted on the open sea ; which they consider as out of their jurisdiction. The rather, as they have an interest in such robberies ; those corsairs paying the tenth, of what booty they take, to the prince under whom they live.

*settled
there :*

THEIR vessels, called paros, are shaped like galleys, and generally carry five or six hundred men ; running with them all along the Indian coast, even as far as the Red Sea (or Arabic gulf). They very rarely attack European ships ; especially if of any defence : and when they do take any, it is commonly by surprize, not force. They strip all of their goods, but seldom make slaves of Mohammedans or Pagans, unless they be persons from whom they expect an extraordinary ransom. But they detain all Christians ; who are sure to die in captivity, unless they are ransomed, or turn Mussulmans. In this last case, they are much respected, and commonly made captains great pirates :

<sup>h</sup> DELLON, ubi. supr. p. 112, & seqq.

Customs, Temples.
cruel to Christians.

of their paros. At their first going abroad with one of these vessels, they resolve to sprinkle it with the blood of the first Christian they happen to take : but of all Europeans, the Portugueses are most liable to feel the marks of their cruelty. For this reason, they are declared enemies to these rovers ; and when they take any, carry them generally to Goa, where they are chained to the oar, or sent in irons to the powder-house, from whence there is seldom any redemption : for these pirates seldom offer to redeem any but captains of their paros ; and the Portugueses, to requite their cruelties, rather choose to let them die in bondage than release them <sup>i</sup>. What our author relates of the cruelty of the Mohammedans to the Spaniards may possibly be strictly true : but he ought at the same time to have acquainted his readers, that the horrible cruelties exercised by the Spaniards upon the Mohammedans, especially on their first settling in the Indies, is the cause of it.

Pagodis,

THE pagods, or temples of the Pagans, are without the cities ; though some of the richer sort have them in their houses. They are commonly large, and very magnificent ; being generally covered with copper, and sometimes with silver. Each has a basin near it, for the people to wash in, before they approach their images ; and entertains a number of Brâmmans, according to the largeness of its revenues. Every day, a certain quantity of rice is allowed, as well for the use of the poor who live near it, as of strangers of all religions, who pass that way ; and are entertained in certain barracks, without the pagod (for they must not enter it) ; where they may sleep, if night surprises them in their journey. Besides the ordinary revenues, must be reckoned the daily offerings of the people ; which consist usually of eatables, seldom of money. These are delivered to the Brâmmans, to set before their images ; who devour them, in the belief of the people : but, in truth, the priests make use of them for the maintenance of their families.

*and church
lands :*

SOME of the richest temples have large territories belonging to them, from whence arise their revenues. These churchlands are held so sacred, that if any person happens to shed blood upon them, though under the greatest necessity, and in his own defence, he is punished with death, without regard to his merit or quality. Nay, they are so rigorous in this respect, that, if the offender escapes by flight, the next a-kin to him must suffer in his stead ; of which our author saw an instance <sup>k</sup>.

<sup>i</sup> DELLON, p. 115.

<sup>k</sup> Ibid. p. 52, 108, & seq.

THE Hindús not only worship many images, which have Religion, no resemblance to any thing in the world, but they adore several kinds of living creatures, and above all the sun and moon. All days are alike to them (as to worship); and the sacrifices, which they make to their gods, consist always, like Festivals. Objects of worship. their offerings, of things that are inanimate: nor are their altars ever stained with blood, the shedding of which they hold in the greatest abhorrence of all things. As at the appearance of the new moon they make great rejoicings; so, when she is eclipsed, they come forth of their houses, making most horrible outcries, to frighten away the dragon; who, as they say, is then endeavouring to devour her. They approach their kings with the same veneration as they do their gods; and reverence old-age in so high a degree, that the most eminent of the Nayers will not sit down before those who are considerably older than themselves, although their enemies.

THEY reckon their time by the moon; yet their festivals are Festivals. not fixed, but depend on the will of the Brámmans. These priests are very exact in their fasts; and upon any solemn day, after notice given, bring forth the image out of the temple, and carry it in procession on an elephant richly harnessed, while the people prostrate themselves before it as it passes along; and the Nayers, with fans at the end of long canes, drive away the flies, which would otherwise, as the Brámmans say, be troublesome to their gods, or rather themselves. Then one of the Brámmans, holding a two-edged simeter, with some little bells at the handle, runs round the elephant; and after a thousand ridiculous postures, which are looked upon by the people as mysterious, wounds himself in the head, offering his blood as a sacrifice to the image. Mean time, the croud make a confused noise with divers instruments, mixed with their joyful acclamations. In short, after they have taken their appointed rounds for that day's solemnity, they carry the image back to the temple<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> DELLON, p. 52, 111.

Provinces
and Cities.

C H A P. VII.

Description of the remaining Countries of the Peninsula.

S E C T. I.

Kingdom of Madûra, or Madûrey.

Kingdom
of Madû-ra.

AT Cape Komori, commonly called Komorîn, begins the kingdom of Madûra, or rather Madûrey. It is bounded on the east by the dominions of the king of Tanjaor; on the south by the Indian sea; west, by the country of Malabâr (from whence it is severed by the mountains of Gâtti, or Gâte); and north, by the territories of Mayssûr (or Messûr), and those belonging to the governor of Jinji. This kingdom is as large as Portugal, extending about three degrees and a half from south to north; and is in breadth about eighty miles, where most dilated. It is reckoned to contain seventy Palleakarens, who are absolute lords in their respective states; but pay a tax which the king of Madûra lays upon them. This prince may easily bring into the field 20,000 foot and 5000 horse. He has besides 500 elephants; which are of great service to him in war.

Capital
city.

THE capital of the kingdom, which lies about two degrees more north than the cape, and bears the same name of Madûrey, is inclosed with a double wall; each fortified, after the antient manner, with square towers, having parapets, and well furnished with cannon. The fortress is square, surrounded with a broad and deep foss; whose scarp and counterscarp are both very strong. Instead of the glacis, one sees four handsome streets, which answer to the four sides of the fortress; whose houses are accommodated with large gardens. The inside of the fortress, which one may walk round in less than two hours, is divided into four parts; of which those to the east and south contain the king's palace; which is a labyrinth of streets, ponds, groves, halls, galleries, and colonades, intermixed with houses here and there. When the kings of Madûra resided there, it was filled wholly with women and eunuchs. The plan of this palace is said to have been made by an European; and indeed there are several ornaments of European architecture mixed with the Indian <sup>a</sup>.

<sup>a</sup> BOUCHER, ap. Lettr. Edif. tom. xv. p. 60, & seqq.

IN the second part of the fortress stands the temple of Sho-kanaden, who is the idol adored at Madûra, surrounded with a triple wall; the whole magnificently built: and near one of the porticos a stately car, for parading the image on its festival day. Not far distant are three other triumphal cars: one of which is so very large, that it may require 4000 men to draw it, as they say it does; for at these times no fewer than 400 men, of different functions, are placed upon it; and there are five stages, or stories, sustained by great posts, each stage having several galleries. When this machine is covered with painted calicoes, silks of different colours, streamers, banners, festoons, and such like ornaments, it makes a very agreeable spectacle; especially if seen in a dark night, by the light of a thousand torches. The car is drawn under the sound of drums, trumpets, hautboys, and other instruments; and moves so slowly, that they are three days going round the fortress.

THE Romish missionaries have a church here. The river which passes by Madûra, and called Vayghey, is a very good one: but they have drained it considerably by canals and ponds. The city likewise has lost much of its antient splendor, since it was ruined in part by the king of Messur, and the latter kings transferred their court to Trishirapâlli; which is thus become the capital of the kingdom <sup>b</sup>.

TRISHIRAPALLI is a very populous city, and of great extent: it contains above 300,000 inhabitants; and is the largest fortress between Cape Komori and Golkonda. They reckon it forty leagues distant from Madûrey (A), on account of the way one is obliged to go about to avoid the woods; which are infested with robbers: but, to make amends, your road lies through an agreeable walk, set with trees on both sides. It has been often besieged by numerous armies, without success; so that the Hindûs say it is impregnable. It has a double inclosure of walls; each fortified with sixty square towers, eighty or a hundred paces asunder: the second wall, which is higher than the first, is mounted with 130 pieces of cannon, and divided into two fortresses, called the fortress of the north and of the south. In this latter is a high mountain, which serves to discover the approach of an enemy. Towards the middle of the hill stands the arsenal, and at the foot of it the king's palace. The inside of the interior fortress is agree-

<sup>b</sup> BOUCHET, ubi supr. p. 65, & seqq.

<sup>c</sup> Ibid. p. 74.

(A) It lies about one degree more north than Madurey, and sustained several sieges in the late wars, begun in 1740. Its indigenous name is Tiru-chira-pâlli, or Tiru-china-pâlli.

Provinces and Cities. able enough. It is a great square amphitheatre, with stairs on every side to go up to the ramparts. Besides the above-mentioned towers on the walls, there are eighteen others much larger, for laying up provisions and military stores, for which there is not room in the arsenal. The garrison consists of 6000 men, and sometimes more.

River
Kâwêri.

THE ditch, which surrounds the fortress, is wide and deep; is full of water, and has some crocodiles in it. The city has four large gates, which face the four cardinal points. Every night the guards go the rounds three times, and sometimes four. The river Kâwêri, which is a branch of the Kolorân*, washes the fortress from west to east; and above Trishirapâlli they have cut from it a large and deep canal, which conveys the water round the city, where one sees many public squares and bazârs: among which there are two considerable ones adjoining to the two principal gates. Beyond the Kaveri runs another branch of the Kolorân; and between these two great rivers stands the pagod of Shirangam, the fairest which our author had ever seen.

The king's
palace.

THE palace of Trishirapâlli is not inferior for beauty to that of Madûrey. Our author, who had been within it on three several occasions, says it consists in a collection of halls, galleries, and inner apartments. The divân, or court of justice, is supported by fine pillars, very high, contrary to the custom of the Indians. The gardens are not comparable to those of Europe. There are in them four or five jets of water; and, at the entrance of one, a large hall, open on all sides, and surrounded with pretty deep ditches, which are filled with water when the queen goes there to take the air; on those occasions also the pillars of the hall are covered with gold-brocade, and the ceiling with festoons of flowers, and pieces of silk-damask. The Romish missionaries have some churches in the city, and another three leagues off; where they reside for more security.

Fishery
Coast.

To the kingdom of Madûrey belongs most of the Fishery Coast for pearls; which begins at Cape Komori, and ends at the promontory of Koïl, in the principality of Marava. On this coast there are several places in the kingdom of Madûrey; the chief of which are two, Manapar and Tutukurin. The first lies about the middle of the coast, where the Dutch have a factory; which stands on a high ground, about a mile from the sea. It was formerly a beautiful Romish church; but af-

Manapar.

* Others make the Kolorân, holy river, and disputes precedence with the Ganges.
Kaweri, or Kaveri, which is a terwards the Hollanders converted it to another use. Tutukurîn (or Tutekarîn), is the principal if not only city on the Fishery Coast, the rest being no better than large towns and villages (B). At a distance one would take it for a place filled with magnificent houses: but, although it be well peopled, it is in nothing superior to the other cities of India. The Dutch, to whom it belongs, have built there a small fortress<sup>d</sup>. It stands at the mouth of the river Perie Arrû; where there is a good safe harbour, made by some islands which lie off it (C). The country produces much cotton-cloth, but none fine. This colony superintends a pearl-fishery, that lies a little to the northward, and brings the Dutch company 20,000 pounds yearly tribute, according to report<sup>e</sup>. They are bred in oysters (D), of a very large size; some in the flesh, which is rank, yet eaten; others in the liquor, and some fixed to the shell. They yield from five to eight; but all have not pearls in them. They are sized by sifting. Seed-pearl is found in the sand. Sea-horns, or siankos (chankos), are found on this coast; of which they make bracelets all over the Indies. The divers, made use of in the pearl-fishery, are the Parias, or Parvas; who by use stay a long time under water to gather the oysters. Provinces and Cities.

Tutukurîn.
Pearl fishery.

THE coast of Madura is destitute of grass, herb, or plant; excepting thistles and houseleek: nor will cocoa-trees grow there; yet it abounds with hares and partridges. Here are mice as large as cats, who dare not attack them. This country was part of Bisnâgar, or Narsinga; from which the Naik, who was governor, revolted. The inhabitants are by some called Badegas (E); good soldiers, but inferior to the Malabârs<sup>f</sup>.

<sup>d</sup> BOUCHET, p. 69, & seqq.

<sup>e</sup> HAMILTON, p. 336.

<sup>f</sup> NIEUHOFF's Voy. ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. ii. p. 260.

(B) Tutukurîn itself is considered by some travellers only as a village, the chief of seven others, which are sea-ports on that coast, and belonging to the Dutch. See Nieuhoff & Balæus. Yet the Jesuit Martin, who was in these parts in 1700, says it has 50,000 inhabitants. See Lett. Edif. tom. v. p. 81.

(C) Nieuhoff says, it never rains here, but 'tis pestered sometimes with sand from the mountain Gâtî.

(D) These oysters live six years.

(E) The Badagas are the proper inhabitants of Karnâta, formerly Bisnâgar; of which Madura, Tanjaor, and the other countries to the south of it, were a part.

Provinces
and Cities.

S E C T. II.

Principality of Marava.

Marava. TO the east of Madûrey lies the kingdom, or principality, of Marava, or the Maravas. It has to the south and east the sea, and to the north Tanjaor. The capital city, where the prince resides, is at Ramanadaburam, six or seven miles from the eastern coast, and twenty from the promontory of Koyel, or Koil, the most south-eastern part of Marava; which makes an oblong square, about eighty miles in length from south to north, and forty in breadth from east to west.

Adam's Bridge.

THE point of Koyel bounds the coast of the fishery eastward, and begins that of Choromandel. Due east about three quarters of a mile, is an isle named by some Ramanankor, by others Râmana Koyel; which signifies the temple of Râmma, or Râma. This isle is joined to the point by a bridge, not composed of arches, but of rocks, or great stones, which rise two or three feet above the surface of the sea, which is very shallow in that place, and leave gaps for the current to pass through. They are of an enormous size. Our author measured some stones, which were eighteen feet diameter, and others more. They leave spaces between them from three to ten feet wide: and the gaps, or intervals, through which barks pass, are still wider. It is not easy to imagine, that this is a work of art; for one cannot conceive from whence such enormous masses could be taken, and still less how they could be brought hither. But, supposing it to be a work of nature, it is one of the most surprising our author ever beheld. The Hindûs say, it was built by their gods, when they went to attack the capital of the island of Seylan: but this is certain, that the prince of Marava (F), when pursued by the kings of Madûrey, used to retire into the isle, by means of great beams laid upon those rocks, which are so many platforms; over which he passed his army, with all his train of cannon and elephants &c.

Râmana
Koyel.

THE isle of Râmana Koyel abounds with cattle; yet is not very fertile. The temple, or pagod, whence the island takes its name, stands near the sea-side, and is said to contain an immense treasure. The foundation is supported by § BOUCHET, ubi supr. p. 34, & seqq.

(F) He has lately shook off to Martin the missionary. See the yoke of Madûra, according Lettr. Edif. tom. v. p. 99.

stones of a vast bigness, to break the force of the raging waves when the south winds blow. The Teuver, or lord of the isle, has built a strong castle facing the continent, furnished with cannon, which command a narrow passage, leading to Manaar, Jasnapatnam, and Negapatnam: besides, he might at pleasure hinder the navigation, by only sinking a few stones in the chanel. Provinces and Cities.

FROM this isle is continued a reef of rocks and sands, commonly called Adam's Bridge; which extends as far as the island of Manaar, on the coast of Zeloan (or Seylon). This reef has so little water on it, that the smallest boats cannot pass but at Manaar; and there the chanel has not above six feet water on it, so that none but small vessels can pass: besides they must unlade, and pay customs to the Dutch; then, the vessel being hawled over the bridge, they take in their cargo again <sup>b</sup>. Reef of rocks.

S E C T. III.

Kingdom of Tanjaor.

THE kingdom of Tanjaor (G) lies to the north of Marava, Tanjaor and to the east of Madûrey, being washed on the east by the sea. The lands of this little state are the wonder of all the southern India, and watered by the river Kaveri; which, being a branch of the great Kolorân, divides in several arms. The prince's revenues amount to several millions. Tanjaor, The capital, which is the capital city, was originally no more than a pagod, or temple, as were most of the fortresses in these petty sovereignties. This fortress has a double wall, like that of Trisbirapalli; but is not so well built. Its ditches also are shallower, and not so easily filled with water. The inner fortress is divided into north and south; in the first of which is the king's palace, with some pretty towers, but no appearance of magnificence. In the southern part is the temple of Peria Oureyar; to the north of which is a great pond, or tank, bordered with free-stone. The Indians excel in making these ponds, which would be admired in Europe itself. The country about Tanjaor is watered only by a small rivulet; but farther north you meet with the river Vinnarow, and beyond that the Kaveri before mentioned.

<sup>a</sup> BALDÆUS, ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p. 584.
HAMILTON, ubi supr. p. 337.

(G) By the Dutch called Tanjor, times Teaver, according to Nieuw-jorwer, Tanjouwer, and some- hoff.

Provinces
and cities.
Negapatam.

THE coast of Tanjaor, parting from that of Marava, takes a sweep from south to east, for one half of its extent to Cape Kalliamera, or Kallamedou; from whence it runs north: and six leagues beyond it lies Negapatam, which the Indians call Negapatenam; that is, the city of serpents<sup>1</sup>. It is a Dutch colony and fortress, taken from the Portugueses by the assistance of the king of Tanjaor. It stands on the river Waddawarru, which terminates Golkonda, and formerly bounded the dominions of Malabâr; although their language was, and still is, used farther northward (H): however, the waters of this river, which is a branch of the Kâwéri, and washes the walls of the fort, being found very unwholesome, the town is supplied from another four leagues distant. This colony produces very little, besides tobacco and long cloth<sup>k</sup>.

Tranke-
bar:

THE next place of note on this coast to the north is Taran-ganbouri, called by Europeans Tranquebar and Tringuebar. The name signifies the city of the waves of the sea. It is at the mouth of the Kâwéri. This is a colony belonging to the Danes since 1620. The streets are strait, and the houses handsome. The square fortress, called Danesburgh, appears very agreeable when viewed from the sea. A great number of Portugueses are settled here; and to them the Danes owe the preservation of the fort, when it was besieged some years ago (I) by the king of Tanjaor, who was constrained to retire<sup>l</sup>. This fort is strong, the sea washing one half of its walls; but the colony is miserably

a Danish colony.

poor. In 1684, they were so distressed, that they pawned three bastions of their fort to the Dutch for money to buy provisions: but next year they redeemed all again by an unknown fund (K). They still keep their fort, but drive an inconsiderable trade. What they live by is the hire, which they freight their ships for to certain parts of the Indies. The product of the country is cloth, white and dyed. The Danish missionaries reside

Kaveri
pattevam.

here<sup>m</sup>. Half a day's journey farther north is Kaveri patte-vam, called by Europeans Kaveri pattam, which was formerly a great city, and very famous among the Indians; but at present lies almost wholly in ruins. The air is good, and the French have a factory there<sup>n</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> BOUCHET, ubi supr. p. 32, 74, & seq.

ubi supr. p. 348, 351.

<sup>m</sup> HAMILTON, ubi supr. p. 351.

p. 32.

<sup>k</sup> HAMILT.

<sup>l</sup> BOUCHET, ubi supr. p. 30.

<sup>n</sup> BOUCHET, ubi supr.

(H) Hence it is that in letters of the natives, sent from Tranquebar in this country, by the Danish missionaries, they call themselves Malabârs, and the country Malabâr.

(I) This was written in 1719.

(K) It was suspected that the English ship Formosa was taken and sunk by two of their ships, which at that time cruised between Surât and Cape Komari.

S E C T. IV.

Kingdom of Karnâta.

Bounds
and Extent.

Kingdom of Karnâta :

TO the north of Tanjaor lies the kingdom of Karnâta (L), Karnâtika, or Karnâtek, as the Mogols call it ; which was formerly a monarchy of great extent, as well as splendor, under the names of Bisnâgar and Narsinga °. At present it is reduced to much narrower bounds, though still of considerable dimensions ; and is become a province of the Great Mogol's empire. It is bounded on the east by the bay of Bengâl ; on the north by the river Kristna, which divides it from Golkonda ; on the west by Visapûr, or Visapûr ; and on the south by the kingdoms of Meffûr and Tanjâor : being in length, from south to north, about 345 miles ; and 276 miles in breadth, from east to west (M).

THIS large country is for the most part champain, fertile, inhabited and populous. Towards the middle there are some mountains running northward, which seem to be branches of the Badagatti, or Gâte. The inhabitants are called Badagas. To the east and south of those mountains, the Tamul, or Damul, language (the same with the Malabâric) is spoken ; and to the west and north-west of those hills, nothing is in use but the Talank (Talenga), or Kanarî <sup>p</sup> ; which prevails in Visapur, and from Malabâr to Surât, and the provinces between that city and Golkonda.

AN account has been already given of the revolutions in this kingdom, so low as the year 1650, when the monarchy was subverted, and the kingdom over-ran by the kings of Golkonda and Visapûr ; who divided it between them. The descendants of the Rajah, who then reigned, retired to the mountains above-mentioned ; and seem to have preserved some kind of sovereignty in the most southern parts : for at one time we find Velour <sup>q</sup> the capital of Karnate ; and at another time Kanjivoram, about forty miles east by south of the for-

° See before, p. 486.

<sup>p</sup> P. MAUDIT, Lett. Edif. tom. vi, p. 41. See before, p. 486, & seqq.

(L) We are told, that it takes its name from a famous fortress called Karnâta, situated on a mountain three leagues from Attipakam, a town, or village, about 27 leagues almost due west of Pondicherry (on the coast of Choromandel), near the borders of

Meffûr. See Lettr. Edif. tom. xxiv. p. 187, & seqq.

(M) Baldæus says, Karnatika is 60 Badagarian leagues, each equal to three Dutch miles, from north to south ; and 40 broad from Paliakatta to the Malabar coast. Church's Collect. Voy. vol. iii. p. 588.

Provinces
and Cities.

mer, the Râjah, or king, removing his court, as pressed by those who were in possession of almost all the country. About the years 1685 and 1687, the Mogols seized on all which was in the hands of the two kings before-mentioned; and since then have not only reduced the whole in a manner under their power, but are advancing still southwards: with design to subdue the lands as far as Cape Komari, containing Messûr, Madûrey, Tanjaor, and Marava; which formerly belonged to Bismâgar and Karnâta.

and certain princes.

HOWEVER, a great number of the princes of Karnâta, called Paliagarens, still retain their possessions; either by not being conquered, or by becoming tributary to the Mogols, like the Râjahs of Hindûstân. So that the whole may be divided into paliagaren, or little principalities; whole Nâiks, or princes, are all sovereigns in their respective dominions; tho' many of them are dependant on the Great Mogol, as lord in effect of the whole.

WHAT little we know of this country in its present state is owing to the French Jesuits; who, in their late missions, have penetrated into the middle of it, and transmitted a map, which gives a quite different idea of that region, from what we find before from others.

Chief
cities.
Jinji:

KARNÂTA is full of large and populous cities. The first we meet with towards the south is Jinji, not many years since the capital of a kingdom of the same name. It stands about twelve leagues north-west of Penticheri, on the coast of Choromandel.

Shettam pettow, the capital:

ABOUT five leagues north-west of Jinji is Shettam pettou, at present the metropolis of all Karnâta, and seat of the Nabab, or viceroy of the Great Mogol, in the latitude of about 12 degrees 30 minutes. The capital of this country was Kanjivoram, or Kanjibouram, a noble city, four leagues distant from the river Palamalerow, eighteen leagues north-eastward of Shettam pettou, and one day's journey from Meliapûr. It contained within its walls more than 300,000 inhabitants, if one may believe the Indians; and there were to be seen, as elsewhere, towers of a very large size, temples, public halls, and very handsome tanks. But the Mogols having, about the beginning of this century, taken it from the Hindûs, they laid it almost in ruins, and made the other place the chief seat of their conquest; which afterwards they removed to Arâit, the present capital, about thirteen leagues distant to the north by west.

<sup>1</sup> BALDEUS, ap. Church's Collect. Voy. vol. iii. p. 588.

<sup>2</sup> BOUCHET, ubi supr. p. 72, & seq.

PROCEEDING still northward from Shettam pettou, about nine leagues, you meet with Arani, a large city on the river and cities. Karua, or Karvey, subject to a Palli-agars (+); and four leagues farther Arkat, another, on the river Palaru, or Palamalerow, subject to the Mogols, under the government of a Nabob. Arani Arkat.

FIVE leagues west of Arkat, on the same river, you find Velour Velour, another great city, the Indian capital of Karnata (N), before it was removed to Kanjibouram; but now in the hands of the Mogols, and seat also of a Nabob. It is the last place which continued in the hands of the Marasts (or Maharattas), being taken from them by the Mogols in 1702, after a siege of several months *.

ABOUT twelve leagues north-east-by north of Velour, and twenty-two west-north-west of Fert St. George, is Tirovati, Ti famous Troupadi, or Tripeti, a city on a hill, with a famous pagod. pagod. Chandegri, the capital of Karnata, or Bisnagar, about the year 1590, was in being within three miles to the north, or north-west, of this place, as already observed *.

ABOUT twenty-five leagues west by north of Velour stands Koralam. Koralam, or Koralam, a great city of the Mogols: between the two lie several others, as Pallikonda, Gouhialam, Jedudourgalow, Kadapanattam, and Moula-Vakili, to the north, under the same masters; and to the southward Peddanajam dourgam, and Venkatighirri, in the hands of Pallagars, or Hind princes.

STILL more to the south, near the borders of Messur, Kangon, are Kangondi, Kapiganati, and Ani Kallow, Palliagarrens di. likewise; and farther west Bengulsuroow, a great city about twelve leagues southwest of Koralam, before-mentioned: and eleven leagues to the north-west of this last place stands Chinnaballabaram, another.

ABOUT twenty-five leagues west-north-west of Chinnaballabaram lies Shirpi, a considerable city, the most westward of Karnata on that side; and not many leagues from the borders of the territories of Ikkeri, adjoining to Kanara, on the western coast of the peninsula. Chirpi.

TWENTY leagues north-east of Shirpi, and as many north-north-west of Chinnaballabaram, is Pensukonda, or Pennagonda, on the river Pennerow, formerly the capital of the Penou-gonda.

* P. TACHARD, ap. Lettr. Edif. tom. vi. p. 245. * See before, p. 490.

† Palli-agars, or Augurs; whence the word Augur seems to be derived. nata about the year 1650, when it was subdued by the king of Tripour. See Torren's Trav.

(N) It was the capital of Kar- part iii. p. 92.

Provinces empire of Bijnâgar ; whither the Great Râjah removed his and cities. residence, after the ruin of the capital of that name by the { kings of Visapûr and Golkonda, in the year 1565. It is now in the hands of the Mogols.

Gummi Paleam, Kapada.

TWELVE leagues north-east of Chinnaballabaram is Gummi Paleam, a very considerable city, the seat of a Palliagar ; and twenty-two leagues more from Gummi Paleam, in the same direction, occurs Kadapa, a great city, with a Mogol governor.

Gandi-kotta
 city, and strong fortrefs.

THIS city lies within a few leagues of the river Pen-arû ; which passes by Nellarû, and falls into the gulf of Bengâl, 10 miles beyond Gangapatnam. Higher up, on the same river, about 16 leagues north-west of Kadapa, stands Gandikotta, a considerable city and famous fortress, in the latitude of fifteen degrees. It is the seat of a Nabob, and was taken by Amîr Jemla, the king of Golkonda's general, from the Hindûs, in the year 1652. Tavernier, who arrived there eight days after it was taken, informs us, that it is situated on the point of a high mountain ; there being but one narrow ascent, in some places not above seven or eight feet wide, cut out of the hill, which has on the right hand a most hideous precipice, at the bottom whereof runs a vast river. On the top there is a plane about half a league long and one quarter broad, sowed with rice and millet, as well as watered with many little springs. The top of the plane, on the south side, where the city is built, is encompassed with precipices ; two rivers running at the bottom, which form the point (O) : so that there is but one gate to enter the city from the plane ; and that too fortified with three good walls of free-stone : besides moats, paved at the bottom with the same materials. Thus the Hindûs had only one quarter of the city, containing 500 paces, to defend.
 Yet they had no more than two iron guns ; one, a twelve-pounder, planted on the gate ; the other, an eight-pounder, on a kind of bastion. For all this, the Nabob could not have taken the place, but for the assistance of some European engineers, who mounted four pieces of cannon upon an ascent ;

(O) The junction of two rivers at Gandi Kotta is conformable to the map of the Jesuits ; but, by the same map, that fortress must stand on the north, or north-west side of the plane, not on the south side, it being washed by the Pennerow on the north, and another river on the west. Neither can we reconcile its situation in the map with its distance from Golkonda, as given in leagues by Tavernier, who travelled the road : and yet we make no doubt, but Gandi Kotta is the same with his Gandikot.

which

which obliged the Rájah, though famous for his courage and experience, to capitulate, after a siege of three months <sup>u</sup>.

Provinces
and cities.

TWELVE leagues south-west of Gandi Kotta, and twenty-two almost due north of Gummi Paleam, you meet with Tadimeri, a great city, belonging to a Palli-agar; and eight leagues from thence, north-west by north, another, called Anantapouram, on a river which falls into the Pen-arú.

Tadi-meri, Anata-pouram.

To the west of Anantapouram eighteen leagues, stands Raydourgan, the seat of a Palli-agar, on a river which falls into the Krishna, the utmost bounds of Karnata, northward; and twenty-two leagues west of Raydourgan, is Ranibeddalourou, another great city, and Palli-agar, on the river Tunje-badra, which runs north-eastward into the Krishna. Gandi Kotta, Anantapouram, Raydourgam, and Ranibeddalourou, lie nearly in a line from east to west, and in fifteen degrees of latitude; this last being the most western city of Karnata, of any considerable note, and not far from the borders of the countries of Ikkeri and Sonda; which last borders on the territories of Goa, belonging to the Portugueses.

Raydour-gan, Ranibedda-lou-rou.

LASTLY, proceeding north-eastward from Ranibeddalourou about twenty-two leagues, and near the same distance from the Krishna, lies Bisnâgar, the antient capital of Karnâta, when in its splendour, then known by the names of Bisnâgar and Narsinga, as hath been already remarked. It is situate about forty leagues almost due east of Goa, eighteen north-west by north of Raydourgam, and three leagues west of the river Tunje-badra.

Bisnâgar
city.

THESE are the principal inland cities of Karnâta, at least known to the Jesuit missionaries; but among them lie interspersed a great many others, partly in the hands of Palli-agars, or Palli-agarens, and partly in the possession of the Mogols. Having thus given our readers some idea of the inland parts of Karnâta, let us next give him a view of the sea-coast, commonly called Choromandel; which the commerce of Europeans has made better known to us.

THE first place of note, which we meet with on this coast, is Porto Novo, so called by the Portugueses, when the coasts of India belonged to them: but when Aureng Zib subdued Golkonda, the Great Mogol set a Fouzdâr in it, and gave it the name of Mohammed Bander (or Mohammed's (P) Port). The country is fertile, healthful, and pleasant. Great quantities of cotton-cloth of several sorts are made here, much of which

Porto Novo.

<sup>u</sup> TAVERNIER'S Trav. part ii. p. 98

(P) It is called by the Hindús Pirenki Patay.

Provinces and cities. is exported to foreign parts. The Portugueses are numerous here, but the bulk of the inhabitants are Hindûs. The English and Dutch have also some houses in this port <sup>x</sup>.

Fort St. David. FORT St. David's is next; a colony and fortress belonging to the English, who bought it from a Moratta (or Mâharâtta) prince, in 1686, for 90,000 pagodas. The fort is pretty strong, and stands close to a river, and the territories extend the distance of eight miles every way. The country is like the former, and watered with several rivers; which are as good as walls to the colony. About 1698, the fort narrowly escaped being surpris'd by the freebooters, who inhabited the neighbouring mountains, and got admittance under pretence of lodging the Mogol's treasure there: but they were all killed, before the ambush without could force open the gate. This colony produces store of long cloths; and, without its assistance, that of Fort St. George, on which it depends, would make but a small figure in trade to what it does at present. The black cattle here are small, but plentiful and cheap; while the rivers and seas abound with fish <sup>y</sup>. Kuddelér (or Koudelour, by the Hindûs called Kourralour) lies about a mile to the southward, on a river capable to receive ships of 200 tons <sup>z</sup>.

Ponticherri. PONTICHERRI (or Pondisberri) is the next place of note; a colony settled by the French, about five leagues to the north of Fort St. David. It is the chief establishment which they have in the Indies, and the head-quarters of their missionaries. The fortifications are fine, regular, and strong; but its trade small. The city is large, and the streets strait. The houses of Europeans are of brick, the Indian of earth. About the year 1690, the Dutch, from Batavia, besieged and took it by capitulation; the French, at that time, being destitute of defence: but, at the conclusion of king William's war, they were obliged to restore it <sup>a</sup>.

Konnimir. AFTER Ponticherri follows Konnimîr, or Konjimîr, where the English had a factory; which they quitted on the purchase of Fort St. David. Near the town are seven pagods, famous for sanctity; and here the persecution began against St. Thomas, because he could draw a short tree to a great length (Q), as wire-drawers do metals; and the Pagan priests, being ignorant of such art, declared him a conjurer. Beyond Konjimtr is Saderas Patam (called also Sadras and Sadrats), a small factory of the Dutch for buying up cloth. It stands on the south side of the river Palamalerow; and some leagues farther on lies Kabelon (or Kovolam), where the Ostenders have settled a factory <sup>b</sup>.

<sup>x</sup> HAMILT. ubi supr. p. 353. BOUCHET, ubi supr. p. 29.
<sup>y</sup> HAMILT. p. 353, & seq. <sup>z</sup> Ibid. p. 356, and BOUCHET, p. 31. <sup>a</sup> BOUCHET, ibid.

(Q) They say that a lady, in her way to church, wanting to cross a river, which was so swollen that the tree, which served for a bridge, did not reach from side to side, St. Thomas stretched it out to give her a passage.

Provinces
and cities.
Saderas
Patam.

THE next place northward, on the coast, is St. Thomas, called also Meliapour, or, to speak like the Indians, Maylabouram, that is, the city of peacocks; because the princes, who formerly reigned in this country, had a peacock for their arms. The Portugueses, to secure themselves against the Dutch, surrendered it up to the king of Golkonda; but soon after (in 1672) the French, under M. De la Hay, took it: but, after two years, were obliged to surrender it for want of succours from Europe. That king, fearing the French might return and retake it, dismantled both the city and fortress. The Portugueses, however, still retain a part of it; which they have walled, and fortified with little bastions <sup>c</sup>.

Two leagues off there are two hills: one is a little dry rock, called The Little Mount, with a cave in it, where St. Thomas retired to hide himself from the priests his persecutors. There being no water in the place, he cleft the rock with his hand, and commanded water to flow out: but when he saw the enemy, who had discovered his retreat, approaching the mount, he came down; and at the foot of it, as a testimony that he had been there, stamped with his bare foot on a very hard stone, and left the print of it. This impression is above sixteen inches long, and in proportion narrower at the heel and broader at the toes than the present size of feet among us. From hence he fled for his life to another larger mount, about two miles distant; but, being overtaken on the top of it, was run through with a lance, and there buried (R). The

<sup>b</sup> HAMILTON, p. 357, & seqq.

<sup>c</sup> BOUCHET, p. 21.

(R) Tachard, the Jesuit missionary (see Lettre. Edif. tom. xii. p. 273) adds many miracles to those mentioned by Mr. Hamilton. The effrontery of popish priests, in propagating such evidently lying wonders, would be astonishing, if the credulity of their sheep was not known to be as great as their clergy's kna-very. Besides, nothing can be more absurd, than to suppose a man could work such miracles, and yet could not work one to save himself. Christ could have wrought a miracle to save himself, but would not: but Thomas, 'tis clear, would have saved himself, if he could have wrought a miracle.

Provinces
and cities.

Portugueses, when first settled there, built a church over the cave and well on The Little Mount; and another over his grave on The Great Mount, where the lance, with which it is pretended the apostle was killed, is kept as a relique. The city of St. Thomas was formerly the best mart-town on the Choromandel coast: but at present the trade is very little, and the inhabitants very few, and poor, owing to the neighbourhood of Fort St. George, which is but one league distant to the north; a colony and city belonging to the English East-India company.

Madras, or Fort St.
George.

FORT St. George is called also Madrâs, and Madraspatan, from the city of that name, near which it is situated. The natives give it the appellation of Jenna Pattenam, or, as the English commonly pronounce it, Chinapatam. The town is divided into two parts, called the White and Black Towns. In the former dwell the Europeans. It is walled quite round, with several bastions and bulwarks to defend it; so that it can only be attacked at the ends, the sea and river fortifying its sides. It is about 400 paces long, and 150 broad, divided into pretty regular streets, and Fort St. George standing in the centre. There are two churches in it; one for protestants, the other for Romish service. There is a good hospital, and mint for coining rupis and pagados, in the city; with a town-hall, and a prison for debtors underneath. They are a corporation, with a mayor and aldermen, formerly chosen by burghers; but, at present, by the governor and his council: which, according to our author, is the reason that every thing is carried as the governor would have it; who can annul all decisions in case of debt or otherwise, made by the court, which is properly a court of conscience <sup>d</sup>.

Bad situation.

THE Black Town is inhabited by Jentows, Mohammedans, and Indian Christians; viz. Armenians and Portugueses, who have their respective churches; all religions being tolerated here. It is walled towards the land, the sides towards the sea and White Town being open. Madras is one of the most incommodious places our author ever saw. It fronts the sea, which rolls there more than in any other part on the coast of Choromandel. The foundation is in sand, with a salt-water river on its back, which hinders all fresh springs from coming near the town, within a mile; and, in the rainy season, causes inundations on one side, while the sea often threatens destruction on the other: again, from April to September, the sun is scorching hot; so that, but for the sea-breezes, the place could not possibly be inhabited. How so bad a situation could be chosen, when the founder had choice of two very good ones in the neighbourhood, Kabelon (or Kovolam), above-mentioned, about six leagues to the south, and Polikat (or Pallikatta), nine to the north, seems unaccountable. However, the diamond-mines being no more than a week's journey from Fort St. George, these precious stones are pretty plenty here; although few large ones are brought to market, since the time that great diamond, which governor Pit sent England, was conveyed hither. Any one may dig at the mines, after agreeing with the Great Mogol's officer for a spot of ground; which is walled about, and sentinels placed round it. All stones above sixty grains weight belong to the emperor, and it is death to secret any of them.

<sup>d</sup> HAMILTON's New Account of the E. Ind. vol. i. p. 358, & seq.

THE current trade of Fort St. George runs gradually slower; the trader meeting with great discouragements, and often oppressions (S). The colony produces very little of its own growth or manufacture for foreign markets; which yet it supplies with foreign commodities, particularly China, Persia, and Mokha; which commerce it shares with Surât. The colony is well peopled, there being computed to be 80,000 inhabitants in the towns and villages; among whom may be reckoned four or five hundred Europeans. But, as their provisions are brought from other parts, any enemy, who is superior to them in sea forces, may easily distress them. This place was surprised by the French, in the year 1748; who first plundered, and then left it.

THE next place of note to Fort St. George is Palliakatta, Pallia-called also Paleakatta and Polikat by authors. This is a katta. town belonging to the Dutch; who have a fort there named Gueldria, with a few soldiers in garrison. There is another belonging to the Mogols. It was formerly the principal factory which they had on the coast of Choromandel.

THERE are several places northward, which formerly had commerce abroad, but are now neglected. Armagan is one, and Kisnipatam another; which last has the benefit of a large river: so has Karera beyond it. Lastly Petapoli, or Pettipoli, seated at one of the mouths of the river Krisbna, had once

1 HAMILT. p. 362, 370.

(S) Captain Hamilton saw a bargain of wheat taken out of a gentleman's hands, after he had bought it by auction; and says, that they who bid for goods against the governor's servants, were brow-beaten and threatened; so that many trading people were removed to other parts.

Principality of Ikkeri.

both English and Dutch factories settled in it; but they withdrew many years ago, to avoid the impositions of the inland Rajahs. This place is the utmost bounds of the kingdom of Karnâta, upon the coast <sup>f</sup>.

S E C T. V.

Principality of Ikkeri.

Ikkeri
principality:

IT remains only to give some account of the dominions of Ikkeri and Mayssour; two countries formerly belonging to Karnata, and still to be considered as dismembered parts of it. Among the governors in Vidia Nâgar, corruptly Bisnaga, who, after the great revolution in 1567, set up for sovereigns in their respective districts, he of Ikkeri, named Venktapa Nayeka, or Naika, was one. This prince had been a minister of that monarch; and, as he was a good soldier, soon enlarged his territories by subduing some of his neighbours.
After a defeat which he had given the Portugueses, the viceroy of Goa, in 1623, sent an ambassador, in the king's name, to cultivate friendship with him.

extent
and bounds:

THE country of Ikkeri extends, in length, from south to north about 130 miles, and in breadth 50. It adjoins, on the north, to the Sunda Rajah's territories; on the east it has Karnâta; on the south Mayssour; and on the west the county of Kanâra, from whence it is separated by the mountains of Gâtti, or Gate<sup>g</sup>. The chief city is named Ikkeri; lying about three leagues east of the same mountains, and ten from Batekâla, on the sea-coast. It stands on a fair plain, surrounded with three inclosures; the two outermost consist of very high canes, very thick, and close planted. They are a good defence against horse and foot; being hard to cut, and not in danger from fire: besides they afford much shade, as well as verdure, from the herbs which creep upon them.
The inner inclosure is a wall, but weak and inconsiderable.
Each inclosure has gates, with forts and ditches. Ikkeri is pretty large, but the houses are thin and ill built. It is mostly taken up with broad and long streets; some of them shaded with handsome trees, growing in ponds of water; of which there are many large ones: besides fields set full of trees like groves. So that from the mixture of houses, lakes, fields, and woods, it makes a very delightful prospect. The prince's palace is in a fortress of no small extent; containing several capital

city.

<sup>f</sup> HAMILT. p. 372, & seq.
p. 93. Engl. Transl. of his Return.

<sup>g</sup> DELLA VALLE'S Trav.

streets, with houses and shops. The language spoken in the Kingdom of Messûr.
country of Ikkeri is the Kanarîn<sup>b</sup>.

S E C T VI.

Kingdom of Mayssour, and the Malleams.

THE kingdom of Mayssour (or Messûr) has to the north Kingdom Ikkeri and Karnâta; to the east Karnâta; to the south of Messûr. Madûra; and to the west Malabâr. This dominion, of all those not yet subdued by the Mogols, is become most considerable, by the conquest of several fortresses from Madûra, and the other neighbouring states: insomuch that, since the year 1650, it has extended itself from the eleventh degree of latitude to the thirteenth, and beyond. The revenue of the prince is said to amount to near fifteen millions of livres; and he has on foot armies consisting of 30,000 foot, and 10,000 horse.

THAT which has rendered the people of Mayssour so formidable to their neighbours, is the cruel and ignominious manner in which they treat their prisoners of war: for they cut-off their noses, and, salting them, send them to court (T). The officers and soldiers are rewarded according to the number of prisoners, whom they use in that inhuman manner.

SHIRANGAPATAM (U) is the capital of this kingdom. Chief cities. It stands in the northwest part of the country, on the river Kavéri, about fifty miles from its source, in the mountain of Gâtti. The fortress resembles our antient cities, which were fortified with towers; and has a good ditch. The pagod is famous; but the king's palace has nothing remarkable.

ABOUT three leagues to the south of Shirangapatam is the city of Mayssura, which has given name to the kingdom. The country is full of towns and villages; especially along the river Kavéri: but we meet with no considerable cities besides those already mentioned, excepting two; Darmapouri, towards the north-east, and Darabarou, in the south, on the borders of Madûra: and in the country of the Malleams, which makes the southern part of Mayssour, or Messûr<sup>i</sup>.

<sup>b</sup> DELLA VALLE, ubi supr. p. 120, 121, 144. <sup>i</sup> BOUCHET, ap. Lett. Edif. tom. 15, p. 79, & seqq.

(T) Fryer says, they use an instrument made to seize on the noses of their enemies; which mutilations spoiling the fashion of their faces, few care to serve in a war against this Râjah. Fry. Trav. p. 163.
(U) Fryer calls it Saranpatan. See his Travels, p. 163.

Kingdom
of Messür.
The Mal-
leams :

THE Malleams have their dwellings properly in the high rocky mountains of Gätti, separating Mayssour from Malabâr ; at the foot of which live the Christians of St. Thomas. They differ from other Malabârians chiefly in their complexion. They are honest, good-natured, charitable, and without deceit ; courageous, ingenious, and of good understanding. Theft is a thing unknown to them ; for they live with their doors open. They inhabit neither cities nor villages ; but only certain inclosures in the valleys among the rocks. Their houses are built with canes, very low, and plaistered-up with clay. Some live in woods, building their houses in trees, for security against elephants and tigers. Their lands are fertile, but they do not cultivate any great quantity. The chief settlement, which they possess, is called Priata, thirteen or fourteen leagues from the borders of Madâra.

form of
government :

THE Malleams are tributary, partly to the king of Turbula, and partly to him of Pugnati Perimal : yet are otherwise intirely free, being governed by their own laws, under captains, or judges, of their own nation, named Arley ; each of which have five or six thousand under his jurisdiction. Every inclosure likewise has its own judge, named Pandera ; to whom they pay strict obedience. Their arms are the same with those used by the Malabârs. The Malleams have but one wife at a time ; and pay great respect to the sepulchres of their ancestors. Their dress is the same with the Malabârs ; except on festivals they wear a long gown and turbân, like the Mohammedans. At these solemnities, the maidens play on rush pipes, small flutes, and drums. They wear jewels in their ears and noses.

many converted.

SINCE the year 1599, a great number of the Malleams have embraced the Romish religion ; and a church was erected to St. Michael in the village of Priata. Before they had no temples but their houses ; where they worshiped domestic gods. They pretend to converse with devils, only to know future events ; but not to do mischief<sup>k</sup>.

<sup>k</sup> NIEUHOFF. ap. Church. Collect. vol. ii. p. 243.

C H A P. VIII.

The Religion of the Hindûs.

S E C T. I.

Of their sacred Books, with an Abstract of the Shâster.

HAVING now gone thro' the history and description of Hindû rethe countries inhabited by the people who are properly ligion called Hindûs, we come, at length, to treat of their reli- treated gion : which we reserved for this place, in regard the peninsula of India being more independent than Hindoostân, it is there where their worship appears in its full light. But altho' so many travellers have visited these countries, and missions have been settled in every part of them, for so many years, yet nothing can well be conceived to be more imperfect and confused, than the accounts which authors have given of it.
This is doubtless owing to two causes : first, the different confusedly opinions and objects of worship, which have been introduced by authors.
by the Brâmmans in different parts of India ; secondly, from Europeans taking their memoirs from what they observe themselves, or gather from the information of the natives, instead of having recourse to their sacred books ; which may be presumed to contain some uniform and consistent system, whatever variations are to be found in the popular worship.
In effect, the Hindûs, like almost all other nations, to derive authority to their own religion, and give it preference to those professed in other countries, affirm it is of divine original, and contained in a book called the Vedam, or Wedam (A) ;
which they say was delivered to their law-giver, Brâmma, by the Deity himself.

THIS sacred volume is divided into four parts, or books ; The Ve- the Rogo Vedam, Iffura Vedam, Sama Vedam, and Addera dam, its

division,

(A) Or Vedham, the dh be- and the like. Beth, according ing pronounced like the English to Bernier, signifies science ; be*th* in this, that, and the like cause they say all sciences are words.—Hence the Mogols pro- contained in the four books.
nounce Vedh : Europeans write Mem. Mogol. Emp. part 3. p. variously, Ved, Bed, Bet, Beth, 145.

Vedam

Their sacred books. Vedam<sup>a</sup> (B). Hence the Vedam is termed by the Hindûs the four books of the law<sup>b</sup>. (1), The Rogo Vedam treats of the first cause, and the first matter; of angels; the soul; the reward of good men, and punishment of the wicked; of the generation of creatures, and their corruption; what sin is, and how it may be pardoned; by whom it is remitted, and upon what conditions it is done (2). The Iffure Vedam treats of superiors, or governors, who are vested with the sovereign power and dominion (3). The Sama Vedam, relates wholly to morality, inciting to the love of virtue, and hatred of vice and wickedness. (4), The Addera Vedam, treats of the ceremonies observed in the temples, in sacrifices and on festivals: but this last part has been, for a long time, lost (C). The *Brâmman*s say, that they have lost with it a great deal of their power and authority; and that if it was now in being, they would be in greater power and esteem than the kings themselves. We learn farther, with regard to this Vedam, or these four sacred books, that they seem to be only a collection of the superstitious practices of their ancient Risbi, or Mouni, that is, Penitents, and Anchorites; to which are joined their opinions concerning the nature of God, the soul, visible world<sup>c</sup>, and so forth, as before-mentioned: that the first two books are followed most in the peninsula of India, and the

and contents.

Origin and authority.

<sup>a</sup> ROGER MOEURS des Brammins, c. v. p. 35. <sup>b</sup> PHILLIPS'S Account of Malabar, p. 4, 11, 37. <sup>c</sup> PONS ap Let. Edif. tom. 26. p. 233, & seqq. <sup>d</sup> Ibid. <sup>e</sup> Ibid.

(B) With Roger agrees Baldæus, another Dutch minister, both as to the order and contents of the books; but differs somewhat in the names, writing, 1. Roggo Vedam, 2. Jaddara Vedam, 3. Sama Vedam, 4. Fara Wana Vedam. This list is according to the Bramans; but by the Malabars they are named Ikka, Ikkisba, Saman, and Adaravan (1). Pons, a Romish missionary, writes Roukou Vedam, called Rek bed in Hindûstân, 2. Yajour Vedam, 3. Sama Vedam, 4. Latharvana Vedam, or Brahma Vedam (2). A Malaba- rian, in his letter to the Danish missionaries, places them in a different order; 1. Sama Wedum, 2. Urukku Wedam, 3. Edirwarna Wedum, 4. Air Wedum (3). Here Vrukku Wedum is the same with the Rogo Wedum, and Air Wedum with the Iffoure Widum, of Roger; but, by some mistake, must be misplaced.

(C) Baldæus says, he could never be convinced that the fourth part was lost; yet elsewhere tells us, that the first part is wanting. See Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p. 767, and 812.

(1) Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p. 812. (2) Lettr. Edif. tom. 26, p. 233. (3) Phill. Account Malabar. p. 37. See also Bernier Mem. of Empire Mogol, part 3. p. 145, and others.

two latter in the north, or Hindûstân<sup>d</sup>: that they contain the Their sacred books. theology of the Brâmmans<sup>e</sup>; and are read solely by them; so that the Weinjas (or Baniyâns) must, in their prayers, make use of the words not of the Vedam, but of the Shâster; and the Soudra, or common people, must neither mention the Vedam, nor learn the Shâster<sup>f</sup>.

AFTER all, these books are not read and explained in the pagods; not only because they contain mysteries surpassing the vulgar capacity, but also because the Brâmmish language cannot be translated into the Malabâric<sup>g</sup>. Others say they are not understood by many of the Brâmmans themselves<sup>h</sup>; and that they are scarce half understood by their ablest doctors. The reason is, that they are not written, as hath been reported, in the Samskroutam (or Sanskrit), which is the learned language known to the Brâmmans; but in a language still more ancient. So that the Samskroutam is only of use in explaining certain passages inserted in their books of theology, especially those taken from the latter books of the Vedam; which appears, from the difference of language and stile, to be written five centuries after the first<sup>i</sup>.

BESIDES the Vedam, there are two other sets of books; The Shâster. the first called Shâster, the second Pûrân; which the Brâmmans persuade the people came down also from heaven for their instruction<sup>k</sup>. The Shâster (D) contains all the doctrines, and various ceremonies, found in the four books of the law; being properly the explanation and comment on the Vedam<sup>l</sup>. We are told it was made to settle the sense of the Vedam, and prevent disputes<sup>m</sup>; but do not find it has had that effect. As Shâster, or Shâstrum, signifies Science, we find books treating of other subjects, particularly philosophy and astronomy, under this title. It is permitted to the Chuderers (or Shudderers), priests of the Shudderi, or Baniyân sect, to read the Shâster; but they must not touch the Vedam, which is monopolized by the Brâmmans.

<sup>d</sup> PONS, ap. Let. Edif. tom. 26. p. 233, & seqq.

<sup>e</sup> Ibid.

<sup>f</sup> ROGER MOEURS Def. Bram. p. 36.

<sup>g</sup> Danish Confer.

p. 139.

<sup>h</sup> CALMET, ap. Let. Edif. tom. 21. p. 457.

<sup>i</sup> Idem. Ibid. tom. 24. p. 438, & seqq.

<sup>k</sup> PHILL. Account of Malabar, p. 4. 40.

<sup>l</sup> Ibid. p. 4. 10, 15, 40,

41, 43.

<sup>m</sup> ROGER, ubi supr. p. 36.

(D) So it is called by Lord, Sasteran Gol; Sasteran being the and Mr. Frazer. Roger calls it plural of Sâster, or Shâster; Jâstra. In the account of the which signifies Science; or, according to others, System. Malabâr religion, the books of which it consisteth are called

Their sacred books. THE Pûrân, or Powrân (E), are the historical books of the law, and contain the explanation of the Shâster (F), together with the antient histories of the Hindûs, both sacred and profane. These are comprised in eighteen books; to which may be added, the twenty-four Agamangol, which are likewise historical<sup>n</sup>.

The Pûrân. THIS is the account we have of the Pûrân, from the Malabars themselves. But we have grounds to believe, that they contain the history not only of their first kings, heroes, prophets, penitents, and other eminent men; but also of their inferior gods or divinities. In short, the Pûrân joining both the former systems together, seems to have formed the religion of the vulgar; by introducing the doctrine and worship of those inferior deities, whose history is in these poems displayed with monstrous fictions. The Brâmmans pretend that the three sets of books before-mentioned were all delivered by God to Brâmma: but it is obvious that they were published at different times, doubtless to serve different purposes; and that the Powrân appeared long after the other two, when the present idolatry, to which it is accommodated, came to get footing in the Indies.

The popular theology. AMONG the Pûrân, or Powrân, which signifies poems, are the Harma Pourân<sup>o</sup>, which, we are told, contain the popular theology, or most approved polytheism; and, among the Shâsters, is the Harma Shâstrum, composed out of the Brâmmans, and popular divinity. It signifies the holy science, or science of virtue; and contains the practice of the different religions (or sects), with the sacred rites or ordinances, and laws for administering justice; which treatises of the Harmasbâstrum, written by various authors, are multiplied ad infinitum<sup>p</sup>.

Kept from the laity. THERE are, besides the before-mentioned, many other books explaining the law; all which are kept out of the hands of the common people, or laity: yet there are a great number of books current among the Malabars, which con-

<sup>n</sup> PHILL. Account Malabâr, p. 4, 15, 50.      • PONS. ap. Let. Edif. tom. 26, p. 233, 239.      <sup>p</sup> Ibid. p. 34, & seq.

(E) Pûrân, or Porân, signifies Poems; these histories being written in verse.

(F) All the doctrines and instructions contained therein are taken out of the four books of the law and the Shâsters. PHILL.

Hist. Malâb. p. 11. There is an abridgment of these eighteen books, called Chadda Kari naga Mandirum, ibid. p. 15. Roger mentions these Porâns in his Manners of the Brâmmans, p. 64, 68, 102, & alibi.

tain the exploits of their gods Chiwens (or Iffuren) and Their sacred books. Wishtnou; the history of the wars of the giants with the Gods; with their miracles, and the way of worshipping them. Among these, there are many porân and local histories of their gods, peculiar to some places in the country of Mala-bâr<sup>9</sup>; and this, no doubt, is the case in other parts of India.

As the Brâmmans, or priests, have the keeping of their sacred books, which they will not communicate to their own laity (G), much less to strangers, great sums have been offered, to no purpose, by Europeans<sup>1</sup>, for a copy, or only a translation of the Vedam; because it is written in a language (H) which is reckoned sacred on that account, and known only to the Brâmmans. Some, from the difficulty of coming at them, have supposed that there are no such books in being; for the Danish missionaries could never get the Brâmmans to produce it<sup>2</sup>: and one of the Romish tells us they, for a long time, thought it was impossible to find it; but, at length, he got a copy of it (I), by means of a Brâmman convert<sup>3</sup>. And, doubtless, they might have been had long ago, if properly sought after (K); since the Mohammedans have had transla-

<sup>9</sup> See PHILL. Malab. p. 37, 38, 53, 121, 125. Also Dan. Confer. p. 140, & seq. <sup>1</sup> BERNIER, Mem. Emp. Mogol, tom. 3, p. 161. — Danish Lett. part 1, p. 20, 22. <sup>2</sup> Dan. Confer. p. 138, & seqq. <sup>3</sup> CALMET. ap. Lett. Edif. tom. 21, p. 456, and tom. 24, p. 437.

(G) Only the tribe of Kut-veri, or the Râjabs, are allowed to read the Vedam; and that of Shudderi, or the merchants, are permitted only to read the Shâster.

(H) Our authors call it the Samskortam, Samskroutam, San-krit, and Hanskrit. But it appears, from what has been observed before, to be another language. The Samskortam, which signifies synthetic, or composed, is harmonious, copious, and strong. The grammar is a wonderful contrivance, and masterpiece of art. It was formerly a living language, spoken in the north, or Hindûstân: as the Grandam was in the south India. The Danish missionaries call this latter the Kirundum; and say their sacred books are written in it. Whether it differs from the other, and in what respects, they do not tell us. See Lett. Edif. tom. 15, p. 53. tom. 21, p. 457, and tom. 26, p. 22, & seqq.

(I) Calmet was employed to procure it for the French king's library; which he did about the year 1733.

(K) They were procured, by order of the present king of France, to put in his library.--- Mr. Frazer has lately brought from India the Shâster and Pû-rân, in the Sanskrit language, but not the Vedam. See Append. to Hist. of Nadir Shâh.

Their sacred books. tions of them (L) for a long time, from whence at least a version might have been made, and Mr. Lord procured an abstract of the Shâster early in the last century.

Great neglect of THIS abstract is very short; yet as the Shâster contains the substance of the Vedam, it may supply the place of it until a translation come to be made public: and as we find in this abstract the original of those beings, whom the Hindûs at present worship as gods, and of the facts on which the Brâmmans have grounded so many fictions, it serves as a key to open the mystery, and account for many things which otherwise would be inexplicable. Notwithstanding this, we do not find that any author has made use of it to clear up the confusion and difficulties, which he complains of, in the accounts of others, relating to the Hindû religion. Even Bernier himself, one of the most intelligent of the travellers, altho' he had read Mr. Lord's book, and tells us he was obliged to him for many things<sup>u</sup>, yet takes no notice of the use that might be made of it on this occasion; as if either he had overlooked this consideration, or thought the matters contained in it were agreeable to the present system of the Indians.

Romish missionaries.

ON the other hand, the missionaries, altho' seemingly diligent in search of the Vedam, never took the least notice of this abstract of the Shâster; as if it had no relation to the religion of the Brâmmans. It is true, neither the Shâster, nor Pourân, seem to have been known to them till of late years; nor does Lord himself, however it happened, once mention the Vedam, much less that the Shâster is an explanation of it; on the contrary, by some mistake, he speaks of the Shâster as the book of the law delivered by God to Bremaw, or Bramma (M). However, if this abstract of the Shâster had been known to them, we have no great reason to believe that they would have made use of it; since we do not find they have made any of the Vedam itself, although they have been in possession of it ever since about the year 1730. Perhaps they do not think the best way to convert the Hindûs, is to let them see that their religion was originally free from that gross idolatry in which it is at present involved; at least that method would not answer their ends. They

<sup>u</sup> BERN. Mem. of Mogol's Emp. part 3, p. 157.

(L) P. Pons tells us it is in the king of France's library, in Arabic. See Lettr. Edif. tom. 26. p. 233.

(M) It is true, the Brâm-

mans pretend so; and according to a lay Malabâr, both the Shâsters and Pourâns are reckoned divine; but yet inferior to the Vedam, and as derived from it. make make use of images as well as the Hindûs; and therefore are The obliged to take a more difficult course: which is, to persuade Shaster. them that the Romish saints and images are more holy, and  fitter objects of worship than theirs.

S E C T. II.

Abstract of the Shaster.

THE Great God being alone, and resolving to make his Creation of excellency and power manifest, by creating a world the ele- stocked with intelligent animals; he, in the first place, as ments, the ground-work, made four elements, earth, air, fire, and water. These elements being confusedly mixed together, he next divided; and, out of them, formed the several parts of the visible world, in the manner following:

FIRST, by some great cane, or like instrument, God blew and visible upon the waters; which rising in a bubble of a round form, world. like an egg, and spreading by degrees to an immense space, made the firmament, which, so clear and transparent, encompasseth the world. Of the earth and moisture which remained as the sediment of the waters, the Lord framed a kind of ball, or globe; the more solid parts whereof became the earth, and the more liquid the seas. Then, by a great noise, or humming sound, he placed it in the midst of the firmament, every way equi-distant from it, and called it the lower world. Next he created a sun and moon in the firmament, to distinguish the times and seasons. The four elements being thus separated, and assigned to their proper places, began to discharge their several offices: the air filled up whatever was empty; the fire nourished with his heat; and the earth, as well as seas, brought forth their respective animals; to whom the Lord conveyed a seminal virtue, that they might be fruitful in their several capacities.

IN the last place, therefore, God created man, as a being First man more worthy than the rest, and capable of contemplating his Pourous. works. At the Lord's command he rose out of the earth, his head first appearing, and then his body, formed with all its parts. God next conveyed life into him, which, as soon as he had received, manifested itself: for colour began to redden in his lips; his eye-lids to disclose the two lights of nature; the several parts of his body put themselves in motion; and his understanding being informed, he acknowledged his maker, and rendered him worship.

THAT this man, who was made a sociable creature, might First wo- not live alone, God gave him a woman for a companion; man Par- who resembled him no less in the qualities of his body than kouti. mind. This first man's name was Pourous (or Pewrews),

The Shafter.

Their four sons, Brâm-
mon,

and the woman's Parkouti; who lived together as husband and wife, feeding on the fruits of the earth, without the destruction of any living creature. In process of time, these two had four sons, named Brammon, Kutteri, Shudderi, and Wife; who differed in their nature, according as the elements prevailed in them. For Brammon was of an earthly constitution, and therefore melancholic; being also ingenious, God appointed him to impart his precepts and laws to the people: for which office his grave and serious countenance best suited him. On this account, therefore, the Lord delivered to him a book, containing the form of divine worship, and the principles of religion.

Kutteri,

KUTTERI(N) was of a fiery temper, and had a martial spirit; God therefore vested him with power to sway kingdoms with the sceptre, and bring men into order: for this purpose the Almighty put a sword into his hand, which is the instrument of victory and dominion.

Shudderi,

As Shudderi being of a flegmatic constitution, was mild and conversible, it was thought fit that he should be a merchant, to enrich the commonwealth by commerce, and bring home plenty, by means of shipping. To put him in mind of his business, a pair of scales were put into his hand, and a bag of weights hung at his girdle.

Wife.

WISE (or Weyz), who was of an airy temper, was endued with invention; and being full of contrivances, was able, at first thought, to form any thing in the handicraft or mechanical way. To help him in his profession, he had delivered to him a bag, with variety of tools or instruments necessary to execute any piece of work which his fancy should devise.

Four women created,

THE world being in this maiden state, the Almighty gave not Pourous and Parkouti any daughters: but that the work of generation might be free from impurity, God made four women for these four men; and, for better conveniency of dispersing, placed them at the four winds, Sawatari in the east; Toddikastri in the west; Visagunda in the north; and Jejunogunda in the south*.

for wives
to the

MEAN time the sons of Pourous growing up, God commanded them to travel each a different way, in order to find out the four women who were to be their wives. Brammon travelling eastward, at length met with Sawatari, and married her, conformable to the rules prescribed in the book delivered to him. Kutteri, proceeding westward, found Toddi-kastri, and, after a terrible combat between them, which lasted three days, they came to a conjugal agreement. Shudderi took his journey northwards; and, after discovering pearls and diamond mines, lighted upon Visagunda. Lastly, Wife, called also Viskermah, or the hand-man, from his skill in manual arts, after crossing seven seas in a vessel, made by him for that purpose, stopped on the coast of Derpe, and built him a house there. After some time, he saw Jejunogunda walking by the shore, and made his addressees to her: but as she treated him with scorn, Wife prayed to God that he would turn her heart in his favour. This request was granted, on condition that he should erect pagods for God's worship, and adore images under green trees; because the Almighty had under their shade manifested himself to him by vision.

* LORD's Discovery of the Banian Religion, 2p. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. vi. p. 301, chap. 1.

(N) Kutteri signifies a Dag- this martial man and tribe took ger; from whence, probably, their name.

THESE things are related at large in Mr. Lord's abstract, with several agreeable circumstances. The four brothers, having in this manner peopled the earth, resolved to return to the place of their nativity, in order to see their parents: so leaving their sons and daughters behind them, in several different places, they began their journies back towards the middle of the earth; where, on their arrival, they found Pourous and Parkouti, who received them with banquets and rejoicings. In process of time the four brothers (and their wives) became parents of many new generations, who strictly conformed to their division into four tribes, without mixing; and followed the instructions of their respective founders. But, as multitude and plenty beget many evils, every thing, by degrees, fell into disorder: Brammon grew negligent in his piety; Kutteri became cruel and over-bearing; Shudderi cheated his brethren with false weights; and Wife set exorbitant rates upon his ware, to maintain his extravagancies. And as they were evil in themselves, so they were evil one to another; for Brammon envied Kutteri's greatness; and Kutteri, disdaining the quiet and solitary spirit of Brammon, forbore to pay him the respect due to his birthright: nay, he carried his contempt so far, as to prize his own laws and government before those of God, only because they came thro' the hands of Brammon. On the other side, he delighted in the slaughter of those who displeased him, laid taxes upon Shudderi, and drained the profits of Wife's labours; whilst ✓ LORD'S Discovery of the Banian Religion, p. 303, & seqq. ch. 2, 3, 4, 5.

The Shaffer.

Image-worship brought in.

World destroyed.

they, to revenge his injurious treatment, defrauded and exacted on their brethren. Wife likewise, to render Brammon still more contemptible than he was, sought to introduce a new form of religion, concerning the worship of images, and bowing to pagods (O), with other ceremonies, which had been communicated to him in vision, as before-mentioned: but, as these were things not contained in Brammon's book, a great dispute arose, whether they should be received as canonical: however, upon Wife's swearing that he had them from God, they were admitted as part of the ceremonial law.

THE ill examples of the parents sowed the seeds of corruption and wickedness, which increased in their posterity: so that at length the Deity growing angry, the heavens put on a face of darkness and terror; thunder and lightning flashed from the poles; while the seas, swelling in a frightful manner, sent a flood upon the earth, which overwhelmed all the race of mankind: but altho' their bodies were destroyed, their souls were lodged in the bosom of the Almighty. And thus ended the first age of the world, named Kurlayn<sup>2</sup>.

Secondage.

Three persons created.

Their offices.

HAD things continued in this ruinous state, the design of creation would have been frustrated. God therefore determined to renew the race of mankind, and begin the second age with three persons of greater perfection and excellency than the former. In order to this, descending from heaven upon a great mountain called Meropurbatî, he said, rise up Bremaw (P), the first of living creatures in the second age: hereupon the earth brought forth Bremaw, who immediately worshiped his maker. In like manner, by a second and third command, Vistney and Rudderi (Q) were produced, who, with no less reverence, adored their Creator. The design of making these three persons, was that they might act as deputies to God in the work which he was about to perform: to Bremaw therefore he assigned the office of making the creatures; to which purpose he indued him with the power of creation and production. To Vistney he gave the charge of preserving the creatures: for this end he constituted him

<sup>2</sup> LORD'S Discovery of the Banian Religion, p. 309, & seqq. chap. 6.

(O) By pagods, doubtless, our author means images; and uses a term different from what is here used in the Shaffer.

(P) He is called by others

Bramâ, Bramâh, and Brammâ.

(Q) Vistney is by others written Vishnou, Vishnou, Wistnow, and the like. Rudderi is written Rudderren, Rutteri.

lord

lord of the sun and moon, of the hills and vallies, of the The weather and seasons: he likewise made him the conferrer of Shafter. riches, health, honour, and whatever conduced to the well-being of man, and other animals. Lastly, he vested Rud-deri with a commission to destroy his creatures, because he knew they would be wicked, and deserve a punishment at his hands: for this end he appointed him lord of death and judgment, with all the train of common evils, such as sickness, famine, war, pestilence, and whatever else might be deemed a punishment for sin; the better to enable him to be the executioner of divine justice.

To each of these three persons was allotted a time for Time on remaining on earth, conformable to the nature of his office. earth. Because the work of creation was finished in the second age, therefore Bremaw was to be taken up to heaven at the end of it: and as each of the following ages were peopled by some who were reserved from destruction in the preceding ages, therefore Vistney was kept on earth double the term of Bremaw, because there was longer need of him, in his preserving quality. Lastly, in regard the world was to end by a general destruction, therefore the continuance of Rud-deri on earth was to be three times as long as theirs.

THESE three persons being thus created with full powers, Bremaw's the next business was for them to put those powers in exe- labour. cution. Hereupon Bremaw consulting with himself how to discharge his commission in the best manner, was seized with such extraordinary pain in all parts of his body, as foreboded some great alteration was to follow, as in effect there did: for he fell in labour; his belly swelling to such a degree (that altho' he far exceeded the stature of common men), he felt grievous torture, till, at length, the burden forcing its way thro' both his sides, there sprung forth twins, male and female, at full growth. These two having given worship to God the creator, and to Bremaw their producer, this latter named the Brings man Manow, and the woman Seteroupa: after which they forth were sent to a mountain called Munderpurvâl, from thence twins. to spread their generations towards the west, north, and south. Being arrived at the place appointed, Seteroupa brought forth six children, three sons, Priauretta, Outanapautha, and Sûmeraut; the three daughters were named Kammah, Sûnerettaw, and Sumbû. When these persons grew in years, they were dispersed according to Bremaw's command: Pri- The world auretta and Kammah were sent westward, to the mountain repeopled. Segund; Outanapautha and Sûnerettaw to the mountain Hipela, in the north; Sûmeraut and Sumbû to the mountain

The Shâster.

Supars, in the south; who all encreased (R) and multiplied.

THUS Bremaw made man and woman, and replenished the earth with other living creatures; while Vistney, on his part, provided all things necessary both for the support and preservation of them: on the other side, Rudderi dispersed calamities, sickness, death, and judgments, according as the sons of men did by their wickedness draw down those evils upon them<sup>a</sup>.

New book of the law,

THE Almighty knowing that there would be no good order, where there was not the establishment of his worship and fear, by proper laws, among this new race of mankind; therefore descending upon the mountain Meropurbati, he called Bremaw to him; and telling him, out of a dusky cloud, which yet revealed some rays of his glory, that his reason for destroying the former inhabitants of the earth, was because they did not observe the instructions set forth in the book delivered to Brammon, put another into the hand of Bremaw, commanding him to acquaint the dispersed generations with the matters contained therein; which he accordingly performed.

called the Shâster.

THIS book, called by the Baniyans the Shâster (S), consisted of three parts: the first contained their moral law, or precepts, with the explanation of each, and its application to the tribe or tribes which it concerned: the second comprised the ceremonial law; setting forth the rites which were to be observed in worship: the third tract divided mankind into tribes or classes; and prescribed the rules which were to be observed by each. To speak more particularly with respect to each of these tracts;

The moral law

THE first tract, containing the moral law, consisteth chiefly of eight commandments. The first forbids the killing of any living creature whatever; because it has a soul, as well as man, * LORD'S Discovery of the Banian Religion, p. 311, ch. 7.

(R) Here brothers and sisters go together; which was not suffered in the first age, as a thing in itself evil.

(S) We are much at a loss here. The chief book of the law among the Hindûs is the Vedam, or Wedam; of which the Shâster, which signifies a System, is only the explanation or comment: but as our author Lord says this latter was delivered to Bremaw, and we are informed elsewhere that it is believed, as well as the other, to have come from God; therefore we must either suppose the Vedam was the book mentioned in the text, as delivered to Brammon; or else, that Lord has mistaken one for the other.

THE second forbids beholding, giving ear to, or speaking, The what is evil; also the drinking of wine, and eating of flesh; Shafter. with the touching of things defiled.

THE third commands the observation of times of devotion, with washings, worshiping, and prayers to God. how distributed

THE fourth forbids telling lies, with design to defraud others in dealings, bargains, or contracts.

THE fifth commands charity to the poor, in meat, drink, and money, according to his necessity, and the giver's ability.

THE sixth forbids oppressing, injuring, or doing violence to the poor; likewise to use one's power unjustly, to ruin another.

THE seventh commands the celebration of certain festivals, without excess: also, to set apart certain seasons for fasting; and break off some hours of sleep for watching, in order to be fitter for devotion.

THE eighth forbids stealing any thing, how small soever, of what is committed by another to one's trust, in the way of his business or profession; and commands being content with the hire which such person gives him: because no man has a right to what is the property of another.

IN dividing these eight commandments among the four among the tribes. tribes, two are appropriated to each: the first and second are assigned to the Brammans, who are the priests, as placing the strictest parts of religion in the preservation of living creatures from destruction, and abstinence from things forbidden. These precepts are likewise enjoined the merchantmen, who, in their way of worship, nearly agree with the Brammans: however, the third and fourth, which enjoin devotion, and forbid fraud in dealing, are more particularly intended for Shudderi.

THE fifth and sixth commandments are ascribed to Kutteri, that is, to rulers and magistrates; because those in power are most guilty of oppression, as well as most able to relieve the necessities of the poor. Lastly, the seventh and eighth, are referred to Wise, as the handicraftsmen have need sometimes of recreation, yet are apt to squander their earnings; and as they work in other people's houses, they are therefore restrained from theft.

EVERY tribe is obliged to observe all the commandments in general; but is more particularly exact in keeping those which are appropriated to their own. And as there is great conformity between Brammon and Shudderi, in their customs and religious worship, so is there a like between Kutteri and Wise <sup>b</sup>.

<sup>b</sup> LORD'S Discovery of the Banian Religion, p. 312, & seq. chap. 8.

The Shafter.

THE ceremonial law, or injunctions, comprised in the second tract delivered to Bremaw, relates to the following particulars :

Ceremonial law.
Frequent
washing.

FIRST, They are obliged to frequent washings of their bodies in rivers, after this manner : on their entrance they besmear themselves with mud, as an emblem of man's filthiness and corruption by nature ; then, walking farther in, and turning their faces towards the sun, the Bramman utters this prayer ; Oh Lord ! this man is foul and polluted as the mud of this river : but the water thereof can remove the defilement : do thou, in like sort, cleanse away his sin. Then the party plungeth himself three times in the stream, whilst the Bramman repeats the name of that (T) and other rivers, famous for such ablutions. Being risen up, he shakes in his hand some grains of rice ; and, having received absolution (of the priest) for his past sins, is dismissed.

Anointing.

SECONDLY, They use a kind of unction in the forehead, with red paint, and certain grains stuck in it ; which betokens that God has marked them for his people. This is done to keep them in mind of their baptism ; and, as the sign wears off, it is daily renewed by them, according to their washings : the action being accompanied with certain words, to put them in mind of being such as become God's mark.

Grove
worship.

THIRDLY, They are enjoined to tender certain offerings and prayers under green trees : which practice was introduced by Wise (or Weyz) ; to whom God appeared in a vision under a tree, as before-mentioned. The Brammans therefore under such green tree erect temples to pagods (U), where they attend to perform religious rites and ceremonies. [The tree appropriated to this kind of worship is called by

(T) " Wherein he washeth, " saith Lord, called Tappee, with " those of Gonga (or Ganga), " Nerboda, and the like." These must be the words of Lord, and not those of the Shafter ; which he has, throughout his abstract, mixed with his own, in such a manner that often they are not to be distinguished one from the other. The Tappi, or Tapti, is the river of Surât, and the other two are in its neighbourhood ; where the Baniyans chiefly dwell.

(U) We observed before, that this word cannot be taken from the Shafter ; as a farther proof of which, our author confounds the temple with the image : for pagod is a corruption of Pout Gheda, a Persian word, signifying the house of idols ; and therefore used only by the Mohammedans ; the name for a temple among the Hindûs being Deura, which we presume signifies the same thing. See Orington's Voy. to Surât, p. 195, and Bernier's Memoirs of the Great Mogol's Empire, tom. iii. p. 131, & passim.

some

some the Indian fig-tree (X). From the branches stems shoot The downwards, and, taking root, produce another tree, whose Shafter. branches propagate in like manner: so that one tree spreads over a large space of ground. This tree is supposed by the Hindûs to be so sacred, that they believe some great mischief will befall the person who hurts the least bough of it. To this tree they bring offerings: under it they receive unctions, and sprinklings of variously coloured powders. There they pay their adorations; which they number by a clapper of a little bell. There they pray for health, riches, a numerous issue, and the like. In short, there they often celebrate their festivals, with a great concourse of people.] (Y).

FOURTHLY, They are commanded to say certain prayers in Prayers to their temples, [not unlike those used among the Christians.] God. This devotion consists in the repetition of certain names of God, explained and descanted on. They likewise use processions, with singing, and loud tinkling of bells; which chaunting is among their commandments (Z); with offerings to images, and such like services (A).

FIFTHLY, They are enjoined pilgrimages to remote rivers, Pilgrim- as the Ganges; there to wash their bodies, and pay their of- ages. ferings: [so that the gold and jewels thrown into that famous river are of immense value.] The person likewise whose palate, when dying, is moistened with Ganges water, is accounted blessed, and purified from sin.

A SIXTH article of their worship is the invocation of saints; Invocation to whom they attribute the power of assisting their votaries of saints. on many occasions. They who would be happy in marriage pray to Hurmout: they who undertake works of architecture, to Gunnez: such as want health, to Vagenaut: the soldier, going-on to attack an enemy, cries Bimohem: the miserable call upon Siyer; and they who are in prosperity offer up their orisons to Meykasser (B).

SEVENTHLY, They are commanded by their law to wor- Creature ship God, upon sight of any of his creatures after sun-rise: worship. [particularly they pay their devotion to the sun and moon, which they call the two eyes of the Deity. Likewise to

(X) By the Portugueses, Arbor are these commandments re- de Reys, by others, the Baniâns ferred to? for he has produced none in which chaunting is entree, and the war tree.

(Y) We have put between hooks such matters as seem to be additions of Mr. Lord, and not to be contained in the Shafter.

(Z) This is spoken as if the other rites were not. But where are these commandments referred to? for he has produced none in which chaunting is enjoined.
(A) Here is an omission of certain rites.
(B) Did the Romish church take invocation of the dead from the Indians, or fall into it as a natural consequence of idolatry?
some

The Shafter.

some beasts, whom they hold more clean than others, their treatment is exceeding kind; such as kine and buffalos. To these they ascribe so much innocence and goodness, on account of the souls of men entering into them, as they believe; that they besmear the floors of their houses with the dung of those cattle, and think the ground sanctified by that means.]

Other
precepts.

THE eighth precept relates to baptizing, or naming their children; the ninth to marriages; and the tenth to burials, which have been already set forth among their civil customs<sup>c</sup>.

Division
into tribes.

THE third tract of the book delivered to Bremaw treateth of the order and distinction proper to be observed among mankind. And, because nothing could be more commodious than to have, as in the first age, Brammans, to instruct the people in matters of religion; Kuttereys, to sway the scepter, and keep men in obedience; merchants, to follow traffick and commerce, like Shudderi; and mechanics, to supply mankind with necessities of their manufacture, as did Wise; therefore they were by this tract divided into the same tribes or classes, and obliged to confine themselves to their respective tribes, as well as the employments peculiar to each.

WE have already given an account of the three last tribes; and, as we shall postpone that of the Brammans, till we come to speak more particularly of the priests among the Hindûs, we pass on to the other matters contained in the abstract of the Shafter<sup>d</sup>.

The law
promulged.

THE book above-mentioned, comprising the plan of religion and government which was to be established in the new world, having been delivered to Bremaw, as before set forth; it was by him communicated to the Brammans of those times, and by them published among the people, who readily conformed themselves to the injunctions prescribed in it. They divided themselves into four tribes, and each tribe began to exercise the function appointed for them. The rulers kept the people in order; the priests or Brammans counselled them in matters of devotion; the merchants pursued traffick; and the handicraftsmen followed their several professions.

Men grow
wicked.

THUS all things had a good beginning in this second age: religion was cultivated; prayers were offered up to God, and the three persons, Bremaw, Vistney, and Rudderi; the banks of the rivers were frequented, and daily washings were not neglected. But as mankind multiplied, they became worse and worse: the Brammans grew full of hypocrisy and ostentation; the Kuttereys, swelled with pride and ambition, sought to enlarge their territories and power by unjust means; the merchants committed all sorts of fraud in their dealing; The and the mechanics grew idle, setting too great a price on Shaffer. their labour. The Lord, provoked with the iniquity of the world, descended on mount Meropurbati, and acquainting Bremaw with what he had observed, this latter went down, and gave them notice of the impending judgment; which, for a while, wrought a reformation in their manners: but, by degrees, they returned to their old course of wickedness. Hereupon Bremaw interceded with God for the human race (C); but the Almighty would not be pacified: on the contrary, the time of Bremaw's abode on earth being expired, the Lord took him up into his bosom, that he might not behold the evils of the time to come.

<sup>c</sup> LORD'S Discovery of the Banian religion, ap. Church. Collect p. 317, & seq. ch. 9.

<sup>d</sup> Ibid. p. 320, ch. 10.

THEN God made known his purpose of destroying mankind The world to Vistney; who, in virtue of his office, as preserver of the destroyed. world, interceded likewise for them: but the Lord, resolving not to withhold his wrath, commanded Rudderi, whose office it was to bring judgments and destruction on sinners, to cause a wind to rise out of the bowels of the earth, and sweep the nations as dust from-off the face of it. Rudderi, in obedience to the Almighty's order, put the winds in a violent motion; which, bursting from their subterraneous prisons, set the great body of the world a trembling. The day seemed to change colour with the night; the mountains and hills were torn from their foundations; and, as some report, the river Ganges was forced out of her wonted channel to take another course. In a word, this furious tempest destroyed the whole race of mortals, excepting a few, whom the Lord permitted Vistney to cover with the skirts of his preservation; as a reserve for the propagation of mankind in the third age. And thus concluded the second age, called Duaper <sup>c</sup>.

RUDDERI having at length restrained the stormy The third winds, all became calm again: but it was lamentable to be- age. hold the universal desolation which overspread the earth, especially the dead carcases of men and animals, which covered its surface; some blown from the tops of mountains, others bruised to mash, all drowned and destroyed: inso-much that the Almighty repented him of what he had done; and Rudderi was sorry to have been the instrument of so great fury and havock. But because the ill government of the kings and rulers was the source of all the disorders in the second age (as they had been in the first), therefore the Lord

* LORD's Discovery of the Banian religion, ap. Church. Collect. p. 325, ch. 13.

(C) This is like Abraham's intercession for Sodom, utterly

The Shafter.

The Kutteris extirpated.

Brâmmans made kings.

A third destruction.

The present age.
Kistney.

utterly rooted out all the tribe of the Kuttereys; those who were preserved being only some few of the other three tribes. However, as that tribe or order of men was so necessary in the world that it could not subsist without them; therefore, that it might be renewed from a more holy stock, the Lord appointed that the line of the Râjabs should be restored from that of the Brammans (B). This was performed in the person of Ram, youngest son of Duserat, chief of the Brammans (C), who were preserved by Vistney.

It was presumed that this person, being religiously educated, would favour piety as well as policy; and, with holiness joined to prudence, govern men in their several tribes. Accordingly Ram was a patron of the Brammans, and exceedingly promoted religion. [This prince became so memorable for his worthy actions, that to this day his name is honoured among the Hindûs; who, when they meet, salute one another, saying, Ram! Ram! as a word importing the wishes of every thing that is good.]

It is likely that many worthy kings succeeded him: but, the world degenerating in length of time, the same wicked practices which had infected the four tribes in the two former ages, began to infect them anew; till at length, the Almighty being incensed that mankind should not be warned by so many judgments, spoke to Rudderi: who, by his order, caused the earth to open and swallow them up alive; reserving only some few of each tribe, as a last trial, for peopling of the world. Thus ended the third age, named Tetrâjâ.

AMONG those who were preserved was one Kistney (D), a famous ruler and pious king, the most renowned in the beginning of this fourth and last age. As he was exceeding zealous to propagate religion, virtue flourished in his reign<sup>f</sup>.

<sup>f</sup> LORD'S Description of the Banian religion, ap. Church. Collect. p. 325, ch. 14.

(B) Yet it does not appear that all the Râjabs are Brammans; for all those of Hindîstan, as well as many of those in the peninsula of India, seem to be of the Kutteri race.

(C) According to the vulgar tradition, Duserat (or Duserat) was one of the Râjabs who, with his wife, had been destroyed; but both were reanimated it seems by the souls of two departed Brammans; and thus produced the race of Bram-Kutteri. So that Mr. Lord must have committed a mistake here, or the Brammans must have altered the tradition, in order to make the fact more agreeable to the present state of things.

(D) By others, Kisna, Kishna, Krisna, and Krishna.

AT this period, Viſhney's time of reſiding on earth being The expired, the Lord took him up alſo into heaven, as there Shaſter. was no farther need of his preſerving care: for, when the preſent age is brought to a concluſion, there will be a final Last day. end of all things. [However, the Brammans ſay, that this age, named Koli, will be longer than any of the former; and that at the end thereof Rudderi ſhall be taken up into heaven, as Bremaw and Viſhney have been already.]

As to the manner of this final judgment, they hold that it will be more dreadful than any of the former; and it ſhall be by fire: that Rudderi ſhall then ſummon up all the powers of deſtruction: that the moon ſhall look red, and the ſun ſhed his purling light like flaming brimſtone: that the lightning ſhall ſaſh with unuſual terrors; and the ſkies change into all ſorts of colours; but that fiery redneſs eſpecially ſhall overſpread the face of heaven: that the four elements, of which the world at firſt was conſtituted, ſhall be at variance, till, by this laſt agony, ſhe is turned into her firſt confuſion.

THAT the final deſtruction of the world ſhall be by fire Final de- they infer from a ſuppoſition, that it ſhall be brought to its struction. diſſolution by the ſame principles which gave it a being: and that as it hath already been deſtroyed by three of the elements, it ſhall be ultimately deſtroyed by the fourth. Then (ſay they) ſhall Rudderi carry up with him to heaven the ſouls of No reſur- all mankind, there to reſt in the boſom of God; but their rection. bodies ſhall all periſh; being of ſubſtances too groſs to enter into ſo pure a manſion<sup>g</sup>.

THIS is the intire ſubſtance of Mr. Lord's abſtract of the Primitive Shaſter, which teaches the belief and worſhip of one only Hindu God, called the Almighty and Supreme Being, not of many: religion. that Bremaw, Viſhney, and Rudderi (named alſo Eſwara, or Iſbura, and Chivens), who are now worſhipped as ſo many Gods, were no more than three perſons, or beings, created by the Deity as his deputies or workmen, to make the viſible world, and under him govern the affairs thereof for a limited time, purſuant to certain powers delegated to them: likewise that Ram, and Kiſhney, or Kriſhna, who are at preſent adored in their pagods with ſo much devotion, were no other than two men, famous for their good actions in the ages wherein they lived. In ſhort, in Lord's abſtract we find nothing of thoſe wild genealogies, and romantic adventures, told by travellers, of the Hindu gods; nor even ſo much as the famous transformations (E), of Viſhnû, or Wiſhnû, which fill their Pûrân with fables and their temples with ſtatues.

<sup>g</sup> LORD's Deſcription of the Banian religion, ap. Church. Col- lect. 326, ch. 15.

The Shaster.
~~~~~
Free from idolatry,

THUS the primitive religion of the Hindûs seems to have been intirely free from idolatry: for although in the Shaster we find the worship of images introduced, yet it is evident, from the place itself, that it was not originally a part of the Indian religion; since it is expressly said there was no mention of those things in the books delivered to Brammon, which was the first Hindû bible, or revealed book of the law: nor is image-worship taught in the eight commandments inserted in the said book delivered to Bremaw, which is the second revealed book of the law. It may be farther observed, that images were to be worshipped under green trees, as not worthy of being placed in temples, where we find them at present: the pagods seeming at first to have been dedicated solely to the worship of the one God; and in the Shaster itself this image-worship is not established as a point of doctrine, but only brought-in, as it were by the by, among the ceremonies of the Indian religion.

and other modern extravagances.

BESIDES this silence of the Shaster with respect to the present idolatry, we meet with nothing in it which in anywise tends to authorize the extravagant notions which obtain, concerning the number of different worlds and heavens; the long duration of this world; the creation of man, and future state; with many other absurd opinions. Nay, we do not so much as find any mention of the favourite doctrine of the transmigration of souls, though as old at least as the time of Pythagoras. Which shews, that this, as well as all the rest, were invented by the Brammans: since the Shaster was written, and imposed on the people by means of their Pourân, which are properly the legends and traditions of the Hindû church.

(E) It may be objected, that Lord has possibly suppressed things of both these kinds; and the rather as he tells us, in his introduction, that he had, for the most part left-out such prodigious fictions as seemed independent on sense and reason. It is true Mr. Lord has omitted many things, relating to political and other matters: but then he gives his readers notice. Neither is it probable, that if Bremaw, Vishny, and Rudderi, were either termed gods, or declared to be such in the Shaster, or had any worship assigned them, that he would have suppressed matters of so much consequence; especially as he has not concealed the introduction of image-worship. Nor indeed do such matters come within the construction of prodigious fictions, to which alone his suppressions must be confined, whatever the transformations aforesaid may: yet even these are so essential a part of the present religion of the Hindûs, that we cannot think he would have been intirely silent about them, in case there had been any mention made of them in the Shaster.

S E C T.

S E C T III.

*An Account of the present Idolatry of the Hindows.*One supreme Deity.

IT is not our intention to enter into a large detail of the Hindû religion, as at present taught and practised in the Indies; the account we have given of their antient principles, and objects of worship, may save us a great deal of that trouble. After having shewn from their sacred books what was the original of all things, as well as of those beings whom they now principally worship as gods, it will be enough to point out the chief additions which priestcraft, never satisfied with enlarging, hath farther added thereto; without collecting all which authors have written on the several subjects, or engaging ourselves far in the recital of those endless fictions and extravagant romances, invented to propagate the different superstitions, and link them together.

Cautions to be observed

WITH regard to the variation which is found in the accounts of authors relating to those several particulars, and which contributes not a little to perplex the reader; it is to be ascribed in good measure to the different traditions and opinions of different countries and sects of Brammans dwelling in them. Thus, the Brammans of the western Malabâr seem to have one set of doctrines and legends; those of the eastern Malabâr another; those of Karnâta, a third set; and those of Hindûstân, or the Mogol's empire, a fourth. This appears from the relations of authors, particularly Baldeus, the Romish and protestant missionaries, Abraham Roger, and Bernier(F); who visited different parts of India, and whose disagreement in most respects is owing to those local variations.

in reading
authors.

THAT the sacred books of the Hindûs establish and require the belief of one only God, is manifest from the abstract already given of the Shaster; and there is a particular sect of the Brammans who acknowledge no more than one God^h. The rest, who are engaged in supporting the popular religion; or polytheism, yet acknowledge one supreme God, who created all the rest, as his deputies or vicegerents, to create, and, under him, govern all other beingsⁱ. To this supreme God they give infinite names, according to his various powers

The Hin-dûs believe

^h See hereafter. ⁱ PHILLIPS's Account of Malabar, p. 71, 170. Dan. Confer. p. 2. 62 166, & seq.

(F) To these we may add the account given by de Faria y Sousa, in his Portuguese Asia; which seems to be that which Roger, in his preface, p. 2. says

One supreme Deity.

One supreme God;

his attributes,

and attributes (G); the number of which last they make to be one thousand and eight^k. The Brammans of Hindûstân call God the Creator, Asbar; that is, immoveable, or immutable^l. Tampiran is the name of God among the Malabârians; who stile that being Barabara Wastu, or Parabara Wastu, that is, the supremest being of all; also Saru Wesuren, and Dewadda Duwam. Sometimes, more expressly, Barabara Wastu Waghira Saru Wesuren; that is, the supreme independent being, Lord of all^m. We are told also, that the only One Divine Being is called Isfaretta, which signifies the Deity, who is the cause of all things. Every sect seems to have its own names for the supreme God: and indeed to confound the inferior gods with him; which authors do not sufficiently attend to; and hence in a good measure arises this diversity of names. The Baniyâns, we are told, call the Deity Mâha-dew (H), or the great God: but one sect of Brammans ascribe that name to Isburen, or Ruddiren; another to Wistnu, or Wistnum, two of the subordinate divinities. As to the residence of this Prime Being, they place it above that of the other gods; assigning three mansions or heavens, called Kaylasom, Lilaweykontam, and Weykontam, for his abodeⁿ.

To this supreme Deity, or God of gods, they ascribe all the sublime attributes of power, wisdom, and goodness. They say, there is no government or motion but through him; and that the other gods cannot move a single straw without his permission^o: that he is incomprehensible, and without form; nor to be considered under any material figure^p. Agreeably to this notion, they make no image of the Supreme Being. The Malabârs (both priests and laity) likewise declare, that they worship but this One Divine Being (I), who is the author or cause of all other beings^q. And yet no prayer is directly addressed to him; nor any hymn offered in his praise in the pagods^r. He is likewise considered as the author both of good and evil^s; or as the foun-

^k PHIL. Malab. p. 50. part iii. p. 145. 150.

^l BERNIER Mem. Mogol emp. Dan. Lctt. p. 85, 166. Dan. Confer. part i. p. 29. part ii. p. 19.

^m ROGER, ubi supr. p. 102.

ⁿ PHIL. Malab. p. 42. 170.

^o Ibid. p. 13.

^p Ibid. p. 13.

^q Dan. Confer. part ii. p. 19.

^r PHIL. Malab. p. 171.

^s Ibid. p. 7. 313.

(G) The Brammans have written many books upon the existence and attributes of the Supreme Being. Dan. Confer. p. 165.

(I) This those say who yet worship Wistnou, or Isfuren, as the supreme God.

tain from whence both proceed, seeing all things are believed to be derived from him. They likewise say, that the subaltern gods and other beings were made for his pastime: that he diverts himself with beholding the wicked as well as the good actions of mankind; and, in short, that this world is one of the sixty-four comedies with which he is entertained¹. As to his providence they tell us, that the Deity does not mind things of little moment in this world; but leaves them to his three created vicegerents: who have, for that purpose, their subordinate gods disposed in proper stations². However, one of the missionaries, that he never met with so much as one atheist, or a person who denied the existence of a Sovereign Being and a future state³.

THIS in general is the substance of what the Brammans believe and teach concerning the supreme God. With regard to the subaltern or inferior gods, they are divided into three classes. The first consists of those three created beings, Bramma, Visnou, and Ruddiren. The second class comprises the wives, children, and prime friends or favourites of the first three. The third class is composed of those they call Deutas, or Dewetas; who are a kind of angels, employed to govern and take care of the several parts of the universe⁴, under the gods of the first class. To these may be added a fourth class, comprehending those they call Ashuren, who are giants or demons. All these gods, whose number is excessively great, have their respective offices, degrees of power and worship, their wives and children. The Brammans have likewise furnished them with officers and equipages suitable to their stations: among the rest, they have taken particular care to provide every one of them with a Wahannam, or beast of carriage; which serves him instead of a horse, to carry him instantaneously from one part of the world to the other.

I.

Gods of the First Class.

THE three gods of this class have a great number of names assigned to them. One of them has often more than a hundred⁵; for every act done by him intitles him to a new name⁶. But the appellations by which they are most generally known are those of Bramma, Visnou, and Ruddiren,

¹ PHILIPS's Malab. p. 45, 173.² Dan. Lett. part ii.³ 20. ⁴ Ibid. p. 24.⁵ See ROGER's Mœurs de

Bramins, p. 240, & seq.

⁶ Dan. Lett. part ii. p. 11.

PHILIPS's Malab. p. 41, 71.

Created
gods.
1st class.

or Isburen; which yet vary according to the different languages, dialects, or humours of people, in different parts of India (I). Thus Brama, or Bramma, is by some pronounced Brâma, Bruma, Brumma, Biruma, and Ram; Vistnou is named Vijhnou, Vistnow or Wistnow, Vistnum, and Beshen or Beshno; Isburen is named Issuren, Ixora or Isbora, and Eswara^b. These three divinities are included under the general denomination of Dirumurtigol^c; by which name their class or order is distinguished from the rest.

Opinions of them various;

IT is difficult to give a clear account of the Hindû belief, concerning these three gods, from the writings of travellers, or even the missionaries; who either deliver the opinions and doctrines of some particular sect for those of the whole, or mix those of different sects together, without distinguishing them, and, in a manner, not to be separated; from whence chiefly arises that great disagreement and confusion which we find in their relations.

by some
created

ACCORDING to some authors, these are three beings created by the sovereign God, and vested with the powers mentioned in the Shaster; Bramma to create, Vistnou to preserve, and Ruddiren, or Isburen, destroy. From this number of three, and the offices of those beings, some would infer, that the Hindûs have some notion of the trinity^d: but this does not appear from their sacred books; and Mr. Lord rightly observes, that there is rather a quaternity, since the supreme God will make the fourth^e. Besides, it is probable that those books were in being long before the Christian æra.

and subordinate
gods;

However that be, we are told by the same authors, that they are not held for gods, but only considered as God's servants and soldiers^f; that they are no more than God's ministers, to execute his commands; and, at best, his deputies and viceroyents (K), to govern under him^g: that they have but borrowed beings, subject to various changes, as well as other creatures; and are vested with precarious employments, each having his fixed time of life and government, to continue

^b See BERNIER's Mem. Mogol, part iii. p. 150. BALDÆUS ap. Church. Coll. Trav. vol. iii. p. 766. PHIL. Malab. p. 4. 71. Dan. Confer. p. 167.

^c PHIL. Malab. p. 4. 94.

^d BERNIER, ubi supr. p. 151. BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 766.

^e LORD's Relig. of the Banians, in his conclusion. ^f Dan. Lett. p. 57. part i. ^g Dan. Confer. p. 168.

(I) The same may be said with respect to the European authors of different nations, who mention them.

as mediators, to present the Petitions of the Malabars to the Great Supreme Being. Philips's Account of Malabar, p. 5.

(K) They are considered also only only till the restitution of things^h. For all this, they are reckoned omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent, as well as most holy, just, and good : and it is upon this supposition that the Brammans say they direct their prayers to them, and honour their altars with burnt-offerings; alleging for so doing the strict orders of the Supreme Beingⁱ. But it is not mentioned where those orders are to be found; although some Brammans have quoted the Vedam in support of this creature-worship, as appears from Roger.

*Created
gods.
1st class.
yet omnipotent.*

THESE are not to be considered as the sentiments of all the Brâmmans, much less of the people; but only as the opinion of some particular sects, or private persons, who adhere more strictly than others to the documents of the Vedam. For we learn elsewhere, that both the Brammans and people ascribe much higher prerogatives to these three beings; especially two of them, Wistnow and Eswara or Isburen: some affirming the first to be not only a god, but the Supreme God (L); others the second^k. And between these two opinions the generality of the Hindûs in all parts of India, at least the southern, seem to be divided; each party contending zealously for the superiority of his god: whence some Bramman sects assume the name of Vistnouists, others Isburenists. However, we are informed by the same author, that there are some of the first-mentioned sect, who say neither of those two is God; but that both sprung from Chekti, who is the Sovereign Being^l. In consequence of exalting the three deputies to the rank of true gods, those sects have also given them a genealogy also, different from the Vedam and Shafter; each likewise in favour of their own god, or according to their fancy.

Some say Vistnum, others Isburen, is supreme.

SOME tell us the Malabârs believe, that the Dirumurtigol, or three gods above-mentioned, were born of the goddess Chaday (or Chatti), who originally existed in the Supreme Being as the feminine faculty, and was afterwards separated from the masculine power^m. According to others, the same people look for the origin of all things in the Linga, or privy-member of their god *Isbora*ⁿ. Some of them say, the

Their origin and genealogy

^h Dan. Conf. ibid. and Dan. Lett. part ii. p. 21, & seq. ⁱ Dan. Confer. p. 168.

^k ROGER Mœures des Bram. p. 17. 22, 23.

^l Ibid. p. 26, ^m PHIL. Malab. p. 3, & seq.

ⁿ BALDÆUS ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p. 813. Portuguese Asia, vol. ii. p. 378.

(L) That is, the same with produced by him; namely, out of himself.

Creat'd gods.1st class.

Linga or Quivelinga (which is the privities of both sexes in conjunction) sprung from an egg, into which the Ishuretta, or Isparetta transformed himself: and others, that the Quivelinga is the Deity himself². As the Linga relates to Ishuren, who is the favourite god of the Malabârs, these genealogies are, doubtless, calculated to honour him, though different among themselves: and we meet with one differing from all the rest; wherein the three deities are deduced in the following series. First, we are told, that the Being of all Beings, or the Supreme God, created eternity: eternity brought forth Chinen (M): by this Chinen the goddess Chanû was created. This goddess produced Putadi, or the elementary and visible world: by Putadi the sound, or ringing, was framed. The Sound's offspring was nature: Nature afterwards begat the great god Chuta Chinen: and this again brought forth another great god called Maghesturn: from Maghesturn sprung Ruddiren, or Ishuren; from Ruddiren the great god Wijstnam; and Wijstnam created *Bruma*² (or Bramma).

contrary
to the Vedam:

In this jargon-genealogy of the three gods two things are remarkable. First, Ruddiren, who, according to the Vedam and Shâster, was created last, is here produced first, and made the parent of the other two. Secondly, that Bramma is not qualified with the title of Mahadew, or great god, like the other two: the reason is, that he is in no great esteem with the southern Indians. On this occasion it must be observed, that each of the three gods has his particular party or votaries. The Brammans and Hindûs of the Mogel's empire seem to adhere to Bramma: those of Karnâta prefer Wijstnam, and the Malabârs exalt Ruddiren, or Ishuren (N). The interest of Bramma is so much declined in Karnâta that they will not allow him a parcel, at least in the country about Palliketta, on the coast of Cheromandel: and although the inhabitants of that country, and Malabâr in general, allow him the privilege of creating (which however some divest him of), yet they say even that was delegated to him by Wijstnam (O). But of this, and the Linga more in particular, when we come to speak of these gods separately.

² Dan. Lett. part i. p. 19, 20, 56.

² Ibid. part ii. p. 21.

(M) Ishuren is the same with Chinen; or this is one of his names.

(N) Agreeable to this, Burrow observes, that these acknowledge Wijstnam for their supreme God; but most of them know for Ishuren. See Charul. Collat. Voy. vol. iii. p. 754.

(O) This is, doubtless, supposing Wijstnam to be the supreme God.

IF it be objected to those above-mentioned sects, that in making these three subordinate gods the same with the supreme God who created them, they contradict their own principles, and assert a manifest absurdity; they endeavour to defend themselves, by saying: that those deities are the same with God, as being comprehended in the divine essence; and that therefore there can be no great difference between them and the Supreme Being. For they hold that all things are parts of God, or produced out of his essence; into which at the end of the world they shall return ².

Created
gods.1st class.how reconciled.

BUT, supposing this reasoning was admitted to be sound, the qualities and actions which their Pourân ascribe to these three gods do not at all correspond with the perfections which belong to the nature and character of the Divine Being. For there they are represented not only as full of imperfections, some of which have been mentioned already, but even as being guilty of the most exorbitant vices and enormous crimes, such as adultery, theft, and murder; of which instances will be produced in the short history we are going to give of each of them.

I. Of Brâmma.

ALTHOUGH the Vedam and Shâster declare expressly, His origin. that Brâmma (P) rose out of the ground at the command of the supreme God, yet the Brâhmanas, not fearing to contradict their sacred books, give him different origins. Some say, that when God was disposed to create the world, he caused to float on the water (which then only existed besides the Deity) the leaf of a tree, in the form of an infant with its big toe in its mouth; and that from his navel he caused to spring out the flower Tamara (Q), from which Brâmma had his existence ¹. This is probably the account of the Wishnou sect: but others, who seem to be the votaries of Jshurun, derive his origin from the Quivelinga ². All the remark we shall make on this occasion is, that the Brâhmanas

¹ PHILLIP'S Malabar, p. 141. & seq. ² ROGER MOORE'S des Bram. p. 141. ³ BALDATUS ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p. 812. See also the Genealogies before recited.

(P) The word Brâmma, or Brâhma, from whence the Brâhmanas derive their name, signifies penetrating into all things. Bernier Mém. M. g. Emp. (Q) Which is common in Indies, growing in their Tanks, or ponds.

Created
gods.

1st class.

His officers.

swerving so egregiously from the express letter of their sacred books, is a plain evidence that they do not believe them to be divine, as they pretend they are.

BRÂMMÂ having been thus produced, the Almighty gave to him the power of creating the universe, and all the beings existing in it: that is, he himself created the several worlds, families, and tribes of people; but left to others, his deputies, to create things of small moment, such as herbs, plants, and the like; which power, however, the Baniyans and Malabârs say was communicated to him by Wistnum^u. On the other hand, the Brâmmans ascribe to him the preservation of animals^x; which yet is Wistnum's province, according to the Shaster. This shews that the sects change and contradict their sacred books at pleasure, in opposition to one another. The Brâmmans attribute to Brâmma not only the creation of the world, but the conduct and government of every thing in it. They say, that God does not meddle with those matters; but like a king, who, to avoid the trouble of minding all affairs himself, commits many things to the care of his officers. They likewise affirm, that Brâmma fixes the fate or fortune, good or bad, of all people, and the time they have to live: that all events are by his direction; and, in short, that nothing happens in this world but by his special order^y. To ease Brâmma in this troublesome employment, they assign him a reasonable number of assistants: that is, a governor to each of the eight worlds; with a governor-general over them^z, who is as it were his prime minister.

Created
with five heads.

To these fictions about Brâmma they have added a multitude more. Among the rest, they pretend that originally he had five heads: and, whereas he is represented by his image with only four, they say, that he lost one of them in a quarrel with Isburen. This is related several ways, like every thing else: according to one account, Brâmma, swelled with pride of his own power, having spoken contemptibly of Isburen, this latter, in his anger, brought forth Beyrewa, who with his nail scratched or cut-off the middle head of Bramma. They add, that Bramma, having atoned for his fault by a copy of verses made in praise of Isburen, Isburen was so well pleased, that he promised the other should enjoy his four heads with satisfaction ever after; and clapped the fifth, which had been scratched-off, upon his own^a. Others give

^u ROGER, ubi supr. p. 141, ch. i. & 176, ch. iv. p. 176, & BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 812. ^x Ibid. ^y ROGER, ubi supr. p. 145, & seqq. BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 812. ^z Idem. ibid. ^a ROGER, ubi supr. p. 144.

^v Ibid.

a different relation. They say, that Ishora (or Ishuren) hap- Created pening one day to drop some words, which seemed to inti- gods.
mate that he was the greatest being in the world, Bramma ist class.
and Wistnum raised a contest about it : to decide which, Ishuren Vestnum told them, that whoever of them could take a full view of cuts off him from head to foot, should thenceforward be accounted one.
the greatest. Vistnum, after digging in the ground, in shape of a hog, to come at his feet, desisted, on meeting with a poisonous serpent, which startled him : but Bramma, soar-ing in the air, mounted on his Wahannam, or bird of carriage, was gotten very high ; when three flowers, which met him, told him, his labour was in vain, Ishuren's head reached to so vast a height. Bramma, discouraged at this news, changed his resolution ; and, to come-off the better, desired the flowers to tell Ishuren, that he was prevented from proceeding any farther by a sudden giddiness in his brain. This they promised to do, and performed : but Ishuren, being sensible of the deceit, cut-off one of Bramma's heads (R), and cursed the flowers for their pains ^a. The reader has here at once a sample both of the great contrariety and extravagance which reigns through the Indian legends.

If it be asked where Brâmma has his dwelling, they tell His resi- you, that he resides in Brâmma Lokon, or Logum (S) ; which dence ; is the highest of the eight worlds, and next to heaven, where God himself resides ^b. They likewise hold, that he is to die at a certain period of time (T), and be revived again. Nay, according to some legends, he dies and comes to life again every year ^c.

THE Hindûs give to Brâmma two wives. The first Sa- wives and rasvati (U) ; who, we are told, was his own daughter. children.
Whence comes the proverb, You must not do like Brâmma ^d (X).

^a BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 757.

^b ROGER, p. 148. 181.

^c BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 813 & 755.

^d Ibid. p. 813.

(R) On this occasion, we are told, that Ruddiren stabbed Wistnu, or Vistnum. Danish Conferences, p. 195.

(S) According to Baldæus, he resides in Sattialogum, or the highest place in heaven.

(T) According to the Shaster, he was taken out of the world, when his time for being on earth was expired.

(U) So named by Roger, in his Manners of the Bramins, p. 152. The Letters of the Malabârs call her Sarashubadi (Phill. Account Malabar, p. 94.), and Baldæus, Sarossodi, ubi supr. p. 813.

(X) They who made the proverb were better men than either Bramma, or those who forged his history.

Created
gods.
1st class.

The second, Quiatri. This last was barren (X) : but by the first we find mention of a son, named Dasba (Y), who was the father of Parvati, Isburen's wife ^d : and from the blood which flowed from his neck, when his fifth head was scratched or cut-off, sprung up his son Sagatrakavashen, who had no fewer than 500 heads and 1000 hands ^e. Brâmma had likewise the power given him by God of producing sons at pleasure ; of which number was Kassioṣa, father of the good and bad angels ; and perhaps ^f another, whom we find mentioned under the name of Wisbrukra ^g.

his temple.

ALTHOUGH Bramma was the first created, and consequently the eldest of the three gods, or celestial triumvirs ; yet, as we have observed before, the Wishtnouwists have degraded him in their genealogies, to give precedence to Wishtnou. In those places too, where that sect prevails, there are probably no temples erected to his honour ; which made the Dutch minister at Palliakatta, on the coast of Choromandel, who found none in that country, conclude there were none dedicated to him any-where else ^h. However, that does not prove to be the case : on the contrary, he has his pagods, as well as the other two, in other parts of India ; and even no farther off than Tranquebar, only a few days journey lower on the same coast ⁱ.

II. Of Vistnou, Vistnum, or Wishtnum.

Names of Vistnum:

THIS name seems to be the same with Besben, which Bernier gives to the second of the three gods of the first class, according to the Brâmmans of Hindûstân, and interprets penetrating into all things ^k. Besides this name, and that of Perumal, by which too he is most generally called, he hath many others, with several surnames ; among which last are those of Naraina and Aquanama, almost continually repeated by his votaries during the fast of Masauṣasa, celebrated in his honour ^l.

^d ROGER, ubi supr. p. 152.

^e BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p.

758.

^f ROGER, p. 168, 185.

^g BALDÆUS, p.

798.

^h ROGER, ubi supr. p. 243.

ⁱ Danish Lettr.

part i. p. 20.

^k BERN. Mem. Møg. Emp. part iii. p.

150.

^l BALDÆUS ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p.

320.

(X) Baldæus says both were barren.

(Y) Or Dasba; in Roger, Daetfja; which is pronounced alike.

THIS

THIS god also, according to the Malabârs, draws his origin from the Quivelinga^m; or, according to others, from Ruddiren, or *Isburen*ⁿ, who is the god most generally worshipped by those people. However, Wistnum is in great esteem among them^o, being accounted the second in rank, next to Isburen^p; and is held by some for the Supreme God, instead of Isburen^q. Thus his votaries ascribe to him infinite extension, affirming that he fills all space^r; and yet he is said to reside in the Milk Sea^s: of which more hereafter. They likewise give him for a bed a serpent called Annatan, with five heads; two whereof serve him for pillows, one for a bolster, and two for resting his hands upon. Upon this account they reverence serpents as celestial spirits, and never kill them, although often hurt by those reptiles^t.

THE votaries of Wistnum are not content to ascribe to him the office of preserver of the universe, which is given to him in the Vedam and Shaster, but they strip Bramma of his prerogatives to confer on his rival: for they will have it, that he not only distinguished mankind into three sorts, as to wealth, namely, rich, poor, and middling; but that he also created the several worlds, and even Bramma himself^u.

IN consequence of this, they vest him with the power of appointing guardian spirits in several parts of the universe; of whom Indre, or Devendiren (Bramma's prime minister) is the chief^w: and also of changing and removing them at pleasure. Thus he first made Malavali king of the infernal regions, and then door-keeper of paradise^x. The injuries, which the Wistnouwists have done to Bramma, do not end here: for, whereas the Vedam and Shaster declare, that the prime sacred books were delivered to him by God, they affirm, that Wistnum found the Vedam inclosed in a Chanki shell (Z). Hence it is, that the Vedam and Chanki, as well as the Sak-karam, or sword, are found in the hands of his image^y.

WISTNUM, it seems, had a great number of wives; whom he took for a time to indulge his amorous inclinations, and then dismissed. There were among them only two whom

Created
gods.
1st class.
origin and attributes:

and offices:

his wives:

^m BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 766. ⁿ Danish Lettr. part ii. p. 21. ^o Ibid. p. 22. ^p BALD. ubi supr. ^q Ibid. p. 754. and ROGER Mœurs des Brâm. p. 22. ^r BALD. p. 744. ^s Ibid. p. 755. ^t Ibid. p. 766. ^u Ibid. p. 774, & Dan. Lett. part ii. p. 21. ^w DE FARIA, Port. Asia, vol. ii. p. 384. ^x BALD. ubi supr. p. 777. ^y Ibid. p. 768.

(Z) By us called the trumpet-shell, of the periwinkle kind.

Created
gods.

1st class.

concubines and children ;

his ten in-carnations :

he never parted with, and kept for sake of getting children by them². The first was called Laetzemi, Lesbimi, or Maga Lesbimi. She was the goddess of fortune^a ; others say, she was the Indian Venus, and sprung from the froth of the sea^b ; or, according to another legend, she was found in a large rose floating in the sea of milk. It is added, that her office is to scratch her husband's head^c. She is always near him in the pagods, in a little chapel^d. The second wife is named Siri Pagoda, also Pumi Divi (A), that is, the goddess of heaven. In her lap Vishnum lays his feet ; which she is to rub with her hands^e. Besides all these wives, he had a thousand concubines in his seraglio. For all this, we do not find that he had more than one son, called Kashen, or Kushen ; whom Chidey bore to him. This infant, it seems, being brought to the Rishbi, or prophet, in whose house it was born, for his benediction, while he was intent at his prayers over it, with his eyes probably turned upwards, the mother came and stole her child away. The prophet, who was no conjurer, concluding that some wild beast had carried off the infant, made a fine baby out of a log of wood ; and, being endowed also with the gift of lying, would persuade Chidey, that it was her own. She could not but be surprised at this adventure. However, the child was brought up by her, and called Lawen ; so that, adds the Malabâr (who wrote this idle story, and believed it as true as gospel), we may say Wishnu had two sons^f. To these may be added a third, named Vareu ; who, we are told, proceeded from the blood, which came out of Wishnu's cut finger^g.

THIS is in brief the account given us by authors of Vishnou, or Wishtnum : but that which renders this god most famous in the Indies, is the history of his ten transformations. Under these, we are told, are hidden the chief mysteries of the Pagan religion, on both sides of the Ganges^h ; and the Brâmmans are so industrious to conceal these things from strangers, that Roger could never prevail on one of them, who explained other matters to him, to open himself freely on this chapter. Particularly he declares, that he could never thoroughly learn the reasons of the third, fourth, sixth, ninth,

² ROGER, ubi supr. p. 151, 155.

^a PHILL. Malâb. p. 95.

^b ROGER, p. 150.

^c BALD. ubi supr. p. 766.

^d ROGER,

p. 151.

^e BALD. p. 766.

^f PHILL. Malâb. p. 95, &

seq.

^g BALD. ubi supr. p. 758.

^h Ibid. p. 766.

(A) Elsewhere we find it written Puma deney ; perhaps it should be Dewey.

and tenth, transformations ¹. Nay, the Danish missionaries, Created after all their enquiry, tell us, that the Indians don't pretend gods. to any certainty themselves, in relation to the eighth ^k; altho' ^{1st class.} Roger seems to have been better acquainted with that than any of the rest: and Baldæus long ago has published a copious account of it, accompanied with cuts. This last author, resolved to come at the knowledge of these mysteries, which Roger could not attain to, at length procured it from a Brâmm-man who had turned Christian ^l; and it is to him chiefly that the public is beholden for the discovery.

THE Brâmmans pretend, and the Hindûs believe, that this ^{1st incar-} god Wishtnum has been already incarnated nine times, and ^{nation;} will appear in the flesh once more. His first transformation was into a shark, called Matja, in order to recover the Vedam from a certain demon (B), who had stolen it from the Devagol, or Dewetas, and hid himself at the bottom of the sea ^m.

THE second transformation of this Indian Proteus was into ^{2d incar-} a Kourma, or tortoise; in whose shape he got under the ^{nation.} world, when sinking with the weight of the mountain Merowa (or Maha-Meru), which was thrown into the sea, in order to find the amortam (or ambrosia). This amortam was to be an antidote against a certain virulent poison. But there are different accounts given of this matter by the different sects ⁿ.

THE third metamorphosis of this god was into a hog; to follow a very tall giant, who had rolled up the earth like a ^{3d incar-} sheet, and carried it on his shoulders to the infernal regions, ^{nation;} called Padalas (or Patalas): but, not being able to place it upright again, employed a little faint, who was no more than an inch high, to set it strait; which he not only did, but, the sea having laughed at him for his pigmy size, he drank it all up, and then pissed it out again; from whence comes its saltness. But the Baniyans and Jentews of Hindûstân give a different account of this transformation; which takes up 2700 years in the first age, or period of time ^o.

¹ ROGER, ubi supr. p. 158. ^k Danish Lett. part i. p. 24. ^l BALD. ubi supr. p. 767. ^m Ibid. p. 766.
 ROGER, ubi supr. p. 159. ⁿ BALD. ibid. p. 768, & seqq.
^o Ibid. p. 771, & seqq.

(B) Roger names these demons Raetsjasja; which we write Râsbaja; and Baldæus, Raxi-axa, according to the English orthography Rasbiasba. This last author adds, alias Adirem; and says he is called by the Baniyans Sere Miasben and Sankafoor.

Created
gods.
1st class.

4th incarnation :

VISTNUM's fourth transformation was into a monster, half man and half lion; which shape he assumed to punish a giant, who, through power given him by Bramma, having subdued the whole earth, would suffer no-body to be adored but himself. He was torn in pieces by the Man-Lion, and thus ended the first period of time¹.

5th incar-
nation :

His fifth transformation was into a mendicant Brâmmān, to cheat Mavali, an inferior god, out of the government of the world; in order to introduce a distinction of degrees and circumstances among mankind, who were then upon a level every-where. To effect this design, he begged of Mavali three feet of ground only to build a hut upon; which being granted him, he re-assumed his own form, and covered the whole earth with one of his feet, and paradise with the other: then, removing it, he placed it over the infernal regions, and thus got all three into his possession. However he made Mavali door-keeper of paradise².

6th incar-
nation :

VISTNUM's next incarnation was in the shape of Prassaram, or Parashâ Rama, a beautiful boy; who, in obedience to his father's commands, cuts-off his mother's head: but, at his request, his father restores her to life. He then devotes himself to Vishnum for twelve years, by sitting cross-legged on the ground without intermission. Mean time, a potent Râjah slays his father, although his brother-in-law; because he refused to give him Kamdoga, the white cow of plenty, which he had borrowed of Râjah Inder, king of the blessed souls, in order to entertain his relation handsomely. Prassaram, being informed of this by the cow, went and slew all those of the race of Râjahs, or Kutteri's, to be found on earth. However, the souls of his father and mother were sent to reanimate the bodies of Râjah Dasserat and his wife, by order of Vishnum, who had promised to exalt their posterity; as an earnest of which, they had a son named *Ram*³, who makes the subject of the seventh incarnation. The design of this sixth seems to be to promote the doctrine of the metempsychosis; and also to shew, conformable to the Shaster, how the race of Kutteri's were first destroyed, and then restored.

7th incarnation,
Ram :

RAM, or Rama, called also Siri Rama, and Dajerratha Rama (D), to distinguish him from Parashâ, or Paraja Rama, before-mentioned, married Sitra, daughter of a potent Râ-

¹ BAID. p. 772, & seqq.

² Ibid. p. 775, & seqq.

³ Ibid. p. 777, & seqq.

(D) Perhaps rather Dasserata, from Dasserat, his father.

jah; whom he won by shooting in opposition to the giant Rawan. This giant, besides ten heads and twenty arms, ^{Created} obtained from Isburen the privilege to live many thousand ^{gods.} years. Some time after, Ram's brother having cut-off the ears and nose of Rawan's sister, by his order, and slain several armies sent to revenge the injury; Rawan, in the shape of a mendicant Brâmman, carried-off Sitha to the isle of Seylan. Ram pursues, and by the assistance of Hanuman, or Anamonta, and other apes (E), passed the sea (at Ramanaksoil) into Seylan, over a bridge of swimming stones; and after a great many strange exploits, in which invention is stretched to the utmost, kills Rawan, and recovers Sitha. Eleven years after his return, he ascended to heaven, and thus ended the second period of time¹. This is the legend, according to the followers of Wisnum; but the sect of Isburen relate matters differently: and, to exalt their god, add that Ram built a famous temple at Ramanaksoil, in honour of Isburen. We are told also, that in all the pagods dedicated to Isburen, or Fswara, that Ram is represented with ten heads and twenty arms, in memory of the destruction of *Rawan*².

THE eighth appearance of Visnum was in the person of Kisna (F), and is reckoned the most considerable of all the rest (G): nor can this be denied, if what is most monstrous and incredible, as well as most ridiculous and absurd, makes a thing considerable. The subject of the legend, which our author has given in great detail, is this: Râjah Kans, king of Mottera (or Matura), to the north of Agra, in Hindûstân, finding by palmestry, that his sister Deuki (or Dukki), married to a Brâmman of the cow-herds, would bear a son who should deprive him both of his kingdom and life, confined her, and ordered her children, as soon as born, to be destroyed. Kisna, the youngest, was conveyed away by his own power and direction; and, though yet a sucking infant, slew several giants, who were sent to kill him, and flew with him into air. During his childhood, he performed several

¹ BALDÆUS, ubi suprà. p. 781.
166.

² ROGER, ubi suprà. p.

(E) According to Roger's account, they were Deuetas, or good angels, who assumed the form of apes on this occasion, as Rawan and his associates were Rashijas, or demons. Both sorts sprung from Kassapa, a Brâmman.

(F) Or Kisna and Kissar. Others write Krisna and Krisim.

(G) For they say, in others, he appeared with only part of his divinity; but in this he brought with him the whole godhead.

Created
gods.
1st class.

reckoned most eminent :

miracles ; as separating rice, milk, and herbs, after they had been mixed ; and stretching his hand from the cow-field to the house, to reach a milk-vessel : yet he made no scruple to tell lies ; for after stealing butter from his mother, he denied it stiffly. When he grew up, he performed many great exploits against giants and serpents ; yet left not off his childish tricks or lying. One time he stole the womens cloaths while they were bathing, that he might see them come naked out of the water : another time meeting some milk-maids, he broke their pails ; and then denied it, when taxed by his mother. Rajah Kans, alarmed at these miracles, sent several giants and armies against him ; but he killed them all, and at length the Rajah himself. After this, Kisna did many other famous actions ; restored the lame to their limbs, the dead to life, metamorphosed cottages into palaces, pulled down tyrants, and restored injured kings ; punished oppressors, and succoured the distressed. Mean time, the cow-herds, who had made him their king, and were increased to five hundred and sixty millions, grew daily more wicked as they became more numerous ; wherefore Kisna set them at variance, so that they destroyed one another. After this, having conveyed his 16,000 wives, with a few others who remained, into heaven, he ascended thither himself. The Hindûs say, that if the earth was of paper, it would not contain an account of all the miracles wrought by Kisna, during the space of one hundred years, in the third period of time^x.

9th incar-
nation :

VISTNUM's ninth incarnation was in the form of Boudha, or Bodha, by some called Bhavam, who, according to the Baniyans, has neither father nor mother, and is invisible : but that, whenever he does appear, it is with four arms (H). He spends his whole time in praying with a dejected countenance to the great god, called Mahadew by the Baniyans ; and after having continued 34,030 years, without performing any miracles, his time on earth will be expired with the fourth period of the world, which is the present and last^y. This is all we learn from Baldæus : to which it may be proper to add, that this Boudha is the same with the god Fo^z, who is worshipped by more than one half of Asia ; and is believed to reside at Lassa, in the great Tibet, in a human form. It is probable, that these ten incarnations had their rise from the ex-

^x BALDÆUS, ubi sup. p. 789, & seqq.

^y Ibid. p. 809.

^z Lettr. Edif.

(H) Kircher gives Bodhe four heads also ; but this, our author says, is an error.

ample of Fo, who often disappears; and that the drift of the forgers of this ninth inparticular, was to derive the religion of Tibet from their own.

Created gods.

1st class.

THE tenth and last transformation of Vishnum into a white winged-horse, called Kallenkîn, is yet to come; and is to put an end to the present world. The Banîyâns say, that this Indian Pegasus stands in heaven upon three feet only, holding up his right fore-leg, without intermission. They say also that, at the beginning of this metamorphosis, they shall live piously and happily; but that, by degrees, they shall degenerate into all manner of impiety and wickedness, for the space of 40,570 years. At the expiration whereof, the winged-horse shall strike or stamp on the earth with his uplifted foot, with such prodigious force, that the serpent Signaga, being no longer able to support the world, will creep from under it; when the tortoise, finding the whole burden laid upon his back, will run into the sea and drown the earth (I): which is to put an end to this last period or age of time; and then the first is to begin again^a.

10th incarnation:

III. Ishuren, or Ruddiren.

THIS god, we are told, has no fewer names than 1008^b; but of these three or four are chiefly in use. The name which he goes by in the Vedam and Shaster, is Ruddiren, or, as some pronounce, Rutren; yet the name by which he is commonly known in the Indies, at least the southern provinces, is Ishuren, or Iffuren, as it is pronounced in some parts of East Malabâr, or Ispuren, in other parts of it; Ispara in West Malabâr, and Eswâra, or Esvâra, in Karnâta and Cheromandel, if the difference does not proceed from some fault in our author's spelling. This deity is, by the Banîyâns and Gentews of Hindûstân, qualified with the title of Mahadew, or the Great God. The Malabars likewise give him the same name, or title^c; that is they who are of the sect, which account him the chief of the three gods of the first class: and we are told, that he is the principal of all the gods of the Malabarians^d: yet in Karnâta he is only accounted the fove-

Names numerous.

^a BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 810.

^b PHILLIPS's Account of Malâb. p. 42.

^c BERNIER's Mem. Mog. Emp. part iii.

p. 150. BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 766.

^d Dan. Lettr. part i.

p. 21.

(I) This is contrary to the Shaster; which says the earth shall be destroyed by fire.

Created
gods.
1st class.

reign god by some ^e; for there Wistnum seems to be most in vogue. He has likewise another name adapted to this superiority which is ascribed to him by his votaries, and that is Chiven, or Chivens (K), signifying the True God, or Supreme Being; of whom the Vedam and Shaster treat ^f. This name he obtained for guarding the Chive Linga, whereof an account will be given presently.

attributes
and office:

THE votaries of this god ascribe to him immortality; which they say he obtained by the ashes which remained within the shell, after the Chive Linga was burned ^g: and though, agreeable to the Vedam and Shaster, they say his office is to destroy ^h, or put a period to all things at last; yet they give him also the power of creating, at least, two men, named Birapatrem and Quatraguale ⁱ. They assign him for his Wahanam, or beast of carriage, a bull-calf called Irisbipatan, instead of a horse; but seem to differ as to the place of his residence. Those of Karnâta say, that he resides with his wife Parvati, in Kaylasom, which is one of the three places, or heavens, where God converses ^k. According to the Malabârs, he dwells in Kala-ja, a silver mount, and kind of paradise, to the south of the famous mountain Maha Meru ^l: again, other Malabârs will have it, that his abode is in Chiwalogum ^m; which signifies the world of Chiwens.

his person,

To come to the history of Ishuren. They say, with respect to his person, that he is of so vast a bigness, as to encompass all the seven heavens above, and the seven worlds (L) beneath ⁿ: but one day, boasting before some other spirits of his immense size, Bramma and Vishnum took it ill, whereupon a contest arose; the consequence of which was, that Bramma lost one of his heads, as hath been already related in our account of him. Though Vishnum be black, Ishuren is bright, and white as milk, with three eyes, one of them in his forehead; which last they say is so full of fire, that it consumes whatever it looks upon. He has no fewer than sixteen arms, and holds and dress: something in each hand. His apparel is a tiger's skin; his

^e ROGER, ubi supr. p. 22.

^f PHIL. Malâb. p.

^g BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 816.

^h BERNIER, ubi supr. p.

150. ⁱ BALD. ubi supr. p. 756, 763.

^k ROGER, p.

156, 183.

^l BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 757.

^m PHIL.

Malab. p. 25.

ⁿ Danish Lettr. part i. p. 21.

(K) De Faria writes Jiwens, Port. Asia, vol. ii. p. 379; and Baldæus, Quivon, p. 755.

(L) They say, that the serpent Batruga, which embraces the seven worlds and seven seas, was not long enough to serve him for a girdle. Baldæus, p. 755.

cloak the hide of an elephant surrounded with serpents. He wears about his neck a collar of fur, with a bell fastened to it; likewise three chains. One is intermixed with roses, and other sweet flowers. The second is made of the heads of Bramma: for they say Bramma dies and revives every year; and that Isburen, gathering his heads as often as he dies, made this chain of them. The third is made of the bones of Chatti, one of his wives, who dying likewise annually, he every time that happens takes one of her bones, and adds it to the restⁿ. He carries also the same beads as the Brâmmans do; his whole body being besmeared with ashes (of cow-dung) (M), and thus rides in triumph through Kalaja upon his ox Irisbipatan, to whom they offer certain sacrifices.

THE Brâmmans say, that Isburen, to expiate the crime of cutting-off Brâmma's fifth head, turned mendicant for twelve years; begging for alms, with the skull in his hand: for tho' he received a sufficient quantity from time to time, yet it was instantly consumed by the fiery rays which darted from his third eye. One day, as he was collecting alms among the Mumis, or Risbi, who inhabited the woods about Kalaja, (the place of his residence, where they spent their time in sacrificing), their wives came running with ladles full of blood to fill the skull; but they were so surprised at his flaming eye, that they not only dropp'd their ladles but their cloaths. The Mumis, seeing their wives naked, fell furiously on Isburen; one with an axe, another with a serpent, a third set a tiger upon him, and a fourth a wild elephant: but he slew all those animals, and carried off their skins as trophies. At length Vistnum, to deliver Isburen, appeared to the Mumis in the form of a beautiful virgin; which so surprised them, that they fell into a trance; and thus the god escaped from the men. Towards the end of the twelfth year, Isburen, being tired of his mendicant life, had recourse to Vistnum; who, commiserating his condition, put out the fiery eye, which consumed the alms as fast as he received them; and then wounding himself in the finger, filled the skull with the blood, which put an end to Isburen's pilgrimage^o; but gave birth to the order of the Joghîs (N), who, in memory thereof, lead a mendicant life to this day.

ⁿ BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 755.

^o Ibid. p. 757, & seqq.

(M) This is the form in which he is represented in the pagods. His attendants are Pudas, Pisbaros, and Pes. Baldæus, ubi supr. p. 756.

(N) Rather perhaps the Goghîs, who are Brâmmans; the Joghîs of another tribe.

Created
gods.
1st class.
outrages committed by him,

AMONG other extravagancies related of this god, we are told that, during his pilgrimage, Jeksha Prajava (O), king of the Peringales, and father of his wife Paramesseri, or Parvati, having a desire to see his daughters in their full glory, invited Bramma and Vishnum, who were also his sons-in-law, to a magnificent feast; but neglected to do the same by Isburen (P): yet, on considering the matter, invited him at last. This, however, the mendicant god took so heinously, that he resolved to spoil the feast. His anger was farther provoked by the treatment his wife received: for having obtained leave from him to go to the banquet, he ordered her to put on her best apparel; and, to set her off to the most advantage, lent her his serpents, his umbrella of peacocks tails, his chain of bones, his tiger's skin, and his elephant's hide. Thus equipped, she mounted upon an ox; and with a large attendance of drummers, Pudas and Pishares, came to her father's palace. Her sisters and the other guests, who met her at the gates, seeing her in such a droll equipage, instead of bidding her welcome, burst-out into laughter; which so vexed Paramesseri, that, without alighting, she returned to Kalaja, loudly complaining of the affront which had been put upon her.

at Praja-
va's feast.

ISHUREN, thinking himself concerned in the ill-treatment given his wife, sent his sons Quenavadi and Superbennia to spoil their mirth: but Vishnum, knowing that the first was fond of cakes, and the latter of hearing stories, took care to throw those amusements in their way, so that they forgot their errand. Isburen hereupon sent his daughter Patragali; who being likewise detained by some good-cheer she met with in the hall (for she loved her belly dearly), he resolved to go himself. As soon as Vishnum and Bramma got notice of this, they made an apology to their father-in-law, as not being, they said, able to cope with Isburen; and withdrew, leaving only the Sun and Moon behind. The angry god, entering the palace presently after, seized Prajava by the hair. At the same instant there stepped forth (the offspring of his anger) a warrior armed cap-a-pie, called Virapatren, who cut-off the king's head, with the hands of the god of fire, and beat-out

(O) Roger calls him Dasha, as the reader will find in the history of Brâmma.

(P) According to Roger, p. 153, the reason he gave for not inviting Esavara, or Isburen, was that as he lived by begging his bread, and had not cloaths to cover him, he was not worthy to be invited; on which his daughter Parvati replied, nor I neither; and so leaped into the fire prepared for sacrifice, and was consumed.

the teeth of the Sun ^p. This is the Malabâr legend : but Created that of Karnâta, which differs in several particulars, says, gods. the Moon also had a hearty banging ; whence her black spots : 1st class. and that the king got a goat's head instead of his own ^a.

As Isburen, or Ruddiren, is the true, and, very likely, the The In- original Priapus of antiquity, so many things are related dian Pri- of him suitable to that character : among the rest, he once apus : forced a young she-slave, who refused to comply with his lustful desires ¹. He is often spoken of as shedding his semen on the ground ; which always gave birth to something. As this happened one time just after enjoying his wife Paramesferi, she covered it with some earth ; from whence sprung-up a palm-tree, whose liquor so well pleased Isburen, that he often made use of it. His wife, observing that he always returned intoxicated from the wood, followed him one day ; and, finding the juice agreeable, tasted so long of it, that she became fuddled herself : so frail, or rather so addicted to vice, are the Indian gods and goddesses. It is perhaps owing to this liquor, that Isburen is, as we are told, everlastingly dancing ¹.

NOR is Isburen without his incarnations, or appearances in human form, any more than Vishnum : for they say, that he appeared no fewer than sixty-four times, and acted so many comedies before a great many people in the city of Madurey, capital of the kingdom of Madurey, under the name of Tjahokkenaden. Our readers may judge of the rest by an account of one ; the substance of which is, that he appeared to a widow in the above-mentioned city, and offered to be her servant, on condition that he should never want for victuals. His mistress readily agreed to the bargain, expecting a good deal of work at his hands : but she quickly found herself deceived in him ; for he not only devoured as much as would satisfy several men, but in short would never give over eating ; so that neither persuasions nor menaces could prevail on him to do any other business. At length, the widow complained to the king of this insatiable glutton : but, although his majesty gave the lubber such a swinging-blow, that it was felt all over the universe. Yet this correction could not make Isburen perform his bargain : for, rather than work, he thought fit to quit the widow's service, and disappear immediately ¹. Are not such other ex-trava-gancies :

^p BALDÆUS, ubi sup. p. 765.

^a ROGER, ubi sup. p.

155.

¹ Danish Confer. p. 105.

¹ BALDÆUS, ubi

supr. p. 759.

¹ Danish Confer. p. 106.

¹ PHILLIPS'S

Account Malab. p. 45. Danish Confer. p. 105, 171.

Created gods. comedies, or rather farces, as these, very becoming the character of a God ?

1st class. As the traditions of the different sects and countries differ in other things, so they do with regard to the wives and his wives: children of Isburen. In Karnâta they seem to allow him but one wife, named Parvati : in each of the Malabârs they give him two : but their names in one country are so different from those used in the other, that we cannot tell whether they be the same or not. In East Malabâr they are called Ispari and Kenkabewanani *; in West Malabâr, Grienga and Chatti, or Paramesseri †. As each has many names, the disagreement may possibly arise from thence, different names being used in different places. Parvati was the daughter of Dasba, son of Brâmma by Parasvati. She taking it ill that her father had not invited Isburen, as well as Brâmma and Vishnum, to the jagam, or feast, before-mentioned ; and taking still worse his reason for the slight, which was that Isburen begged his bread, and had not cloaths to his back, for mere vexation cast herself into the fire prepared for the sacrifice, and was consumed to ashes. Isburen was so enraged at this affair, that he sweated for anger ; and from his sweat sprung Virepadra, who, by his command, committed the outrages already related. As for Parvati (who by similitude of facts appears to be the same with Paramesseri), her soul passing into another body, became the daughter of the mountain Kimmawontam, who likewise bestowed her on Esvara, or Isburen, for a wife a second time. This god became so fond of her, that he gave her half of his body, and thus became an hermaphrodite ; on which occasion the Brâmmans call him Ardhanari, that is half-man and half-woman ‡, or a man-wife §. This Parvati, otherwise called Chatti and Paramesseri (according to those of West Malabâr), dies and revives once a year, as hath been already mentioned. His second wife is named Grienga, or the goddess of the seas ; whom he always carries in his hairlocks ¶.

he becomes an hermaphrodite :

his children :

WE find a local difference likewise as to the number and names of Isburen's children. Some give him two sons, others three, and some four : but it must be observed, that they distinguish two sorts of children belonging to this god ; namely, those gotten by copulation, and those who were produced by his will ; of which kind there were two.

* PHILLIPS, ubi supr. p. 96.

p. 757.

p. 756.

‡ ROGER, ubi supr. p. 152, 154.

§ Ibid. p. 755.

† BALDÆUS, ubi supr.

‡ BALD.

ACCORDING to the tradition of Karnâta, he had two sons Created by his wife Parvati; the first Wikneswara, or, as the eastern gods. Malabârs call him, Wikkeneshburen; he is likewise named Pul- 1st class. leiar. Some say he was only the offspring of his father's will^c.

THE second is named Komara-Swami, or Shawmi^d; and likewise Subbিরamanien. As Churapadbama, who ruled over fourteen worlds, and had a thousand millions of soldiers, offered many injuries to the subordinate gods, this Swami was created on purpose to chastise him, which he did, riding on a peacock, by destroying him and all his race; and for that service obtained the highest degree of happiness^e.

HIS sons of volition, were Vierepaddra, who sprung from several his anger and sweat, as before-mentioned; and Beyrewa, sons: the offspring likewise of passion; being he who scratched-off the fifth head of Brânma, and is sovereign of the devils, or judge of hell^f.

BESIDES the two first, the Malabârs also give Ishuren two children. One called Waiddianada Shwami, to whom they pray for children: the other Arrigari buddiren; who, we are told, rose out of his semen, which he shed on the appearance of Wishtnu, in the form of a beautiful woman, who came to commit uncleanness with him. To this Arrigari they always make offerings when they begin any enterprize^g.

ACCORDING to the western Malabârs, Ishuren had five sons one son an and one daughter. Three of the sons were by his wife Pa- elephant: ramesseri, or Parvati. The first, named Quenavadi, had the head of an elephant: for one day, as they were walking by a wood, Paramesseri saw two elephants copulate; which so raised her appetite, that she persuaded Ishuren to transform them both into elephants, and play the same pranks; the effect of which frolick was this young monster, to whom she durst not give suck, for fear of having her breast torn in pieces by him. He is represented with long hair, like his father's, tied about with a serpent, an half-moon on his forehead, and red pimples all over his elephant's face. He has likewise four hands, with a large belly girt with a red piece of linen. His body shines like gold, and his legs are adorned with gold rings and bells. They say, that his father caused him to be castrated; because, being once in his mother's arms, he touched her privy parts with his trunk. Others say, he

^c ROGER, ubi supr. p. 175. PHILLIPS, ubi supr. p. 34, 96.

^d ROGER, ibid.

^e PHILLIPS, ubi supr. p. 101, 141.

^f ROGER, p. 144, 175.

^g PHILLIPS, ubi supr. p. 90, 96.

Danish Confer. p. 105.

Created
gods.

1st class.

long granting petitions :

a mere glutton :

second son
an ape :

actually enjoyed her; and that therefore the elephants have no testicles.

THE Hindû mechanicks and others offer the first fruits of their labour to this Quenavadi. After they have devoted themselves to his worship for twelve years, he moves one of his ears to let them know, that they must serve him twelve years more; at the end of which he shakes the other ear, to let them know that he expects still more at their hands: if they hold on twelve years longer, he then opens his eyes, and grants their requests. This god is very voracious: for they say he could devour the world; nor is to be satisfied, but in the Sugar Sea, where he has his residence, and is attended by beautiful women, who are continually employed to lade sugar, mixed with honey, into his mouth; while the musicians divert him with their instruments^b. One night, returning late from a banquet, with his umbrella in one hand, in the other a poem, and under his arm some cakes, of which he was very fond, he ran against a post, although it was moon-light, and fell down, all his things flying about. As the cakes were his greatest concern, he laid hold of them while he lay sprawling, and took a good bite or two, before he offered either to rise, or look for his book or umbrella. The moon, who beheld this pleasant spectacle, could not forbear laughing; which Quenavadi perceiving, he uttered this curse, Whoever, O Moon, shall see thee for the future on this day, shall be damnified in his privities. Hence it is, that the Hindûs will not stir abroad on the fourth day after the new moon in August, or look into the water for fear of seeing it; although they observe the Christians, Jews, and Mohammedans, to view that planet at the same time, without receiving any injury.

ISHUREN and Paramesseri were both celebrated dancers. She for her part was so nimble, that one time dropping an ear-jewel while she was in the height of her dance, she took it up with two of her toes, and put it in again, to the incredible surprize of the spectators (Q). Another time, while she and her spouse were dancing, before a great assembly of celestial spirits, invited for that purpose, she happened to spy two apes sporting in the adjacent wood; and, taking a fancy

^b BALEÆUS, p. 758, & seq.

(Q) Hence Baldæus supposes the custom arose among the ladies of the Nayros (or Nabars), who when dancing at a certain feast in honour of one of their idols, on a sudden let slip all their clothes, and remain naked.

to do the like, prevailed on Isburen to transform them into apes, which the uxorious god did; and the fruit of this frolic was an ape: but when the mad fit was over, she, being ashamed of her burden, got the Wind to convey it into the womb of Anhema, one of the ladies attending on the other spirits. Thus the ape got a new father and mother, who brought him forth. He was as white as Isburen; and, being endowed with many peculiar virtues, performed abundance of notable exploits; some already mentioned in the history of *Siri Rama*ⁱ, under the name of Hanuman (or Anemonta). This name was given him by Isburen; because he received no harm from a great knock in the pate, which he received from his father's iron rod, for endeavouring to leap up and snap at the Sun when he was hungry. Another time, quarrelling with Akropadia, a white elephant, on which Devandran, king of the celestial spirits, was mounted, he happened to be killed. At this, his presumptive father the Wind was so afflicted, that he hid his face under-ground, till Isburen, at the request of the inhabitants of the earth, ready to perish for want of air, restored Hanuman to life, and recalled the Wind to his proper office.

THE third son of Isburen was called Superbennia, who had six faces and twelve hands; which happened on the following occasion. As Paramesseri was washing herself one day in a cistern, six weavers chanced to pass by, who, looking upon her with very amorous desires, she became inflamed no less than they, and the same instant conceived. But, fearing her husband's anger, she spat out the embryo upon the ground; which immediately assuming the form of twelve arms and six faces, very much resembling the six weavers, they carried him with them, and gave him an accomplished education. One time Isburen, entering into an argument with him, was so taken with his wit, that he received him for his son, assigned him a residence at Kala ja, and presented him with a peacock to ride on^k.

FROM this circumstance he appears to be the same with Subbiramian of the eastern Malabârs, before-mentioned. Once upon a time Isburen, desirous to try the agility of this son and Quenavadi, offered a very fine fig, as a reward to him who should ride round Kala ja with most expedition. The two brothers started together: but as Quenavadi, who was very heavy, and rode only upon a mouse, knew that he would lose the race; he took the opportunity, when Superbennia was gotten a good way before him on his peacock, to turn short ⁱ See before, p. 620, & seq.^k BALDÆUS, p. 761:

Created
gods.
1st class.

and seize the fig. Superbennia having won the prize, and not finding it as he expected, fell with such fury upon Quenavadi, that he beat out one of his elephant's teeth. However, Isburen bestowing on him another fig, the difference was soon composed : but not knowing what to do with the tooth, he gave it to Vistnum, desiring him to restore it to the proprietor. The method Vistnum took to do this, was to put it in a fig, which he presented to his nephew ; who, going to eat it, found his tooth. Quenavadi, instead of putting the tooth into his head again, converted it into a nice pen, which he kept to write his poetry with ¹.

A fourth monster.

BESIDES these three sons, the western Malabârs give Isburen two more. One stiled Ega Sourubum, or the true god, is represented with an elephant's head and eleven hands. He is to be worshipped only by the Brâmmans, although others also sacrifice to him. The other son is named Sewshi. This son had his origin from the impurities which came from the body of Paramesseri one day when she was washing herself in a pond. Isburen, perceiving a man at a distance, and imagining him to be her gallant, hastened thither, and cut-off his head ; which, falling at the foot of mount Kala ja, became a coco-tree : and hence the Indians say that the figure of a human face was impressed on the coco-nut. As Paramesseri grieved exceedingly at her son's death, Isburen made an apology for his mistake ; and, to comfort her, cut-off the head of a white elephant, and, fixing it on Sewshi's shoulders, restored him to life again ^m.

Isburen's
daughter,

So much for Isburen's sons : but his daughter is something still more extraordinary : her production was on the following occasion. The giant Darida having, beside a present of a book and some bracelets, obtained from Brâmma the gift of being invulnerable, and appearing as if he had a great many heads, became so vain-glorious that he challenged Isburen. The god, knowing his strength, sent against him a female named Sorga, with six other women ; who cut-off all his false or imaginary heads, but could do him no farther injury. On this, Isburen consulted Vistnum ; who, while they were talking, sent forth from his body a certain matter, which, entering that of Isburen, passed out again through the eye in his forehead, and falling on the ground, in an instant became a female ; whom Isburen acknowledged for his daughter, and distinguished by the name of Patragali, or Patrakoli Pagoda.

¹ BALDÆUS, 761.

^m Ibid. 761.

THIS daughter had eight faces and sixteen hands, as black as a coal, with great round eyes, and teeth like tusks of a boar. Instead of pendants, her image has two elephants in its ears, and her body is covered with serpents, instead of a garment. Her hair-locks are the tails of peacocks; and in each hand she carries some instrument; such as a sword, a trident, a china basin, a rope, an ape, and the like. This monster went immediately to revenge her father's quarrel, and fought the giant for seven days; but found, after cutting-off seven of his false heads, that he was not vulnerable, so long as he was possessed of the book and bracelets given to him by Brâmma. She therefore applies to Sorga; who, going to Darida's wife in his absence, asked in his name for the said things; which were forthwith delivered to her. By this means Darida, being deprived of his strength, in the next conflict had his real head cut-off by his female antagonist.

PATRAGALI, elated with this victory, hastened to Ibburen; who, being undressed, leaped into a cistern to avoid being seen by her; and from thence gave her some flesh and some blood. But finding her not satisfied, he bad her hold out her basin; and, cutting-off one of his fingers, filled it with his own blood. She, far from being yet contented, threw one of her gold chains in his face; which raising many pustules in the skin, he cried out, with great surprize, Basuri! that is, O you revengeful woman! and, desiring her to desist, created two young men, named Birapatrem and Quetraquele, whom he bestowed on her; which made her easy. From this time, Basuri signified the small pox among the Malabars; who say it is the sword of Patragali, and for that reason endeavour to mitigate her wrath by sacrifices. They affirm, that her chief residence is in the pagoda of Kranganor, called the temple of pilgrims, from the vast number of zealots who flock thither. In this temple, near her statue, stands a huge man in marble; whom every day the Brâmmans beat on the head with hammers, to keep him from growing.

ISHUREN, to get rid effectually of Patragali, besides her gallants, presented her likewise with a ship of sandal wood, ordering her to take a voyage into the world, and reside there incognito; yet to require vows and sacrifices from the inhabitants. But while he was found asleep one morning, little dreaming of a visit from his termagant daughter, he was suddenly awaked by her overturning his bedstead: for, being attacked, as soon as she had put to sea, by some fishermen and ape-hunters, she was forced to return to Kala ja to crave her father's assistance; who having endowed her with new vigour, she

Created
gods.

1st class.

with boar tusks.abuses her father:how appeased by him:passes to Malabâr:

Created
gods.

1st class.

her adventures
there.

Ishuren
worshipped,

she defeated the ape-hunters, and landed safely at Koulang, a city of Malabâr; where the Queen entertained her for twelve years as her own daughter. After this term she was married to the son of the lord of Kouleta (R); and there lived twelve years more without ever cohabiting with her husband, as boasting herself to be the daughter of Ishuren. Afterwards her father and mother-in-law having been robbed at sea of all their riches by the ape-hunters, she gave her gold foot-rings to her husband to dispose of. He, on the road, met with a goldsmith; who, pretending to buy them, brought him to Pandi, and there accused him of stealing such rings from the queen of that place, which he himself had stolen not long before. On this accusation, the stranger was imprisoned, and afterwards impaled on a palm-tree. Patragali, after waiting six days without hearing of her husband, set-out in quest of him, asking news of him from every thing she met with; but experienced very indifferent usage from some of them. A mango-tree was so churlish as not to afford her an answer; a cow gave her a hearty kick by way of reply; a Nairo let her fall into a pit, which he had covered over with twigs to deceive her; and a Nairo's daughter only flouted and laughed when she asked her the question. However, she gave those rude creatures her curse; and, to make her some amends, was treated with great respect by two birds, a Jako-tree, a Polca, and a Parrea: so that, although they were not able to give her any intelligence, yet she gave them her blessing. At length she came to the fatal palm-tree; which being too high for her reach, she obtained by her prayers that it broke, and so delivered her husband: but, although she had not power of herself to make the tree bend down to her, yet she had power, it seems, to bring the dead man to life againⁿ.

THUS much for the wives and children of Ishuren, or Rud-diren. Let us next see in what manner he is worshiped by the Hindûs. He is represented in the pagods in two different manners; one is in the form of a man, with three eyes, and 16 hands, dressed in the way already described: the other manner of representing him is in the shape of the virile member, or rather the privy parts of both sexes in conjunction, which they call Linga, or Lingam. In the countries of east and west Malabâr he is worshipped in both these forms (S);

ⁿ BALDÆUS, ubi sup. p. 762, & seqq.

(R) A country seven leagues to the north of Kalekut.

(S) He is worshiped also under the form of an ox, and name of Nandi. Compare Phil. Malab. p. 34. and Roger, p. 175, 242.

but in some parts of Karnâta he is represented in temples solely Created in the form of the Lingam. This at least is the case in the gods. country about Paliakatta, on the coast of Chorcmandel, according to the account of Abr. Roger; who at the same time 1st class. observes, that in processions he is carried in his proper figure; as the human form is more acceptable to the people than the Lingam °.

THEY seem to be hard put to it to find a reason for the in form of Lingam worship: they say that a Muniswara (T), going to a Priapus. visit Isburen one day, when he was in private with his wife Parvati, was kept waiting so long by the porter, that he grew angry, and dropped some offensive words; which Isburen over-hearing, asked the Muniswara why he spoke so? the saint begged pardon, saying, he was in a fret; and made a request, that they who worshipped the figure of the Lingam might receive more benefit than those who worshipped his image made with hands and feet: which request Isburen granted^p. However that be, Isburen is no less famous on account of this obscene way of representing him, than Vishnum for his ten transformations. There are several sects particularly devoted to the worship of the Lingam, which figure they wear in their hair, and about their necks (U), wrapped up in linen^q: nay, about Goa, and in Kanara, the infatuation for the Lingam runs so high, that brides are carried to this Priapus to be deflowered, before they can be enjoyed by their husbands; who thank the bawdy God for saving them so much trouble^r.

THE Brâmmans observing that all animals were produced The Lin- by copulation, made a deity of the instruments of generation; gam dei- and account for its origin in this manner. They say, that 14 fied. Worlds being produced from an egg, Isburetta, or the divinity, taking his place in the highest heaven, there arose on the earth the mountain Kalaja: that on the top of it stood a triangular substance; and this produced a round substance, called Chive Linga (X); which they say is Isburetta, or the

° ROGER Mœurs des Bram. p. 155, 157. p Ibid. q Ibid. p. 22, 23, and 157. Phillips Malab. p. 20, 34, 41. r BALDÆUS, ubi sup. p. 754.

(T) The Munis are great saints; and Muniswara seems to be compounded of Munis and Esvara, or Isburen, to denote their particular attachment to him. No doubt there are Munis also devoted to Vishnum.

(U) The Joghis do this, and offer it their best victuals.

(X) This he explains the members of both sexes; yet after says, it signifies the Lingam, or member of Quirven (rather Chiven, or Chiven). But this seeming contradiction may be reconciled, on considering that Chivens, or Isburen, is supposed to be of both sexes.

divinity

Gods of the 2d and 3d class. This circular figure was inclosed in three distinct rinds, or shells, which were transmuted into three Gods, Bramma, Vishnum, and Chiven (or Isburen). Chiwa Linga, thus stripped of its shell, was burnt to ashes, and fixed in the triangle; and being thus become without sense or motion, it was requisite that it should be guarded by somebody. This Bramma and Vishnum refusing to do, Chiven undertook the task, constantly attending on it with prayers and sacrifices of flowers. As by this means he deserved to be ranked before his brothers, he obtained the title of The Great God [Maha Dew] as their poets call him^s.

Isburen's described.

THIS doubtless is the legend, or tradition, of the Lingam sects (for all have an equal right of forging). The name of the divinity Isburetta is from Isburen: Kalajah is his place of residence; and the name of Chive Linga, which is the thing in his keeping, shews it belongs to, or is a part of, himself. In effect, they make him the offspring of his own privities; and worship them as a God, the producer of all animal created beings. It is no wonder therefore that they so much extol and magnify the penis of Isburen: for although they ascribe to him such a prodigious height, as has been mentioned, yet they say it reached to his forehead; and that being so large, he could not enjoy his wife Chatti, he was forced to cut it in 18 Pieces: after which he lay with her, and from this conjunction proceeded all living creatures, both rational and irrational. Hence it is, that in Kanara, between Kananor and Mangalor, there is a certain religious order, living constantly in the pagods, who appear in the streets stark-naked; and on their ringing a bell, the women, of all conditions, even to the queens, come running out to touch (our author might have said also, to kiss) their privy members^t.

S E C T. III.

Gods of the Second and Third Class.

Inferior gods.

AS the sons and daughters of the gods of the first class make those of the second, and we have already given the reader a sufficient account of them; there remains little more to be said upon the subject, excepting what relates to a few Dewetas, or divinities of the third class: who, on account of the services done to the gods of the first class, have obtained the privilege of being ranked among those of the second, and found a place in the temples of their patrons.

AMONG the principal lesser gods, whose statues are seen within the inclosure of the great temples, which the Wist-

^s BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 754.

^t Ibid. p. 813, 817.

nowas build in honour of their Wistnow (or Vistnum) one meets with those of Garrouda and Annemonta. The former had the shape of a red spar-hawk, with a white ring about his neck; and sprung from an egg, laid by his mother Diti, which was hatched after it had remained 500 years in the ovous state. Diti having brought herself into slavery to Kaddrowa Winneta (or Additi) another wife of the Bramman Kassipa, through a silly wager, which she lost by the artifice of her rival; Garrouda, to free her and her offspring from that oppression, conveyed himself to Devendre Lokon, where the Amortam was kept; and after a desperate conflict, forced it from the Dewetas, and brought it away. His mother being delivered from her bondage, by drinking of that immortal liquor, Wistnow afterwards took Garrouda for his wahannam, or bird of carriage.

Gods of the 2d and 3d class.

Garrouda the Spar-Hawk.

WITH regard to Annemonta or Hamman, an account has been already given of his exploits in the service of Wistnow ^x. As to his original, we are told, that at the same time Wistnow had commanded the Dewetas to transform themselves into apes, in order to fight the Rasbajas, that is, giants or demons, there appeared a female ape, who conceived without conversing with the ape her husband, and brought forth Annemonta; who, it seems, is properly the wind, ushered into the world in form of a monkey. For the services done to Wistnow, when in the shape of Ramma, he has been honoured with a small temple, within the inclosure of that god's fane; and while Garrouda attends him in heaven, Annemonta remains on earth, as Wistnow's agent to transact his affairs here, till Bramma's time is expired. After this when Wistnow shall appear again in the world, Annemonta is to be in the place of Bramma; and Bramma is to perform the office of Annemonta, the wind ^y.

Annemonta, or Hanuman, the Ape.

THESE are the gods of the second class, in great esteem with the Wistnowas: on the other hand, the Seyvias, or worshippers of Eswara, or Isburen, join to the children of that god certain other beings for the objects of their devotion; namely, Pudas, Pisbaros, and Pes, who are the attendants of Isburen, and always found in his temples. Pudas is represented like a thick short person, with a huge paunch, and no beard, but serpents hanging down from his head, instead of hair. He wears serpents also for bracelets on his arms and thighs, and carries a staff in his right hand. The Pes and Pisbaros are represented much taller, holding lighted torches Attendants of Isburen.

^u ROGER, Mœurs des Bram. p. 3, 168, & seqq. ^x See before, p. 621.

^y ROGER, ubi supr. p. 172, & seqq

Gods of the 1st and 2d class. in the night time^z. As Roger mentions none of these gentry, it is probable that they are not found in the pagods of Karnâta. However, that author, besides the sons of Isburen, saw in his temples Nandi, otherwise called Baswa and Bassanna, who has the figure of an ox^a; but others say this is Isburen himself^b.

Gods of the 3d class. THIS is all we find relating to the gods of the second class. As for those of the third order, they consist of such as we call spirits, or angels, both good and evil. The good angels, or spirits, they call Dewetas; and the evil ones, Rasbajas. These, according to the Hindû tradition, were not immediately created by the gods of the first class, or begotten by them, but had a human original; being the offspring of the first Bramman who was in the world, named Kassioapa. This Bramman, who was the son of Bramma, had two wives, one called Diti, who was the mother of the Dew-etas (Y); the other Aditi, who brought forth the Rasbajas (Z), or demons. Some of these latter have been wicked men, and therefore are condemned for their sins to wander about the world in the shape of men, and live by begging. As these devils are under the command of Beyrewa, the son of Eswara (or Isburen) he takes care that they shall not do any hurt to mankind, or pluck so much as an ear of corn, without their permission. The rest of these Rasbajas are those to whom that name properly belongs, and are really devils; having it in their power to do mischief to mankind, and even disturb the Dewetas, or good angels themselves, as appears from the histories of Rawan, and others already related. These are met with all over the world, and even in Surgam, or the worlds under heaven; but not in heaven itself. These devils have stinking bodies, and very deformed shapes. As there are of them both males and females, they propagate their species, who are subject to death like other mortal beings.

place of residence. THE place of their residence is said to be in the island of Andemân, in the way from Palliakatta to Pegu; and they are represented as man-eaters; such as the inhabitants of Andemân are reported to be^c.

THE Dew-etas, or good angels, are likewise divided into two sorts; for the souls of men, who die in a happy state, ^z BALDÆUS, ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p. 756.

^a ROGER, ubi sup. p. 175. ^b PHILLIPS's Account of Malabar, p. 34. ^c ROGER, ubi sup. p. 185, & seqq.

(Y) BALDÆUS calls them Devagal, or Dewetas, ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p. 766. axa [Rasbiafsa] or Adiren. ap. Church. Collect. Trav. vol. iii. p. 766.

(Z) BALDÆUS calls them Raxi-

and go into one of the places of bliss (A), which are under Gods of the heaven, obtain also the name of Dewetas; and after they 1st and 2d have been there for a certain time, according to the degree of class. their merits, must return to this world, and be born again: of two kinds. but then there are Dewetas who remain always in the lower heavens. Of these there are a great number, among whom are reckoned Suria, the sun, and Shendra, the moon, with all the stars; to each of whom they ascribe a soul and life; and the two great luminaries are held in high veneration by the sects devoted to Wistnum^d. Besides the above-mentioned, all Evil an- the governors of the several worlds and paradises, of whom gels wor- Rajah Inder, or Dew-endiren, is chief, all the guardians of shipped. towns and provinces on earth, with the rulers of the infernal regions, and the like, are ranked amongst the gods of this third class (B). These are all worshipped by the Hindûs, according to their fancy; not excepting the devils; among whom Ganga, Gramma, and Gûrnatha, are the chief. There are temples every-where (in Karnâta) erected to Ganga, who is worshipped in the form of a head and four arms; but Gûrnatha is not honoured with any, excepting in one place, which, it seems, is against rule^e; the gods of this class being, for the general, such whose images are set up only in the fields or in houses.

THE better to comprehend this system of inferior gods, System of it will be proper to set forth the Indian notion of the universe; the uni- which they say is like an egg, comprehending in it the hea- verse. vens, the earth, and the abyss. Of these the earth, or this world, which they call Bow Lokon, or Lugom, that is, the place below, possesses the middle place, between the upper and the lower worlds. The heavens, or upper worlds, are of three kinds; those of the first and highest sort are three in number, Heavens Kaylasen, Lila Weykontam, and Weykontam. These are the first sort. places where God himself (or the Supreme Being) resides^f. This account needs some farther explanation. The Brâm- mans, that is, those of the sects who make Wistnum, or Ijburen,

^d ROGER, ubi supr. p. 185, & seqq. item, p. 176. ^e Ibid. p. 245, & seqq. ^f Ibid. p. 148, 181.

(A) Called Devalogum; which signifies the place of these gods, or divinities. This word Dev, Dew, or Div, is prefixed to the names of some, as Dew, or Dev-inderen, mentioned lower down. It is the fourth of the fourteen worlds, lying between those of Wistnu and Brama; which last is the fifth, according to Mr. Ziegenbalg. See La Croz. Hist. de Chrétiens des Ind. p. 464.

(B) These contained in the fourth world, and also the (Rishi or) prophets, are under Deven-diren. Ziegenb, ibid.

Gods of the 2d and 3d class. the the supreme being, assign two sorts of places for the presence or residence of God; one where he exists as a spirit, the other corporally. And as we find that Kaylasen (C) is of this latter kind (for there Eswara, or Isburen, is said to reside bodily with his wife Parvati^g), we presume the other two are reserved for his spiritual appearance, especially Weykontam, where we are told God hath his abode^h. This tradition is doubtless according to the principles of the Seyvias, who acknowledge Isburen's supremacy: but altho' Wistnum has not his residence in any of these heavens, yet to those who are wholly devoted to his service, the privilege is granted of going immediately to Weykontam, which is the highest heaven of bliss; from whence souls never return into this worldⁱ.

Second sort.

THE second kind of heaven is immediately under the other three, and called Bramma Lokon, from the god Bramma, who resides there.

Third sort,

THE third sort, called by the general name of Surgam, or Sorgam, are rather so many paradises or elysian fields, including the infernal regions, whither the souls of people go from this world after death. These, which are eight in number, lie between Bramma Lokon and Bow Lokon, or this earth; taking their names from the spirits who govern them. 1. Indre Lokon, where Indre, or Dewendra, the god of the blessed souls, governs immediately under Bramma, as his deputy; and the seven other chiefs under him; 2. Akni Lokon; 3. Jamma Lokon, which is hell; 4. Niruti Lokon; 5. Warrowna Lokon; 6. Kubera Lokon; 7. Wajowwia Lokon; 8. Isanja Lokon. Each of the last seven chiefs, besides the government of his world, or place, has also the superintendance of other affairs. Akni (or Vanni (D) takes care, or is the god, of the fire. Jamma (or Padurpati (E) — Niruti (or Nirurdi) — Warrunna (or Varumna, and Varrinem) rules the sea; Wajowwia (or Maril) governs the winds; Kubera (called also Bassironnem) looks after riches. As for Isanja, or Isbananam, we are told he is Isburen himself^k.

or paradises.

^g ROGER, ubi supr. p. 156.

^h Ibid. p. 290.

ⁱ Ibid.

^k Ibid. p. 148. 181. Baldæus, 772. 780. De Faria Portug. Asia, vol. ii. p. 384.

(C) It is said to be the highest of the three heavens; possibly by mistake, instead of the lowest; which doubtless it ought to be, as being the most sensual.

(D) Baldæus, after De Soula, gives several of these governors, or chiefs, different names, which we have included within parentheses.

(E) Baldæus makes him king of the evil spirits; and Nirurdi king of the infernal spirits. By the evil spirits must, we presume, be understood the Rashâ-jas, or Adâjiren.

Gods of the 2d and 3d class.

Seven ter-raneous worlds.

THIS is the order of the celestial regions. With regard to Bow Lokon, or this earth, they say also that it consists of seven worlds, each separated from another by a sea, from whence it takes a name. That nearest the center is surrounded with a sea of fresh water; the next to this is inclosed with a sea of milk (F). The sea which environs the third world, consists of butter; that embracing the fourth is of Tayer, thick milk, or clouted cream. The fifth world is encompassed with a sea of wine; the sixth with a sea of syrup; and the last, which is this we inhabit, with a salt sea. In the middle of the Bow Lokon stands the mountain Mêrôw, or Meruperwât often mentioned before; which is so high, that it reaches upwards above the eight celestial worlds, or regions, and downwards, as low as the great abyfs, called Patalam (or Padalas.) Although this mountain is of gold, yet there grow upon it all sorts of fruits, which have the property of preventing the eaters from ever becoming old; but then none have the privilege to eat them, but the Dewetas. This mountain is as it were the axis of the heavens, round which the sun, moon, and stars, perform their revolutions; so that when the sun is behind it, it is night¹.

As to Patalam, or the Padalas (G), that is, the abyfs, Patalam, we are told they are subterranean places, like the purgatory or purgatory and limbus of the Romanists. These are seven in number, or purgatory.

¹ ROGER, p. 182, & seq.

(F) In this sea of milk Wistnum is said to have his residence.

(G) Our authors speak of these worlds, which are in number fourteen, not very distinctly. Mr. Ziegenbalg, in his account of the Indians, and their religion, which he left in manuscript, seems to have been more exact. But Mr. Le Croze has given from thence the names of only five of those fourteen worlds, in the following order; 1. Padala Logum (or Locum) or hell, whose king is Emen, the god of death. His court is composed of devils [or Rasbojas]; and here the damned souls are tormented. 2. Pa Logum, which is the earth we inhabit

3. Maga [or Maha] Logum, where Wishnu and his court reside. 4. Deva [or Dewa] Logum, or the world of the Gods, in number 330,000, besides 48,000 prophets, all subject to Dewendiren, king of this world. 5. Chaddia Logum, where Bîrûma, or Brama, has his abode. Mr. Le Croz forbore giving the names of the other nine worlds, because his manuscript said nothing in particular about them. But we could wish we had either the whole work, or a more complete extract than what has been published by Le Croz; to whom the world however is infinitely obliged for that noble abstract which he has presented them.

Temples
and worship.

whose names are Adela, Bidela, Sudela, Taladelam, Sadelam, Mahadelam, and Padelum; which inferior worlds are inhabited by men, who receive no other light but what certain serpents, carrying very bright stones on their heads, afford them^m.

Ages of the world.

WE have already mentioned the four ages, or periods of time, which are ascribed to this world, and to each of which the Brâmmans allot a vast number of years, very incompatible with our chronology; for, according to them, the first period consists of 1,728,000 years; the second, of 1,296,000; the third, of 8,064,000 years; and the fourth, of 4,032,000 years. The three first are expired; and of the last, to this year 1752, 4852 are already past, according to the computation of the Malabârians; but 4853 according to that of the Banîyans of *Surât*ⁿ.

S E C T. IV.

Their Pagods, or Temples, and Way of Worship.

Pagods, their structure.

THERE are in every town of Karnâta at least two pagods (H), one in honour of Wistnum, the other of Isburen. These are well built, and higher than those appropriated to the lesser gods; but not so large as Christian churches. They are low and flat, but without windows, or any light, excepting what comes in by the doors. The pagod is divided into three parts: the first consists of an arched ille, supported by pillars, beset with statues of animals, and open for all to enter; the second part is shut with a strong gate, which is open by day, but guarded by Brâmmans, who suffer none to go in. In this division are seen frightful images, with many heads and hands: the third part is secured also with a strong door; and there the statue of the god is kept to whom the temple is dedicated. Round these temples is a large space of ground, or court, inclosed with walls; on which are built several little pagods: those of Wistnum contain the temples of his wife Latjami, Garrouda, and Annemonta. The image of Garrouda is in the form of a man, with wings on each side; but Annemonta has the face of an ape. In the plain, or court, belonging to the pagod of Ejwara, or Isburen, you meet with the lesser temples, or chapels of Parwati, his wife, and his sons Vikn-

^m BALDÆUS, ubi supr. p. 814.

ⁿ Ibid. p. 768.

(H) From Pout Gheda, a Persian word; Pout signifying an idol, and Gheda a temple. Ouv. Voy. to Surat, p. 159.

eswara (named also Pullari and Winnaiika), Komaraswara, Temples and Virrepadra; also that of Nandi, or Baswa, the ox, who is and wor- the Wahannam of Ishuren; and of Suria, the sun. As for Shendra, or the moon, she has no chapel; but yet she does not lose her veneration, being always placed on the head of Ishuren ° (I). ship.

IT does not appear that the Brâmmans assemble the people Pagod to the pagods, or that there are any days set apart for divine worship; service: only on certain nights, once or twice a month, the images of Wistnum and Ishuren are carried about in procession through the streets. The statue is set on a wooden horse, with his fore-feet raised in the air, the other two fixed to a square floor of planks, which is carried on the shoulders of four Muk-wâs, or fishermen. The rider is covered with an umbrella, and has a man with a fan to drive away the flies, while a great many lights march before. On its return to the pagod, the dancers (K), who belong to the same, begin their ceremony; and all the while these girls perform their duty, songs are sung, and musick play'd, in honour of the god.

EVERY one is studious to render honour to, and adorn, the how per- image, according to his sect; and because Wistnum would have formed. his statue strewed with flowers, and clothed with fine garments, richly adorned with precious stones, therefore his devotees spare no cost to please him: on the other hand, Eswara (or Ishuren) likes that his image should be frequently washed with water, or some perfumed liquor; and therefore his worshippers don't fail to oblige him. As a mark of respect also, they light lamps, and lay victuals before their images twice a day, ushered in with the sound of flutes and drums. This is done, in order to sanctify them for the Brâmmans, who eat no victuals but what have been thus offered to, or placed before, the image of their favourite god. On certain feast-days the images both of the gods and goddesses are carried about on triumphal chariots, drawn by a great number of men. The people reverence them, by raising their hands on high,

° ROGER, ubi supr. p. 204—208.

(I) The commentator of Roger supposes that the Brammans took this practice from the book of Judges, chap. viii. verse 21, 26; where we are told that the heads of the kings of the Ishmaelites, or Moabites, were always adorned with little crescents: but we cannot well conceive how the moon can be said to be placed on the head of Ishuren, who yet is said to be represented in form of the Lingam.

(K) These dancers are all prostitutes, though dedicated to the service of the temples. See also Phillip's Account of Malabâr, p. 100. 102.

Temples
and worship.

joined close together : but none of the lower classes dare so much as touch them. Many are so infatuated, as to lie on the way, or throw themselves under the wheels of the chariot, there to sacrifice themselves, by being crushed to death ^p.

THE Brâmmans, when they enter the temples, leave their slippers without the door thereof, and advance with much devotion. The people likewise shew their great esteem for the pagods, by liberally contributing towards maintaining them, and those who belong to them : besides, part of the duties paid for all commodities, both foreign and domestic, are appropriated to the same uses ^q.

Divine service.

DIVINE service is performed chiefly by Brâmmans, Pantaren, and Antigol (three sorts of ecclesiastics). These, getting up early, bathe themselves, and then prepare their drink-offering made of honey, sugar, and juice of cocoa-nut : at the same time they present flowers, and besprinkle all their offerings and images with the powder of sandal-wood (L). Next they proceed to incensing, called Tubum, and Tubara-diney, which they do with sandal and aghil (M), another odoriferous wood. After this they perform their meat offering, consisting of rice, pease, beans, butter, and kokoa-nuts ; then they set it before the images, and some time after eat it among themselves ; repeating, at the same time, several formularies of prayers ; and read the praises of the god to whom the sacrifice is made ; which sort of worship is performed daily by them ^r.

Females
devotion.

THE women are great devotees here, as well as in Europe, and begin very early. When a girl is seven or eight years of age, she gives herself a disciple to her parents priest ; and when she is married, lists herself in the catalogue of such priest's disciples : from thenceforth she hears their discourses and documents, going into the pagods ; and makes her Shalams, or salutations, to the images, and to the Brâmmans. If she be very young, she goes alone ; but if marriageable, is always accompanied with two or three other women, who every now-and-then bestrew themselves with consecrated ashes, and present their offerings ; in the mean time repeating the form of prayers, which they had learned of their priests. What they offer in their houses to Pulleyar (N) they give to the

^p ROGER, ubi sup. p. 217—225. ^q Ibid. p. 209, & seqq. ^r PHILLIPS'S Account of Malabar, p. 43.

(L) This is the service, doubtless, which is performed in the temples of Ishuren.

(M) Or Eagle-wood.

(N) Pulleyar, or Wikken Ishuren, one of Ishuren's sons.

poor :

poor : they likewise observe fastings, vows, and (if of good Temples understanding) the ceremonial purifications. Some frequent and wor- the pagods much ; others pay their devotions to the images in ship. the streets, when carried about on festivals ; when every one at his doors, with uplift hands, makes a profound Shalam. The women carry their censer with them, to make their offering, and are very charitable. When the priest comes to their houses, they first hear his instructions, and then set before him victuals, and all sorts of fruit *.

As the Brâmmans have no communication with the class of Priests of common people, consisting of husbandmen, mechanics, and the lower populace, these Hindûs choose a priest from the popu- among themselves, and likewise a god, commonly of the two lower classes ; whose image they set up in their houses. The whole process of their worship consists in the following particulars : on Friday they boil rice with milk ; kill he goats, swine, hens, and peacocks : then taking Suri for drink, and some new linen, never before used, present them all to their image ; at the same time desiring that they may be kindly accepted at his hand ; and that whatever they pray for may be granted them. When they have performed all their usual ceremonies, they take away the dishes of meat-offerings, and feed on them ; distributing part of it among their friends and acquaintance, who are of the same sect. If any one of them falls sick, they pray the image for his health, in these words ; O god, restore health, and I vow to give thee ten gilders, which shall be spent in meat offering ; or I will kill a he-goat, or boil rice, for thy use ; or else I will make thee an image, &c. Beside this, says our Malabâr author (who was of the class of merchants) the populace have no other religion but their belly †.

AFTER all, the Malabârians pretend, that wise and un- Images for derstanding men among them perform their worship without the vulgar images ; these being designed (say they, like the Romanists) only. for children only, and the duller sort of people, who know not what ideas to form of the celestial beings †. And, in reality, we shall find that some even of the Brâmmans themselves renounce the use of images ; and for that reason do not even frequent the pagods. Many confess the impotency of their images, and acknowledge that the whole system of their divinity is nothing but a perplexed jargon of incomprehensible notions, inconsistent with, and destructive one of another.

* PHILLIPS'S Account of Malabar, p. 236, & seqq. p. 60, & seqq.

† Ibid.

‡ Danish Letters, p. 20.

S E C T. V.

Religious Ceremonies.

Holy ashes. THE religious worship of the Hindûs is attended with a great number of ceremonies; such as observing festivals and fasts, of which they have several in the course of the year. Their washings and purifications, in which sprinkling with holy water, and holy ashes, made of cow-dung, are reckoned of no small efficacy. These ashes are made and consecrated by the priests of different sects, and are strewed upon the images of their gods, as well as the bodies of the people, particularly on their foreheads; as a preservative against misfortunes, and charm against evil spirits, in which last capacity beads are also used. Pilgrimages likewise are no less frequent in the Indies than in Europe; and, besides the places of particular resort, several of which are to be found in every country of the Hindûs, there are also places of general resort: such as, Kâsi or Banârres, on the Ganges; Matura, near Agra; Kanjevoram, in Karnâta; and Devaraka (or Dawarka) near Surât, with two or three more; to which they flock from all parts of Hindustân and the hither peninsula^u.

Penances THIS is reckoned a very meritorious act, and serves as a means to expiate sins. For this end likewise they have penances of several kinds; the most easy of which seem to surpass the most rigid practised by the clergy and laity of the church of Rome. Some will sit, others stand, in the same posture for years together. Some carry vast loads, others drag most weighty chains. Some expose themselves to the scorching sun; others are seen hanging before a fire with their heads downwards. In short, the acts which of this nature they perform, are astonishing, and almost incredible, were they not so unanimously attested by travellers^x. By such severities inflicted on the body, by good works, and a hearty repentance, the Hindûs hope to obtain forgiveness of their sins, and work out their salvation. They have no notion of a remission through God's free grace, nor of any redeemer but God alone. They say, no man can release another from sin; not even God's son, who, they say, is not without sin^y. For all this, they believe their sins may be remitted at a much easier rate; as by saying a few prayers, and the Vedamantiram, or prayer of five words, in great for sins.

^u ROGER, p. 263, & seq. BALD. p. 815. & seq. PHILLIPS, p. 6. 63. 105.

^x ROGER, p. 258. BALD. p. 817.

PHILLIPS, p. 27. 57. ^y PHILLIPS, ibid. p. 155, 156. 163.

veneration with the Brâmmans; who also pretend to transfer the sins of the people upon cows. But this imposition costs the people dear; for, on that occasion, they are obliged to provide no fewer than 200 cows, which the Brâmmans take for their trouble ^z. Religious ceremonies.

THE Hindûs believe a future state, with rewards and punishments. They hold also a purgatory, as hath been observed before. They entertain the same notions of the devil, witches, and apparitions, as prevail in Europe. They say, that evil spirits do much mischief in this world; that they kill some men and women, and possess others. In this latter case they are carried to the pagods, where meat-offerings are made to the god intreated to deliver the demoniac. Then they strike the person with a cudgel, to frighten the devil; who, not liking such treatment, marches-off in anger, complaining loudly of the injustice done him to be dislodged. However, among the gang of devils, there are, it seems, three so very obstinate, that they will not go out of the possessed, even though conjured in the name of the One only God, the Supreme Being ^a. Purgatory. Exorcisms.

As for the soul of man, they entertain many different opinions about it. Some hold God to be the soul; others hold it to be a part of God. A third sort will have it, that, at the creation, God created all those souls at once, which were designed for the race of mankind. Others again say, that the soul is begotten by the parents; and a fifth sort believe it to be the product of the five elements (A). The greater number believe all souls to be eternal as well as immortal. Of these some affirm them to be contained in the essence of God; others say they existed out of God, and slept before the world was created. Those who hold they were not from eternity, say they were created before the world, and lodged in the essence of the Deity. Most Indians believe, that every person has two souls, a good one and a bad one ^b, or rather they are thus distinguished: one is called the supreme soul, which is no other than God himself; the second is the animal soul, which is in man the sensitive principle of pleasure and pain. Several opinions. concerning the soul.

^z PHILLIPS, ibid. p. 180. BALD. p. 817. ^a Ibid. p. 85. 143, & seq. ^b Danish Lett. part ii. p. 23. ROGER, p. 192, & seq.

(A) To earth, water, Fire, and air, they add the wind. Perhaps instead of the heaven we may place the ether, or according to Roger, and the ethereal matter. heavens, according to Baldæus.

Priests
and sects.

love, hatred, and other affections. Some will have it to be spiritual, others material; which latter make it the eleventh sense in man: for they distinguish the active from the passive organs, or those of sensation; and they reckon ten senses, instead of five^c. Lastly, the Hindûs hold the soul both of men and other animals to be the same. As to the difference which appears to be between them, they say, it is not in the soul itself, but is owing to the different structure and organization of the several bodies, which give greater advantages to creatures of different species, as well as of the same species: and hence it is that some have more understanding than others; that some reason well, and others reason ill^d.

Transmi-gration.

THE doctrine of transmigration is generally held by all the Hindû nations; and indeed has spread itself over the greater part of Asia. It is hard to say when it first appeared in the world, or to what cause it owes its origin. Some suppose it took its rise from Wistnum's tenfold incarnation; others think the prohibition to eat animal food is derived from thence: but, as there is no express command for the belief of the transmigration, nor even mention of it in the Shaster, at least in Lord's abstract of it, it seems rather to owe its rise to that prohibition, by way of accounting for it; as the alternate destruction and renovation of things seems to have sprung from the transmigration, in conjunction with the notion of the world's being eternal. This state of the soul is a kind of purgatory, and designed as a punishment, not a felicity: for those souls only which are pure go immediately into heaven; the impure transmigrate or pass into several bodies successively, in order to obtain a perfect purification, which requires many regenerations. Sometimes this passage is from a better body or state to a worse: sometimes from a worse to a better; but the souls of very impure persons migrate into venomous (or servile) beasts (as post-horses), or are born in a very abject condition^e.

Kind of purgatory.

SECTION VI.

Of the Hindû Priests, and their several Sects.

Hindû
clergy.

THERE are among the Hindûs three sorts of clergy; the first by birth, who are the Brâmmans; the second by adoption, who are of the tribe of Shudderis, or the merchants, admitted by the Brâmmans; and the third by nomi-

^c P. PONS ap. Lett. Ediff. tom. xxvi. p. 244, & seq.
^e GER, p. 190, & seq.

^d Ro-
Danish Lett. p. 22, & seq.

nation or election, being those chosen by the other tribes, to perform the office of priests among them. *Prtestis
and sects.*

WE have already given an account of the Brâmmans, as one of the four tribes into which the Hindûs are divided: we shall now consider them in respect of their office; on which occasion it must be observed, that they are a sacerdotal tribe, like that of Levi among the Jews: like them also, they have been at certain times, and are still in some places, both chiefs and priests. They came originally from the country between the river Jemni and the mountain Hima or Imaus, to the north of Patna^f. They pretend to be descended from the god Brâmma, or Brûmma; and, in virtue of this original, assume to be perfectly pure, and free from sin^g. Hence it is also that they are esteemed the prime nobility, and enjoy many privileges; and, among the rest, do not prostrate themselves before kings, as other subjects do, but sit in their presence^h. The belief of their divine original makes them excessively proud, and look upon the other tribes with contempt: nor will they touch, converse with, or even administer the priestly offices to, the class of the people whom they hold unclean; and yet will receive their alms in money, when purified by water.

IT is certain, that the Brâmmans are by the other tribes treated with a profound respect, on account of their pretended descent, and the privileges granted to them by the Vedam, or their sacred books. These are first to celebrate the feast called Jagam: at what time they do two things, which on other occasions they are forbidden, and to which they seem to have the greatest abhorrence; namely, taking away the life of animals, and eating flesh. For at this feast they sacrifice a beast; but, to avoid shedding its blood, they strangle or stifle it: then, cutting it to pieces, they eat part of the heart, with other Brâmmans present; after which they burn the rest. Their second privilege is to teach the Settreas (or Kutteris) (B) the manner of celebrating the Jagam; but they are not allowed to do the same to the other two tribes. The third is to read the Vedam; and the fourth privilege is to teach it to their own tribe and that of the Settreas; to which they are confined. Lastly, they are allowed the privilege to demand but not to give alms; while the

^f P. PONS ap. Lett. Ediff. tom. xxvi. p. 220.

Lett. part i. p. 20. 22.

Trav. vol. iii. p. 812.

^g Danish

^h BALD. ap. Church. Collect.

(B) That is, those of the tribe of Râjabs and Rajpûts.

other

Priests
and sects.

never put death.

other tribes may give but not demand themⁱ. Thus they have the impious policy to free themselves from the obligation of charity by a divine commission.

WE must not omit another great privilege which belongs to the Brâmmans, and that is, never to be punished with death, for any crime whatever committed by them. Instead of that, they only put out their eyes; it being reckoned one of the five mortal sins to kill a Brâmmān. In this case the Vedam has ordained, that the offender shall perform a twelve-years pilgrimage, begging alms, with the Brâmmān's skull in his hand; and that he shall eat and drink out of it whatever is given to him. At the expiration of the twelve years he is to bestow a great deal of alms himself, and build a pagod in honour of Eswara (or Isburen). But in case a Brâmmān goes to the war, with an intention to kill others, the crime of killing him is not so great, and may be expiated by building a temple only^k.

Their office, and maintenance,

THE office of the Brâmmans is purely to teach others, not only to write, read, and cast accounts, but also to instruct them thoroughly in the principles of their religion; and this is their principal business, which they are obliged to discharge without any reward for their trouble: but, in case they are poor, they may then receive gratuities from their disciples, not to enrich themselves, but barely to maintain them decently. Indeed the kings (or Râjahs) are under an obligation to prevent their being beholden for a maintenance to those they teach, by providing for them, and assigning the revenues of certain villages for the support of them and their families: but as their number is so great that the kings cannot provide for them all, therefore the inhabitants of the respective countries are obliged to contribute to their subsistence; and the people say, that although the Brâmmans receive more than one third part of the revenue of the land, yet there are still a great number of them so poor that they are forced to beg. Necessity likewise obliges them often to make use of other means, besides teaching, to get a livelihood; as following merchandize, practising physic, and the like. However, they must not put their hands to tillage, painting, or any handicraft trade; neither must they do any servile office for any person, even the king, as to wash his feet, serve him with betel, or the like. For such an offence he would be degraded, and expelled his tribe: but they may officiate as secretaries, ambassadors, or counsellors; and in-ⁱ ROGER Mœurs des Bram. p. 32.

seq.

^k Ibid. p. 3, &

deed few besides them obtain these employments¹. However, they often take-up with those of a meaner kind, and even serve as guides to conduct travellers.

*Priests
 and sects.*

THE Brâmmans hold their children and their house to be unclean for the first ten days after their birth, when great ceremony is used to purify both. On the twelfth they make a fire, called Hemam, into which they throw incense, and other things, accounting it holy; and when it is consumed give the infant its name. After this they bore their ears, not to hang jewels in, but to signify their being devoted to Wisnum or Isburen; on which occasion they wish the child much holiness. The next thing they do is to invest them with the little cord called Dsandhem, which is hung on the left shoulder, and descends low on the right side. This is done when the child is five years old: but as it is attended with some little expence, therefore if the parents be poor, it is deferred till the tenth year. When this cord is put on, they are called Brâmma Sarîs (or the children of Brâmmans); nor are they till then considered as such. They bear this name so long as they remain unmarried; nor can they, during that time, either lie with a woman, or chew betel, which they say excites venery: they likewise are to eat but once a day, and to beg for the victuals they eat. These rules are enjoined by the Vedam, but not exactly observed^m.

how brought up.

THE little cord above-mentioned is of fine thread, and consists of three small strings, made by Brâmmans. He never puts this cord off, rising up or lying down; and if it breaks, he cannot eat till he gets another; nor is reckoned of the tribe so long as he is without it. For this reason they renew this cord every August, at which time they give it to children.
 As this cord is not a badge, as some imagine, by which the Brâmmans are distinguished; those of the other tribes may and do wear it often, in imitation of their ancestors, and to shew their zeal. When their children are fit to learn, they teach them themselves, unless hindered by other occupations; in which case they either take a tutor into their house, or send them to the Brâmmans, who keep school: for none but Brâmmans must teach Brâmmans. And the other tribes, in imitation of them, will not suffer their children to be instructed by those of an inferior family: but masters of superior tribes will teach those of inferior tribes, excepting the children of Perreas; who, being esteemed vile, those of the fourth and lowest tribe begrudge to teach themⁿ.

The cord.

¹ ROGER Mœurs des Bram. p. 39, & seq.

ibid. p. 43, & seq.

ⁿ Ibid. p. 47, & seq.

^m ROGER,

*Priests
and sects.*

Their marriage.

IN marrying their sons, the Brâmmans take care to chuse a maiden of their own tribe, who has not had her monthly visitations. They are no less careful to provide husbands for their daughters before that time; otherwise no person can marry them: but ways are found to get over this difficulty, by concealing their age. In visiting the family where they propose to chuse a wife for their son, they are careful to observe every frivolous matter, which they reckon an ill sign; and if they meet any such three times running, they drop the pursuit. When they break the affair to the girl's father, he usually asks to see the young man; and in case he likes him, as well as the portion, which he is to receive, the youth has then liberty to visit the family and see his mistress. The ceremonies observed at the marriages of Brâmmans are much the same with those used by the laity of other tribes. When the match is concluded on, and the father has given his daughter's hand to her intended spouse, the latter takes the Tali, which is a little girdle, with a golden head of some god fastened to it, and ties it about the neck of his bride, which makes the marriage sure. But it sometimes happens, that when the bridegroom is going to perform that ceremony, and does not give the dowry which the bride's father expects; one of those present steps in, and offering to give what is demanded, carries off the lady, with her father's consent. When the husband dies, the Tali is buried with him; except the widow burns herself, and then it is burned along with her. The marriage is concluded by erecting a Pandal, and making a procession through the city, in the same manner as is done by those of other tribes. When the children of Brâmmans are married they are no longer called Brâmmasaris, but Grabastas; and then receive the second little cord, which is like the first; and usually they add a third cord, which serves for an upper garment: for, as the Brâmmans are forbidden to go with their breast bare, yet commonly do, if they have their third cord on, they think their breast is covered. Every ten years they are obliged by their Vedam to add another string to the former: but they do not all follow its injunctions.

Odd customs.

Polygamy allowed them:

WHEN the young Brâmmans are grown more in years, they often take wives out of the other tribes; and even that of Soudra (or Weyz), which is the lowest, and held in contempt by the upper classes. But the Brâmmans themselves censure this practice, thinking it a great sin to leave children by such a woman; and believe, that the father of them will be excluded heaven, so long as they, or any of their descendants, remain on earth. However, the Brâmmans are careful ^{Priests and sects.} not to marry their children to those who are near of kin to them; for they have an abhorrence to incest, which is one of the five mortal sins, scarce ever to be pardoned. In this case the Vedam ordains, that the offender shall be castrated, and left to die with his genitals in his hand. Our author was told of a Brâmmán, then living, who having, by mistake, lain with his mother, whom he found in his bed, instead of his wife, inflicted that punishment on himself, and would have drowned himself, had he not been hindered. Polygamy ^{practised to excess.} is carried to great excess often by the Brâmmans, as well as the other tribes. Barthrouherri, renowned for his proverbs, and other works, had no fewer than three hundred, though his father had only four. The graver sort condemn this custom; but say it is not sinful, because the Vedam has not forbidden it. However, they look on it to be a very bad action for one of their tribe who has many wives to keep a concubine. There is no punishment indeed either for this vice or for adultery: yet when a Brâmmán's wife is inconstant, he sometimes locks her up in a close place, and gives her victuals while she lives: but, in case he loves her much, and finds the other Brâmmans avoid going to his house as before, he makes a feast, and, inviting several of his tribe to it, his wife serves at table; and as the guests receive the victuals from her hand, she is thenceforth looked upon as an honest woman ^P.

THE diet of the Brâmmans is exceedingly temperate; their ^{Their diet temperate.} victuals consist solely of rice, fruits, roots, and herbs. Nor is their drink less simple, being nothing but water; except at meals they sometimes take a draught of milk; for which purpose they usually keep a cow. They never make use of any liquor which either hath an agreeable taste (C), or is apt to intoxicate; for they abhor drunkenness, which is one of their mortal sins. This tribe, through pride, will never go to the house of those of other tribes to eat or drink, excepting Tayer, or cream; which they believe to be of the same nature with the Amortam, or Nectar, of the gods, often mentioned before. But nothing will prevail with one of them to eat in such a person's house, or in the house of a

^P ROGER, ibid. p. 64—67.

(C) That is for their own private drinking, and in Kar-nâta; but in East Malabâr they make their drink-offering of honey, sugar, and the juice of kokoa nut: which offering, doubtless, they afterwards drink themselves.

Brâmmán

Priests
and sects.

Brâmmans of a different sect. Nay, if his wife is of another tribe, she must not eat with her husband; and, as none are permitted, not even the king, to see a Brâmmans eat, the wife also is subject to the same law: so that should the husband, through fondness, permit her that liberty, the other Brâmmans would neither eat with him, nor in his house¹.

Dispute
about

As two of the four tribes, namely, the Brâmmans and Baniyans, eat nothing but vegetables: and the other two, which are the Settreas (or Kutteris), and the Soudras (or Wise), feed upon fish and flesh, there is no small dispute among them on this account. The Brâmmans allege, that those two tribes commit a great sin in killing animals: on the other hand, the Kutteri or Rajah tribe maintain, that in so doing they act better than the Brâmmans: because, say they, to support a great many people, there is no need to kill more than one beast; and in so doing no more than one soul is dislodged from its body: whereas the Brâmmans, to nourish themselves, are obliged to dislodge many souls from their bodies, by plucking-up roots and plants. For they believe that all vegetables have souls, as well as beasts; and that the souls of men pass into them equally alike.

Dislodging souls.

To this the Brâmmans are able only to make the following lame reply, that they do not commit so great a sin as the Kutteri in killing a buck; since the souls which are in roots and herbs are in the most abject of all bodies; and that in being dislodged they change their state for the better, as they pass into the bodies of men or beasts. However, they are so graverled on this chapter, that they acknowledge they would refrain from eating vegetables, could they subsist without it: and some are so troubled in mind on this occasion, that they content themselves with plucking leaves and fruit, without pulling-up any thing by the roots, in order to avoid dislodging souls¹.

Ecclesiastical hierarchy.

THE Brâmmans are as priests both secular and regular: they have likewise a hierarchy among them; but their several orders are not well, if at all, distinguished by authors (D). We have already seen the form of their ecclesiastical degrees, though confusedly and imperfectly, among the west Mala-

¹ ROGER, ibid. p. 110, 114.

² Ibid. p. 108, & seq.

(D) The Brâmmans, called also Namburi in Malabâr, are there distinguished into nine classes or kinds. Those of the first four classes wholly devote themselves to the ministry: the five others apply themselves also to merchandize. The first of the nine orders are like bishops. Vinc. Mariu Utagg, p. 264.

bârs. In the country between that and Surât, we are told they are distinguished into two sorts Buts, and Sinâis: from which two roots spring the other branches. The difference was occasioned by a famine in the low lands, where the Sinâis resided, which obliged them to eat fish, to prevent perishing. For this reason they are greatly despised by the purer Buts, who did not violate their law under such pressing circumstances. These latter apply themselves wholly to study, and teach the mysteries of their religion, they also lead an exact regular life, abstracted from all worldly employments, excepting such as contribute to preserve life (E); the chief and most skilful physicians being of this class of Brâmmans. These are masters of all their ceremonies, or doctors of their canon law, and instruct the other tribes therein.

*Priests
and sects.
Buts and Sinâis.*

THE Sinâis are more biassed to secular offices, and out of them are made their fighting bishops (F); Desîs, or farmers of the king's revenues; Pundits, who are governors of towns and provinces; physicians, accountants, scrivans or secretaries, and interpreters^s.

THE learned part of the Brâmmans [who are those called Kuru or Buts in some parts of India] are of two kinds. The first called Kûrû (or Gourou), who are of the priesthood; and the second termed Sastiriar (or Shastiriar), who are professors of the different systems in divinity. Of the first kind there are (in Eastern Malabâr) three distinct orders, the Wayrawenada Kûrû, the Pancharsha Kûrû, and Mabulley Kûrû. Their office is to prepare the offerings for religious worship. Of the second kind, or Sastiriar, there are four classes; the Chesha Sastiriar, Minastiri Sastiriar, the Chidambara Sastiriar, and Mogarambara Sastiriar. These explain severally the different systems of their divine law, and receive the youth into their schools, in order to make trial of their faith: for if in the end they are not found disposed firmly to believe all the mysteries of their religion, their study will be deemed to no purpose. Besides the two kinds of learned Brâmmans *priests.

Kinds.*

* FRYER'S Trav. p. 190.

(E) Among these then we must reckon astrology, in which we are told they are skilled; foretelling many things to come. Hamilton's New Account of India, vol. i. p. 276. In short, these Buts must be the Pandets, or doctors (in divinity), as they are called in the Mogol's empire, who cultivate the sciences studied in the Indies. See Bernier's Memoirs of the Mogol Empire, tom. iv. p. 144.

(F) Some go to the wars, and take the command of armies; as Romish bishops have often done in these parts of the world.

before-

Priests
and sects.

before-mentioned, there are many others, not much inferior to them in wisdom and erudition; whose business chiefly it is to instruct youth in those points which relate to the ceremonies used in public worship, and solemn festivals, as they are taught in the glossaries called Sastirangol†.

Tribes or families :

THE Bramens, or Brâmmans, are divided into eighty-two tribes (or, more properly, families), assuming the names of their respective founders; who were so many wise men or scholars famed among them for learning, and called Augurs, or diviners, of certain towns where they resided. Thus the chief of them was called Visalnagran-aughor, that is, the Augur (G) of Visalnagra; the second Vulnagran-aughor, or the Augur of Vulnagra; and so of the rest; the disciples of each being termed Brâmmans of such an Augur.

their functions.

THE ministerial function of the Brâmmans consists in praying with the people, and reading their law. In performing which offices they are to observe the following injunctions. 1. To put their bodies into several droll postures, the better to draw the attention of their auditors. 2. To pray with both hands open to heaven, as ready to receive the things they petition for. 3. To pray with their eyes cast downwards, and knees doubled under them, in token of awe and reverence. 4. Never to read out of the book delivered to Bremaw, but with a kind of singing and quavering voice: which, they say (H), was not only practised by Bremaw, when it was first published, but also enjoined by God, that they might make his law a matter of rejoicing.

How initiated.

IT belongs also to the Brâmmans to educate and instruct the youths of the same tribe, who gradually advance to the priesthood, in the following manner. First, about the seventh year of their age, they are admitted to discipline, being clean washed, to intimate the purity of the tribe which they belong to: then they are received naked, to shew that they have stripped off all other cares, to apply themselves to study.

† PHILLIPS'S Account Malab. p. 9, & seq.

(G) Here we find, perhaps, the origin of the word Augur; and Palliagar may be a compound of the same term.

(H) One would be apt from hence to think, that this remark is not taken from the Shaster: and indeed Mr. Lord so frequently mixes things of his own with the text, that it is difficult often to tell what is to be found in the Shaster, and what not: so that he is to be read with very great caution. And this confounding things together, without any distinction, as well as his omissions, makes a new translation or abstract of the Shaster absolutely necessary.

Next, their heads are shaven; only a lock of hair is left behind, to denote that they must not forsake their study; if they do, by that lock they shall be drawn back again. They are likewise bound to a Pythagorean silence and attention: they are forbidden to hark, spit, or cough: they are obliged also to wear about their waist a girdle of antelope-skin, and a thong of the same about their neck, descending under the left arm. This may be called their initiation or noviceship.

ABOUT the age of fourteen (if capable) they are admitted to be Brâmmans, and exchange those leather-thongs for four sealing threads, which pass over the right shoulder, and under the left arm. These they never put off, even when they go to bed; but wear, as the badge of their profession, in honour of God, and the three persons, Bremaw, Vîstney, and Rudderi. At the time of this kind of ordination, they are enjoined; 1. Not to change their tribe. 2. To observe all things contained in the law of the Brâmmans. 3. Not to communicate the mysteries of their religion to any of a different persuasion. These are most of the principal duties observed by the true Brâmmans ^{Form of ordination.}.

THE Brâmmans, pursuant to the precepts contained in the Daily Sastirangol, get-up an hour or two before sun-rise, to perform their daily duty. They first ease nature, and then cleanse themselves carefully. After this, they wash their mouths, and perform that exercise called Ashamen Kirighey; which is one of the many parts of their outward worship. Their next business is to lift up their minds to God, and read that part of the law which treats of washing and purification; at the same time washing themselves with water. They read their form of prayer, or liturgy, with all its ceremonies; after which they repeat their Kiaddiri (I), humbly beseeching the Dirumurtigol (K) to present all their performances to the great Supreme Being, in the place where his majesty dwelleth. Then they give honour and worship to their images, bringing their offerings before them. Lastly, they address themselves to the Supreme Being, as if he was there visibly present. These ceremonies are so tedious in their practice, that sometimes the greater part of the day is taken up with this kind of exercise (L): for every part must be regularly and completely

^a LORD's Account of the Banians, chap. 10.

(I) A form of prayer.

(K) The three inferior gods of the first class; Brâmma, Wistnum, and Ruddiren, or Ishuren.

(L) You have the whole process of it at length in Roger, p. 94; where it appears to be extremely laborious, and even a perfect penance.

*Priests
and sects.*

performed, and by no means either abridged or interrupted ; not even by the presence of the king ^x.

*Service-
priests.*

DIVINE service, we are told, is performed in Malabér by Brâmmans, Pantaren, and Antigol y. Whence it should seem, that the two latter orders are not Brâmmans ; yet none of the missionaries, either protestant or popish, inform us of what tribe they are, though so frequently mentioned by them. Their neglect in this and other matters makes it so difficult to deliver any thing certain, or complete, concerning the several orders and kinds of clergy amongst the Hindûs. However, from the very faint lights which they afford us, we shall endeavour to give our readers the best satisfaction we are able.

*Adopted
Brâm-
mans:*

THE second kind of clergy are those made Brâmmans by adoption. These are by the Banîyans called Varteas, or Vertcai, and by the Mohammedans Sevrahs. They are some of the tribe of Shudderi, or the merchants, who for devotion take this condition on them ; but they are only a few, in comparison of the true Brâmmans. The Vertca, for his habit, wears a white woollen garment, which reaches to the middle of his thigh ; the lower parts being left naked. His head is always uncovered, to testify his perpetual reverence for God above. They shave neither the head nor beard ; but pluck out the hairs by the roots, leaving only a lock on the crown.

*several
classes :*

THIS sort of Brâmmans is divided likewise into several classes or families ; one is called Sankas ; and these go not to church, but perform divine service at home. Another is named Tuppas ; these go to church to pray. A third order are the Kurthurs ; who pray alone without assistants. A fourth is denominated Onkeleaus ; and these reject images. A fifth called Puskealeaus, who are the most strict of them all. These Vertcas have a festival, which is kept once every month, and holds for five days ; but betwixt every two days they keep a fast. This feast is solemnized at the houses of the richer people ; and commonly at those times a pension is given to prevent the death of cattle and other living creatures.

their rules strict.

THESE nominal Brâmmans are in many respects more strict than the real. They are forbidden marriage, and are more abstemious in diet : for, of the above-mentioned feasts, they eat nothing but what is given them, and reserve nothing for another meal. They are more careful for the preservation of animals ; for they will not so much as drink water till it is boiled ; that so the vapour, which they believe to be the life of water, may go out of it : nay, they disperse their very ordure with a broom, lest it should generate worms, which are subject to destruction. They likewise keep hospitals for maimed ^x PHIL. ubi supr. p. 5, 43.

^y PHIL. ubi supr. p. 43.

mained birds and fowl ; which they redeem from slaughter, Priests and endeavour to cure. They have all things in common ; and sects. and place no faith in outward washings, but rather embrace a life of nastiness ^v.

WE meet with a class of priests named Chudders. (or Chudder-Shudders) in East Malabâr. These, from the name, must ^{ers} be priests belonging to the Shudderi, or merchants tribe, commonly called Banîyans ; but whether they are real, or only adopted Brâmmans, does not appear from our authors. All we find is, that they are an ecclesiastical order ; and have licence only to read the six systems (M) (or Shasterangol). They are allowed also to wear the Lingam, and carry the Panchuchoram, or five letters, composing the words Nama Chiaya ; that is, praise the true God ^z.

THE third sort of Hindû priests are those belonging to the Elected fourth tribe consisting of the mechanics and commonalty. As priests the Brâmmans will not converse or have any correspondence with these people, they therefore chuse priests from among themselves, as well as gods to worship ^a.

NOR are those outcasts, the Parreas, who are rejected even by the common people, without their priests ; for among them is a sacerdotal family named Vallouvers : nay we are told, that these Vallouvers (N) pretend that they were formerly in the Indies ; the same which the Brâmmans are at present. Whence it is conjectured, that the Parreas were the antient inhabitants of the southern India. However that be, they still apply themselves to the study of astronomy and astrology. There are likewise extant some books of theirs containing moral precepts, which are held in great esteem ^b. Perhaps these Vallouvers are the descendants of those fishermen of Malabâr, who are said, in the Purân, to have been constituted Brâmmans by Wistnum, in the shape of Paresbi Rama. These used to wear the thread of a fishing-net about their necks, when performing their sacrifices ^c ; and hence perhaps it is, that De Faria affirms, the Brâmmans took their string of three threads from a fishing-net ^d. Let us now return to the Brâmmans.

^v LORD, ubi supr. cap. 10.

Malabâr, p. 14, 20.

^a Ibid. p. 61.

ap. Leter. Edif. tom. xxvi. p. 219, & seq.

ap Church's Col. Trav. vol. iii. p. 780.

Port Asia, vol. ii. p. 385.

^z PHILLIPS's Account of

^b P. PONS,

^c BAIDREUS,

^d DE FARIA's

(M) The Shudderis, or Banîyans, are not allowed to read the Vedam, or have it explained to them.

same with the Shamman, or Shammanin, of whom M. La Croix, p. 474 & 491, gives an account from Ziegenbarg.

(N) These seem to be the Brâhman

sects:

S E C T. VII.

Sects of Brâhmanns.

Sects regarding faith.1st sect, Weistnouwa.

THE Brâhmanns may be farther distinguished into several sects or orders, both as to their profession and way of living: but of these, authors have treated so very confusedly, as well as imperfectly, that for the general it is very difficult to ascertain which class they belong to. Mr. Roger is almost the only one who has taken care to range them in order, and bring those of each kind together. According to this laborious and judicious writer, with regard to profession, the Brâhmanns are divided into six sects. The first is named Weistnouwa, from their attachment to Wistnum; whom they hold to be the Sovereign God. When those of the Soudra (or Wise), which is the tribe of commonalty, agree in sentiments with the Weistnouwa, they are called Dacheri (A), that is, Obliged; which the Brâhmanns say implies being servants to their tribe, which they will have to be an honour to the Soudras.

The Tad-
wadi,*

THE sect of Weistnouwa is subdivided into two others; one called Tadwadi, which signifies Disputers; valuing themselves on discoursing profoundly concerning God. They are likewise named Madwa Weistnouwa, from one Madwa Acharia, the author of their sect. These are marked with a white line from the nose to the forehead; also on the temples, on the place where the arms join the shoulders, and on the breasts, with a circle as large as a half-crown. They say, this is the mark of Wistnum; and so strong a charm or defence, that while they wear it, neither the devil, nor Jamma, judge of hell, dare lay a finger on them. These Tadwadi have a chief, who lives at Kombekonne, near Palliakatta, on the coast of Choromandel. This chief wears no strings about his neck, like the other Brâhmanns, nor has any wives; but when he marries he must quit his order. He commonly carries a Bambou stick in his hand^a.

and Ramanow-ya.

THE second branch is termed Ramanowya Wistnouwa. These mark their forehead with a figure like the Greek Ipsiylon; beginning at the nose, and carrying it upward. This is done with a kind of white chalk. They likewise make another mark with a hot iron, at the joining of the arms with the shoulders. They say, that when once they have devoted themselves sincerely to Wisnum, he will not punish them altho' ^{sects.} they commit sin, which none can avoid; like a father, who does not put his child to death for committing a fault. They differ in many other points from the Tadwadi. They go bare-headed; and have their hair shaved-off, excepting a lock on the crown, which hangs behind. As the head of this sect is a person of consideration, he resides at Kanjewaram, a famous city of Karnâtika (or Karnâta). He has the privilege to wear a piece of linen on his head, when he speaks to any-body. The Ramanowya say, their sect is better than that of the Tadwadi, because they never trade, nor enter bawdy-houses; being with-held by rigorous punishments, which are not inflicted on the others.

^a ROGER, ubi sup. p. 17, & seqq.(A) In the original Dactheri.

THE second sect of Brâmmans is called Seivia, and also Aradheya. They hold Eswara, or Isburen, to be the sovereign God, and all the rest, even Wisnum, to be inferior to him. Those of the family of Soudra, who are of the same opinion, are named Tangam. This sect mark their foreheads with two or three streaks of cow-dung ashes; and some wear a stone Lingam about their necks; others in their hair. They make their children wear it when eight years old, covered with wax and tied to their arms. This badge is to shew their inviolable attachment to Isburen, and that they acknowledge no other god. The Soudras, who wear the Lingam, must abstain from fish, and all other animal food, like the Brâmmans. 2d sect, Seivia.

THE third sect is termed Smarta. These affirm, that Wisnum and Isburen, although adored under different images, are yet the same being; and have an aversion to their competition for the sovereign godhead. Few of the Soudra, or common people, follow this sect, as the doctrine is above their capacity. Besides the Brâmmans make a great mystery of it. One Sankra Acharia was the author of this sect; and the Brâmmans, from whom Abr. Roger had all his information, was a member of it. 3d sect. Smarta.

THE fourth sect of Brâmmans by profession is called Sharwakka. These are of the Epicurean sentiments; denying the immortality of the soul, or any future state or life after this: and, when others argue with them on that point, they require positive and visible proof of their position. For all this they live very exemplary lives. 4th sect. Sharwakka.

THE fifth sect is named Pasenda. These say, that the Hindû law is not true; and mind nothing but their belly. Like the former sect, they believe not in a future state; and ask how it is possible, that a man who is burnt to ashes should come to life again? Our author's Brâmmans accused them with 5th sect. Pasenda.

Brâmman acting like beasts, for that they made no distinction between sects. father and mother, brother and sister; because likewise they will eat with any-body and lie with any-body; saying, that they lay with their own wife, when they lay with another woman. Those of the Smarta sect attribute this impiety to their expecting no other life but the present; and disregarding the good opinion of mankind: at the same time they suppose, that the desire of being applauded induces the Sharwakka to lead virtuous lives, although they believe in a future state no more than the Pasenda. However this be, both sects are afraid publicly to declare their opinion, to avoid the furious zeal of the other sects; who, in times passed, have made several massacres of those who held that opinion.

6th sect, THE sixth sect is called Chektea. These maintain, that Chektea. neither Wistnum nor Ishuren is the Supreme God; but one Chekkti, from whom, they say, those gods and Brâmma had their origin: that they exist solely by his power; as does also this world, and every thing in it. This sect also resembles the two former, in that they will not submit to the Vedam; and expect that every thing which they are to believe should be made evident to their senses. These three last sects are held as heretics by the Hindûs, and have but very few followers^b.

The Ishuren WITH regard to the sects acknowledging Ishuren and Wist-
en sects. num for the Supreme Being, we have another account from the Malabarians; among whom, we are told, there are several sects of each kind; but principally three attached to the former, and four to the latter. The three sects devoted to Ishuren, and who all carry the Lingam about them, are, first, that of Chiwarwedum, the followers of which are called Chayver and Chiwawedakkarer. This sect is subdivided into many others; who only worship Ishuren and his family. The second sect is named Wiruchaywam, and followed by the Wiruchaywer: these make a Lingam of stone, or crystal, called Biran Lingam; which they wear about them, and to which they perform their devotions. It is buried with them; for the bodies of these sectaries are not burned. The third sect is called Chilamadum; and its followers, Chilamadakarrers. They carry also a crystal Lingam, and are buried in a sitting posture, with their hands lifted up, as if at prayers, called Chimadu. These likewise dig a well in their houses, where neither sun nor moon can penetrate; whose water only they make use of both in their ceremonial washings and dressing their victuals. These three sects are comprised under the general term of Chiwamadam, or Chiwakalam. Brâmmann sects.

THE four sects devoted to Wishtnu (or Wishtnum) are first the Wishtnuwedum, whose adherents are named Wishtnuwedakarer, or Wishtnupaddikarer. These always carry on their foreheads, or arms, the name of Wishtnum, and worship Perumal, which is one of that god's appellations. The second sect Tadduwadimadum, and its followers Tadduwadikarer. These sprinkle themselves with sandal powder, and worship Wishtnum under the name of Rishtnen (B). The third sect, Nama Perumalwedum, do also carry on their forehead, or arms, the Dirunamum (C), and worship Rishtnen (or Kishtna). The fourth sect, Chainermadum, or that followed by the Chainer, observe the same way of worship with the former, and eat off a brass-plate^c. Four-Wisht-num sects.

WE come now to the Brâmmann sects of the second kind; Sects, as that is, those distinguished by their course of living. These to living. are denominated Jaghîs when Brâmmans: but when they are of the Soudra, or fourth tribe, they are called Joghîs; which the generality of travellers seem to have confounded together.

THESE Jaghîs and Joghîs, so separated from the rest by 1. The their manner of life, are of three sorts or sects; Wanaprastras, Wana- prastras. Sanjassi, and Avadoutas. The Wanaprastras retire into the woods with their wives and children; living on such herbs and fruits as they can find there, without working. Some of these are so scrupulous, that they will not pluck up the least root from the ground, for fear of dislodging some soul from its body; and they are reckoned very holy on account of this retired way of living.

THE Sanjassi (E) renounce all kinds of worldly pleasures, 2. The and are more austere than the former sect. These cannot Sanjassi. marry, nor take food above once a day; nor must they eat or drink out of copper, but earthen, vessels. They are obliged to live on alms; and wear a red habit, carrying a Bambû

^c PHILLIPS'S Account of Malabâr, p. 34, & seqq.

(C) A mistake, doubtless, of the press for Kishtnen, or Kristnen; by others called Kishna, or Kristna; whose shape Wishtnum had assumed in his eighth incarnation.

(C) Or ashes of cow-dung prepared by the Brâmmans and other priests.

(D) The name Joghi comes from Yogam, or Jog, which signifies union. P. Pons, Lettr. Edif. tom. xxvi. p. 245.

(E) Called by others Sanna-sbi, and S.nias. P. Pons says these were certainly the ancient Gymnosophists. Lettr. Edif. tom. xxvi. p. 221.

Brâmmans wand or stick in their hand. They must not even touch money, or have any fixed abode. They must not so much as lodge more than one night in a place; but must continually shift their quarters; excepting for two months in the year, they are at liberty to abide in one place. On this occasion they chuse out a place which is reckoned holy, and on that account may remain there during life, if they think fit. These Sanjassi must conquer six enemies; concupiscence, anger, avarice, pride, love of the world, and revenge, in order to fit them for the contemplation of things divine. The term Sanjassi belongs only to those who are Brâmmans; when they are of the tribe either of the Kutteris, or the Banîyans, they are named Perma amfa (F); if of the Soudra, or tribe of commonalty, they are called Joghîs: but these last take more liberty in their way of living than the true Sanjassi.

3. The Avadoutas. THE Avadoutas are still more rigid than the Sanjassi. They not only abandon their wives and children, but their earthen vessels for eating out of, the Bamboû stick to rest on, and their cloaths; retaining nothing but a piece of cloth to cover their privities: nay some lay even that aside, and go stark-naked, besmearing their bodies with cow-dung. These, when hungry, go into houses, and, without speaking, hold out their hand. Whatever is given them they eat on the spot. Others will not take so much pains for their bread; but retire to the side of holy rivers, and there expect the peasants to bring them victuals; which they accordingly do in abundance, believing it to be a very meritorious act. The Avadoutas are reckoned very holy by the Hindûs, especially those who go naked; being, for that reason, supposed to have attained the highest degree of perfection. However, there are but few who expose themselves in that beastly manner to public view; for natural shame restrains the major part of them^d. These Avadoutas seem to be the same with those whom the Banîyans call Goeghi^e; that is, when they are of their tribe.

Avadoutas rigid penitents. ALL these three sects must be considered as penitents, whom we meet with in East Malabâr under different names; such as Pantaren, Antigol^f, Guanigol, and the like. These last, we are told, are more rigid than the Joghigol (or Joghi). They are a kind of anchorites, living in mountains and caves.

^d ROGER, ubi supr. p. 27, & seqq.

^e Ibid. p. 29, note.

^f PHILL. Account of Malabâr, p. 19, 69, 105.

(F) These seem to be the same called Tirimimsi, by Baldæus, ap. Church. Col. Trav. vol. iii. p. 756.

They have no possessions, and never speak to women. As Brâmmans they surpass all the other sects in austerity, so do they like-sects. wise in point of wisdom; renouncing the plurality of gods (G), and all the pagod ceremonies &c.

To one of the three sects above-described may be referred those Vartias, or adopted Brâmmans, who are monastics. The Vartias: Mr. De Thevenot, speaking of a convent of these religious Hindûs at Lahûr, in the Mogol's empire, gives the following account of them. They have their general, provincial, and other superiors. They vow obedience, chastity, and poverty; which injunction they strictly observe; and say their order has been founded above 2000 years. They live on alms, and have lay-brothers appointed to beg for them. They eat but once a day, and change their house every three months. They have no fixed time for their noviciate, which some perform in two; while others are three or four years about it, if the superior thinks fit. The main point of their institution is to avoid doing to others what they would not have others do to themselves. This precept they observe so strictly, that, if any-body beats them, they do not return the blows; and if they be reviled, they take it patiently. They are very obedient to their superiors. They are forbidden to look a woman, or maiden, in the face.

THEY wear nothing on their bodies, but a cloth to cover their privities; which they bring up to their heads to make a kind of coif, like that of a woman. They can possess no money, nor must reserve any part of what they feed on to-day for to-morrow: they patiently wait till their purveyors bring them the alms given by those of their tribe. These lay-brothers, to avoid being troublesome, take but a little from every house; as about a handful of rice, or other eatables: which must be dressed to their hands; for they have no fire in the convent, for fear some insect might be destroyed by it. When the purveyors have gotten provisions enough, they return to the house; and there mingling the rice, lentils, milk, cheese, and the like, all together, an officer distrihabit and diet:

& PHILLIPS's Account of Malabâr, p. 26.

(G) These Guanigol, according to Ziegenbalg, are the sages, or philosophers and saints, of the Indies. They hold the images and ceremonies of the temples in abhorrence; having, for the sole object of their adoration, the infinitely perfect being; of whom they have the most sublime and just ideas. Instances whereof are produced by La Croz. Hist. Christ. Ind. p. 451, & seqq also p. 457.

butes

Brâmmans butes the same equally among the Vartias; who eat their portions, cold or hot, as they are given them, drinking there-with nothing but water. They make their meal about noon, and must neither eat nor drink afterwards, till the same time next day.

strict chastity: THE rest of the day they spend in prayer and reading, till sun-set; and then go to sleep, never lighting a candle. They all lie in the same chamber, and have no other bed but the bare ground. They cannot leave the order, after they have once taken the vows: but if they violate any of them, especially that of chastity, they are expelled not only the order, but also their tribe. The general, provincial, and all the other officers, change their convent every four months: but their respective offices are for life; and when any of them dies, he names to the religious him whom he thinks most fit to succeed, and they follow his choice. These Vartias have above 10,000 monasteries in the Indies; and some of them are more austere than others: nay, there are some among them who think it enough to worship God in spirit; and these do not make use of images, nor will have any pagods near them. There are also religious nuns in some places, who live with a great deal of strictness and regularity^h.

their numerous monasteries.

^h THEVENOT's Trav. part iii. p. 61, & seq.

